Our Defense Fund is growing steadily; but not half as rapidly as it should. It has before it work no less extensive than that which confronted the Defense Society of England. Will not American citizens of all shades of opinion, who can unite upon the one principle of freedom of press and speech, fly to the rescue and donate something to the cause? When our people are thoroughly aroused they can do wonderfully generous acts, as illustrated in the contributions amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars to the plague-stricken districts of the South. And yet, yellow fever is not so great a scourge in a country boasting of its freedom as intolerance and persecution. We beg of our friends to swell the treasury of the Defense Association.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

A Card.

I wish to say to the Liberals of Iowa that I am to be in that state about the 15th of November, and shall be at liberty to make arrangements for lectures there until the 5th of December. Address W. S. Bell, Florence, Iowa, care of E. C. Walker.

WHEN ye are come to the other side of the water, and hav set down your foot on the shore of glorious eternity, and look back again to the waters, and to your wearisome journey, and shall see in that clear glass of endless glory, nearer to the bottom of God's wisdom, ye shall then be forced to say, "If God had done otherwise with me than he hath done, I had never come to the enjoyment of this crown of glory."—Rutherford.

TEMPTATION is a fearful word. It indicates the beginning of a possible series of infinite evils. It is the ringing of an alarm bell, whose melancholy sounds may reverberate through eternity. Like the sudden, sharp cry of "fire!" in the night, it should rouse us to instantaneous activity, and brace every muscle to its highest tension.—Horace Mann.

TEMPERANCE is a tree which has contentment for its root and peace for its fruit.—Arabian Maxim.

The Radical Pulpit.

The Age of Shams.

FROM A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE NEWARK LIBERAL LEAGUE, SUNDAY, OCT. 13, 1878, BY JOE BARNEGAT.

The next class of shams to which I invite your attention is the personified in Mr. Joseph Jasper, whom I now introduce to your notice.

RELIGIOUS SHAM,

Mr. Jasper is a wealthy, highly respectable, middle-aged man of family, and a very prominent member of the gospel establishment run by the Rev. Phineas Dazzle in consideration of a salary of $7,000 and two donation parties a year, house-rent free, and three months' leave of absence to nurse a bogus hay fever. Jasper is a deacon in Dazzle's sanctuary, but is not (as you might suppose from that fact) by any means an ignorant man. Jasper has read all kinds of literature, religious, political, and scientific, and, like the majority of well-read men, is at heart an Infidel. But his position in society, business, and the entire absence of any principle but the principle of interest prevents him from avowing Infidel opinions or from being anything other than what he is—a chromo Christian, a base imitation of the genuine article.

Jasper saw much of the world when a young man; he had not only "seen the elephant," but was intimately acquainted with his whole anatomy, from the tip of his trunk to the end of his tail.

He had drank much of everything in the long catalogue of drinks, both plain and fancy; had played every game known to the gambling fraternity; had bet on everything, from a horse-race to a dog-fight; and had imitated that wise old Mormon Solomon in numerous ways, too numerous to mention.

But Jasper found, as every fast man will find out sooner or later, that dissipation didn't pay. His funds were running low, and he thought the matrimonial market would be the best field in which to rapidly recuperate his waning fortunes. He was a handsome, polished man of the world, had an abundance of brass, wore elegant clothes, for which he owed, and was altogether a man well calculated to win the affections of the opposite sex.

Now, Jasper had not lived thirty years for nothing, and in seeking a wife he wanted one who would not only give him her hand and heart, but, what was of a great deal more importance to Jasper, one who would bring him a fortune. Jasper also knew that the best fishing-ground for "bloated bondholders'" daughters was in the sanctuary, so he became an attendant at the richest church in the town, and, finally, an earnest and devout sham Christian.

In course of time he won the affections of the only daughter of a very wealthy bank cashier, and was married to the young lady and her fortune. Some years afterwards his father-in-law, becoming financially embarrassed by outside speculations in fancy stocks with his own and the bank's money, prudently, as he thought, but imprudently, as the sequel proved, transferred all his property to his devout son-in-law.

After the affair had been settled, the father-in-law requested Jasper to retransfer the property; but this Jasper religiously refused to do. This refusal and the ingratitude of his son-in-law so worked upon the old gentleman's mind that, in a moment of desperation, he foolishly blew out what brains he had, and is doubtless now cavorting around in the spirit world clad in the gauzy gear of a first-class angel, making sundry excursions to this mundane sphere to tip tables for spirits in the flesh, and occasionally amusing them by tambourine and banjo solos during the dark seances.

Unregenerate Infidels and men of the world said Jasper was an ungrateful scoundrel, and was directly responsible for the old gentleman's death; but as he had just given $500 towards the new organ, $200 to the Sunday-school, and $500 to foreign missions, and as the pastor dined and supped at his house very frequently, his standing in the church was not injured in the least.

Jasper enjoyed a large reputation as a temperance man, but was the victim of some inherited chronic weakness, and was ordered by his genial physician to take, as a medicine, brandy and peppermint or whisky and tansy three times a day—orders which Jasper, with Christian resignation, religiously obeyed.

Jasper, although he gave much to the church, was anything but a charitable man, and he often felt damn! when asked for money to aid in purchasing a new carpet for the sanctuary and thereby save immortal souls, or to subscribe towards the salary of the sacred operatic quartette that would lead sinners to repentance. "The bloody leeches!" he once said to himself; "if it wasn't that I make about three times as much out of these people as I give to the church, and didn't want to see my children married to the sons and daughters of these rich old noodles, I'd see them and their infernal sanctuary in heaven before I'd give them a red!"

Jasper is only one variety of a very large body of shams that infest society who do not believe one word of the doctrines they profess, and who play the pious rôle from social and mercenary motives. But isn't the Church itself a humbug and a sham? Why, when your Jasper is sick, prayers are offered up in the church for his recovery, the pastor and the brethren visit him daily, hymns are sung round his dying couch, and when he pegs out, the biggest kind of a theological fuss is kicked up over his carcass—his sham virtues are lauded to the skies, and all the true believers think him booked for first-class quarters in the New Jerusalem, with a deadhead pass over the Zion Central Railroad.

But when your genuine believer, the poor old widow dressed in faded black who sits in the gallery, who attends church and prayer-meeting through all kinds of weather—when she is on her death-bed the visits of the pastor and brethren are like those of the angels, few and far between. And when she dies she is laid away in the grave as unceremoniously and quickly as possible, as one whose room was in every way preferable to her company.

There is a hymn very popular during revivals, commencing

"Come ye sinners, poor and needy,
Weak and wounded, sick and sore," etc.

Now, do you think, Mr. President, or you, ladies and gentlemen, that it is the poor and needy the churches hanker to convert or bring into the fold? Scarcely!

A young Liberal who has the confidence of Mr. Jasper's pastor has called upon that reverend gentleman, and the conversation has turned upon this very subject. Phineas Dazzle, who is a bright specimen of the has thrown off the mask, and unreservedly, for a wonder, speaks the truth. Hear him. The Reverend Dazzle says:

CLERICAL SHAM,

"Would I rather have five hundred poor and needy sinners converted than four hundred rich ones? Why, my dear boy, what a silly question to ask! How, in the name of heaven and John Calvin, do you suppose we can run a church, pay a pastor's salary, and support a first-class organist and choir on five hundred poor and needy people?

Why, one rich old fool, with apoplectic tendencies, and who thinks he can buy his way into heaven by shelling out liberally for the church, is worth five thousand of the poor and needy kind, who are forever getting sick or out of work and asking the church for a little assistance.

To tell you the truth, I wish there wasn't a poor member in my congregation; all they're good for is to fill up and impress outsiders with the belief that you're a first-class pulpit orator. But I can fill any church, and so can any one if fifteen or twenty rich men will put their hands in their pockets and pay for first-class music. That's the oratory that draws now, and I know it. Why, do you know, my young friend, and I tell you this confidentially, I haven't written a sermon or preached one of my own in five years, and I don't know any man in the business that has.

How do we do? Why, buy them. We can get first-class sermons of the latest style for a dollar and a half per dozen, and twenty per cent off for cash. Is there style and fashion in religion? Certainly, my dear boy; its changing all the time; it changes with the wants of the people. Why, sermons written five years ago you can buy for fifty cents a dozen, and the old orthodox ones, such as our fathers and grandfathers listened to twenty-five or fifty years ago, can be had for two dollars and a half a barrel, and they're dear at that, for if I were to preach two or three such sermons they'd have me up before the Presbytery, and they'd give me the theological bounce in short order, and Phineas Dazzle would have to go to work; but he knows a trick worth two of that.

Will these sermons suit any congregation? O, my dear fellow, how ignorant you are in religious matters! When we send an order to one of these sermon foundries we state the denomination, size of congregation, percentage of rich and poor, whether hard-headed or emotional, and, in fact, send a kind of theological measure of the church, the same as you would for a suit of clothes, and they are so expert in spiritual matters that they rarely send you a misfit.

To what do I attribute these constant changes? O! these infernal scientists and philosophers. These Darwins, Tyndals, Douias, Huxleys, and all that gang who are all the time making new discoveries and upsetting people's faith in some one or other of the doctrines of the Church.

Don't these scientists and philosophers tell the truth? Of course they do; but what in the name of Beecher and Vosburgh is the use in telling these people the truth and injuring our business? We never injured them. I know we've condemned them to hell and all that, but they didn't go, and we didn't mean it. We only did it to please the people.

Look what they've been doing the last few years. They've spoiled creation; they've knocked Adam and Eve into monkeys and protoplasm. They've washed away the deluge, and worse than all, they've busted hell wide open and spoiled the best card in the whole theological deck—a card that's won more money from sickly old misers and made more converts than all the other doctrines and dogmas of the Church combined.

Yes, sir, hell's busted, and the Church would be too if it wasn't for the Sunday laws and good music. They're the pillars of Zion, and if ever these Liberals get the Sunday laws abolished, and the theaters, lecture-rooms, and places of amusement open, good-bye orthodoxy. The whole theological machine will be smashed. Brass bands in all the churches might save them, but it would be terribly expensive.

O! if we could only have a couple of earthquakes a year that would frighten people into the Church and shake money out of them, the concern might run for years yet; but it's a poor place for earthquakes; we haven't had a decent one in this latitude for a century, and there's no dependence to be placed on them whatever. How about epidemics? They don't answer the purpose. You see all the rich people run away, and it would be sheer nonsense to keep the churches open for the benefit of a lot of people who haven't a cent, but who expect you to visit them in their miserable hovels, endanger your own life, and preach their funeral sermons as if they were of some account.

Well, you want my advice, being an old friend of your father's, whether you shall learn the trade of a carpenter or a machinist? Well, my son, I earnestly advise you to learn neither; don't throw yourself away upon any such calling. But if you wish to lead an easy life, to be respected, to have a good time generally, and to have first-class chances to form a first-class matrimonial alliance, study for the ministry; it's the best trade I know of at present, and probably will be for some years to come.

But you are an Infidel? That don't make one particle of difference; all the men of brains in the pulpit to-day are Infidels. Just lay your Infidelity on the shelf until you get nicely fixed financially, then abandon the Church if you please, and join a Liberal League.

You're afraid you haven't the brains to make a preacher? Nonsense; it don't require brains. The genuine Christians don't know whether you have or not; they've got so little themselves, and the sham Christians don't care a continental as long as they have good music.

How long would it take to fit you for the ministry? O! if you're smart, you can pass muster in a year, then get some rich old codger that's given a good deal to the cause of Christ to use his influence and have you installed as pastor of some rich congregation, then go in for the matrimonial stakes, and play your cards for the richest man's daughter in the congregation. Get invited to tea, walk with her in the garden, play croquet. If she's of a religious turn of mind, be fearfully pious; talk about the heavenly home beyond the stars, golden harps and crowns, and all that kind of thing. If she's romantic and sentimental, come the gushing style over her; send her bouquets; write poetry to her, the more sickly it is the better. I've got a whole trunk full I wrote to my wife before I was married; you can have a basketful any time, or if you prefer, I'll send you down the trunk and you can copy it off while you're preparing for the ministry. Press her hand tenderly at parting, look as if you were pining away; glance tenderly at her in the most pathetic parts of your sermon. Be sweet also on her mother; admire her taste in everything; tell her you think she must have been very handsome when she was young, she is so remarkably well preserved and good looking yet. She'll swallow it all. Then tackle the old man; ask his advice on every little matter of business; praise his sagacity and foresight, and he'll think you're a young man of great discernment and good judgment. In short, bamboozle the parents, humbug the daughter, euchre the crowd, and the game's yours. I played my cards that way and won, but my old father-in-law (and it makes my blood boil when I think of it) shortly after my marriage endorsed to the tune of $300,000 for his brother Ben, who was engaged in the Christian work of cornering the pork market, but the pork market cornered Ben, and the old hog busted, and so did my father-in-law, and that, too, just as I was getting ready to have the clergyman's sore throat preparatory to retiring from the pulpit and taking a run of two or three years through the capitals of Europe. And all I got out of the old man after all the time I spent, lies I told, and poetry I wrote was the house he gave my wife as a wedding present.

O, if he had only died before he endorsed those notes, or had taken my advice as it was, and put his property out of his hands, he might have saved the whole thing; but he wouldn't. He had what he called a high sense of mercantile honor, paid his debts to the last farthing, and died a poor man five years afterwards. I never knew a rich Christian (if he was a Christian, which I doubt) to act in that way before or since. And I'm the sufferer, with no sore thumb no Europe, and I suppose I'll have to lead this life of a clerical sham the remainder of my days unless my wife should take a notion to go to glory and give me another chance to cast the matrimonial net. I think I'd go for a rich widow the next heat, for I've got a bitter prejudice against fathers-in-law with their infernal ideas of mercantile honor, and I've had good reason. Why, ministers have poisoned their wives under similar circumstances to marry some rich woman. But I wouldn't do that.

Were they convicted and hung? Why, my dear fellow, did you ever know or hear of a clergyman being convicted of anything? Never! They may poison their wives, kill their mistresses, seduce, forge, or commit every offense in the catalogue of crime, and you may bring an amount of evidence against them that would hang a regiment of other men, and it won't even soil the reputation of a clergyman, for nine out of every ten in the church will stand up and swear he's "the whitest-souled" man that ever pronounced a benediction or pounded a pulpit.

But you must excuse me now. I must leave you. Anything I can do for you, I will do gladly. Your father saved my life when we were boys at school together, and I have not forgotten it. I would like to have you remain longer, but we have a very important meeting at the church this evening. The Rev. Howard Brass, the celebrated debt-lifter, preaches for us, and we expect to raise enough to wipe out a $20,000 mortgage still remaining on the church. We give Brass five per cent on the amount subscribed. Good-bye; call and see me at any time. Good night.

Selections.

Voltaire in Exile.

HIS LIFE AND WORK IN FRANCE AND IN FOREIGN LANDS.

BY M. GASTINEAU.

(Translated for THE TRUTH SEEKER.)

VII.—CONTINUED.

Voltaire developed all the amiability of his mind, and succeeded in obtaining forgiveness for his prolonged absence, so that he wrote to the Count of Argental, "Never has Madame du Châtelet been more superior to kings."

And, on her side, Madame du Châtelet informs the Count of Argental that "at last he [Voltaire] has arrived. All our sorrows are at an end, and he swears to me they are indeed at an end forever. The King of Prussia is much astonished to find that one can leave him to go to Brussels. He asked three days' grace; but it was refused him. He has no conception of certain attachments; it is to be hoped that it will but make his friendships stronger. He has left nothing undone to retain our friend, and I believe him to be in a fury against me; but I defy him to hate me more than I have hated him for two months past. Here is, you will allow, a merry rivalry."

And, in fact, the King of Prussia had for Voltaire one of those impassioned friendships which were seen in ancient Greece between men who chose one another, and which Frederick carried to the point of being jealous of Madame du Châtelet. At any rate, this duel between a king and a marchioness is of the greatest piquancy, and Madame du Châtelet goes to the very limits of gallantry when she writes, "He has no conception of certain attachments; it is to be hoped that it will but make him love his friends the more."

Voltaire, once more a Bruxellois, and reinstated in his Gross-Tour street, to the great delight of the Marchioness, gave the last touch to his "Mahomet," which was played in Lille, in April, 1740, with the plaudits of an enthusiastic audience. The prelates of Lille themselves contributed to this success.

Perfectly quiet and sheltered from all persecution in Brussels, Voltaire worked at his tragedy of "Merope," when the lawsuit which had retained Madame du Châtelet in Brussels for such a long time called her back to Champagne to plead in the nearer jurisdiction of Cirey; after which it became necessary again to return to Brussels.

Voltaire accompanied his Emilie in all her judiciary peregrinations, and with her left the capital of Brabant in November, 1744, to go on to Cirey.

From Cirey, Voltaire returned with his friend to Paris, which he called the "Capital of trifles," whilst he did recognize all it had that was great and beautiful. His "Brutus" met with a season of renewed and lively success. All the clerical hounds, the Desfontaines and the Frerons, were let loose against this republican piece. Voltaire faced his enemies, ridiculing them, piercing them with his arrows, with his darts of sarcasm. Against his bitter enemy, Freron, he launched the following epigram, imitated from the "Anthologie:"

"In yonder vale (I do not lie)
A viper stung poor Jean Freron.
What think you happened then upon?
It was the snake that had to die."

To the Abbe Couet, high-vicar of the Cardinal of Noailles, who had addressed him his Grace's mandate, he retorted by sending one of his tragedies, "Marianne," with this quatrain:

"Thy gracious mandate came to me;
I send thee back a tragedy.
Thus, thou for me, and I for thee,
Do we both play the comedy."

It is with enthusiasm that Goldsmith speaks of Voltaire, whom he saw at that time in a soiree of the Parisian society, where the conversation turned upon the merits of English literature. Fontenelle, being but little acquainted with it, did not appreciate it. Diderot contradicted him. But Voltaire presented its claims with a grace and a reality that charmed the author of the "Vicar of Wakefield."

VIII.

Soon another storm broke out over the head of Voltaire, who was, however, accustomed to these thunderbolts. One of his letters to the King of Prussia had been intercepted, and copies of it had been circulated.

"Do you know the last thing out?" wrote the president Hénault to Madame du Deffand. "It is a letter of Voltaire to the King of Prussia, the most foolish that could be imagined. He tells him he has done well to conclude peace, that the half of Paris approves him, that he has only gotten ahead of the cardinal, that he must busy himself now only with recalling pleasures, those children of the arts, the opera, comedy, etc. Madame de Mailly breathes only fire and revenge, and demands an exemplary punishment. It is not known what will come of it, and it is feared the end will be a decampment to Brussels."

All the enemies of Voltaire, eagerly seizing upon that new weapon, circumvented the favorite, Madame de Mailly, and strove to make Voltaire appear a traitor to his country. The letter in question was believed to have been surrendered by a post-carrier of Brussels, who had been bought over by the police of the French minister.

"It is neither God nor devil," Frederick wrote to him, "but, indeed, a miserable Brussels clerk who opened and copied your letter and has sent it to Paris and everywhere."

But Voltaire, better informed, replied later, from Brussels, exonerating the post-service of that city:

"I know for a certainty that it is not a Brussels clerk who opened the letter which has become my box of Pandora. The whole of that fine exploit came off in Paris in the time of a crisis, and it is a clerk of the person whom your majesty suspects (the Cardinal Fleury) who has done all this evil."

Voltaire sent protestations of love for his country to different persons, notably to the Cardinal Fleury and to the favorite, Madame du Mailly, claiming to be a good citizen, profoundly attached to his country, and that his relations with the King of Prussia had no character hostile to France, concluding that if he had indeed written the falsified letter as they circulated it, it would deserve indignation. However—we must say it—the letter was certainly from him. It was a blunder.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Lights and Shadows of Christianity.

BY E. P. BASSETT.—CONTINUED.

It soon occurred, under the Emperor Constantine, called the Great, that Christianity took arms, and by force was established the religion of the state. Doubtless others like Maximilianus, but of whom no traces have been preserved, adhered to the life of the primitive Christian. When such a one happens to be discovered we render tribute to his worth by the involuntary admiration and love excited in us at the recital of his heroic sacrifices.

The great prototype has thrilled human hearts in all the ages since, and his final sacrifice on Calvary is an example of the extent submission to wrong is to be practiced. The principle is easily understood; resistance begets force, and strife becomes eternal. Submission disarms force, and peace becomes eternal. Submission and love are commensurable, as are also their opposites, strife and hate. Punatory inflictions among men produce only a forced submission, which is a storing up of such force as but awaits the opportunity to become more powerfully dangerous and destructive. Forgiveness and love are the only true antidotes. Force, strife, hate, are carnal elements, and belong to Satan and his kingdom. Submission, forgiveness, love, are divine elements incarnated in Jesus. The "new birth," or "regeneration," is a transformation of its recipient from a devotee of the former to a loving subject and willing worker of the latter. Each class is defined by a word; the one by "wickedness" and the other by "righteousness."

Such is a brief summary of the evangel of him of Nazareth, which he and his primitive disciples practiced, and thus demonstrated that it is of the highest import to the good of mankind, and lacking any element of which it looses its virtue and tends rapidly downward into a superstition and a persecuting religion.

And here let me inquire, was there ever any one before the advent of Jesus who even comprehended so simple and perfect a conduct of life, and especially one who lived it as he did, and as many others in every age since have done, and thus proving that it is not Utopian, but always possible, and of the highest practical utility. It seems to me to be spiritually just what is implied by its name, the "new birth" or "regeneration." I make the inquiry because it has been said, and often repeated, that there is nothing new or distinctive in Christianity. I think those who say this are not looking on its primal, perennial beauty, but on its spurious counterpart. The inmate that makes her residence the soul of the regenerate Christian is so tender a guest that affrighted, she "flies away with a shriek" whenever her entertainer grasps a carnal weapon of blood against his brother. When Christianity took the sword of temporal power her heavenly visitant departed, never more to return until carnal weapons are again resigned. As well may the highwayman's demand, "Your money or your life," be called borrowing, as a religion sustained by force, Christian. It is an anomaly that custom only has imposed upon us, and which ought to be changed as speedily as possible.

St. Augustine says something pertinent of the lapse of Christianity apparent in his day, namely: "As the pagan, who would be a Christian, hears rude words from the pagans, so he among the Christians who is striving to lead a better and more conscientious life, must expect to hear himself mocked by Christians. As soon as a man begins to despise the world, to reform from avenging injuries and from the accumulation of riches, to walk faithfully in the way of Christ, and think of nothing but God, we must expect Christians themselves to remark, 'What is the man about? What can have entered into his head?'"

So early, even in its infancy, all that was new and of supreme worth—even the evangel of forgiveness, peace, and love—had no open field of growth or honest persistent trial; but, so far as possible, was smothered in its cradle. Being, however, divine, of heavenly parentage, its light has occasionally gleamed out, irradiating the surrounding darkness; and all the more lovely in contrast with a religion alike in its intolerance to the one that nailed the oracle of the "new covenant" to the cross. Let another pen, rather than mine, portray the inestimable blessings to mankind that would have resulted had all so-called Christians maintained the principles and practices of the primitive Christian; I certainly feel incompetent to the task. However, it is easy to see that Christianity would not as now be bearing the insupportable burden of the fiendish atrocities perpetrated, and rivers of blood shed in the name of the "Prince of Peace," presenting the greatest obstacle to the mind of the unbeliever of his acceptance of the divine claims of the Gospel. Like Erasmus, a multitude of honest men have thought as he did, when he was constrained to cry out against the remorseless zeal of Martin Luther and his coadjutors, and who were iconoclasts rather than reformers. "I abhor the evangelists," says Erasmus; "they love money and women, and despise all other things. We have been stunned long enough with the cry of Gospel! Gospel! Gospel!" Yet not many of these who detest the spurious article are discriminating enough to see and accept, as Erasmus did, a peaceful, pure, and practical Christianity. The rebukes that Erasmus administered to the corrupt monks were quite as keen and cutting as any to the Lutherans. He charged them with using religion as a cloak to rob girls of their chastity, and called upon them to reform their wicked lives, rising quite above the deadly war of sects and creeds raging round him; he proclaimed, "None that live well die ill." The learned and good Grotius told the truth in saying, "It was Erasmus who so well showed the road to a reasonable reformation." The essay of the English Froude has caused no change in my convictions on this subject.

Fast on the heels of Lutheranism, and drawn from it, eclipsing it in growth, followed Calvinism. This detestable spawn, with its consistories of espionage and persecution, spread over Europe and our New England colonies, exercising arbitrary control over the innocent amusements of the people, and even dictating the kind of apparel they were permitted to wear, imprisoning and inflicting many kinds of degrading punishments for every petty disobedience, and finally death by hanging and burning those who disbelieved the oracles of its patron saint, John Calvin. It was the acme and quintessence of petty social espionage and arbitrary force and persecution. A more unlovely religion never possessed the brain—it had no heart—of man. The audacious claim was made by its oracles, that those of the Protestant faith only were clothed with authority from on high to punish heresy, and hence he condemned in Catholics the very atrocities that he himself perpetrated. So far as the writer is concerned, these persecutions might sleep forever had the spirit that animated them been exorcised and we ridden of its baleful influence. But many recent occurrences indicate that this is not the case, and that it only awaits opportunity to rend us again. We will mention one here, and may refer to others hereafter.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 9, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

The Index Shouts "Victory."

Among the accomplishments and talents of the editor of The Index he is not usually accredited as a first class humorist, but in his issue of last week in which he describes the great "victory" he won at Syracuse, he fully establishes his claim to rank with John Phœnix, Artemas Ward, Mark Twain, and Josh Billings. No person can seriously think he was in sober earnest when he calls a vote of seventy-six delegates against him for President for another year, to fifty-one for him, a victory. If that was a victory it of course would hav been much larger had he received but ten votes out of the hundred and twenty-seven. If a minority vote means a victory, of course the more marked the minority the greater the victory.

But no, it was only some of the editor's humor. We hav seen nothing superior to it in its line since we read the account by John Phœnix of how he whipped the editor with whom he had a personal engagement, which was something like this: "I hauled him after me, and held him down by inserting my nose between his teeth for that purpose; I also detained one of his hands by the hair of my head, while I occupied the thumb of the other hand by one of my eyes which was gouged out upon my cheek. When I had detained him in this way for some time, I forced my eyes heavily against his fists which served still further to take up his time." This victory was much like the one Mr. Abbot boasts of receiving, and it is only when read as cultured humor that its fine points are perceptible. Had the editor followed Artemas Ward's plan, and notified his readers in this way, "This is a goak," the humor of the thing would probably hav been more apparent.

It might hav been humor that actuated Judge Hurlbut, Mr. Underwood, the Rev. G. E. Gordon, the Rev. D. H. Clark, Mr. H. P. Stark, and two score of other soreheads who after they had submitted to a fair vote by ballot as to who should be President of the League for the next twelve months, and they found seventy-six did not prefer their favorite, bolted from the Congress, and sought to "break the machine." If it was humor, it was a sour kind that does not produce mirthfulness. Mr. Abbot did not show humor, nor even look victorious at the time the vote was taken, nor when a little later he left the Opera House, shaking off the dust of his feet behind him. Judge Hurlbut did not seem humorous or victorious, neither did Mr. Underwood nor the others. They more resembled the boy with the unhappy disposition, who in playing marbles with his little fellows, after he was beaten, gathered up his marbles, and putting them into his pocket said, "If you won't let me beat all the time I won't play," when he marched off and said he had won a victory. What strange boys there are in this world!

Possibly the victory consisted in electing to the Presidency of the League for the next year that staunch, honest, fearless, worthy old man, ELIZUR WRIGHT, he who will never betray the liberties of the people, who will never be false to the rights the Constitution confers upon us. It is indeed a victory when such men are elected to places of trust and usefulness.

The editor closes his victorious article with these words: "We can only congratulate the Liberals on a splendid moral victory, wrested out of the very jaws of defeat." He has all at once become a noted wrester, and no patent wringer can begin to compare with him. Possibly he can wring blood from a turnip or wrest $1,000 from a worn out, cast-away pocket book. Let it be hoped that he will not harrow up the feelings of his opponents too unmercifully.

Continued Falsifications.

We hoped to hav nothing further to say of an unfriendly character in reference to the editor of The Index. We hoped his statements and representations would be such as would not render criticisms necessary; but as he persists in throwing out false statements and slanderous insinuations, it seems necessary that he should still be set right. In his "Victory" article he makes representations that are as false as false can be. He says, "The repeal party artfully persuaded the 'reform' minority to vote for a resolution postponing the question of 'repeal' versus 'reform' to the next annual Congress, and then broke their own agreement by immediately proceeding to elect a strong 'repeal' ticket by a vote of 76 to 51." Here are at least three misrepresentations, to call them by no harsher term. In the first place, the "repeal" party did not artfully persuade the "reform" party to vote for any resolutions. They saw that by passing a "repeal" vote at that session the minority would be displeased, and proposed to defer it for a year, giving all parties time to become better acquainted with the nature of the question. They persuaded none to vote for it "artfully" or otherwise. They well knew they had the strength to pass it, and were under no necessity to artfully persuade the minority. Mr. Abbot's first lieutenant, the Rev. G. E. Gordon, opposed the resolution and tried to prevent its passage.

In the second place, the minority did not "immediately" proceed to elect a strong "repeal" ticket. The resolution to postpone the repeal vote for a year was passed about the first thing on Sunday morning, while the election of officers did not take place till well along in the afternoon session.

In the third place, the majority did not "break their own agreement." There was not the slightest agreement made or implied that they should not vote for the candidates they preferred. They went there with a view of opposing Mr. Abbot's re-election, and not a hint or a promise was made to the contrary. The minority did not ask us to vote contrary to our wishes, and we certainly entered into no such compact. We voted for the officers we preferred, and intended to do that all along. Nobody promised or intimated anything to the contrary of this.

Another untruthful representation was to repeat the allusion to an organized conspiracy to "capture the League." There was no "conspiracy" and no "capturing." The Abbot party got all the strength in the Congress they were able to; Leagues favorable to Mr. Abbot were organized in various parts of the country; his delegates voted their preference, as they had a perfect right to do, and we did the same. There were seventy-six of us who did not wish Mr. Abbot to be President again, and we exercised the right to vote for the man we preferred to him. There was no conspiracy about this, and certainly nothing wrong. It was he who set himself and others up for candidates; it was he who laid down a platform; it was he who called for discussion upon "repeal" and "reform." If anybody organized a conspiracy, it was the gentleman himself.

But the most culpable of all his falsehoods is his continued insinuation that the repealer is "the willing and conscientious abettor of obscenity and Freelove." This falsehood he has been telling from the beginning, and it is false every time he utters it. Does he mean to say that Elizur Wright, T. B. Wakeman, Courtlandt Palmer, H. L. Green, Mrs. Amy Post, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. F. W. Titus, Col. D. M. Fox, J. M. Cosad, C. W. Austin, A. P. Bradt, A. S. Holcomb, W. S. Root, Dr. H. M. North, or any of the seventy-six, as for that matter, are any more in favor of the circulation of obscenity than himself. The man seems unable to comprehend, or is determined not to, that if a person or persons are opposed to the breaking down of the Constitution and the destruction of the vital principles of American liberty, that they need not necessarily be in favor of spreading obscene books and pictures broadcast over the country. Nothing more false could be insinuated. The opponents of the Comstock laws are not in favor of obscenity, and they are in favor of punishing it in a lawful and legitimate way, but not at the sacrifice of that which they hold sacred and dear.

But this howl of "Oh, you are in favor of flooding the mails with obscenity," is the principal argument of the "Reform" party, and they repeat it and reiterate it as though their very life depended upon it. They assume that they possess all the virtue and purity, and that our side has all the impurity and immorality. This was thrown in our teeth in the Congress. The Rev. and very officious Mr. Gordon said, "Here the waves divide; on one side is morality and decency, on the other is obscenity and indecency." This is the gentleman who had the decency to say, with a loud voice, in the Congress, "I would rather my daughters should be raped in body than raped in mind." This is the man who howls for decency and condemns his betters as indecent and immoral.

Mr. Underwood is about the only prominent man in the Abbot faction who gives his opponents a fair representation. He admits that they are just as much opposed to obscenity and immorality as the other side, and he does not seem to try to make capital by befouling and misrepresenting those whom he knows to be just as pure and upright as Mr. Abbot himself. It would be well could his coadjutors be as manly, as fair, and as truthful as he is. It is, indeed, a pity that the Rev. Mr. Gordon, the Rev. Mr. Clark, and the ex-Rev. Mr. Abbot find it necessary, in order to promote their own faction, to deal in slander, defamation, and falsehood, and we can only hope that they may see the error of their ways and depart from their wrong doing.

As regards "free love," they certainly hav no stones to throw. They hav in their own ranks several practical Freelovers, which can easily be shown if Mr. Abbot desires it. The less they say upon this subject the better it will be for them.

Good men must regret that Mr. Abbot and others hav allowed themselves to be worked up into such a silly panic about an imaginary amount of obscenity which is flooding the mails, and that in order to prevent the fractional part of the circulation thus afforded they would surrender the most valuable rights and liberties which Americans have inherited and enjoy, when in reality there is little or nothing of the kind in existence and has not been for five years. No obscene books or pamphlets hav been printed for half a dozen years, and very few hav been sent through the mails. It is only in the fears of Abbot & Co. that that kind of trash has an existence. The horror of schools being inundated with it is wholly of the imagination. We do not believe the editor of The Index can name a single school that has been thus annoyed; and should such a thing threaten our schools, how easy it would be to prevent the catastrophe by having the matter subject to the inspection of the teacher or guardian, and this without depriving one citizen of the the rights which the Constitution givs him.

Judge Hurlbut appears to be the ablest expounder of the constitutionality of the Comstock laws from the Abbot standpoint; and what is his position? Why, that every postmaster and every deputy and every clerk even shall be constituted a judge or censor to examine the mail matter which the people deposit, to see whether it is proper to be allowed to pass or not, and if they find it is not, to hold it on account of its immorality or indecency. Do our readers realize what a monstrous proposition this is? Just think for a moment what an enormous contract it is to examine the matter that passes through our mails! From the post-office in this city alone there leave one hundred tons of mail matter per day. To read this over, letters, papers, books, and pamphlets—all should be equally examined—to see that there was nothing indecent or immoral in it, would require fully a thousand men to work fifteen hours per day. In the whole country there are within a few hundred of 40,000 post-offices, and in all of these mail matter is deposited every day. Probably in many of the smaller offices the postmaster and his wife could manage to read over what is deposited, but in thousands of the larger offices it would require from ten to one hundred persons at each office to do the business thoroughly; and unless it is done thoroughly, it would seem best not to undertake it at all. Probably ten persons as censors to each post-office would be about a fair allowance, or 400,000 for the whole country. These, at $2.00 each per day, would require daily the sum of $800,000, or $250,000,000 per year for the working days, and all to see what immoral or indecent matter the people see fit to deposit in the mails!!!

Is this really what the "Reform National Liberal League of America" wish the people to be in favor of before we can be deemed respectable or cultured? Is this what is demanded of the Liberals of America? Are they prepared to hav the postal department of our country subjected to such a censorship, and hav their mail matter read by thousands of inquisitive spies and Paul Prys? Have we of the old National Liberal League got to accept this state of things or be berated as immoral and in favor of obscenity? Are the sacred rights of Americans thus to be ignobly frittered away because a few frightened ones are fearful lest something shall pass through the mails that ought not to, or because the Young Men's Christian Associations of this country wish to stop what they consider heretical publications under the claim that it is immoral or indecent, when for one hundred years the people of this country got along perfectly well without anything of the kind, as they did without an Anthony Comstock? We trust the American people will never become such craven slaves. We trust they will never throw away their dearest rights and most precious privileges because some few unbalanced minds hav frightened them into a senseless panic. We trust that free speech, free discussion, a free press, and free mails will ever be maintained in this country, though it be possible for evil-disposed persons to send matter through the mails that may not be perfectly orthodox, perfectly moral, or perfectly decent.

To understand how senseless is the panic which extra-respectable Liberals hav worked themselves into relative to obscenity, it is only necessary to repeat that which we cannot repeat too often—that very little obscene matter has passed through the mails for a term of years. Ten or twelve years ago quite a number of immoral books were published in this city, and considerable numbers of them were sold, though but a small moiety of them were transported by mail. They were purchased by those who dealt in other books, and with them were transported by express and the various freight routes. Those which did go by mail did no more harm than those conveyed by other means; and when a very moderate effort was made to suppress the traffic, it was accomplished with very little difficulty and without taking any lives or sending any poor devils to prison for a long term of years. The printing, publishing, and selling were suppressed with almost a single effort—the sending by mail as well as by other modes of conveyance—and for nearly six years it has been impossible for a copy of the vile stuff to be found save in the possession of Anthony Comstock, who has all the obscene literature in the country, and who probably has as low and depraved tastes for it as almost any man in the country.

These statements are facts, and serve to show how slender the grounds are upon which the Comstock-Abbot party build their scarecrow bugbears about the enormous obscenities they tell so much about. By them we can learn much of the lack of necessity which existed to divide the Liberal ranks upon this question and cause a considerable minority to take sides with Comstock, the Y. M. C. A., and the orthodox party generally. The Liberals of the country should not hav been divided upon this matter of attacking the rights of the people. They should hav stood side by side and shoulder to shoulder in solid phalanx against every encroachment upon our constitutional rights and free speech, a free press, and free and equal mails.

When these facts are duly comprehended, the injustice of the aspersion of being in favor of obscenity which is cast by the Comstock-Abbot party upon those who wish to preserve constitutional guarantees will be apparent. The course which they hav persistently pursued is the very quintessence of meanness and falsehood, and the injustice and immorality thus displayed are absolutely worse than all the obscenity which the country has known.

But let the Liberals of the country who hav temporarily lost their senses upon this subject endeavor to recover their equanimity as early as possible. Let them not be longer frightened about that which has no real existence; and should at any time a class of bad men come to the surface and make an effort to disseminate obscene or indecent literature, let them rest easy under the assurance that our state laws are amply sufficient to meet the case and quickly suppress every attempt of the kind, including the mails as well as other modes of conveyance, and that there is not the slightest necessity for the General Government to throw down the safeguards and barriers of the Constitution and pass penal laws upon the subject of obscenity any more than with regard to libel, fraud, seduction, adultery, incendiarism, larceny, burglary, arson, and murder.

If we will all strive to keep our senses and not get unduly excited, there will be nothing to be feared on the ground of obscenity, and the rights we inherited under the Constitution may be preserved to us and handed down intact to the rising generation.

The Two National Leagues.

It is with no feelings of displeasure that we learn of the efforts the Seceders are making in establishing new auxiliary leagues. There is not, after all, a very wide difference between the position they occupy and that which we occupy. We are alike opposed to the introduction of God into the national Constitution; we are alike in favor of the taxation of Church property; we are alike in favor of religious services being abolished by the Government for Government purposes; we are alike opposed to the employment of chaplains at the public expense for our army and navy; in short, we are in favor of the entire secularization of the Government. The only subject on which we disagree is in regard to the right of the General Government interfering to punish the commission of obscenity by transmission through the mails. The Seceders seem to think that it is of the first consequence that Congress establish a censorship of the mails and prevent the passage of any obscene books and pamphlets, while we of the Repeal party regard it as unwarranted by the Constitution that a system of espionage and censorship should be placed over the public mails. We are alike opposed to the publication and circulation of obscene literature, but we are in favor of leaving this business with the states, where it legitimately, belongs and which hav full power to suppress it, whether sent by mail, express, ordinary freight, or any other mode of conveyance. As the state Governments hav proved themselves amply sufficient to suppress the traffic in obscenity, and as the General Government has so far, during the nearly six years which the Comstock laws hav been in existence, failed to punish a real case of obscenity, and, even at best, could lop off but a small part of the circulation of obscenity that might take place, we are decidedly in favor of the General Government leaving this matter entirely with the state Governments, and more especially since the U. S. law was passed at the instance of the Y. M. C. A. and its agents for the purpose of crushing and punishing publishers of radical thought in theology, physiology, and medicine, who dare to step out of the track which orthodoxy prescribes and to be unfettered by creeds, sects, or schools.

In our opinion, this matter only needs to be understood for the mass of Liberals to take the same view of the whole question. In another year or two we believe that sustaining the cruel career of Anthony Comstock and his oppressive laws will not be deemed synonymous with morality, and that the greater number of American Liberals will be in favor of retaining and defending the rights and vital principles guaranteed by the Constitution as opposed to a censorship of the press and a Paul Pry espionage of our mails.

So let the leagues be organized with all the celerity possible, whether under the leadership of that veteran of liberty, Elizur Wright, or under the more trimming, time-serving, and less courageous F. E. Abbot. We doubt not the members will take a right view of these questions in due time.

What I Don't Believe.—No. 37.

331. I don't believe that in what are called the historical parts of the Bible there are such agreement and harmony as to render it infallible. Thus, to begin with the Creation, by these passages it would seem that man was made after the animals: "And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind. . . . And God said, Let us make man. . . . So God created man in his own image" (Gen. i, 25, 26, 27); while in the next chapter we have a different account, thus: "And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone: I will make him a help meet for him. And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field and every fowl of the air, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them" (Gen. ii, 18, 19).

332. A similar disagreement is found as to the number of beasts that Noah took into the ark, thus: "And the Lord said unto Noah, . . . Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens. . . . And Noah did according to all that the Lord commanded him" (Gen. vii, 1, 2, 5); while afterwards he says, "Of clean beasts . . . there went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, . . . as God had commanded Noah" (Gen. vii, 8, 9).

333. As to the promise of seedtime and harvest there is a discrepancy, thus: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest . . . shall not cease" (Gen. viii, 22); whereas again we have: "And the seven years of death began to come. . . . And the famine was over all the face of the earth" (Gen. xli, 54, 56); "For these two years hath the famine been in the land, and yet there are five years in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest"(Gen. xiv, 6)

334. As to the process of hardening Pharaoh's heart, differences of statement occur. First, "But I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go" (Ex. iv, 21); "And the Lord hardened the heart of Pharaoh" (Ex. ix, 12); and again, "But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not unto them" (Ex. viii, 15). Thus the reader is left to decide for himself as to who did the hardening.

335. According to Matt. ii, 14, 15, 19, 21, 23, Jesus was taken by his parents into Egypt where he remained until after the death of Herod, while according to Luke ii, 22, 39, he was not taken into Egypt; they took him to Jerusalem, remaining the rest of the time in Nazareth.

336. A slight difficulty arises between these passages: "And immediately (after his baptism) the spirit driveth him into the wilderness, And he was there in the wilderness forty days tempted of Satan" (Mark i, 12, 13), and this; "And the third day (after his baptism) there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee. . . . And both Jesus was called and his disciples to the marriage" (John ii, 1, 2). The question is; if Jesus was in the wilderness being tempted by the Devil, how could he at the same time be attending a wedding in Cana?

337. According to Matthew (chap. v, 1, 2), Jesus preached his first sermon "on the Mount," while according to Luke (chap. vi, 17, 20), he stood "in the plain, and the company of his disciples and a great multitude came to hear him."

338. According to Mark i, 14, John was in prison when Jesus went into Galilee, while according to John (i, 43, and iii, 22, 23, 24), it was not till afterwards.

339. In Mark vi, 8, 9, the disciples were commanded to take a staff and sandals, while in Matt. x, 9, 10, they were told to take neither gold nor silver, neither two coats, neither shoes nor yet staves.

340. According to Matt. xx, 30, two blind men besought Jesus, while according to Luke xviii, 35, 38 it was but one blind man.

341. According to Matt. viii, 28 two men possessed with devils came out from among the tombs, while according to Mark v, 2, it was only one man.

342. According to Mark xv, 25, Jesus was crucified at the third hour, while John (xix, 15, 14,) has it that he was not crucified until the sixth hour.

343. As Matthew states it, vinegar mingled with gall was given to Jesus to drink on the cross, while Mark says it was wine mingled with myrrh.

344. John says Satan entered into Judas while at supper, and Luke has it that it was after supper.

345. Matthew says Judas returned the thirty pieces of silver for which he sold his Lord to the chief priests and elders, while in Acts i, 18, it is stated that he purchased a field with the money. It is hard to make these statements harmonize.

346. Matthew says Judas hanged himself, while the writer of Acts says he fell headlong and burst himself in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. He could hardly have fallen headlong and burst himself open after he had hung himself, and he certainly would have found it difficult to hang himself after he had burst open and all his bowels gushed out.

347. John has it that one woman only came to the sepulcher, while Matthew states that two came; Mark, three; while Luke says there were more than three.

348. Mark says it was sunrise when they came to the sepulcher, and John says it was before sunrise.

349. Luke says two angels were seen at the sepulcher, standing up, while Matthew says but one angel was seen, and he was sitting down.

350. Matthew and Luke say the women went and told the disciples of Christ's resurrection, while Mark says they did nothing of the kind.

351. John says the angels appeared after Peter and John visited the sepulcher, while Luke says it was before.

352. Mark and John say Jesus appeared first to Mary Magdalen only, while Matthew says he appeared to the two Marys, and Luke says he appeared to neither of them. Query: Would such evidence convict a person of sheep-stealing in any of our courts of justice?

353. According to Matt. xii, 40, Jesus was to be three days and three nights in the grave, or in the heart of the earth; but according to Mark xv and xvi, 9, he was but one day and two nights. Is there any rule in mathematics by which one day and two nights can be converted into three days?

354. In Acts i and ii it is said the Holy Ghost was bestowed at Pentecost, while John states that it was before Pentecost.

355. According to Matthew the disciples were commanded immediately after the resurrection to go into Galilee, while according to Luke they were commanded to remain at Jerusalem.

356. Luke and John say that Jesus first appeared to the eleven disciples in a room at Jerusalem, while Matthew states that he first appeared to them on a mountain in Galilee.

357. According to the writer of Acts, Jesus made his ascension from Mount Olivet; according to Luke it was from Bethany; according to Mark it was from neither place; while John does not mention the circumstance, no more than as though it never occurred. Can writers who state the most remarkable event that ever occurred so differently be regarded as reliable authorities?

358. In Acts ix, 7, it says Paul's attendants heard the voice from heaven and stood speechless, while in chap. xxii, 9, and xxvi, 14, of the same book it is said his attendants heard not the voice, and were prostrate.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Removal of The Spiritual Offering.

We inadvertently omitted to notice the removal of this sprightly, well-conducted Spiritualistic magazine from Springfield, Mo., to Rochester, N. Y. We trust the change will result in an enlarged circulation and increased profits. The Spiritual Offering is very worthy of patronage, and should be financially encouraged by the Spiritualists of the country.

Reduction in Cost of Charters.

A motion was made in the late Congress of the N. L. L. at Syracuse that the price of charters for Local leagues be reduced. According to the Constitution of the National League this could not be done without a change in that instrument; but as it has been the practice of the Directors to allow five dollars to those instrumental in organizing leagues for each charter granted, the N. L. League passed a resolution that five dollars should be rebated on each charter, on account of the influence used to organize the League, so that hereafter charters will be furnished for $5.00 each. We hope that new leagues will spring up in all parts of the country.

As Col. Fox made the necessary motion for change in the Constitution, it is to be hoped that at the next Annual Congress the Constitution will be changed as to cost of charters. The price should not be so high as to act as an embargo to prevent applications. The facilities for organization should be furnished as reasonably as possible.

ELLA E. GIBSON would like to make engagements for lecturing in New York state. Would like a permanent situation for the winter. Expenses paid, without any salary, will be satisfactory. Address 21 Kennedy St., Syracuse, N. Y.

On such generous terms, this earnest Liberal woman certainly ought to hav steady work for the winter.

TO NEW patrons who wish to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER for a year we will add gratis the seven closing numbers of the present volume. To January 1880 for $3.00.

Mr. Damon on The Index.

BOSTON, Nov. 3, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am utterly astonished at the statement in the editorial column in The Index of October 31st, that the majority of the National Liberal League at Syracuse artfully persuaded the reform minority to vote for a resolution postponing the question of "repeal" versus "reform" to the next annual Congress, and then broke their own agreement by immediately proceeding to elect a strong "repeal" ticket.

I, for one, protest against this charge of moral turpitude being foisted upon the majority. There was no agreement made, and therefore none broken. Twice is this accusation made in this short editorial, and I call for proofs of any agreement whereby the majority in any way promised to surrender their right to vote for such officers as in their judgment would best subserve the interests of the League. The majority, in the Sunday morning session, magnanimously put over the question of repeal for one year so as not to take advantage of their strength against the conscientious convictions of the minority; but in the afternoon session (not immediately, but at the time set for election of officers) they cast their votes for the Hon. Elizur Wright for President. This was the unpardonable sin of the majority; nothing more and nothing less.

The "chagrined conspirators," is the epithet bestowed by The Index upon the large majority of respectable delegates, who are only chagrined that a minority should so far forget the courtesy due to a majority vote for officers as to secede when no question of principle was at issue after partaking in the election themselves. The "victory" of which the editorial is so proud is but the victory of its own misstatements over truth and fact—a kind of "moral victory," which needs "repealing" as much as the Comstock law itself. If these words are strong, they are justly provoked by this onslaught of The Index on the National Liberal League for its legitimate and conservative action.

Yours for liberty and equal rights, HENRY DAMON.

POOR JOSIE! This seems to be a good year for bad luck to her. Burglars broke into the house of Mr. Leland last week and stole some men's clothing and other articles, and a fine black silk dress belonging to Miss Tilton. She had relied upon it to appear at her best on her trial at Watkins. Now she will hav to go to court "with nothing to wear," poor girl! She wishes she had stayed in jail right among burglars who would hav been too confined if not too considerate to steal her dress. So wags a cruel world!

T. C. L.

The National Reformer, in its issue for September 15th, givs a graphic pen-picture of the crowd of friends of Mr. Edward Truelove awaiting his exit from the prison on the morning of his release. Mr. Bradlaugh and Maurice Truelove were there in a carriage, and as soon as the brave old man came forth he was greeted with warm hands and still warmer hearts by those who crowded about the carriage while he was entering it. As the carriage drove away, the crowd cheered, and in a few moments more Mr. Truelove was in the arms of his wife and daughters at his home, from which he had been torn four months previously for having published and sold Robert Dale Owen's "Moral Physiology."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

THE article on Yellow Fever which appeared on page 701 of THE TRUTH SEEKER for Nov. 2d should hav been credited to the Spelling Reformer. It expresses the theory of the editor, Mrs. Eliza B. Burns. We approve it, with the understanding that the "victims" are quite dead before they are cremated, which was doubtless the author's meaning.

IT IS never too late with us so long as we are still aware of our faults and bear them impatiently; so long as noble aspirations, eager for conquest, stir within us.—Jacobi, German.

Communications.

Splinters from a Free Pen.

If I'm designed yon lordling's slave.
By nature's law designed,
Why was an independent wish
E'er planted in my mind?
If not, why am I subject to
His cruelty or scorn?
Or why has man the will and power
To make his fellow mourn?

I am pained to learn that the obscenity dodge was again played at the Watkins Convention. What disgusts me more than anything else is the dishonesty manifested throughout this whole affair. If these persecutors had been actuated by half as honest motives as Heywood was in writing "Cupid's Yokes," no arrests would hav been made. I hav no doubt that Heywood was actuated by an honest desire to do good, while these spotless saints were moved by a spirit of malice and hatred. In the writings of Burns, Byron, Pope, and many other authors, language might be pointed out more objectionable than anything found in "Cupid's Yokes." Surely the worst things found in it would not suffer by a comparison with many select passages in the Bible. These books are found in nearly every family, and yet these censors are not in the least alarmed.

I hav no doubt there is much diversity of opinion in regard to what may or may not constitute obscenity. I hav works on physiology which I think are proper to keep in every family. These books contain some reading and pictures which would make many an old lady raise her spectacles and exclaim, "O, for shame!" They are in no sense obscene. They were written for a good purpose and out of pure motives. These books are necessary to make us acquainted with ourselves. They teach us how to liv in harmony with the laws of nature. And in order to do so we must make ourselves acquainted with every member and function of the body. If health, and happiness, and long life are desirable, then these books are a necessity. And what is a necessity, or even what conduces to our happiness, no one has a right to pronounce obscene.

I agree with Dr. Monroe that these books "cannot be read aloud to ladies and children;" but I disagree with him in his conclusion that "all such books should be piled up and burned in the fire." The reason why such books cannot be read aloud to ladies is more owing to the ignorance of the age in which we liv than to any other reason. When man shall attain to a more perfect degree of enlightenment, there will be no hidden secrets in nature which it will be indelicate for him to investigate or read aloud even to ladies.

No one will deny that the institution of marriage has much to do with the happiness of man. It may be said that Heywood's ideas of the institution are peculiar. All new ideas are peculiar, and generally meet with opposition. I think no one can seriously doubt that he meant to better the condition of his kind. If so, the chances are not one in a thousand that he wrote an obscene book. Obscenity is not the natural outgrowth of honest intentions and a clear brain.

I care nothing about the fate or philosophy of the book; it must stand or fall upon its own merits. We hav bargained for an untrammeled press. Shall we hav it? This is a question of far deeper import than the fate of a book. Shall a man who writes a book with honest intentions, even though the book may be distasteful to us, be put in prison? That's the rub. The question is not whether Heywood wrote a book to the taste of Dr. Monroe or any one else, but whether he had a right to write it. If that right has been violated, Dr. Monroe is as much interested as any man in this nation.

It is not the harm that this little book has done in society that has put Mr. Heywood in prison; it is the damage done to the Church by its author as a Freethinker which has worked the mischief. The author of the "Prayer," published in the Seymour Weekly Times, would fare far worse than the author of "Cupid's Yokes" if the Church had the power. Obscenity is the merest pretense. Freethought, and not obscenity, was the object of their persecutions. Mental freedom has ever been the dread of the Church, and its advocates hav been made to suffer the severest penalties which it could inflict. Giv the Church the same power which it once possessed in Spain, and again it would resort to the same measures to carry out its wicked purposes. All Liberals realize this fact, and it is all the more painful to see them stabbing each other with their pens, when all their forces should be brought to bear upon the common foe. The radical editor, way ahead on the cowcatcher, larrups his brother back in the sleeping-car; while the editor in the sleeping-car shouts to him on the cowcatcher, and warns him of his danger, tells him it isn't decent to ride there, and urges him to come back and stay with respectable company. Thus some of our best papers find fault with and criticise each other, which does no good at all, but results in injury to the cause so dear to us all; besides the Christians point to the temple of reason and say, "Behold what a babel they make of it." These papers all hav their uses, and I giv each and every one a hearty welcome. Where an ultra paper would not take root, a moderate paper would flourish and produce good fruit. They are but stations at which nearly all must stop in their long road from a hide-bound church to the temple of Freethought.

Of course I was sorry to see Dr. Monroe take the position he did, because it is the very thing of which I complain. I hav thought it was a good thing that I felt too poor to attend the Watkins Convention, for if it had come in my way I should hav helped Miss Tilton to sell her books, and would hav done it as innocently as I would help a lady out of a carriage or pick up her fan. If Dr. Monroe had used such language to me as he did to those arrested at Watkins, I should hav felt deeply hurt and thought the language not only ungenerous but uncalled for. It is upon the enemies of Freethought that we should direct our fire, and the aim should be taken with great care before pulling trigger, lest we wound its best friends instead of its enemies.

Those who were arrested at Watkins are my friends. Those who caused them to be arrested are the enemies of Freethought, and, as I believe, the enemies of their kind. Should any Liberal be undecided in regard to the standard around which he will rally, the friends of freedom and human progress on the one side, and the friends of bigotry and ignorance on the other? Let all the enginery of Freethought be made to play upon the minions of priestcraft and superstition. If we cease from the fight and turn our batteries upon each other, our enemies will gain strength and take new courage.

The very worst feature of American slavery was its power to obliterate the last vestige of manhood and make the slave contented with his lot, even to the honoring of his master and the wearing of his chains with pride. There are thousands in the country whose condition is not far above that of the degraded slave. They are willing to hav a vast army of priests quartered upon them for support, whose mission it is to cripple the minds of the masses and make them glory in the burdens imposed upon them.

Let us direct the minds of the masses to the sunlight of reason; let us break the mental chains which bind them down in ignorance; let us endeavor to cultivate fraternal feelings among ourselves. Above all, let us forget our feuds and strifes, and use our energies for the more noble and glorious purpose of elevating our kind and making the world better.

These holy mongers in drafts on the world to come can never be convinced of their error, for the reason that a political hack cannot be convinced of the rottenness of his party so long as he holds an office under it. We must enlighten the masses until they naturally withdraw their support, and then the priesthood will become an easy prey. All who labor to this end hav my sympathy, and if in the pursuit of their labors they are brought to trouble, I will make their cause my own and help them to the extent of my ability. I will never desert a friend in the hour of danger; worse than all, I will not stab him in the back when he falls into the hands of his enemies.

If Dr. Monroe thinks "Cupid's Yokes" unfit to read in the presence of ladies, he has an undoubted right to say so. If he thinks the little book ought to be burned, he has a right to say that. If "the sentences are badly put together," nobody will question his right to say so. But does Dr. Monroe feel as though he ought to go to jail because he has made these criticisms? Yet it would be no greater outrage upon Dr. Monroe than it is upon poor Heywood. The right to publish one's thoughts is a sacred one, and though men may be erratic and go astray sometimes, yet there is far less danger in the unrestrained freedom of thought than there is in clothing a certain class of men with power to restrain it. Has mankind been worse injured by the free exercise of the human mind than it has by having it restrained and dwarfed and choked? I appeal to the world's history for an answer.

I once visited a taxidermist. He had the finest collection of birds I ever saw. On either side of the walk leading up to the house a live eagle was chained. These birds would rise up and beat the air at the end of their chains, but their flight was limited by the length of their chains. They could look into the blue ether, they could display their powers of flight, but their broad and powerful pinions were mocked by their chains. Here, said I, is a picture of the human mind—gifted with the power to soar aloft, but ever chained down. Oh, said I, if I had the power, how quickly these noble birds would cleave the air and hie away to their mountain home! So, if I had the power, I would break every mental chain and let the mind of man go free. There should be no height which he might not explore, no depths to which he should not descend. Nature should yield up all her secrets to this mysterious agent, the human mind. Woe! woe! to him who holds the chain which fetters the human mind.

JOHN PECK.

Naples, N. Y., Sept. 26, 1878.

Economy.

Economy is a very good principle, but it is very often ill applied. In such times as these, when the masses of our entire nation are suffering from the want of money to purchase their daily necessaries with, streets, stores, and by-places generally contain an ample share of frugal-minded preachers of economy. They tell us, by way of explaining our condition, that we hav livd altogether "too fast." That we must go a little slower, and wear the "old coat" a little longer. If such economy as this could do us any good, we ought now to be in a flourishing condition from the amount of it we hav been compelled to practice for the last few years.

Among the many preachers of economy is one very eloquent and evidently talented gentleman, who states that "the prosperity of the nation lies in the prosperity of the individual." That we may know what kind of prosperity, and to whom he ascribes the welfare of the nation, the following quotation from the same article is given: "A man must be prosperous who receives more money than he spends, whether he reckons his wealth by millions or hundreds."

It must be conceded as a reasonable and philosophical truth that "the prosperity of the nation lies in the prosperity of the individual," but when the gentleman introduces the man who receives more money than he spends as the prosperous "indivdual," he involves a principle in which the prosperity of one individual entails the adversity of another—and the same with nations. Let us see how the theory of receiving more than we spend will work when universally applied; for certainly if it is right and good for the individual to save part of his income, the same right must extend to all, and the same good must consequently follow. Then, if it is good for the whole people to save one dollar of their earnings or profits per week or per month, it must be twice as good to save two dollars, and better to save the whole amount. What then would be the result? Just precisely what we hav nearly arrived at now—a complete stagnation.

Unquestionably, when money was plentifully distributed, circulating freely, thereby exchanging products rapidly, the great demand for products stimulated men of enterprise to build manufactories and develop productive resources, setting men and machinery at work all over the land, which soon resulted in a glutted market, which is, under the present imperfect, unjust, and oppressive system, followed by a chain of natural, almost inevitable, ruinous acts; such, for instance, as lowering products, affecting wages in such a manner as to entail economy, producing greater stagnation, which makes men the more desperate to keep their lagging machinery and discontented men at work, till every nerve is strained to its uttermost, and failure stamps itself on every effort.

Though the wants of the people are as great to-day, and probably greater than ever before, their means of supplying those wants are diminished. Why wonder, then, at the failures and bankruptcies in business and enterprise of every kind? The people are not consuming (though they would be if they only had what an unjust system of working, and probably other causes, hav robbed them of—money to purchase with) near so much now as they did ten years ago. Consequently there is not so much labor required nor so many productive shipping nor distributing resources. The fittest survive the longest. Then say how the economy of wearing the "old coat" a little longer can serve to set the wheels of industry in motion. What other difference than just a matter of time could going slower hav had to retard starvation in the midst of plenty? Of course, fewer productive resources would hav been developed, but less products would hav been consumed; and the railroad companies, two-per-centers, in short, the "big fish," would still hav kept on in the old way—draining the life blood from the veins of commerce in the same proportionate degree.

The masses would hav been robbed of their purchasing medium just the same. Products would hav glutted the markets in proportion as the people were robbed just the same. People would hav been thrown out of employment and left to starve in the midst of plenty, taunted with the cry of "over production," just the same. Then cease to preach economy to a people already on the verge of starvation. Tell us no more that we must wear the "old coat" a little longer. Such sophistry will never occasion the needless rust to leave the idle wheels of machinery.

Winter is drawing near, and there is no more comfort in the "old coat." The warmth has gone out of it teetotally. Before we can derive any comfort, before we can employ ourselves again, we must purchase the new coat. We must relieve the glutted market, create a demand for products, and that will establish all the "faith" necessary for all practical purposes.

A large volume of money, which will pay every variety of debt, issued by Government, and got into circulation by means of internal improvements, or any other more direct manner, is what we need, and what we must hav to start up the wheels of industry.

ROBERT CUMMING.

Junction City, Kan.

The Bible in the Public Schools of New Haven.

Whether the Bible shall be read in the public schools of New Haven is a question answered in the affirmative by a recent election of a Board of Education, a majority of the new members being committed to that side of the controversy. The Bible had for a year been excluded, and Protestants and Catholics united in the effort to introduce it again; but now a new controversy has arisen as to what form of devotional exercises shall accompany the Bible readings. A committee including both Protestant and Catholic clergymen, after protracted consultations, has prepared a service to be used, but a bitter fight is sure to follow its submission to the Board of Education. The manual provides, first, a prayer by the teacher and the children, as follows:

"Teacher—In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

"Let us pray:

"Direct, we beseech thee, O Lord, all our actions by thy holy grace, and, by thy assistance, bring them to a happy issue; that every prayer and work of ours may always begin by thee, and under thy guidance may be finished: through Christ, our Lord.

"Children respond—Amen.

"Teacher—Come, O Holy Ghost, replenish the hearts of thy faithful, and enkindle in them the fire of thy love. Send forth Thy spirit, and they shall be created.

"Children respond—And thou shalt renew the face of the earth.

"Teacher—Let us pray: O God, who, by the light of the Holy Ghost, didst instruct the hearts of the faithful, grant us, we beseech thee, through the same Holy Spirit, a love and relish of what is right and just, and a constant enjoyment of his consolation who livest and reignest, world without end.

"Children respond—Amen."

The Lord's Prayer follows, except that the final sentence, "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever," is omitted. Next is the fact that gives rise to Protestant objections, a prayer to the Virgin Mary:

"Teacher—Hail, Mary, full of grace; the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

"Children respond—Holy Mary, Mother of GOD, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death. Amen."

Next is something to displease not only Unitarians, but many others who voted for the Bible readings—the Apostles' Creed:

"Teacher—I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; he descended into hell; the third day he arose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven, sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence he will——

"Children—Come to judge the living and the dead.

"Teacher—I believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy Catholic Church; the communion of saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body and life everlasting. Amen."

The Rev. Dr. Woolsey is quoted as saying that the Protestants will never consent to the "Hail, Mary!" and it is likely that the Catholics, having furnished a large share of the votes, will insist on that feature of the manual; while the unorthodox influence will go with either side that is most likely to hinder the introduction of any religious service at all.—Sun.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Twelfth Letter.

REFLECTIONS ON THE TRIAL.

ZION HIL, N. J., Nov. 4, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: That trial ov mine waz kwite an episode in our littel kommunity. Nuthing haz happend for a long time that haz kreated more exsitement and given the gossips more food for tawk. Ov kourse a good meny, like Sister Jones, ar down on me, and think I aut to hav ben far more severely handeld for reeding such an out-and-out Infidel paper az THE TRUTH SEEKER, az wel az to kontribute to its kolums and to induse uther persons to take it. Meny ov this klass think Elder Goodly choked off the trial to kwik, and did not allow meny to expres thare vues in the matter. Sum go so far az to sa that Sister Jones waz rite, and that she aut to hav ben allowd to run Deeken Skidmore out ov the church, for the reezon that the church kan never prosper if it allows its deekens and leeding members to be Infidels or to reed Infidel papers. Sister Jones haz gone so far az to sa that if this thing iz kept up she and haf a dozen more hoo beleev a thouzand times more in Jezus and hiz saving blud than tha do in all the reezon, siense, nacheral laws, and orijinal kauzes, wil leev the church. She sez she wood rather be with Jezus for the spase ov ten minnits than to hav all the Infidel nolej and siense that iz in the world. To heer her go on, wun wood think she really haz intervues with Jezus, and that he tawks to her and kareses her the same az he wood a pet child. But I hav ben threw all this for too meny yeers to beleev eny such pretenshuns. I hav lernt that it iz all in the imajinashun, and that thoze hoo hav the most vivid imajinashuns and kan draw upon them the most frely, or thoze, perhaps, hoo ar not, in the ordinary affares ov life, the most reliable in matters ov fakt, hav the gratest storys to tel about Jezus—how he looks, whot he sez to them, whot the Holy Gost sez to them, and all that; but I don't take much stok in eny fansy tawk ov that kind. A person mite az wel undertake to tell me whot the man in the moon dreemd 3 weeks before the 4th ov July.

On the uther hand, thare are a good meny in our church hoo disapproov ov the kourse that Sister Jones took, and sa that if she had ben aloud to keep on in the wa she began, she wood soon hav broken the church all to peeses. Meny ov theze think Elder Goodly did not do kwite rite to let the mischeef-making woman go az far az he did, but tha ar glad that he choked her off so erly and sent her home about her biznes, even if it did make her az mad az a hornet. It waz prity kleer to be seen that the Elder saw that he had "put hiz foot in it," and that when he perseevd that the effeckts ov the trial, if kontinued, wood be to drive out ov the church sum ov its welthiest and most responsibel members, he desided that it wood not do to karry the joke to far. Kaptin Smith sez the Elder began to feer for hiz own salary. If Deeken Skidmore, Mr. Karter, and a fu more like them shood withdraw or be expeld, it wood be pretty hard sledding for the rest, and it waz more than doutful whether the Elder's salary wood be forthcoming when he needed it. I tel yu, Mr. Editur, the finanses ov a church ar wun ov the most important items in the hull biznes. I hav notist during the meny yeers that I hav ben konnekted with church matters that munny iz ov the furst konsekwense. The preechers often kall it the root ov all evil, but unless tha hav it tha wil not preech. No matter how much konsern tha ma feel for soles, tha wil not preech nor pra for them long without munny. I hav more than wunse sed that if all the munny now pade to klerjymen waz to be suddenly stopt, the preeching and praing wood stop also, and the poor dying soles mite all go to hel for all that wood be dun to prevent it by the klergy. It iz perhaps hard to juj them that wa; but let eny man that feels interested in the matter look at it for a minnit. We no the shumaker and the blaksmith wil not work without pa; the karpenter and the briklayer expekt thare pa or tha wil not work; the doctor and the lawyer expekt thares or tha wil not work. The almity doller seems to be ov the furst konsekwense to all ov them, and to the preecher fully az much az eny ov them. No pa, no preech, iz the prinsipel tha akt upon. Altho tha konsider themselves charged with the saving ov human soles, I feel thare wood hardly wun be saved if the preechers did not hav the doller before thare ize to insite them on and to stimulate them to thare duty. Yu must pardon me if I expres the fakt I hav sumtimes entertaned, that the preechers gave the doller far to much importanse in the biznes. It looks az tho tha lernd the avokashun ov preeching just az a yuth lerns eny other trade—for the living it affords him—and that he pursues it just so long az it pays him to do so, and no longer. I hav herd the remark made, among relijus peepel too, that in a family of boys, when the different trades were pikd out for them to lern, the dullest ware assined to be klerjymen, leeving the smarter wuns for lawyers, dokters, masheenists, and so forth. This iz sed to be dun bekauz les orijinal talent iz rekwird to be a minister than in eny other kind ov biznes. Kum to look at it, thare iz not vary much advanse made in relijun. We hav improovments in masheenery, agrikultural implements, karrijes, and almost everything else, but in relijun and kreeds thare iz vary littel chanje. With the exsepshun ov leeving out sum ov the sulfer, and painting the devil les blak than formerly, I kan't se az much chanje haz ben made sinse I waz a boy. Tha tel me the same anekdotes and giv us the same theories that tha used to 40 yeers ago. I hav sumtimes wunderd if this iz to go on hundreds ov yeers longer, az it haz for hundreds ov yeers in the past, and whether even theolojy shood not partake ov the spirit ov progress and advansement, the same az everything else. I hav kwestyund the probability ov all the truth in theolojy having ben diskoverd neer 2 thouzand yeers ago, while it waz not the kase in eny other branch ov nolej or siense. Az I sed, theolojy iz the only thing in which improovments hav not ben made, and in which the improovd lite ov the later senturys hav not kauzd the opinyuns ov the older senturys to be set aside.

But I must not sa to much in this line, or yure reeders ma think I am weekening in my fathe. I hav only alluded to the thawts that hav run thru my mind. Az it kannot be expekted that truth wil chanje, so, if theolojy iz tru, perhaps we shood not expekt that it shood undergo meny alterashuns. If, however, I kood hav the revizhun ov it and leev it just az tru az it iz now, there are several points which I wood like to chanje so az to soften down and mollify them somewhot in the ize ov thoze hoo, but for them, wood hartily embrase it. But this iz not the subjekt on which I intended to rite this time, and I wil let theolojy go by for the prezent.

It makes me smile when I meet my frends ov the church to heer thare remarks about that trial. I notis the more sensibel part praze whot Mr. Karter sed, and tha ask me why I did not make a speech myself. I tel them I did intend to, but the Elder braut the meeting to such a sudden klose that I had no oportunity. I tel them, to, that Mr. Karter exprest my mind very nicely, and that had I spoken I shood hav follode prity much the same line of remarks. In fakt I rather wanted to giv Sister Jones and sum ov the uther over-zelus soles a littel bit ov my mind on the subjekt ov a porshun ov the church or ov a komunity desiding whot iz proper for the balans to reed, to sa, and to think. I hav notist that for meny weeks yu hav had a prity lively kontest with that kulcherd editur on a subjekt sumwhot akin to this, the Boston man contending that wun porshun ov the public hav the rite to deside whot books, pamflets, etc., uthers ma send thro the males, giving postmasters, judjes, and jurys the power to settel whot iz rite and proper for uthers to reed, and whot tha shal be sent to prizen for sending thro the males. Let me ashure yu I am on yure side ov this kweschun. I am in favor ov liberty on the largest skale, and am sorry to se such laws enakted by Kongres az deprive peepel ov thare libertys. It iz even better that men hav the liberty to do rong than that theze libertys shood be taken awa. Eny enakment that tends to deprive the peepel ov this kuntry ov thare liberty or giv wun klas power to akt az sensor for the uthers, and that konfers upon kortes and jurys the power to send peepel to prizen for exersizing the rite ov opinyun or the rites ov an Amerikan sitizen, kanot be watcht with to much jellusy. When our libertys ar taken awa we ar no better than serfs and slaves.

I lern that Sister Jones haz ben in an unhapy frame ov mind sinse the trial. She sez the Elder shut down on her too kwick, and did not giv her haf a chanse to fre her mind; had she ben aloud to go on, she wood hav given the heretiks harder blows than she did. She stil insists that Infidels aut not to be aloud to remane with the fatheful. She duz not kare whether it iz Deeken Skidmore, Mr. Karter, or hooever it ma be, if tha insist upon taking Infidel papers, tha aut not to be permitted to sta in the church. She feelz az tho Mr. Karter heded her off. and she iz sed to be very much down upon him. I met Sister Jones over to the store the other day, and at furst she wood hardly speek to me, but I told her it waz foolish to let il feelings kontrol her; that tho she had tride to stir up a hornet's nest about my eers, I did not feel the slitest il wil toards her, and that I shood indulge in no abatement ov the frendship I had before felt for her; that she had simply akted out her nature, and that she waz not to blame for it eny more than I waz for akting out mine. It waz by virchew ov her organizashun that she had an over-supply ov zeel and piety; that I perhaps had rather a defishensy. I told her I shood think no less ov her good qualities than I had dun, and wharein she did not kum up to my sense ov right, I shood not blame her for it.

The sister sofend down konsiderably, and sed she did not expekt such kindnes of feeling from me. She must admit that I had borne miself onerably, and tho she thawt I had dun vary rong in subskribing for so bad a paper az THE TRUTH SEEKER, and bringing it into the vary church, and indusing other memberz ov the church to take it, she must admit that I had akted vary gentelmanly toards her, and that I waz also a vary worthy member ov sosiety. She sed she saw that Elder Goodly waz much alarmd lest the investigashun shood be prest to far, and he waz feerful lest I mite be so annoid that I wood konklude to leev the church rather than put up with to much meddelsumnes, and she saw that the elder waz vary unwilling that that shood okkur. "Now," sed she, "Deeken Skidmore, I am just az unwiling to hav yu leev the Church az iz Elder Goodly himself. I no we kood not run the institushun vary wel without yu, and before wun yeer wood role around we wood miss yu terribly. What I waz after waz to get the Church to kondem yu for reeding THE TRUTH SEEKER and kompel yu to kast it aside. I do hate that paper, and I kant bare to hav enybody I think enything ov to take it or patronize it."

I sed, "Sister Jones, if it waz possibel for yu to reed that paper without prejudis, perhaps yu wood think a grate deel better ov it. I don't beleev near all it sez, but I find a good deel in it that I like, and I kan't se az the reeding ov it duz me the leest harm in the world. Let us all labor, Sister Jones, to hav more charity for eech other." She shook me korjally by the hand and we parted good frends.

Now, Mr. Editur, I wil not detane yure reeders eny longer this time.

I stil remane yure respektful frend,

JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Mr. Truelove at the Hall of Science.

Mr. Truelove's position in jail, in prison clothes, on prison fare, and on a plank for his nocturnal naps, was in striking contrast to his position in the Hall of Science shortly after his liberation, surrounded by friends and with encouraging mottoes wrought in green on crimson, while the pillars and walls of the hall were wreathed in ivy.

We are glad to observe that our Mr. Conway was present—the Rev. M. D. Conway—who cannot be forgotten by his countrymen. Mr. Conway delivered a very effective address, in the course of which he remarked: "There was a tendency to relapse into long past tyranny, from which they had thought they were divided by many revolutions. If this tendency were allowed to triumph, the most precious crowned jewels of the Anglo-Saxon race would be lost. Mr. Truelove had vindicated the right of free publication, the right to free expression of opinion, and without this right no progress was possible, and the world might as well undergo the catastrophe predicted by the astronomers, and fly into the sun." Addresses were also made by Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, Dr. Drysdale, Mrs. Law, Mr. Parris, and others.

The Rev. Stewart Headlam, in responding to a call, said he was not prepared to say he was a Malthusian, although perhaps he might be one if he studied the subject; but he was glad as a churchman and as a clergyman of the church to bear testimony to the good work done by Mr. Truelove in suffering for liberty. He felt strongly that the population question ought to be discussed, and that it was praiseworthy in Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, and Mr. Truelove that they had brought this question forward. All the more should they try to help them, he said, because the question was a delicate a one. He further said that he was not alone in his position as regards the population question; other clergymen felt the need of its being fully discussed.

When Mr. Truelove was introduced to the audience he was greeted with repeated applause and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs. He uttered a few words of earnest, manly thanks for the welcome accorded him. He hoped shortly to tell them of his prison life, which may perhaps imply that he will publish by and by his experience during his cruel confinement.

We have in our previous issues spoken of the effect of such persecutions upon the publications which they were instituted to suppress. Dr. Drysdale, in his remarks, said the prosecution in England had caused the sale of twenty-five thousand copies of Annie Besant's work and some one hundred and sixty thousand copies of the Knowlton pamphlet, which had been translated into German, Dutch, and other tongues.

The result is precisely the same in this country where publications have been attached. The pamphlet "Cupid's Yokes" has received a large circulation which it otherwise would not hav acquired. It is being spread broadcast throughout the United States, and has recently been openly advertised in the New York dailies.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Letters from Friends.

YPSILANTI, MICH., Oct. 17, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I desire to thank you for your persistent warfare against bigotry, ignorance, and superstition. Persecuted truth must and will finally prevail, and martyred victims will live forever in the memory of all lovers of virtue. Your Christian (O! what odious characters Christians are becoming!) enemies appear to be determined to spread as broad and as lasting the great name of Bennett and the sound truths he teaches as it is possible, and in consequence thereof the extra pious are becoming moderate, and the moderate believers in the efficacy of blood to save them are becoming skeptical.

Again thanking you for the good work you hav thus far accomplished, I am with you for freedom of the press, the mails, the sales, the purchasing and reading of any and all books and papers. J. W. BABBITT, M.D.

P. S. Inclosed is 60 cents, for which please send TRUTH SEEKER and Dictionary to a new subscriber. Direct to Daniel Smoke, Holly, Mich.

LOUDONVILLE, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Der Sur: Inklozed plez find $3.00 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 103 (1879), and for premium plez send me "Age of Reazon," paper, and Scientific tract No. 8, and the balans in "Truth Seeker Lefletz."

I am vere glad tu see that yu hav taken wun important step in speling reform, and dropt the final e from "have," "live," and "give," and I trust uther paperz wil soon folo, but do aulwaz kep a litel ahed ov aul paperz not devoted espeshale tu speling reform, and yurz shal be the onor ov praktikale komensing this important reform. How soon this reform wood be braut about if evere editur wood onle "poot hiz sholder tu the hwel" az yu ar duing. But wil yu let me sa a wurd or tu abowt sum ov the rulz propozd?

Rul 4 in THE TRUTH SEEKER for Juli 13, says that "ll modifiz a presiding a, making it" au. Now, if au iz ever tu be uzd tu reprezent a partikular round hwi shood it not aulwaz be uzd to reprezent that sound? Let us be rit az far az we go, and not be under the nesesite ov going bak tu korrekt an error that waz koolle and deliberatle mad.

Rul 6, "qu iz the ekwivalent ov ew." Mi on opinyun iz that qu had beter giv plas tu kw, and that c had beter be uzd onle hwar uther leterz kannot mor properle tak itz plas, az for egzampel with h to reprezent the sound ov ch in "chere."

Rul 8 wood hav e reprezent the natural vouel u befor r in sertan wurdz hwil in uther wurds it wood uz u, the rul being bast on prezent uzaj. Now this rul semz tu me vere absurd. If u iz the proper leter tu reprezent the vouel sound in such wurdz az "kurb" and "wurd," it shood be uzd tu reprezent that sound hwarever it okkurz. Thar iz a litel tu much "kultyur" in this rul.

Uther rulz wil be her kritisizd, but I wil not trubel yu with ene mor at prezent. The prezent leter iz a good index ov mi prezent ideaz ov speling reform. I am oppozd to silent leterz hwar tha kan be dispenst with, and I think that y and i shood be uzd hwar e reprezents the proper sound mor korrektle. If we ar going tu reform our speling and uz no nu leterz, let us du the vere best we kan, and mak klen wurk ov it az we go. No purson kan for a moment kontend that this speling iz at aul difekult.

Yurz for aul neded reformz, F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.

POPLAR, O., Oct. 29, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: The "Congress" has passed, and I am anxious to hear from it. I want my name on that petition for "Repeal" of that cursed unconstitutional Comstock Y. M. C. Ass-ociation law, and I also want "D. Tuttle's" name on Elizur Wright's Declaration of Independence.

DANIEL TUTTLE.

MIND. WHAT IS IT?

ALTONA, ILL., Oct. 27, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: I hav been a truth seeker lo! these many years, and when I presumed to emerge from under the dark and damnable shades of that wide-spread tree of superstition where I had been compelled on every Lord's holy Sabbath to hav my youthful mind-crammed and packed by an ignorant and vindictive priesthood, with the fall of Adam, total depravity, bottomless lake of hell-fire and brimstone, lined with infants of the human family who had never livd to know what fools there are in this world, or hear of vicarious atonement, or blood of Christ which washes away all sins. One very beneficial truth to me, which I soon discovered, was that the very small amount of truth which I did know in contrast with the infinite amount which I did not know was too insignificant to admit of any comparison, and I sometimes think some of your critics and contributors would be benefited could they discover that truth in themselves.

To-day I am a Materialist of the first water, for I cannot conceive of any being, object, or thing for which the English language finds a name which can hav form or function outside of and independent of this grand old material universe, our good old mother Nature, and the mind which has grown so great and wise as to define and set limits to her possibilities is truly infinite. My days now number nearly three score years and ten, and the little that I know makes me anxious to know much more. It is easy for a child to ask questions which the wise man cannot answer. If it would be proper for me just now, I would like to ask a few questions for the consideration of Bro. Bennett, Bro. Ingersoll, Sister Slenker, or any other truth seekers, on the subject, "Mind! What is It?"

1. Does mind assume form and grow? If so, what constitutes its sustainance?

2. Can any physical organization perform any of the functions of locomotion without the consent and assistance of mind?

3. Does mind labor with oppressive cares, or become diseased so as to work injurious results to physical organizations?

4. Can the mind of one physical organization control the mind and physical organization of another without any physical contact, sounds, or signs, and the two be fifty yards apart?

5. What evidence hav you that mind (material) is not the first grand factor in every physical organization?

These questions hav arisen in my mind from a little circumstance which I will briefly relate. A few years since I met a matronly lady who claimed to be a clairvoyant physician (and justly, too, I believe), and who, I hav the best of reasons to say, never heard my name before or knew anything of my history. After a short conversation on general subjects, she rose to her feet and took a few steps toward me in a sort of gait peculiar to my father (who has been dead many years) and seated herself again some six or eight feet from me, and commenced repeating to me many important events in my early life which had been lost sight of by myself under more recent and important events, and all this time making use of the praise words which my father used at such times, and their peculiarities which none but a real auditor could imitate. I will giv but one of the many true hits she made.

"You know, my son, that when that old Baptist church was crowded to hear Elder Himes preach, he lovd to come to my house every noon and get his dram of New England rum and his doughnuts and cheese and talk about Jackson and the United States bank as though he was nothing but a man."

She appeared to read to me much of my life known only to me and my father (of whom she knew nothing) as readily as I your print in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Inclosed please find $2.00, and if I were not so poor I would say send me a "Cupid," that I may be equally yoked with believers and apply the remainder to my paper, and oblige, Yours, L. K. MOORE.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Oct. 6, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I hav been thinking for some time that I would write to thank thee for thy kindness in sending me a copy of the "Holy Bible Abridged." I cannot say that it is at all calculated to refine, ennoble, or purify the human race. But as it is God's holy word, given to us for a guide and rule of action; given to us to lead us in the way of righteousness and eternal life; given to us to make us perfect even as he himself is perfect, (!) we must, per force read, admire, and treasure up every one of its precious words, even though to our unregenerate minds they seem the very concentration of obscenity and nastiness! We must read these abridged bibles upon our knees with a holy awe-ful reverence, lest we get disgusted at the emanations of divine wisdom, holiness, and loveliness therein set forth. Remember, then, each and all of you who are so lucky as to be able to secure this unique little volume, to be in an especially prayerful state when you read the peculiarly lovely and sweet songs of the wisest man who ever blessed this earth by his presence, example, and precept, as well as when reading the other choice bits of literature it contains.

And now, my dear brother Bennett, would it not be a good plan to offer a chromo to every Sabbath-school teacher who will read a chapter from this pious collection of the gems of polite literature to the modest, virtuous, refined and cultured young ladies and gentlemen and innocent little girls and boys who come to the God-house for divine and holy instruction upon the Lord's blessed day, and then proceed to explain and comment upon the lesson? I think we can easily raise a fund for the purpose of getting up the chromos, especially if they are got up so as to illustrate the several texts and chapters?

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, you who are too poor to buy the great works of the Lord complete in one volume, I assure you you will find "food for thought" in this abridged selection, and I trust every one of you will buy at least one copy to lend to your pious neighbors. I assure you there are thousands of good church members who are totally ignorant of the fact that their holy guide-book is, any portion of it, unfit for public or private perusal. I hav a young lady acquaintance who was greatly surprised at hearing that there was anything at all improper in any portion of the holy writ. But I think when she has read the copy I hav, together with the note of introduction which I shall inclose, she will slightly alter her opinion of the "grand old book."

Gratefully and respectfully thine,
ELMINA D. SLENKER.

EDINBURG, IND., Oct. 27, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Brother: Inclosed please find $10.00 which dispose of as follows: . . . I anticipate many a pleasant evening hour, perusing the above volumes when they shall come to hand. I hav carefully perused "Cupid Yokes," which you sent me and am surprised that a man should be imprisoned for writing the book. It don't accord with my sentiments, and yet I must confess to myself, that my mind has often traveled over the same road laid down in the pamphlet, seeing reason in many of its statements. But I hav unvaryingly fallen back upon our present marriage system with its civil (not ecclesiastical) institutions as the best, all things considered. But I most cordially admit that E. E. Heywood in coming to different conclusions is entitled to the same respect as myself. I see nothing obscene in it, nor do I perceive that in treating the subject Mr. Heywood could hav used better language. Of course, the language is not heavenly or divine as is the "Holy Bible Abridged" but much more chaste.

You may place me on your roll of Declaration of Rights. I hope before long to send my mite toward the Defense Fund. Yours, etc., E. K. HOSFORD.

NOBLE, KAN., Oct. 1878.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please send me "Draper's Intellectual Development of Europe." You may put me down as an unconditional repealer. I was a repealer before the petition was ever circulated, and I signed it because it involved a principle and that principle lies at the very foundation of our civil and religious liberties. That principle can not be modified without being trampled upon, and the Comstock laws cannot be modified without modifying the principle. Then let them be repealed and let us have peace. Respectfully, JOSEPH LE CLERC.

99½ GIFFORD ST., SYRACUSE, Nov. 3, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Parker Pillsbury, in his comparison of "Cupid's Yokes" with the Holy Scriptures, omitted to mention this striking coincidence.

In spite of the obscenity to be found in the Bible, it was the book which was a power to many earnest souls; it was the herald of liberty and freedom. Luther and his fellow reformers found it to be the charter of their rights, convincing them of the duty of thinking for themselves, delivering them from the old superstition, and enabling each individual soul to draw near to God without the intervention of priest or confessor.

So too, "Cupid's Yokes" in spite of its distasteful title, etc., etc., in spite of all that its enemies and timid friends say in its disparagement, contains the very essense of purity. As the reformer of the sixteenth century asserted that there could be no worship without freedom for each individual soul to enter the holy of holies and commune alone with its maker, so the much despised book, for the writing of which Mr. Heywood is shut up in prison, proclaims that there can be no divine idealization of love without freedom. Here too the individual soul enters the holy of holies without priest or confessor.

The bigots of the past called such worship blasphemy, the bigots of the present call such love obscenity.

Humanity shall yet assert its right to freedom, and prove that to be true which was so eloquently said by the Jewish rabbi at our late convention, viz: "There can be no morality without freedom, and there can be no freedom without morality.

Still another coincidence, When the Bible was given to the common people, those who translated and printed it were persecuted from city to city, imprisoned and scourged, but there were not wanting brave men and women, who in face of prisons, aye, of death, printed, and read, and circulated the forbidden book. Who shall say that Ezra H. Heywood and Josephine Tilton are less brave and true to their own conviction of the right, than were these early saints.

The blood of the martyrs is in our veins? Those of us who are not accounted worthy to suffer in the cause of human freedom can at least exult that there are those among us who are proving that they are the children of the prophets, and who go forth with the same self-abnegation that led the great apostle to the Gentiles to exclaim, "And now behold I go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there, save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me."

God grant that we too may be able to say at the end, "I hav fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I hav kept the faith." Yours for freedom and purity,
D. R.

21 KENNEDY ST., SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1878.

MR. BENNETT: Did you know that you probably escaped arrest by leaving Syracuse Sunday evening? The Standard states that preparations were being made for your arrest, giving the names of the informers, etc.

Last evening I went to hear Col. Ingersoll in Wieting's Opera House, on "Some Mistakes of Moses." It was grand, amusing, ludicrous, and destructive of all claims for inspiration for Mr. Moses or any other unknown author who may hav compiled the Pentateuch, be he man or be he God. A small audience—kept away by the Christian bigots, doubtless. The Colonel was accompanied by Mrs. Ingersoll, and a more genial, pleasant, and intelligent lady it was never my good fortune to meet. May life to them be long and sweet.

I forgot to say the intended arrest was for the sale of Parker Pillsbury's "Cupid's Yokes, and Holy Scriptures Contrasted."

Another of my correspondents, an old lady of nearly 80 residing in Salem, Ill. says: "I thought I had told you that we were taking THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav been ever since sometime in the second year of its eventful life. A nephew of mine wrote to his parents, 'I would liv on one meal a day before I would do without it.' So say I. The lad is mining in the Colorado mountains." So you see how your paper is appreciated by both the old and the young.

ELLA E. GIBSON.

"CUPID'S YOKES"

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER AND E. H. HEYWOOD: I hav just finished, for the first time in my life, the reading of this grand book, "Cupid's Yokes." As I read its truly inspired pages, I said to my friends, Brother Heywood has great reason to rejoice that he is a prisoner for the sake of truth. I hav been a Freelover for many years, hav read many good works on the social question, but among them all I never read a more important work than "Cupid's Yokes." And from the first word to the last, there is not one word or sentence that is "obscene;" but, on the contrary, from beginning to end it is full of ennobling ideas. And, had I the means, I would print a million copies for the purpose of educating humanity out of "obscenity" up to noble manhood and true womanhood. A more important educator of the people to high, noble, true lives can hardly be found than this very important work—"Cupid's Yokes." And I do most earnestly hope that the noble army of readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will send in their orders by the thousand for this pure, soul-inspiring book.

Dear Brother Heywood, I greet you in your prison cell with love and good will. You are one of the world's saviors—giving your pure, noble life for the salvation of the world. I am with you almost every waking hour. Millions will yet rise up and call you blessed. Your persecutors must yet come to you for salvation. I pity their condition; I envy yours. Be patient, my dear brother; you were never preaching so effectually as now. The world, degraded by the teachings of Christianity, can never be redeemed but by the pure and elevating principles of Freelove. No matter what a debauched, corrupt people may say of them, the Freelovers are the world's real saviors. And though the world be against us to-day, not many decades will pass away before the worst system of slavery—legal marriage—will give way, and the sun of freedom—Freelove—will rise in all the splendor and beauty of the newborn day to bless and redeem poor suffering, starving humanity. Let us be hopeful, dear friends, this is the grandest day of all the ages. SEWARD MITCHELL.

DANVILLE, ILL., Oct. 27, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: You can put my name down as one who is not afraid of the modern American inquisition, neither of that arch hell-hound and masticator of filth, Anthony Comstock. I think the thing (A. C.) was well selected to carry out the Christian designs of that association of bigots. Yet there is some good coming out of their damnable persecution, for the excessive abuse of the law and trampling of rights will, ere long, develop a mighty wave of indignation which will engulf even the very hell of the superstitious bigots. Go in, old boy, and do not giv in a peg. Show no mercy to milk-sop indexicals. Continue to expose their tricks and wire-pulling, and (if I may say it) give them hell. Very sincerely yours, WM. GURLEY.

MONTICELLO, MO., Oct. 18, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The little book sent for arrived. It is exactly what it pretends to be, a moral and physiological essay, treating in a very elevated and philosophical manner the subject of sexual science. Every physician, and more than that, every thinking man, ought to hav it, and every woman that now refrains from reading the obscene portion of the Old Testament, Police News, or obscene novels, or certain "sexual guides" from quack doctors, might with propriety, and without shocking her womanly delicacy—if she is not morally dispeptic from fashionable mock-modesty—read with interest the views of a man who is no beginner in useful knowledge, who uses the choicest words and phrases in the elucidation of his views, a man of science, a scholar. For my part, I cannot but respect him who endeavors to correct abuses and evils which hav crept into society, and which every thinking, reading, or well-informed person admits the existence of.

Where, then, is the objection that Mr. Comstock raises? A glance at the words and phrases objected to will tell at once that it is the old repeated battle against Liberal ideas rather than outspoken physiology, for obscenity there is none, and there are many phrases not objected to which contain at least as much physiology but no exposition of defective orthodoxy.

As far as the theories, or rather scientific analyses are concerned, no one, looking at it with an unprejudiced mind, will deny that the work was written with the desire to improve the world physically, morally, and hence also intellectually. A number of similar works are already introduced into many public and private libraries treating on the same topic of sexual physiology; some are much more outspoken in regard to the sexes, but contain no arguments which the scales of the orthodox theological world hav weighed and "found wanting," hence never been thrown into the waste basket of eternal, nor even temporary damnation.

It is true, Mr. Heywood differs from Dr. Foote and from Prof. Fowler, especially in one particular; many other works are more or less following in the wake of the same gentleman and Dr. Trall's "Sexual Physiology." For my part, I found it best never to condem anybody's suggestions, if they are decent and given with the best intentions, before I hav examined the entire length and breadth of the views entertained, or the reforms or innovations hinted, and found them useless, impracticable, or detrimental. Now, Mr. Heywood speaks from the authority, as occurs to me, of years of profound study in sociology in all its different aspects, that of political economy, of the question of labor and capital, of prosperity in general, governments, the rights of woman, and the no less, if not most important, subject of sexual physiology. He is therefore better able, so far as opportunity is concerned, to judge of reforms or amendments yet to be desired in those departments than those who hav devoted less time and "brain-sweat" to the same. I am one of those who would be glad to know whether his (Heywood's) plans would be best for the world at large, but from the limited pages of his book, and limited experience, I am not able at present to decide. To reject it because it is contrary to my early training, would be uncharitable, to say the least; to reject it because his views are somewhat unpopular, would reduce me to the level of persecutors; indeed, the very unpopular ones are but too often in advance of the masses who condem them; as examples, Prof. Swing, though once condemned as a heretic (in the Presbyterian faith), yet is admitted to-day as one of the most learned of orthodox preachers. Dr. Trall, though treated by the orthodox—that is, the allopathic school of medicine—as a kind of an "outsider," his views on the causation, classification, and treatment of diseases will not far hence be admitted as high authority in medical reasoning. For my part, I think him one of the most advanced teachers of the medical art in the United States. Herbert Spencer, is much abused by otherwise intelligent people as a man who "is dangerous," yet of all the commentators from Justinian to Blackstone, and from Blackstone to the present day, there was, in my humble opinion, never anything written in logical ethics superior to Herbert Spencer's "Social Statics." A law library is scarcely complete without it. In conclusion, I regret much the injustice done Mr. Heywood through "Brother" Anthony, who seems to look at everything through blurred spectacles. I wonder whether he ever came across the lines of A. Pope, where he says that "everything looks yellow to the jaundiced eye!" The disease in his moral eye must hav run from yellow jaundice to the "black vomit," or he could never hav acted as he did.

Very respectfully yours, J. Muller.

Allegany, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1878.

Editor of The Truth Seeker: Circumstances make it incumbent on me to note the following: If the stories circulated through the country about Anthony Comstock are true (and he givs us no reasons for doubting them), he must be a most nefarious maranatha to the human family. But "never mind;" for since we learn from experience and observation that it is only a "step from the condemnation of morals to the criticism of faith," we may feel assured that the day is fast approaching when he, those like him, and his creed will be cleared away by the light of science or truth, as the darkness of the night is dispersed by the light of the sun. Yours, etc., W. B. Soule.

Sutherbury, Pa., Oct. 20, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Having noticed several remarks in The Truth Seeker as to the necessity of the Freethinkers adopting an emblem, to be worn in the shirt-front or breast of the coat, so as to be recognized at a glance, showing that the wearer is a member of the brotherhood of Free Minds; but having not yet seen any pattern, style, or device recommended, I would suggest a winged globe, with the initials, N., H,. F.—Nature, Humanity, Fraternity; or Nature, Motion, Life—N., M., L. I submit that this, or something like it, ought to be adopted. Much could be written to show the value of such an emblem. You will please take such action on the subject as your wisdom may dictate. Yours for repeal, A. Wilson.

Joplin, Mo.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Thinking a letter from the great lead metropolis of the U. S. would not come amiss, here goes. In the first place, I like the idea of leaving off all silent letters, except in rare instances; time and space are thereby saved, and the acquisition of our language made easier to foreigners. How often we find ourselves puzzled in writing to make sense of the correct spelling of even the simplest word! Second, I like Mrs. Slenker's idea of each Liberal putting him or herself in communication with a Christian; great good can be done in that way. By a little tact, the Christian might be made to think, "Well, here is one to be brought to Jesus," "catch 'em," with guile, you know, like Paul of old. Let me suggest several other ways for Liberals to carry on the campaign. Club together, buy a lot of Truth Seeker Tracts and other Freethinking matter, and spread it in the churches before service, etc. Of course, this would be sacrilege, but who taught us this plan? as old Shylock says; in other words, Christians never hesitate to obtrude their beliefs on to other folks. Now it is our turn. When a revival is held in a neighborhood, let the Liberals attend, and when they are approached by Christians, who mean to convert them, argue the matter; giv them the best and most convincing arguments you can think of; study it before you go. I know of several who were quite active here, during the Hammond meeting last summer in the service of Jesus, that to-day are either quietly open and avowed skeptics, or shaken in their belief. One of them, connected with a paper here, says he shall attend our meetings when we start up again next week, and perhaps join us. He is not quite certain of himself yet. I giv him my Truth Seeker every week all the same.

We hav had some fun during the late municipal election days. One Mr. H. came out and announced himself as a candidate for mayor. He was but little known here; came here as a Bible agent, and went into the insurance business with a partner. It is claimed that he stole twenty dollars from a poor woman, but he denies it, and says he sent and bought a Bible at her request. I can't say which was in the right. But he came out in the papers several times with articles in answer to attacks on him, and in each he wrote some poetry. Well, he found it advisable to withdraw about time the ball opened; but his published letters had found their way to a lady in Kentucky, and a few days ago she came on, and is here wanting this man to support her and her three children, the youngest of whom was not born when he left her five years ago. He is engaged to another lady in this state, but says he was going, or had taken steps for a divorce before marrying again. The full truth, apart from their statements, is not yet known. She is an educated lady of refinement and good sense.

I think while such things are so often occurring, and as our marriage laws do not always lead to paradise, that it is pretty hard to send a man to the penitentiary for discussing in a decent manner some means of improving things. I know and hav seen within six months indecent photographs and vulgar rhymes in the hands of several men in this section of the country, and they hav in every case come by mail. What a farce! Does Mr. Comstock suppose that if I wanted the most obscene book or print in New York I could not hav it securely covered and sealed and he could handle it and be none the wiser, unless, perhaps, there is an instinct or affinity somewhere in his nervous system that he can tell by the sense of touch? Why, this law is one of the best that could be devised to allow obscene matter to circulate; it simply throws people into a sense of false security. They think Comstock and deputies hav it all under control, when the fact is they are chiefly working and scheming to bring to trouble those who are pursuing a perfectly legitimate and honorable trade to suit the Y. M. C. A., etc. The state officials and others do not look to it. The result is, really obscene matter is sent over the country, but probably to not near the extent stated.

Oh, good honest parents, whether Christian, Infidel, Mohammedan, or what not, can't you see what is really ruining your children and making their minds a place of devilry or of blank ignorance? It is not in what is called obscene literature, for seldom do they see anything of that kind. The most reckless or bad man will hardly ever, no matter how much he and his mates may jollify over a piece of "smut," show it to a boy. There is something in the hearts of the worst men that makes them refrain from putting such things into the hands of a child. Perhaps it is a remembrance of their own youth, or maybe they hav children of their own. The real danger lies in quite another direction, and one in which all law is powerless, except home law and influence, which should be the strongest of all law. It is these semi-respectable journals for sale at every book-stand—the cheap trash, far worse than any "yellow cover," for they are made up to sell, and to the young especially. Now let all Liberals drop quarreling, go to work, and abolish Comstock and his laws, shake hands over the bloody chasm, and let the time they take in fighting each other be given to urging men and women to slay the wolf on their own hearthstone. Respectfully,

Joplin.

A book for Freethinkers—The proceedings and addresses at the Freethinker's Convention.

Salamanca, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1878.

This book is a very valuable addition to the Liberal literature of the country, and is deserving of a large sale. I am sure every Liberal of the hundreds who attended the Watkins Convention will at once order a copy, and those who did not attend cannot afford to be without it. I can't understand how Dr. Bennett in so short a time has been able to publish so perfect a book of the proceedings and speeches of the Watkins Convention. It is another evidence of the indefatigable perseverence of the editor of The Truth Seeker. Such valuable services for the Liberal cause should be appreciated and encouraged by the Liberal public and it will be by all who really hav our cause at heart.

There are some thirty able addresses in this book either one of which is worth the price of the book ($1.25) besides the full proceedings of the Watkin's Convention, including the resolutions there passed, and an able letter from Prof. Oliver of Cornell University. I know of no book recently published, of four hundred pages, in which one can obtain so much that is of value to an earnest Freethinker.

Now for the good of our cause, I earnestly urge every Liberal who reads this letter to not only order a copy, but to canvass their neighborhood for it. The first edition should be sold during the next thirty days, and Mr. Bennett should be called upon for a second edition. Friends, it cost those Liberals who attended the Freethinker's Convention from $10 to $50, and some of them an arrest, and you who were not there can get the full proceedings for $1.25, and keep it for your children. If space would permit I would like to giv quotations from the able speeches of Elizur Wright, James Parton, George W. Julian, Horace Seaver, Elder F. W. Evans, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Clara Neyman, C. D. B. Mills, Laura Kendrick, Ella E. Gibson, J. W. Truesdell, G. L. Henderson, A. L. Rawson, Matilda Joslyn Gage, J. H. Toohey, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, T. B. Taylor, Lucy N. Colman, G. A. Lomas, T. C. Leland, T. B. Wakeman, W. E. Copeland, T. L. Brown, and others. I am sure that there never has before been published in one volume so many valuable addresses in favor of the various schools of Freethought. H. L. Green.

P. S. Allow me to notify the Liberal public that some very fine blank certificates of membership of the New York State Freethinkers' Association hav been printed, suitable for framing, and any Liberal can become a member and get one of these certificates by sending me his or her name, and the small sum of twenty-five cents. H. L. G.

Wolcott, N. Y., Oct. 20, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Brother: I am stirred up to that degree that I can't giv vent to my feelings, nor am I able to express them to you. Since the Watkins Convention I see things in a different light from what I ever did before. I feel it my duty to let the true light in at every door in the whole world; and if I am not able to do it, I am willing to try and do all I can in that direction. I think it high time for each Liberal to put his shoulder to the wheel of free thought, free speech, and human happiness. Comrades, rally! be up and doing! I am sure my attendance at the Convention at Watkins has proved a great blessing to me. I know I am a better man, a better neighbor, a better husband, a better father, for being present at Watkins. Fellow-Liberals, let us leave on record some mark for humanity's sake; if we are not able to do a deed, let us speak some encouraging word.

I wish to become an agent to assist in selling your books and tracts. I wish I was able to scatter them broadcast all over the world; but my finances are in such bad condition—having been very unfortunate during the last five years—that I can do but little towards it. But I do not give up at trifles; as my neighbors say, I hav got the "sand." Please find inclosed $10.00. Place the same to my credit. I shall want more than that amount of your books to start on. Send me 25 copies of the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ;" 6 copies of "The Gods and Other Lectures," by that good old soul R. G. Ingersoll; 10 copies of the "Holy Bible Abridged;" and 10 copies of "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." That is all I think of now; but if you see fit, you may send some tracts as samples.

I hav smelt powder in our late Rebellion, and I hope it will be the last, as I am sure it will be if we will all do our duty in sowing the good seed, and all be kind to each other, and do all we can to smooth each other's pathway. Let us pity our bitter opponents and bring them to the light by kind, common-sense arguments.

I am happy to inform you that I had the honor of attending a grand entertainment given by the Liberal Club of North Hannibal, on the 12th inst. The proceeds of the affair were sent to the yellow fever sufferers. Oh, may such workers for the good of humanity as the North Hannibal Liberal Club liv on for years to come!

Yours for humanity, James Johnson.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In a conversation a few weeks ago with an intelligent lady, and one a little better informed on general subjects than the average woman, I think, I happened to drop a remark about a gentleman who is an Infidel, when, to my astonishment, the lady said indignantly that she would not believe an Infidel under oath, nor any other person who did not believe in a God, etc., etc. I quietly asked her if she owned a dictionary. She said she did, at the same time handing me a Webster's Unabridged. I requested her to look in it at the word Infidel. She did so, and then began to look a little puzzled. I then requested her to look at the definition of the word Atheist. She complied, and then looked embarrassed. I then said, "Now be kind enough to look at the word Deist, and I won't ask any more favors to-day, but leave you to your own reflections." After looking up the latter word, like a sensible woman she acknowledged that nothing but her ignorance on the whole subject had caused her to use the strong language she had used in regard to the gentleman who is an Infidel.

And now, sir, there are multitudes of persons who are just as ignorant in regard to what these various words mean as the lady I hav here spoken of, and they don't see why an Infidel is not an Atheist, nor how a Deist is not an Infidel and an Atheist, as well as a robber, a murderer, and everything else that is terribly wicked.

With your kind permission I will quote a couple of definitions from Webster which may, it seems to me, be of great service to some of these poor ignorant and gullible ones who may see your valuable paper, or to whom we may show it at some convenient time; for we all hav some acquaintances of this sort, I am sure. Webster says that an Infidel is one who disbelieves in the inspiration of the Scriptures and the divine origin of Christianity; that a Deist is one who believes in the existence of a God, but denies revealed religion; and that an Atheist is one who disbelieves in the existence of a God, or supreme intelligent being. So, then, an Infidel is not necessarily an Atheist, a murderer, and a robber, but might possibly be an intelligent and law-abiding citizen, a good husband, and a kind and loving father; although I admit he could not very well be as big a hypocrite as thousands of Christians are continually proving themselves to be. Yours truly, Albany.

Brookhaven, Miss., Sept. 25, 1878.

Friend Bennett: I hav been trying to raise a little money to help you in your noble work. I hav taken your champion paper now nearly five months (three months paid for), and I would like it continued till I can raise the funds to pay for the full year. If I can't raise it all at one time, I will send it to you as fast as I can get it. We are all very hard pressed, but fruit will soon be ripe enough to ship, and then we can get a little money to pay for luxuries in the way of entertaining literature such as only you can send us. If you see proper to stop sending the paper before I can make a remittance, do please keep for me the back numbers of the current volume. I can't do without it. Sometimes it does not come on the regular day; then I am, as the saying goes, "in a stew;" nothing goes right till I get it, then everything goes on as smoothly as the workings of the chronometer.

Somehow or other we see but few letters in The Truth Seeker from the Southern states. Why is this? One gentleman writes from Raleigh, N.C., saying there are very few Freethinkers in the South. If he would only come a little further south he would find how badly mistaken he is. Our county town, yclept city, can boast of at least fifty who prefer thinking for themselves. Many of them, it is true, keep their lamps under the tub, but they are here. Well, I keep the twenty numbers already on hand moving; like good money, they are useless if they are not in circulation. I am in the center of a Baptist community, and I assure you none of them belong to the literati; all stick to King James' Bible, and I guess they are honest in their belief, as there is not one who will not lose two days out of every week to go and hear the teachings of that old book gabbled over by one of their knowing priests. I never hav to peep under the brim of their hats, or even wait for them to take it off, to find out the relationship existing between them and the animal that spoke to old Balaam, and the other that Messrs. Matthew, Mark, & Co. trotted Mr. Emanuel J. Christ into Jerusalem on. No, sir; their ears are long enough, and project feet above their tiles; therefore peeping is useless. But I must say this for them, that they are very kind neighbors, and it is only their lack of understanding that can be condemned by a Freethinker.

I will close by saying good speed to you and the good cause you are so ably advocating.

Very truly yours, Freethinker.

In general, there is no one with whom life drags so disagreeably as with him who tries to make it shorter.—Richter.

Instruction Free in Phonography and Reporting at Cooper Union, cor. Eighth street, and Third avenue, New York. Phonographic classes are in session at the Cooper Institute every Friday evening at 8 P. M., from September until May. For tickets of admission and information, Address Eliza B. Burns, School of Phonography, 33 Park Row, New York.

Love's Invocation.

BY GRACE L. PARKHURST.

Darling kiss me—kiss me fondly—
Fold me to thy loving breast;
There enfolded let me linger.
As did John on Jesus rest.
There my heart would find its treasure,
Find the joy it long has sought;
And be blest in bounteous measure
From thy generous, loving heart.

As the earth, when kissed by sunshine,
Feels a thrill of new delight;
As the flowers, when gemmed with dewdrops
From the moisture of the night,
Give forth to the breeze of morning,
Toying with the beaded blossoms,
Fragrance rich and rare perfume;
So would we our incense offer
When the stars grow dim at coming
Of the "hours" with pawing coursers,
Or when Venus dons her brightness
When the god of day retires.

Yes, we'd welcome fond thy footfalls
When the daily cares are o'er,
And with moonlight flooding woodland,
We will enter at the door;
Oft attended by immortals
Come to visit us once more.
And we'll make our lives so holy
That we'll woo the lost Lenore
And all our loved ones gone before.
Woo them from those spheres celestial,
Where progression is the theme,
To these homes of ours terrestrial,
Where we sow and reapers glean.

And when night in all her splendor,
Or in ebon darkness robed,
Folds her canopy above us,
They will peer within the soul,
And infuse such thoughts divine
That on waking we shall cherish
Grander love for all mankind;
Grander thoughts; and let perish
All beneath a godlike mind.

Elkland, Pa., Oct. 24, 1878.

The National Liberal League and Its Objects.

We take the following letter of Mr. Palmer's from the N. Y. Daily Times of Oct. 31:

To the Editor of the New York Times: On returning last evening from attending the Convention of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse, Oct. 26 and 27, I discovered in your issue of the 28th inst. an account of the same with the following very conspicuous caption in large letters: "A Liberal League Fight. Freelovers and Anti-Freelovers Disputing." Throughout the article are other insinuations of the same nature. At the end you mention my name as Treasurer of the League. I therefore deem it my right and your duty to make the denial which I hereby forward to you as prominently as you have the assertion; for I affirm in terms as strong as the English language will permit that it is utterly and unqualifiedly unfounded. Both factions in the Convention, those for the repeal as well as those for the reform of the United States Comstock Postal law, were opposed to Freelove and obscenity in every shape, form, and fashion. Statement upon statement, motion upon motion, resolution upon resolution, was made on these points and unanimously agreed to. To the best of my knowledge and belief there was not a single person present who either publicly or privately advocated Freelove, and I was informed that the insignificant knot of people who avowedly profess an adherence to that doctrine, remained studiously away from the Convention. They knew they would receive neither welcome nor recognition. If I thought that there was the slightest shadow of real reason for believing that either faction of the Liberal League had committed themselves to obscenity or Freelove, I should not remain an hour in such company.

With this general denial allow me to make a more particular statement. I can do it in a few words. The dispute in the Convention arose over the law now generally known as the Comstock United States Postal law, passed by our national Congress in 1873. This law was designed to stop the carriage of obscene and immoral matter after the same had been deposited in the Post Office. Both factions in the Convention affirmed that the law is oppressive. Under its operation a man named Heywood was imprisoned for sending a pamphlet through the mails which advocated his Freelove doctrines. Both parties in the Convention asserted that his incarceration was unjust. Even one of the Judges who condemned him has, on a reconsideration of the law, altered his opinion, and has signed a petition for his release. Heywood's connection with this question is the apparent reason why, on the mere surface, the Convention seemed to defend Freelove. But we defended Heywood, not because of his doctrines, which one and all reprobate, but because we all felt that his punishment was an attack on American liberty under the very sanction of our national Legislature. We all felt that the free expression of opinion is the inalienable right of every American citizen, and this is the right which both factions of the Convention desired to maintain. So, if one party belonged to the Freelovers, both did. As said before, the truth is, neither party so belonged. Heywood's pamphlet is written in bad taste, and advocates a bad doctrine, but is a man to be thrown into jail simply because he makes a fool of himself? All the book does is to advocate the man's theory on the subject of love and marriage, and as for obscene expressions in it, it is innocent compared to many passages in our most standard works, such as Milton, Shakspere, Byron, and even the Bible itself.

What both parties in the League were fighting for was freedom—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and a free Post Office. Both parties agreed that State laws should be enacted against obscenity, as they have been for one hundred years. The point of dispute between the factions, and the only point, was as to the constitutionality of this national Postal law. The repealers wanted it done away with as being unconstitutional. The reformers wanted it modified so as to allow all honest expressions of opinion to go through the mails, and yet so worded as to prevent the transmission of what is undeniably obscene. My own position is that of the majority, viz., that the law is clearly unconstitutional, the Supreme Court (by obiter dictum merely) to the contrary notwithstanding.

Congress has simply power "to establish post offices and post roads." How this power can be so construed as to allow the Post Office Department to determine what is and what is not obscene, I for one cannot possibly perceive. If it can determine what is obscene, it can decide what is immoral, or blasphemous, or unscientific, and thus any predominant party in Congress can persecute a man for opinion's sake. The whole system, moreover, is one of decoy and espionage, which is hateful to the American genius. No! the whole thing is a bad, very bad, precedent, and a covert attack on liberty, and I, for one, say, "Let us get rid of it." The State laws are or can be made a complete legal and constitutional defense against such wrongful publicatians, whether sent by mail, express, or otherwise, so far as any laws can be. On those we can rest without resorting to the dangerous expedient of violating the United States Constitution. What we are attempting to maintain is liberty. The misfortune in this case is that in doing this the obscenity question is mixed up with it.

If the imputation of Freelove is persisted in it will have to be extended to such men as Hon. Elizur Wright, of Boston; Mr. T. B. Wakeman, an able lawyer of this city, (who has examined the subject most exhaustively); Mr. James Parton, and other gentlemen of note, all of whom think this United States Postal law unconstitutional, and in its operation necessarily a violation of liberty, both of the press and of the citizen.

COURTLANDT PALMER,
No. 117 East Twenty-First St., New York.
Tuesday, Oct. 29, 1878.

A Card from Prof. Oliver.

We take the following from the Ithaca Daily Journal of Oct. 31. It shows that Prof. Oliver, at least, has the honesty to admit that the party in favor of freedom are not obscenists or Freelovers. It will be well if the other leaders show the same fairness:

ITHACA, Oct. 30, 1878.

Editors Ithaca Daily Journal: In yesterday's Journal is the following paragraph, taken from the Syracuse Journal:

"Professor Oliver said to the Abbot seceders, composing the respectable part of the Liberals, that his sympathies were with them, and that he probably would abandon the "Freelove obscenists," and join the former if their organization held out. In the meantime he fellowships the 'obscene' party, and allows his name to stand as one of their officers. Isn't this a questionable proceeding for an instructor of youth and a professor in Cornell University?"

To the best of my belief, the party by whom we Abbot men were beaten in the Liberal Convention at Syracuse are neither "obscenists" nor "Freelovers"; though of course there may be individual exceptions. Many of their leaders protested that they "abhorred the Freelove doctrine." With hardly a dissenting vote, the Convention resolved that obscene literature ought to be suppressed both by moral means and by law. The anti-Abbot party insist that United States laws, excluding any matter from the mails on account of its moral quality, are unsafe in principle and unconstitutional; but our opposition to this doctrine was so earnest that they forebore to press it, and deferred its final consideration for a year.

After the election of officers most of the Abbot party seceded and formed a new League; but a few of us remained, because we felt that the majority had not treated us unfairly. We told both barties that we preferred the new League, and might join it, but that we could not join in the seceders' protest against the procedure of the League, and should also remain in the old until its action should in some way compromise our consciences. Accordingly, several of us are now members of both. When the old League, to show its approval of our course and perhaps to promote harmony, elected three of us Vice-Presidents, I could not without discourtesy, refuse at the time to serve; but after the adjournment I resigned the position, lest it should expose the University to unjust odium.

It is needless to say more now, for the whole subject will be discussed at our local League meeting next Monday evening, and the public are invited.

Respectfully, J. E. OLIVER.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

BIBLE OF BIBLES:

OR

TWENTY-SEVEN

"DIVINE REVELATIONS:"

CONTAINING

A Description of Twenty-Seven Bibles, and an Exposition of Two Thousand Biblical Errors in Science, History, Morals, Religion, and General Events;

ALSO A DELINEATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE

Principal Personages of the CHRISTIAN BIBLE,

AND AN

Examination of Their Doctrines.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Biography of Satan."

As will be remarked on perusal of the table of contents, the ground gone over by Mr. Graves in the course of this new work is simply astounding, and the literary labor performed is worthy of receiving the approximate reward of an extensive reading at the hands of the public. In the sixty-six chapters into which the book is divided, almost every question of interest which arises in the mind at the mention of the word BIBLE is considered in that straightforward style which has made the volumes of Mr. Graves so extensively sought after.

LIST OF CONTENTS:

The Leading Positions of this Work.
CHAP. 1.—The Signs of the Times; The Coming Revolution; Reason will soon Triumph.
CHAP. 2.—Apology and Explanation; Jehovah not our God; Relationship of the Old and New Testaments.
CHAP. 3.—Why this Work was Written; The Moral Truths of the Bible; Why Resort to Ridicule; The Principal Design of this Work; Don't Read Pernicious Books; Two Thousand Bible Errors Exposed; All Bibles Useful in their Place.
CHAP. 4.—Beauties and Benefits of Bibles; A Higher Plane of Development has been Attained; Bible Writers Honest; General Claims of Bibles.

TWENTY-SEVEN BIBLES DESCRIBED.

CHAP. 5.—The Hindoo Bibles; The Vedas; The Code of Menu; Ramayana; Mahabarat; The Purans; Analogies of the Hindoo and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of India.
CHAP. 6.—The Egyptian Bible, "The Hermas"; Analogies of the Egyptian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Egypt.
CHAP. 7.—The Persian Bibles; The Zend Avesta; The Sadder; Analogies of the Persian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Persia.
CHAP. 8.—The Chinese Bibles; Ta-Heo (Great Learning); The Chun Yung, or Doctrine of the Mean; The Book of Mang, or Mencius; Snoo King, or "Book of History"; Shee King or "Book of Poetry"; Chun Tsen, "Spring and Summer"; Tao-te King, or Doctrine of Reason; Analogies of the Chinese and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of China.
CHAP. 9.—Seven other Oriental Bibles; The Soffees' Bible, The "Musnavi"; The Parsees' Bible, The "Bour Desch" The Tamalese Bible, The "Kallwakam"; The Scandinavian Bible, The "Saga," or Divine Wisdom; The Kalmucs' Bible, The "Kalio Cham"; The Athenians' Bible, "The Testament"; The Cabalists' Bible, The "Yohar," or Book of Light.
CHAP. 10.—The Mahometan's Bible, The "Koran"; The Mormons' Bible, "The Book of Mormon"; Revelations of Joseph Smith; The Shakers' Bible, "The Divine Roll."
CHAP. 11.—The Jews' Bible, The Old Testament and the Mishna.
CHAP. 12.—The Christians' Bible, Its Character.
CHAP. 13.—General Analogies of Bibles; Superior Features of the Heathen Bibles.
CHAP. 14.—The Infidels' Bible.

TWO THOUSAND BIBLE ERRORS—OLD-TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 15.—A Hundred and Twenty-three Errors in the Jewish Cosmogony; The Scientists' Story of Creation.
CHAP. 16.—Numerous Absurdities in the Story of the Deluge.
CHAP. 17.—The Ten Commandments, Moral Defects of.
CHAP. 18.—The Foolish Bible Stories, A Talking Serpent and a Talking Ass; The Story of Cain; The Ark of the Covenant; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar; Sodom and Gomorrah; The Tower of Babel; Stopping the Sun and Moon; Story of Samson; Story of Jonah.
CHAP. 19.—Bible Prophecies not Fulfilled.
CHAP. 20.—Bible Miracles, Erroneous Belief in.
CHAP. 21.—Bible Errors in Facts and Figures.
CHAP. 22.—Bible Contradictions (232).
CHAP. 23.—Obscene Language of the Bible (200 cases).
CHAP. 24.—Circumcision a Heathenish Custom; Fasting and Feasting in Various Nations.
CHAP. 25.—Holy Mountains, Lands, Cities, and Rivers.

BIBLE CHARACTERS.

CHAP. 26.—Jehovah, Character of.
CHAP. 27.—The Jews, Character of.
CHAP. 28.—Moses, Character of.
CHAP. 29.—The Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Character of.
CHAP. 30.—David, His Numerous Crimes; Solomon, Character of; Lot and his Daughters.
CHAP. 31.—The Prophets, their Moral Defects; Special Notice of Elijah and Elisha.
CHAP. 32.—Idolatry, Its Nature, Harmlessness, and Origin; All Christians either Atheists or Idolaters.

BIBLE ERRORS—NEW TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 33.—Divine Revelation Impossible and Unnecessary.
CHAP. 34.—Primeval Innocency of Man not True.
CHAP. 35.—Original Sin and Fall of Man Not True.
CHAP. 36.—Moral Depravity of Man a Delusion.
CHAP. 37.—Free Agency and Moral Accountability Erroneous.
CHAP. 38.—Repentance, The Doctrine Erroneous.
CHAP. 39.—Forgiveness for Sin an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 40.—An Angry God, Evils of the Belief in.
CHAP. 41.—Atonement for Sin an Immoral Doctrine.
CHAP. 42.—Special Providences an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 43.—Faith and Belief, Bible Errors respecting.
CHAP. 44.—A Personal God Impossible.
NOTE.—In the twelve preceding chapters it is shown that the cardinal doctrines of Christianity are all wrong.
CHAP. 45.—Evil, Natural and Moral, Explained.
CHAP. 46.—A Rational View of Sin and its Consequences.
CHAP. 47.—The Bible Sanctions every Species of Crime.
CHAP. 48.—The Immoral Influence of the Bible.
CHAP. 49.—The Bible at War with Eighteen Sciences.
CHAP. 50.—The Bible as a Moral Necessity.
CHAP. 51.—Send no more Bibles to the Heathen.
CHAP. 52.—What Shall We Do to be Saved?
CHAP. 53.—The Three Christian Plans of Salvation.
CHAP. 54.—The True Religion Defined.
CHAP. 55.—"All Scripture given by Inspiration of God."
CHAP. 56.—Infidelity in Oriental Nations—India, Rome, Greece, China, Persia, and Arabia.
CHAP. 57.—Sects, Schisms, and Skeptics in Christian Countries.
CHAP. 58.—Modern Christianity one-half Infidelity.
CHAP. 59.—The Christians' God, Character of.
CHAP. 60.—The One Hundred and Fifty Errors of Jesus Christ.
CHAP. 61.—Character and Erroneous Doctrines of the Apostles.
CHAP. 62.—Erroneous Doctrines and Moral Defects of Paul and Peter.
CHAP. 63.—Idolatrous Veneration for Bibles—Its Evils.
CHAP. 64.—Spiritual or Implied Sense of Bibles—Its Objects.
CHAP. 65.—What shall we Substitute for the Bible?
CHAP. 66.—Religious Reconstruction, or the Moral Necessity for a Religious Reform.
Conclusion.

Cloth, large 12*mo.*, 440 pp. Price, $2.00, postage 10 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th St., New York.

A GREAT OFFER.

A GENUINE
Grover & Baker
SEWING MACHINE.

For the Holidays.

I will deliver, boxed, at any Freight or Express Office in New York, one of the Genuine Grover & Baker Sewing Machines, with Latest Improvements, for $15.00 EACH.

This Machine is guaranteed perfect, completely finished, of which the cut is a perfect representation, except that the machine I will send has a box cover fitting over the works on the table. The following attachments are supplied free with the Machine:

Three Hemmers, Braider, Friller, Quilting-Guage, Embroidery Plate, dozen assorted Needles, Screw-Driver, Oil Can, and Book of Instructions.

This Machine will be sent on receipt of price, or will be sent C. O. D. on receipt of $5 in advance. This offer is limited as to time, and it is a chance to secure a guaranteed, first-class Machine at a saving of $55. The regular price is $70. Refer, by permission, to the editor of this paper. Address W. V. R. POWIS,
45 46 Box 255, New York City.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,

WINNERS OF THE

ONLY GOLD MEDAL

AWARDED TO AMERICAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AT

Paris Exposition, 1878;

the highest distinction in the power of the Judges to confer.

PARIS, 1878 Two Highest Medals.
SWEDEN, 1878
PHILADA, 1876
SANTIAGO, '75
VIENNA, 1873
PARIS, 1867.

AT EVERY WORLD'S EXPOSITION FOR 12 YEARS

They have been awarded the HIGHEST HONORS

At the Paris Exposition, 1878, they are awarded the GOLD MEDAL, the highest recompense at the disposal of the jury; also the BRONZE MEDAL, the highest distinction for excellent workmanship. They have also received the GRAND GOLD MEDAL OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY, 1878. No other American Organs ever attained highest award at ANY World's Exposition. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES, with newest styles, prices, etc., free.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
BOSTON, NEW YORK, or CHICAGO.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo, 548 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "potted down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN. A novel. By Fredarika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc, 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp, 12 mo, 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of he argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. By Henry A. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josiah Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Sonnenschein, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus 1, 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404pp. Postpaid, $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Professor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted.
6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words. Postage paid on all.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

Ingersoll's Second Volume.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures,

CONTAINING

The Ghosts, Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child; The Declaration of Independence; About Farming in Illinois; Speech at Cincinnati; "The Past Rises before me like a Dream."

A 12mo volume of 232 pages. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

NOTICE.—I have hitherto published some of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lectures in cheap form, believing that by so doing I was aiding in the diffusion of valuable Liberal reading matter and doing a favor to the general public. At the request, however, of Col. Ingersoll, I shall publish no more of them, but will keep for sale all his lectures so far as published under his own auspices. D. M. BENNETT.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6 00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. tol

AURICULAR CONFESSION AND Popish Nunneries.

BY WM. HOGAN,

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containg the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the Missionary and Bible Societies, Sunday-schools, The Young Men's Christian Association, Societies for the Suppression of Vice, American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally, and especially to ANTHONY COMSTOCK, this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo, Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. In pages, losses, speculations, etc., f cted king accuracy. Answers by letter fo ord- ing to amount. Give precise d and state questions to be answered. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square eet.) 43t75.

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

- HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. 1y7 Augusta, Maine.

The New Gospel of Health.

BY DR. STONE.

This is a masterly work of most progressive character, calculated to teach every person how to keep well without drugs, stimulants, or narcotics. 519 pages, highly illustrated. Cloth, $2.50, postage 18 cents; paper, $1.25, postage 12 cents. For sale at this office. tf30

DR. LYON'S Hygeian Home is at Springfield, Mo. See adv. in May Nos. TRUTH SEEKER. 13t25 Resp'y, J. S. LYON.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK,

His Career of Cruelty and Crime.

A CHAPTER FROM

"THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH."

Giving the base means employed by this Matthew Hopkins of the nineteenth century to persecute and annoy his unfortunate victims.

120 pages. Price, 25 cents.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine. 1y7

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

I CURE To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send FITS

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,
Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

Proceedings and Addresses

AT THE

FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION

HELD AT

Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons.

Will be ready by Oct. 20th. It is a volume of rare value, containing much of the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella, Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation.

Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

MRS. BESANT'S

Law of Population.

SECOND TEN THOUSAND

of the author's American Edition, with

FINE STEEL PORTRAIT

(By Ritchie, the best artist in America) on extra tinted paper and binding. Cloth, 75c.; paper, 50c.

AGENTS are informed that the best thing to sell to make money on, and also to benefit mankind, is this book. It explains and advocates the only harmless and practical means of avoiding the evils of celibacy, on the one hand, and of overburdened parentage on the other. It advocates more and earlier marriages, and increase of family only when health and pecuniary means will permit, but it most efficiently opposes abortion, prostitution, and all undesired and inconsiderate procreation. It contains the latest medical researches and results of science. The medical directions are easy, plain, explicit, though chaste and delicate. No married couple should be without it.

ASA K. BUTTS, 19 Dey st., N. Y.

TO AUTHORS.

A proof-reading printer, disabled Union soldier, wishes work. Can fit MSS. for printing, including spelling and punctuation, and can shape and clothe ideas in words which burn but leave no sting. Can work by mail.

6t41 Address "STAR," this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Gems of Thought.

ALWAYS rise from the table with an appetite, and you will never sit down without one.—Wm. Penn.

OUR actions are like the terminations of verses, which we rhyme as we please.—Rochefoucauld.

AFFLICTION is a school of virtue; it corrects levity and interrupts the confidence of sinning. —Atterbury.

LIFE is an outward occupation, an actual work in all ranks and all situations.—Wilhelm von Humboldt.

AN able man shows his spirit by gentleness and resolute actions; he is neither hot nor timid.—Chesterfield.

SOME persons of weak understanding are so sensible of that weakness as to be able to make a good use of it.—Rochefoucauld.

MAN being essentially active, must find in activity his joy; and labor, like everything else that is good, is its own reward.—Whipple.

TOIL, feel, think, hope. A man is sure to dream enough before he dies without making arrangements for the purpose.—Sterling.

THE height of ability consists in a thorough knowledge of the real value of things, and of the genius of the age we live.—Rochefouca u

EVERY event that a man would master must be mounted on the run, and no man ever caught the reins of a thought except as it galloped by him.—Holmes.

WHAT a man knows should find its expression in what he does. The value of superior knowledge is chiefly in that it leads to a performing manhood.—Bovee.

NO ACCIDENTS are so unlucky but that the precedent may draw some advantage from them; nor are there any so lucky but that the imprudent may turn them to their prejudice.—Rochefoucauld.

I FIND the attraction of love is in an inverse proportion to the attraction of the Newtonian philosophy. Every milestone that marked my progress from Clorinda awakened a keener pang of attachment.—Burns.

NOTWITHSTANDING all that Rousseau has advanced so very ingeniously upon plays and players, their profession is, like that of painters, one of the imitation arts, whose means are pleasure and whose end is virtue.—Shenstone.

AS THE lion's foot carries in its velvety surface hidden claws that can rend you, so does nature carry concealed beneath its fair surface a vengeance, a hell that will torture or slay you for every violation of their required duties.—Chas. Ellis.

I NEVER yet heard man or women much abused that I was not much inclined to think the better of them; and to transfer any suspicion or dislike to the person who appeared to take delight in pointing out the defects of a fellow-creature. —Jane Porter.

THE actor is in the capacity of a steward to every living muse, and of an executor to every departed one: the poet digs up the one; he sifts it from the dross, refines and purifies it for the mint; the actor sets the stamp upon it, and makes it current in the world.—Cumberland.

THE willow which bends to the tempest often escapes better than the oak, which resists it; and so, in great calamities, it sometimes happens that light and frivolous spirits recover their elasticity and presence of mind sooner than those of a loftier character.—Walter Scott.

THE activity of the young is like that of railcars in motion; they tear along with noise and turmoil, and leave peace behind them. The quietest nooks invaded by them lose their quietude as they pass, and recover it only on their departure. Time's best gift to us is serenity.—Bovee.

THERE is a wide difference between admiration and love. The sublime, which is the cause of the former, always dwells on great objects and terrible; the latter on small ones and pleasing; we submit to what we admire; but we love what submits to us; in one case we are forced, in the other we are flattered into compliance.—Burke.

THERE hav been many men who left behind them that which hundreds of years hav not worn out. The earth has Socrates and Plato to this day. We are indebted to the past. We stand in the greatness of the ages that are gone, rather than in that of our own. But of how many of us shall it be said that, being dead, we yet speak?—Beecher.

OUR pleasures travel by express, our pains by parliamentry. Through the loveliest scenes the joy-train of our lives rushes swiftly. At the pretty wayside stations we are able but to touch hands with cherished friends, and behold! we are off again; but if we hav grief for engine-drivers, care for the stoker, how we creep along the lines.—F. G. Trafford.

YOU God-believers say your gods are eternal. We say matter is eternal. You say the gods created all things out of nothing; we say matter evolved all things out of its self-existent substance, that is, changed the form of what was into what is, and she is eternally doing this through all the ages. You hav an unnecessary being to account for, to please, and to give qualities, attributes, desires, and wishes to, and for which to find an abiding-place. We hav only matter and its attributes to which to refer the causes of all things; and is not ours the more plain, simple, and reasonable belief? —Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

VICAR'S daughter.—"And why did Aaron make a golden calf?" Sharp child of three and a half. —"Please, Miss, because he hadn't got enough gold to make a cow."

"WHAT'S the difference," asked the teacher in arithmetic, "between one yard and two yards?" "A fence," was the reply of a member of the class. The teacher was silent.

"IS THAT a brewery?" asked a fellow-passenger on one of the up-river steamers as she approached the House of Correction. "No," responded a bystander, "it is a rectifying establishment."

"IT is impossible," remarked a lover to his sweetheart, "for me to spell Cupid."
"Why so?" she innocently asked.
"Because," he answered, "when I come to C-u I can go no farther."

SAYS the Cincinnati Breakfast Table. "Greek is the language for poetry, French for love, and Italian for hand-organ melody; but the man with a shirt collar that don't fit is the same hopeless fellow in all."

"HOW IS it, Miss, that you gave your age to the registrar as only twenty-five? I was born the same year with yourself, and being thirty-nine, must be—" Young lady—"Ah, you see, Mr Assessor, you hav livd much faster than I."

"IS GOVERNOR RICE in?" inquired a seedy looking man of the clerk of the Brunswick, Boston, a few nights ago. "Yes," said the clerk; "yes, he is." "Well," said the man, walking out, "I'm glad of it; it's a wet night, and he might catch cold if he was out."

"TEN dimes one dollar," said the schoolmaster. "Now, go on, sir; ten dollars make—what?" "They make one mighty glad these times," replied the boy; and the teacher, who hadn't got his last month's salary yet, concluded the boy was about right.

A DEACON in one of the Auburn (N. Y.) churches found one Sunday in the contribution-box an old and faded piece of paper, which proved to be his own outlawed note for $30 that the holder, unable to collect, had turned into the box for the deacon's edification.

THE color of a girl's hair is regulated by the size of her father's pocket-book. If the latter be plethoric the girl's tresses are golden or auburn. If the old man's wallet is lean we hear the daughter spoken of as only "that red-headed gal." You never saw a rich girl with red hair.

A GENTLEMAN called at the Logan House early one forenoon, wishing to see the laird. "Oh, sir," said the servant, "he has some company wi' him." "I am afraid that I hav called too soon; they'll not hav done with breakfast." "'Deed, sir, it's yesterday's dinner they're not done wi'."

A YOUNG apprentice to the shoemaking business asked his master what answer he should giv to the often-repeated question, "Does your master warrant his shoes?" "Answer, Thomas," said the master, "that I warrant them to prove good, and if they don't I'll make them good for nothing."

ONE of two young ladies who recently visited the city from the country wrote home as follows: "We attract a great deal of attenshun promedadin the streets like other ladys, and holden up our cloze. Nobody isn't nothin now-a-days which don't hold up their cloze, and the [illegible] you hold 'em the more attenshun you attract."

HON. MONTGOMERY BLAIR is credited with this story: "Van Buren said to me in St. Louis, when I told him his son, Smith Van Buren, had been married: 'I thought he had given that girl up. Well, he's ruined. She is very rich. Now he'll giv up his profession of the law, where he has great ability, and become really a rich man—the least useful of human things. Poor Smith!"

A RATHER gloomy bon mot, which promises to be historical, marked a trial for alleged poisoning. "A doctor should be able to giv his opinion without mistakes," said the attorney-general. 'He is as well able as a lawyer," replied Dr. Warren. "A doctor's mistake's are buried six feet under ground," said the lawyer. "And the lawyer's are hung six feet above it," replied the doctor.

OLD John Berry, who used to liv up Lake Champlain, liked to tell a big story. One evening, sitting in the village store, he said he once drove a horse 72 miles in one day on the ice, when the ice was so thin that the water spouted up through the holes cut through by the horse's corks. One of the bystanders remarked that 72 miles was a pretty good drive for one day. "Yes," said uncle John, "but it was a long day in June."

The Alpha, a lofty journal published at Washington, devoted to a great deal of talk about things that it doesn't know anything about, comes to us marked X, and solemnly assures us in the leading article that we "can marry our cousin." Your'e a liar, we can't. For three reasons. In the first place, we are already married, and in the second place our cousins are all married, and in the third place, they are all men.—Hawkeye.

A MAN lately entered a tavern in France, looking dreadfully wearied, and with a face as long as a crescent moon. He seated himself languidly at a table where a previous customer was taking his glass of absinthe. "Sir," said the latter sympathetically, "you appear much fatigued." "Yes," replied the other; "headwork, sir, headwork." "Dramatic critic, possibly?" "No, sir; I am a hair-dresser, and to-day shaved twenty stubby beards, and cut the hair of thirty heads."

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers,	25
" " " Cloth	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jean Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Wor[illegible]	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion,	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus.	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records,	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge, Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	50 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright,	35 & 50
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 50
Eight Scientific Tracts.	25
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	50
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons,	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion,	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah,	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures,	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	50
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	3 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization,	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	5 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts,	3 50
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps,	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages,	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	15
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	5
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy,	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	50
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach,	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible,	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker,	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.,	3 50
Sexual Physiology. Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey	2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations,	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	50
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate,	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	75
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	5
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	5
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	5
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	5
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro, C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	5
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	5
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	5
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	5
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	5
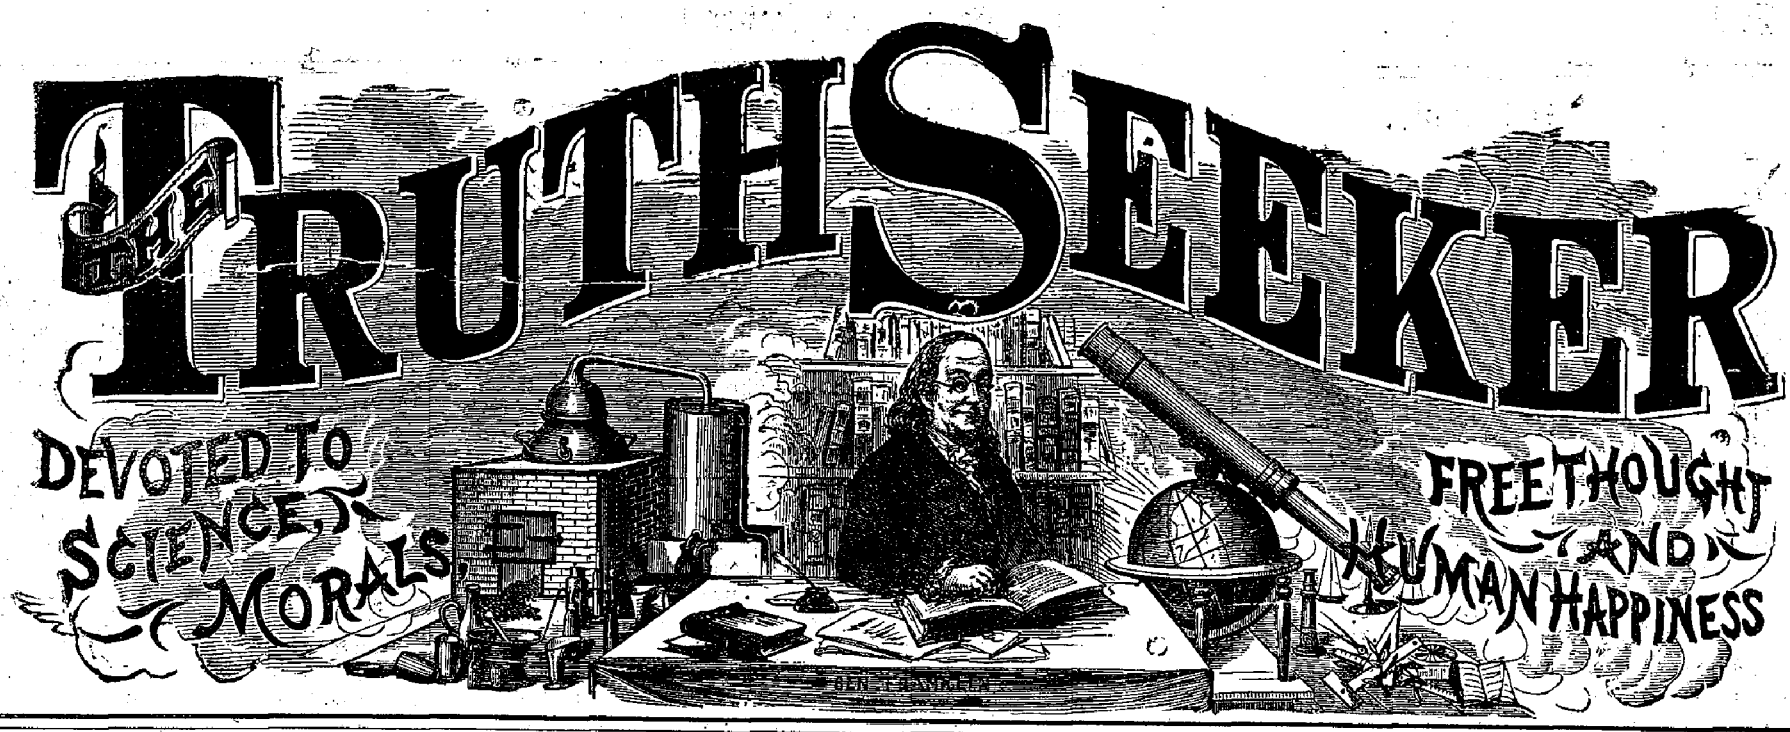
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry, Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	5
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	5
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	5
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	5
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West, G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	5
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood.	5
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ, Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	5
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	5
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	5
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	5
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	5
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	5
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	5
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	5
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
101.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
102.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
103.	Evolution of Israel's God, A. L. Rawson.	10
104.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
105.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
106.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
107.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
108.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
109.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
110.	Sensible Sermon. Savage. 8 pp.	2
111.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2
112.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
113.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
114.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
115.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
116.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
117.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3
118.
119.



SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	2
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.
11.	Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 5. No. 46. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, November 16, 1878. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE total yellow fever subscription is $1,359,000.

THE Richmoud colored preacher, who holds that "the sun 'do move," is making a model to illustrate his theory of astronomy.

A GERMAN Jurist warns his countrymen that unless Socialism be quashed a revolution in 1889 will throw that of 1789 far into the shade.

A QUINCY (Ill.) Methodist minister has, Talmage fashion, visited gambling houses and other resorts, and is telling not only what but whom he saw.

A CHICAGO minister named Crafts declares, in a book just published, that the drinking of a glass of wine is, "like lying, thieving, adultery, or murder," a sin in itself.

"MODERATE pew rents and music of the highest order" are the principal advertised attractions of the new up-town Protestant Episcopal parish, the Church of the Holy Spirit.

SOME of the papers are notifying young and popular clergymen that it is now about time to leave the measure of their feet with the church sexton in season for Christmas slippers.

AN American domiciled in Perugia lately desired to place two of his children in the college of that town, but was refused on the ground that the rules forbade a mixture of Protestant and Catholic youths.

A COMMUNION service was celebrated in Bridgeport, Conn., with brandy instead of wine, the druggist having made a blunder in filling the order for sherry. The pious participants must hav thought that the blood of their god had increased marvelously in strength and spirit.

BROTHER FULTON of Brooklyn now preaches a sermon in answer to Talmage. His subject is, "The Bright Side of New York," and he pronounces Talmage a sensationalist for going "under high police authority" to pick up information about the naughty places in order to retail it to his congregation.

A PARLIAMENTARY paper just issued shows that pauperism is increasing and crime diminishing in England. There are one and a half per cent more paupers in the country now than there were last year, an increase wholly due to the depression of trade, as it is confined entirely to the north, the metropolis showing a decrease.

THE Buddhist priesthood find the spread of European science in Japan very prejudicial to their influence and interests. This is undoubtedly true. Science is diametrically opposed to all religious superstition and ignorance. Religion and science cannot remain peacefully together, and the former invariably suffers in the contest.

IN the Evangelist the Pre-Millennarians and their theories are actively discussed, and it is broadly hinted that cases for doctrinal discipline may arise out of utterances made at the recent Prophetic Conference. That will be the next thing in order—to try those in an evangelical church who hav presumed to utter anything not prescribed by the rules of that church.

THE British Consul at Jeddah states that in the season of 1877-78 there were 42,718 pilgrims landed at that port, an increase of nearly 4,000 over the preceding year. The Haj having fallen on a Friday, the Mohammedan Sabbath, it was expected that the assemblage at Mecca would hav eclipsed that of preceding years, but it was not so. The concourse at Mecca on the great feast day was estimated at over 180,000 souls.

FATHER COGHLAN has been lecturing in Brooklyn on "Teachers sent by Christ." He said: "There is no Church established by Christ but the Catholic Church, which is the true Church. God sent a miracle to establish this fact. St. Francis Xavier, in the presence of 5,000 people, raised a dead man to life from his grave." Of course those who cannot believe that the saint brought a dead man to life are heretics and ought to go to hell.

HAPPINESS GENERALLY UNATTAINABLE.—Prof. Felix Adler said in his discourse Sunday that pauperism seemed to be viewed by society in the light of a yellow fever epidemic—to be cured only by frost; the latter by a frost of the elements, and the former by the frost of death upon the paupers. He thought happiness unattainable by the mass of human beings, and that, rather than seek it, men should endeavor to realize holiness, and, through holiness, content and eternal peace.

EVANGELIST NEEDHAM comes to the First Reformed Episcopal Church on Madison avenue to conduct a series of gospel meetings. He begins to-morrow evening and continues throughout the week. The Methodist says that among the thoughtful people of the Methodist Church there is a growing conviction that peripatetic evangelists are doing more harm than good, and that the work of true religion would go on better if left to the judicious management of earnest pastors of churches.

A CERTAIN bishop had a Biscayan man-servant, whom he ordered, one festival, to go to a butcher, who was called David, for a piece of meat, and then come to the church where the bishop was to preach. The bishop in his sermon, bringing authorities from the Scriptures in this manner, "Isaiah says thus," "Jeremiah says thus," at last happening to turn toward the door as his servant came in, went on: "And what says David?" Upon which the Biscayan roared out, "He says that if you do not pay your old bill, you need never send to his shop again!"

A NUMBER of the religious newspapers are advertising "diamonds in solid gold mountings, one dollar each." Now that diamonds can be afforded at this low figure, every church member ought to hav a few. The minister can wear them for coat buttons, and the Sunday-school children can be made resplendent with them. On anniversary days, presentations can be made of dollar diamonds to the children who hav gained the approbation of their teachers by reciting great numbers of Scripture verses. To be without diamonds when these gems are to be had at a dollar apiece, and the indorsement of the religious press thrown in, is little short of criminal neglect of opportunity.

AMONG the petty acts of persecution which the Protestants of Spain hav been annoyed with are the following: Three Protestants at Alcoy hav been imprisoned for saying that Mary was married, and had other sons besides Jesus Christ. In Mahon the Sub-Governor entered the church during services, and stopped them "because the singing was heard outside." The same was done in Cadiz. In Ignatoraf the child of the leading Protestant was forcibly taken, when not yet forty-eight hours old, by the Mayor and village priest to the Catholic church and baptized against the will and protest of its parents. The child died shortly after from the exposure, as is supposed. In Camunas the house of the pastor was stoned by the members of a Catholic procession, and lives endangered. In none of these cases hav any of the offenders been punished.

MOODY'S meetings in Baltimore are drawing multitudes to the most fashionable church in that city. He has been saying some very plain things to the stylish people who attend, chiefly on the subject of lukewarm Christianity. As in Brooklyn and in New York, so in Baltimore, he denounces church fairs and choirs. He says that too many church lotteries are going on, and asks, "What is the use of going to a gambling den when you can hav a game of grab with a lady for a partner?" He is particularly severe on the practice of hiring ungodly persons to sing in church choirs, and on the organists who get drunk and who cannot play without refreshing themselves with drinks during the service. Brother Moody must be careful not to tell too many unpalatable truths, or his Christian friends will come down upon him like a thousand of brick. He must do nothing to impede the work of grace.

DECAY OF A GREAT ESTATE.—One of the saddest and most complete financial wrecks of the day is that of the great Sullivant estate. The assignee's sale of the personal property took place last Thursday and Friday, the lands having been surrendered to the mortgagees. Everything was disposed of, and to-day M. L. Sullivant, the great corn king of the world, is without lands and without a roof to shelter his family that he can call his own. Under the enforced sale and foreclosure, we learn, the estate failed to realize enough to pay the indebtedness by $100,000. The melting away of this once kingly estate is a remarkable example of "how riches take to themselves wings." Mr. Sullivant's farming operations were on the most colossal scale in the country, and his failure only emphasizes the lesson taught by repeated smaller failures on the part of others, that large farms do not pay in this country. It is not likely that farming, on the scale carried on by Mr. Sullivant, will ever again be attempted in this state, and his magnificent domain of forty thousand acres will doubtless be cut up into numerous small farms. And while we sympathize with Mr. Sullivant in this failure, we cannot but regard this as the best disposition to be made of these fine lands. They will furnish homes for several hundred families.—Ill. Ex.

THE GREENBACK PARTY NOT DEAD.—Within the past few days consultations hav been held in this city by influential members of the National-Greenback-Labor party. Other consultations will follow. General B. F. Butler is at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and has, of course, been present at the conferences. As a result of these comparings of notes from various sections of the country, a decision to call a meeting of the National Committee of the new party has been reached. The call will fix Washington as the place of meeting, and Nov. 30 as the date. Invitations to participate will be extended to leading men in the movement. The sentiment of those who hav been conferring in this city is that the new party is not dead, nor yet sleeping. Their purpose is to move forward, in the light of the recent elections, to a more complete organization. These elections hav shown them where they are strong and where they are weak. This knowledge, they hold, will enable them to work more understandingly in the future, and consequently with better effect. Even though the organization of the new party should be allowed to fall to pieces—something which they contend is not supposable, except "for the sake of argument"—the individual voters of the party would remain an important element in the voting population of the land. Those would go to the one or the other of the old parties, and assuredly to the one which should make the strongest bid for their votes. In this way, it is claimed, the new party would exercise an important influence in determining the nature of the platforms on which the old parties would go into the presidential contest in 1880, even if organization should be dropped. But they do not admit that there is any probability that the new party will be allowed to fall to pieces.

THE Telegram, in commenting on the late attempt of Comstock to bring himself into notice by meddling with the rights of a worthy individual, uses the following language: THE DICTATORSHIP OF ANTHONY COMSTOCK.—A day or two ago a picture by a celebrated painter, Hans Makart, was ordered out of a window on Fulton street by Anthony Comstock, President of the Society for the Suppression of Vice. The picture represented "Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp," and the ground of complaint was that among the fifty figures introduced were three scantily clothed women, in front of the Emperor's charger. There is nothing however in the action, in the countenances, nor in the disposition of the draperies of these women (noble ladies who thought it an honor thus to greet their victorious King) to suggest lewdness, and even Mr. Comstock does not insist on this. It has been suggested that if public morality requires that a picture like this should be taken from a shop window, then all nude or semi-nude figures must be removed from the walls of all public exhibitions, and picture dealers who exhibit in their windows nude figures, by the greatest artists in the world, are liable to arrest and punishment. Mr. Comstock's argument is that he found some boys admiring this picture from the sidewalk, and that he concluded their minds were improperly affected by it. Cant like this is as repulsive as lewdness itself. We need more nude works of art exposed in our windows, not less. The reason that street boys' minds are "improperly affected" by such sights is because of the ignorant and Puritanic prejudices of a large proportion of our population, which hav forbidden the exhibition of such pictures. Nothing is more exquisite than the naked human form when so drawn and painted as to be the expression of a healthful art that worships the beautiful. Before Mr. Comstock repeats an outrageous act like this let him learn what art is. Of this he seems at present lamentably ignorant.

Events of the Week.

THE Paris Exposition has closed.

A YOUNG New Yorker has sued his aunt for breach of promise.

A DEFEATED Tammany politician hanged himself on the day after the late election.

THE usual amount of ballot-box stuffing and fraud prevailed at the South during the recent elections.

THE Australian cricketers hav sailed from San Francisco for home with their pockets well filled with American gold.

THE British ship Fifeshire was lost while on the passage from Madras to Liverpool. Twenty-two of the crew were drowned.

SEVENTY Indian boys and girls hav been put in the Hampton Agricultural Institute to be educated at the expense of the Government.

AN old lady in San Francisco was recently murdered by having her head chopped to pieces. Object, money. The murderer has been caught.

AT Portsmouth, N. H., on the 9th, an explosion of gas destroyed a large gasometer, laid the adjacent buildings in ruins, and killed one man.

ON Sunday afternoon last, a man near Binghampton beat out his brother's brains with a pitchfork, then blew out his own brains with a shot-gun.

ALEXANDER SMITH, of Yonkers, this state, who was a candidate for congressman in the recent election, died upon receiving the news of his election.

A PARTY of tramps set fire to the woods in Lancaster, Pa., a few days ago, and a tract several miles in extent has been burnt over and many buildings destroyed.

TIMES are growing harder in England. Many of the cotton-mills are closed and others are closing daily. This will be a terrible winter for the laboring class of England.

A MARYLAND Methodist preacher stole a hog, and though he repented as soon as the pork was consumed, and felt that Christ had forgiven him, he did not escape the prison.

MURPHY, the religio-temperance apostle, has begun a crusade against drink and the devil in this city. The first day's labors ended with a row about the possession of the collection.

A SINNER was so thoroughly converted at a recent Connecticut revival that he went home a raving maniac, chopped up an ungodly dog, and attempted to shoot his father, whom he took for the devil.

THE Sabbatarians of Belfast, Ireland, are trying to stop all travel of cars, carriages, etc., on Sunday. Much excitement exists and considerable hard feeling has been engendered, but as yet the Puritanic movement has not succeeded.

THE early Abolitionists had a reunion in this city last week. Among those present were Hon. Elizur Wright, John Jay, Albert O. Willcox Benjamin L. Mason, and many others who took an active part in the old-time antislavery agitations.

CAPE MAY, N. J., a favorite watering place and summer resort, was almost entirely destroyed by fire on the 9th. Eight large hotels, several bathing establishments, and many private cottages were burnt. Loss, $450,000. On the same day several brewery buildings in Philadelphia were burnt. Ten thousand barrels of lager were drank up by the flames. Loss, $500,000.

THE body of the late millionaire, Alexander T. Stewart, was stolen from the vault in St. Mark's churchyard, in this city, on the night of the 6th. It is supposed to hav been taken in hopes of having it ransomed. Detectives hav been diligently at work, and a reward of $25,000 has been offered for the recovery of the body and conviction of the thieves, but as yet no clue has been obtained.

HUNTER, the man who murdered a friend at Camden, N. J., in order to obtain the insurance on his life, is to be hanged on the 10th of January next. He has taken advantage of the mora bankruptcy act and transferred the guilt of his act to Jesus, but he will be hanged all the same. Mrs. Alexander, convicted of murder in the second degree at Bridgeport, Conn., has been sentenced to imprisonment for life.

Selections.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.—CONCLUDED.

By speaking of the speedy end of the world, the New Testament has led thousands to abandon their pursuits, to give away all their possessions, and even to become hopelessly insane. The early Christians lived in daily expectation that the end of the world was near at hand. Now it is said by apologists for the Bible that Jesus and Paul did not mean what they seemed to say and what their listeners understood them to say. Even granting this apology to be well founded, the system is responsible for all the misery that has resulted from the ambiguity of its teachings.

Christianity is responsible for all the dissensions that have resulted among its adherents from the contradictory character of the doctrines and teachings of the New Testament. To-day there are irreconcilable differences in Christendom among men equally learned and honest as to what the Bible really teaches. This diversity of opinion is the cause of much acrimonious controversy, sectarian strife, and social discord. If the Bible was regarded simply as a human production, differences of opinion respecting its teachings would be as harmless as that which prevails among scholars regarding the meaning of certain passages in Plato or Lucretius; but invested with divine authority, every portion of the Bible must be considered as of the greatest importance, and so long as it is believed to be a revelation from God, given by him to be read and understood by men, it is natural that believers in the infallibility and perfection of the book should look upon what they deem false and dangerous interpretations as the result of perversity and wickedness on the part of those who differ from them as to the meaning of certain texts. Hence sectarian bitterness and hate. Luther's disposition and conduct towards his brother reformers in the Protestant cause, simply because they could not see with him that transubstantiation was taught in the Bible, afford a good illustration of the natural result of the vagueness, obscurity, and contradictory character of portions of the book on minds that are pious, earnest, and convinced of the divine origin and infallibility of the Scriptures.

Christianity has opposed and hindered scientific discoveries by making the crude speculations of man in early ages "the authoritative standard of fact and the criterion of the justice of scientific conclusions" in modern times. Men refused to accept the Copernican theory because it was in conflict with the Bible. The great Protestant reformer, Martin Luther, was one of the most bitter opponents of Copernicus. He called him an "old fool;" said he was trying to "upset the whole art of astronomy," and in refutation of his theory appealed to the teachings of the Bible. "The Holy Scriptures show," said he, "that Joshua commanded the sun, and not the earth, to stand still" (Table Talk). The antiquity of the earth, now established to the satisfaction of all intelligent men, was violently opposed by theologians, because it was not in harmony with the notions current among the Jews a few thousand years ago. We cannot estimate to what extent geology has been kept back by the fable of a universal deluge as recorded in the seventh chapter of Genesis. Geologists themselves, under the influence of Bible teachings, thought the facts disproving such deluge must be illusive. Long after the falsity of the story was absolutely demonstrated, theologians continued to use it to prevent the acceptance by the people of the facts of geological science. Even now, the great mass of the clergy are accustomed to refer to that fable as though it were an actual event, while the more advanced theologians maintain that the flood was confined to Asia Minor, and the animals carried into the Ark were simply a few domestic animals, claiming that the Bible can be interpreted to harmonize with this view. They are shameless enough to get a new lease of life for their system by such a statement as this, when the language of the Bible is so clear, so unmistakable, so unequivocal, that no honest man can read the story of the flood and doubt that the author meant a deluge extending over the whole earth, and destroying all animals not saved in the ark.

As Christianity, by accepting as authoritative the statements of the Bible pertaining to scientific matters, has opposed geology, so has it proscribed and arrested the progress of almost every other science.

"Who," says Huxley, "shall number the patient and earnest seekers after truth, from the days of Galileo until now, whose lives have been embittered and their good name blasted by the mistaken zeal of bibliolaters? Who shall count the host of weaker men whose sense of truth has been destroyed in the effort to harmonize impossibilities—whose life has been wasted in the attempt to force the generous new wine of science into the old bottles of Judaism, compelled by the outcry of the same strong party?"

"It is true that if philosophers have suffered, their cause has been amply avenged. Extinguished theologians lie about the cradle of every science as the strangled snakes beside that of Hercules; and history records that whenever science and orthodoxy have been fairly opposed, the latter has been forced to retire from the lists, bleeding and crushed, if not annihilated; scotched, if not slain. But orthodoxy is the Bourbon of the world of thought. It learns not, neither can it forget; and though at present bewildered and afraid to move, it is as willing as ever to insist that the first chapter of Genesis contains the beginning and the end of sound science, and to visit with such petty thunderbolts as its half-paralyzed hands can hurl those who refuse to degrade nature to the level of primitive Judaism" (Lay Sermons, p. 278).

In opposing science Christianity has unwittingly opposed the best and noblest friend of man. Science has raised man from a savage to a civilized and educated being. "Modern civilization," says the author from whom we have just quoted, "rests upon physical science; take away her gifts to our country, and our position among the leading nations of the world is gone to-morrow; for it is physical science that makes intelligence and moral energy stronger than brute force. The whole of moral thought is steeped in science; it has made its way into the works of our best poets, and even the mere man of letters who affects to ignore and despise science is unconsciously impregnated with her spirit, and indebted for his best products to her methods. . . . She is teaching the world that the ultimate court of appeal is observation and experience, and not authority; she is creating a firm and living faith in the existence of immutable moral and physical laws, perfect obedience to which is the highest possible aim of an intelligent being" (Lay Sermons, p. 117).

It is science that has lessened the hours of toil, given men better food, better clothing, and better homes; diminished the ravages of pestilence and famine; destroyed those horrible superstitions which tortured the mind in the past, and instigated men to destroy by thousands their fellow-men; that has enabled man to make the forces of nature servants of his will and ministers to his enjoyment. In whatever direction we look we cannot fail to see our indebtedness to science. How much do we not owe to the mariner's compass, the art of printing, the steam engine and the telegraph, not to speak of other great inventions and discoveries? What a revolution they have effected! How they have expanded the mind and enlarged the vision and broadened the sympathies of man, promoting and extending sentiments of fraternity and brotherhood over the world, and diminishing and destroying those obstacles to advancement which religion for ages had exerted its authority and power to strengthen and perpetuate. Science has been the real civilizer; it is destined to be recognized as the true "savior" of man. And the real injury done to the race by the Christian superstition in opposing the study of science, keeping back its discoveries and inventions, and preventing the diffusion of its influence among the people, can never be estimated.

That some good has resulted, incidentally, from Christianity, no one, I presume, doubts or denies. The same may be said of any existing evil. No error or wrong can exist without producing results in which some good may be detected. Great good, in some respects, resulted from the slave trade. The superstition started by Joe Smith led to the early settlement of Utah and hastened the construction of the Pacific Railway, from which such magnificent results have already followed. Will it, therefore, be claimed by the Christian that the tendency of the slave trade and the Mormon delusion is to improve and elevate the race? By no means. Their general influence has been bad. In like manner, when we consider the influence of Christianity comprehensively, the conclusion seems irresistible that it has retarded civilization. Had it not appeared and acquired an ascendancy when it did, another superstition as bad, or worse, might have grown out of the decaying polytheism of pagan Rome; but the fact remains unchanged that Christianity has been one of the great evils which the human mind, in its development, has had to encounter, and from the bad consequence of which mankind is yet suffering.

The future, however, is full of promise. Christianity is in a condition now similar to that of the pagan superstition when the former was struggling for ascendency. Like the paganism of Rome, Christianity is destined to become an obsolete faith—a worn-out superstition. And in this age of science and popular intelligence it is improbable that any system of religious belief will be constructed upon the ruin of the decaying faith not vastly superior to Christianity. Nor is it possible, whatever system decays, or whatever may be the future religious belief of the masses, that the civilization of the nineteenth century can be destroyed as was the civilization of the Roman Empire. Barbarians cannot again overrun the world, and it is some satisfaction to know that one of the inventions of modern times, the great art of printing, renders imperishable to future ages all that has descended to us from the rich harvest-fields of the past, and all that has been added thereto in later times.

[THE END.]

Science and the Arts.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

CHAPTER XV.—CONTINUED.

The Flint-cells (Diatomeæ), a sixth class of Protista, are perhaps the most closely related to the Labyrinthuleæ. These primary creatures—which at present are generally considered as plants, although some celebrated naturalists still look upon them as animals—inhabit the sea and fresh waters in immense masses, and offer an endless variety of the most elegant forms. They are mostly small microscopic cells, which either live singly, or united in great numbers, and occur either attached to objects, or glide and creep about in a peculiar manner. Their soft cell-substance, which is of a characteristic brownish-yellow color, is always inclosed by a solid and hard flinty shell, possessing the neatest and most varied forms. This flinty covering is open to the exterior only by one or two slits, through which the inclosed soft plasma-body communicates with the outer world. The flinty cases are found petrified in masses, and many rocks—for example, the Tripoli slate polish, the Swedish mountain meal, etc.—are in a great measure composed of them.

A seventh class of Protista is formed by the remarkable Slime moulds (Myxomycetes). They were formerly universally considered as plants, as real Fungi, until ten years ago the botanist De Bary, by discovering their ontogeny, proved them to be quite distinct from Fungi, and rather to be akin to the lower animals. The mature body is a roundish bladder, often several inches in size, filled with fine spore dust and soft flakes, as in the case of the well known puff-balls (Gastromycetes). However, the characteristic cellular threads, or hyphæ, of a real fungus do not arise from the germinal corpuscles, or spores, of the Myxomycetes, but merely naked masses of plasma, or cells, which at first swim about in the form of Flagellata, afterwards creep about like the Amœbæ, and finally combine with others of the same kind to form large masses of "slime," or "plasmodia." Out of these, again, there arises by-and-by, the bladder-shaped fruit-body. Many of my readers probably know one of these plasmodia, the Æthalium septicum, which in summer forms a beautiful yellow mass of soft mucus, often several feet in breadth, known by the name of "tan flowers," and penetrates tan-heaps and tan-beds. At an early stage these slimy, freely-creeping Myxomycetes, which live for the most part in damp forests, upon decaying vegetable substances, bark of trees, etc., are with equal justice or injustice declared by zoologists to be animals, while in the mature, bladder-shaped condition of fructification they are by botanists defined as plants.

The nature of the Ray-streamers (Rhizopoda), the eighth class of the kingdom Protista, is equally obscure. These remarkable organisms have peopled the sea from the most ancient times of the organic history of the earth, in an immense variety of forms, sometimes creeping at the bottom of the sea, sometimes swimming on the surface. Only very few live in fresh water (Gromia, Actinosphærium). Most of them possess solid calcareous or flinty shells of an extremely beautiful construction, which can be perfectly preserved in a fossil state. They have frequently accumulated in such huge numbers as to form mountain masses, although the single individuals are very small and often scarcely visible, or completely invisible to the naked eye. A very few attain the diameter of a few lines, or even as much as a couple of inches. The name which the class bears is given because thousands of exceedingly fine threads of protoplasm radiate from the entire surface of their naked slimy body; these rays are quasi-feet, or pseudopodia, which branch off like roots (whence the term Rhizopoda, signifying root-footed), unite like nets, and are observed continually to change form, as in the case of the simpler plasmic feet of the Amœboidea, or Protoplasts. These ever-changing little pseudo-feet serve both for locomotion and for taking food.

The class of the Rhizopoda is divided into three different legions, viz., the chamber cells, or Acyttaria, the sun-animalcules, or Heliozoa, and the basket-shells, or Radiolaria. The Chamber shells (Acyttaria) constitute the first and lowest of these three legions; for the whole of their soft body consists merely of simple mucous or slimy cell matter, or protoplasm, which has not differentiated into cells. However, in spite of this most primitive nature of body, most of the Acyttaria secrete a solid shell composed of calcareous earth, which presents a great variety of exquisite forms. In the more ancient and more simple Acyttaria this shell is a simple chamber, bell-shaped, tubular, or like the shell of a snail, from the mouth of which a bundle of plasmic threads issues. In contrast to these single-chambered forms (Monothalamia), the many-chambered forms (Polythalamia)—to which the great majority of the Acyttaria belong—possess a house, which is composed in an artistic manner of numerous chambers. These chambers sometimes lie in a row one behind the other, sometimes in concentric circles or spirals, in the form of a ring round a central point, and then frequently one above another in many tiers, like the boxes of an amphitheatre. This formation, for example, is found in the nummulites, whose calcareous shells, of the size of a lentil, have accumulated to the number of millions, and form whole mountains on the shores of the Mediterranean. The stones of which some of the Egyptian pyramids are built consist of such nummulitic limestone. In most cases the chambers of the shells of the Polythalamia are wound round one another in a spiral line. The chambers are connected with one another by passages and doors, like rooms of a large palace, and are generally open towards the outside by numerous little windows, out of which the plasmic body can stream or strain forth its little pseudo-feet, or rays of slime, which are always changing form. But in spite of the exceedingly complicated and elegant structure of this calcareous labyrinth, in spite of the endless variety in the structure and the decoration of its numerous chambers, and in spite of the regularity and elegance of their execution, the whole of this artistic palace is found to be the secreted product of a perfectly formless, slimy mass, devoid of any component parts! Verily, if the whole of the recent anatomy of animal and vegetable textures did not support our theory of plastids, if all its important results did not unanimously corroborate the fact that the whole miracle of vital phenomena and vital forms is traceable to the active agency of the formless albuminous combinations of protoplasm, the Polythalamia alone would secure the triumph of that theory. For we may here at any moment by means of the microscope, point out the wonderful fact, first established by Dujardin and Max Schulze, that the formless mucus of the soft plasma-body, this true "matter of life," is able to secrete the neatest, most regular, and most complicated structures. This secretive skill is simply a result of inherited adaptation, and by it we learn to understand how this same "primeval slime"—this same protoplasm—can produce in the bodies of animals and plants the most different and most complicated cellular forms.

It is, moreover, a matter of special interest that the most ancient organism, the remains of which are found in a petrified condition, belongs to the Polythalamia. This organism is the "Canadian Life's Dawn" (Eozoon canadense), which has already been mentioned, and which was found a few years ago in the Ottawa formation (in the deepest strata of the Laurentian system), on the Ottawa river in Canada. If we expected to find organic remains at all in these most ancient deposits of the primordial period, we should certainly look for such of the most simple Protista as are covered with a solid shell, in the organization of which the difference between animal and plant is as yet not indicated.

We know of but few species of the Sun animalcules (Heliozoa), the second class of the Rhizopoda. One species is very frequently found in our fresh waters. It was observed even in the last century by a clergyman in Dantzig, Eichhorn by name, and it has been called after him, Actinosphærium Eichhornii. To the naked eye it appears as a gelatinous grey globule of mucus, about the size of a pin's head. Looking at it through the microscope, we see hundreds or thousands of fine mucous threads radiating from the central plasma body, and perceive that the inner layer of its cell-substance is different from the outer layer, which forms a bladder-like membrane. In consequence of its structure, this, the little sun-animalcule, although wanting a shell, really rises above the structureless Acyttaria, and forms the transition from these to the Radiolaria. The genus Cystophrys is of a nature akin to it.

The Basket-shells (Radiolaria) form the third and last class of the Rhizopoda. Their lower forms are closely allied to the Heliozoa and Acyttaria, whereas their higher forms rise far above them. They are essentially distiguished from both by the fact that the central part of their body is composed of many cells, and surrounded by a solid membrane. This closed "central capsule," generally of a globular shape, is covered by a mucous layer of plasma, out of which there radiate on all sides thousands of exceedingly fine threads, the branching and confluent so-called pseudopodia. Between these are scattered numerous yellow cells of unknown function, containing grains of starch. Most Radiolaria are characterized by a highly developed skeleton, which consists of flint, and displays a wonderful richness of the neatest and most curious forms. Sometimes this flinty skeleton forms a simple trellice-work ball, sometimes a marvelous system of several concentric trelliced balls, encased in one another, and connected by radial staves. In most cases delicate spikes, which are frequently branched like a tree, radiate from the surface of the balls. In other cases the whole skeleton consists of only one flinty star, and is then generally composed of twenty staves, distributed according to definite mathematical laws, and united in a common central point. The skeletons of other Radiolaria again form symmetrical many-chambered structures, as in the case of the Polythalamia. Perhaps no other group of organisms develop in the formation of their skeletons such an amount of various fundamental forms, such geometrical regularity, and such elegant architecture.

Most Acyttaria live only at the bottom of the sea, on stones and sea weeds, or creep about in sand and mud by means of their pseudopodia, but most Radiolaria swim on the surface of the sea by means of long pseudopodia extending in all directions. They live together therein immense numbers, but are mostly so small that they have been almost completely overlooked, and have only become accurately known during the last fourteen years. Certain Radiolaria living in communities (Polycyttaria) form gelatinous lumps of some lines in diameter. On the other hand, most of those living isolated (Monocyttaria) are invisible to the naked eye; but still their petrified shells are found accumulated in such masses that in many places they form entire mountains; for example, the Nicobar Islands in the Indian Archipelago, and the Island of Barbadoes in the Antilles.

[TO BE CONTINUED]

B. F. UNDERWOOD lectured at Hannibal, Missouri, Nov. 12th, 13th, and 14th.

Radical Romance.

The Darwins.

BY ELMINA D. SLENKER.

CHAPTER XVI.—CONCLUDED.

"I think you have been studying Rev. Robert Taylor pretty severely, haven't you?" asked Rose, as Edith closed her letter.

"Yes; I have read him and Voltaire both, and several other authors; and the more I read, the more I marvel how any one who studies the past of Christianity can have a grain of faith in it. I don't wonder that so many students of theology fail to make preachers. They learn too much of the nature of the whole thing to have faith in any of it, and a conscientious man would sooner starve than teach what he knows is false. And now, Myra, it is your turn."

"Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excelleth them all," said our merry friend, laughing. "I started off the morning after our compact on a lecturing tour, and in the course of it I delivered over one hundred lectures, mixing physiology, Liberalism, and sociology in every one, and at the close of each meeting I sold Liberal books, papers, and tracts, and got subscriptions to half a dozen different Infidel papers, giving the preference to our favorite TRUTH SEEKER, of course. I got home last night, and find I have sold ninety dollars' worth of books, got two hundred subscriptions to papers, sold and given away thirty dollars' worth of tracts, and have cleared just twenty dollars more than my expenses, and that will just pay my own subscription to the various papers I take. Besides all the rest, I have picked up some twenty correspondents on my tour, some of them awful pious, some inquirers, and some real come-outers, who wish, because it is good, for truth-seekers to exchange experiences and encourage and enthuse each other by so doing."

"I think we have all done wonders," said Rose; "and I hope it will encourage us to continue our labors as long as men believe in the preternatural and supernatural, in gods made out of ideals, in posthumous rewards and punishments, in faiths they dare not examine, in fables and legends of old, effete, and barbarous ages, and denounce inquiry and investigation concerning these things as being sinful, wrong, and wicked."

"Yes," said Edith, "I, too, hope we shall all be lifetime-workers in whatever cause seems most to need our aid. Let each of us now choose our winter work in this line. Shall we?"

"Agreed," said each and all.

"I will add an hour of scientific teaching in natural history to each music lesson I give," said Edith, "and ground my pupils in the known facts concerning animal and vegetable life, and gradually teach them the theory of development. I have Darwin and Hæckel pretty well by heart, and think I can do some good work that way. My friend Sisson Williams is coming twice a month to deliver lectures for me on the subject, and I think that will be an inducement for the parents to attend also, for, as you all know, he has a real gift for oratory."

"And how does he succeed in conquering his habit of tobacco-using," asked Myra, blunt and plain as of old.

"Oh! I have strong hopes of him," said Edith. "He tells me he has sweat it all out of him, and thinks he shall never crave it any more, beyond his ability to conquer his desires."

"I am truly glad of it," said Myra. "Whoever conquers a bad habit does the noblest and best work for himself possible, and also encourages others to do likewise. A lecturer, preacher of truth, or any one who attempts to guide others, should be especially free from all acknowledged evil habits. So for his own sake as a man and a public advocate of our cause, and for your sake, dear Edith, as one who hopes to share his fate and fortune, I am truly glad it is well with him."

"I shall write a series of articles on Woman's Equality," said Jennie, "and shall take up an advanced position upon the subject. I shall make it my life-work to place my sex upon a full equality with man, and perhaps elevate her above him in the scale of humanity, where she shall no longer be simply mother, sister, and wife, but the great head and source of continued human existence—the last, best, and noblest development of our earth. She shall be mistress of herself, guide, teacher, and instructress of her children, and shall become a mother only when she desires so to be."

"Yours will be truly a great work, Jennie," said Rose. "I am afraid an up-hill one, too."

"That is what I like," answered Jennie. "I want opposition; it fires me up and strengthens my position."

"But how about Comstock?"

"Oh, I do not fear him or his backers. I shall use proper, correct, and scientific language in speaking of these things, and be courteous and kind to all, and then risk the consequences. If I am fined and imprisoned for telling my honest opinions upon one of the greatest and most important subjects of the day, I shall make the best of it, that is all. I shall write and talk on all the great reforms, but this one of sociology is to be my main working field, and I hope to accomplish much in it."

"And I," said Sue, "have chosen temperance as my winter's work. I shall talk, write, and practice it. Temperance, first as regards all spirituous liquors, and then temperance in all things."

"You have a large field to work in," said Myra, laughing. "Are you not afraid of being lost amongst the bushes?"

"Not a bit; for Charlie would find me, let me go where I would," said Sue. "I'm little, it is true, but I can do big things if I try. There are four rum-shops in our town, and I'm going to have the last one of them shut up by spring. Charlie is going to help me, and he knows all I don't know, so how can we fail?"

And right here let me tell you, dear reader, she did not fail. Few do fail when they go to work with full hearts and willing hands in a good cause.

"I shall make another lecturing tour," said Myra, and sell books, papers, and tracts, and get new subscribers to our papers. I think I can make it pay in all ways. Father is going to visit his old home, where he was brought up, in York state, so he will not need me. We shall close up the house, and each be at full liberty to follow the bent of our inclinations."

"And what will Willie do?" asked Sue.

"Why, keep on working in the factory, of course," said Myra.

"Oh! I meant what will he do without his inseparable companion, for you have, to my certain knowledge, been together five nights out of a week for months past," said Sue, teasingly.

"Well, haven't you and Charlie been together seven nights out of a week and a dozen times a day as well?"

"Oh! but we are married folks, and have to be together," said Sue."

"And we like each other's society, and so meet when we can," said Myra, laughing. "But I'm going, anyhow; and if 'absence conquers love,' it must be; but I have all faith, and so shall live on hope."

"Yes, Willie is too sensible to want to keep you from doing a good work," said Edith, "and you will enjoy corresponding, and finally a re-union, all the better for the parting."

"And now what shall you do, Rose?" asked Myra, turning to that representative of the Darwin family.

"I shall attend to my household affairs first, cooking, sewing, knitting, etc., do my part towards keeping up a friendly social feeling amongst our neighbors by visiting them in their homes and showing an interest in them, and their aims, and pursuits, write upon various reforms for my pet papers, and help to get up a library association and reading-room for our village," said Rose.

"I vote that we write to each other once a month, all of us," said Myra, "and tell our little experiences and suggest and receive advice from each other."

To this all agreed.

And now having followed out the workings of the precious seeds of Liberalism as sown by the small and uninfluential family of the Darwins thus far, and seen our favorite heroines all develop into enthusiastic, earnest workers for the highest good of humanity, and having moored all the incidental characters in safe and happy harbors, save the five who have passed away forever, we will now bid our readers a kind and affectionate adieu.

Life's golden hours! How fast they fly!
Work while the sun shines bright on high;
Work while thy strength is in its prime,
And for the right, work all the time.
The seeds of truth sow far and wide,
And in the labor take due pride;
Build on foundations firm and sure,
And live a life that's good and pure.
Example from "The Darwins" take,
And love the truth for truth's own sake.
Go! seek the highest good of all—
Attend to Duty's slightest call.
Bend every circumstance you can
To make a heaven on earth for man;
And equal rights to woman give,
Then you a happy life will liv.

[THE END.]

IN 1509, Cornelius Agrippa, a great literary authority of his time, in a work of thirty chapters, devoted himself to proving the superiority of woman to man.—Ballot Box.

SILVER was first coined by Phidon, King of Argus, about 860 B.C., the epoch of the building of Carthage, and about 150 years after the construction of Solomon's Temple.

AN artesian well 3,250 feet deep has been bored in Pesth, Hungary. It is the deepest in the world, being nearly twice the depth of that in Paris. It sends up a jet of nearly boiling water forty-two feet high.

IF AGE and number of believers only be taken into account, the Buddhist faith has more to commend it than any Christian form of worship. It has existed almost 2,500 years, and its adherents are estimated at 400,000,000—more than one-third of the whole human race.

Communications.

The Hon. Elizur Wright's Letter of Acceptance.

In response to the notification of his election to the Presidency of the National Liberal League, in the short letter annexed, by the Committe appointed for that purpose, Mr. Wright graciously accepts.

NEW YORK, October 31, 1878.

HONORED AND DEAR SIR: On behalf of the Congress of the National Liberal League held at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 26th and 27th inst., we hav the honor to notify you that you were there elected the President of the League for the ensuing year, and we respectfully request your acceptance of the office. Our appointment as a Committee for this purpose was accompanied with the request that we should present to you some statement of the present position of the League and the assurance that any suggestions from you as to its future would be gratefully received.

Such statement, and any information you may wish, will be gladly furnished by the members of this Committee, who will present this letter to you. With great respect we remain, Your obliged and obedient servants,

T. B. WAKEMAN, 93 Nassau st., N. Y. City.
H. L. GREEN, Salamanca, N. Y.
MRS. AUGUSTA COOPER BRISTOL, Vineland, N. J.
COURTLANDT PALMER, 117 East 21st street, N. Y.
EDWARD H. SEARING, Sherwood, N. Y.
J. S. VERITY, 8 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass.
} League Com.

TO HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.

THE REPLY.

BOSTON, November 7, 1878.

Respected Fellow Citizens: By no means insensible to the kindness which has conferred upon me the office of President of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, by a majority of the votes of its recent Congress at Syracuse, I accept it with extreme sorrow and reluctance, and only in the hope that by doing so, that unity which seems essential to success may be restored sooner than it otherwise might be. Believing as we all do, that freedom cannot exist in a state which punishes or proscribes men for their opinions, we seem logically bound to tolerate among ourselves all differences of opinion not inconsistent with the aim of our movement to bring about a total separation of the functions of the Church from those of the state.

The essence of our secularism is that the state has nothing to do with religion, or with the hearts, the motives, the moral character of the citizen, any further than it must infer a bad motive from a bad act, unless there is proof to the contrary. On the other hand, the Church should hav nothing to do with temporal punishment and political proscription for any cause whatever. It is the proper function of moralists, philosophers, and churchmen to exalt the aims, refine the tastes, enlighten the consciences, and purify the hearts of the people, and with all mine I bid them God speed in this, provided they use legitimate means—among which I do not reckon pains and penalties, personal calumny, or any legal coercion or proscription whatever. But the function of the state is far humbler. It can only interfere with morals, when moral influences hav so far failed that the vices of some hav trespassed on the rights of others. And even benevolence itself may trespass upon rights, so that the state may hav to interfere to keep the peace. In a secular sense men hav a perfect right to be wicked in their hearts, provided they are inocuous toward others in their acts. Hence I think we are logically inconsistent if we do not make our fellowship in the League as broad as that we aim to establish in the state. With the highest possible respect for their motives, it seems to me that the minority of the Congress, in seceding from the majority and forming another League, hav rather unwittingly seceded from the principle of secularism, in the direction of becoming a Church, and that after a year's reflection they will see no reason why they should not reunite with us. I say this after having carefully read, in The Index, of this date, Judge Hurlbut's draft of a reformed United States statute. With all possible deference to Judge Hurlbut's legal ability and moral courage, I must confess I think his statute is as unsafe as it is unconstitutional, and withal quite impracticable. It lacks an essential element of a penal statute, a strict definition of the crime.

Though for more than forty years I hav held the opinion that the General Government has no right, either rational or constitutional, to exclude anything from the mails on account of its moral character, I should cheerfully, if present, hav concurred in the vote to postpone the question of the repeal of the Comstock law for a year, and having done so I certainly should hav voted to re-elect the former officers, for whose self-denying and meritorious services I feel deeply grateful. While I hav no ability to fill the place occupied by either of them, I cannot but recognize the right of others to vote as they saw fit, and on full inquiry and reflection, I cannot believe they committed any breach of faith in doing so.

For my life I cannot see why the advocates of "repeal" should be stigmatized by anybody as abettors of obscenity, because they believe it should be punished as most other offences are, by a jurisdiction outside of the mails, where only it can do mischief, and not by the jurisdiction which governs the inside, where it can do none. Of course we must expect to be—and so must our friends of the seceding League, no matter how personally innocent or zealous for the enforcement of law they may be—but so much the worse for those who bring the charge against us without being able to prove it. We can take refuge, if we must, behind the example of one who, for objects he deemed important, made himself of no reputation.

The League is responsible only for its corporate aim, the total separation of Church and State. Men of the most diverse opinions, each responsible for his own—whether saints or sinners—may well agree in this—and especially the saints, if they hav any sincere and intelligent desire to save the souls of men—for the largest liberty under just laws is sweet to all. Little do the fanatical persecutors of Heywood think how they may be preparing to hav the tables turned upon themselves. If, by the aid of Liberals, or without it, they can get a law confirmed which makes it easy to perpetrate such outrages on the liberty of printing, the proudest boast of our republic will be turned to a mockery, and the hearts of kaisers, popes, and inquisitors will be gladdened and strengthened everywhere. Such a thing cannot be without a terrible reaction.

The degeneration of the human soul can only be prevented or cured by pure scientific truth—truth, prompt, brave, gentle, unobtrusive—truth, derived not from the human imagination but from the study of facts—truth that should rather be called the hoe of the human affections, to eradicate tenderly the natural weeds for the benefit of the valuable plants in the heart of the child or the depraved brother, than the Sword of the Spirit. The only use of the sword of steel, in the state, is to perform a grim and by no means angelic duty when abstract sin has ripened into concrete crime. And badly enough does it perform it, when only impecunious malefactors feel its edge, while the magnificent corrupters and plunderers of millions are allowed to revel in palaces, and worship in still more gorgeous untaxed churches.

All sincere and intelligent religion must yet be on the side of the League. It is only the people who do not desire to do as they would be done by that can quarrel with the League, when they once understand it.

The wisdom of the ages—and this is the best of it—has come down to us mixed with many of their mistakes, if not their follies, just as ours will go down to posterity. It is for us to winnow the wheat from the chaff at our peril, and do our level best to-day in all fidelity and charity, in all courage and hope, to make the future both wiser and better.

With the most cordial regard, I am truly yours, for the whole of humanity. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

To
T. B. WAKEMAN,
H. L. GREEN,
AUGUSTA COOPER BRISTOL,
COURTLANDT PALMER,
EDWARD T. SEARING, and
J. S VERITY.
} Com. of the National Liberal League.

Mr. Wakeman's Reply to The Index.

To the Editor of The Index: Allow me to express my astonishment at your report of the Syracuse Congress. I cannot believe that you intended to misrepresent the whole affair, but such is the practical result. Until the official report is made and published, the opinion and action of all Liberals should be suspended, for it is very evident that neither party will satisfy the other. Some things appear to call for immediate correction or protest, especially as to the motives of the majority, which are totally misconceived. Actions and purposes are attributed to them of which I know they never dreamed, but I hav not the time, nor you the space, to go over the details, as will be done in the official record.

One thing I wish to call attention to, that is, that all parties laid over the question of repeal and reform for discussion until the next Congress. I am glad, in that view, that the address of Judge Hurlbut will so soon appear. The minority, by what seemed to me discourteous "filibustering," prevented me from giving any reply to it before the Congress, and so it remained unanswered, but not, I think, unanswerable. The majority for repeal seemed to be increased by it, rather than otherwise; I think from fifteen to twenty-five. Do not understand me to dissent from anything you say in praise of the Judge or his address. It was extremely beautiful, able, and conclusive on everything except the point—the power of the national Government over these subjects of lotteries, obscenity, etc., and the inevitable danger of allowing its exercise. The audience felt, as plainly as when a cloud passes before the sun, that no amount of experience or learning, ingenuity or eloquence can make twice two five.

There is one thing I cannot understand, that is, why the minority resorted to "filibustering" to prevent discussion, which the old Directory had expressly promised. Mr. Palmer's resolution, as he firmly stated, was not offered to be pressed to a vote, but to bring the subject before the House, and it was so used. The impression gained ground that the "reform" party filibustered from fear to risk the second thought that a good discussion and a night's sleep would hav before a vote, fixed for the next morning, should be taken. However that may be, we hav a whole year for it now; and at some convenient time I should like to lay before your readers the substance of the remarks the minority would not let me lay before the Congress in reply to the learned Judge. I read my Faneuil Hall speech before the Congress, not because I wished to, but at the request of both parties, so as to open the discussion and giv the Judge a fair chance. Is the Judge's address, to use your phrase, so "magnificently victorious" that no one is to be allowed to try to answer it?

You evidently hav a misapprehension about another rather personal matter which I wish I could relieve. The late President and officers were not "dismissed" at all, nor did they fail of election for personal reasons, nor even because they were in favor of "reform," but because they all demanded re-election in a way that no deliberative body of Americans will ever stand. Their card in The Index was felt to be a dictation, but their friends in the Committee, where by "magnanimity" they were the majority, insisted upon reporting all of the old officers, and would listen to no new names or compromise. They must hav the whole or none; and some of them expressly said that unless the old Board were re-elected they would resign. When the election came before the Congress, the same thing was repeated with emphasis.

The President came to the front of the platform and snapped his fingers in the face of the Congress, and said that he "didn't care that for their suffrages, and would not serve unless his young men" were elected. Then "the young men"—i. e., the rest of the old board—came forward and declared that they would not serve unless their President was elected. Then one member after another arose and threatened to withdraw if he were not elected. This was too much. Further reasons for the failure of "the minority" to elect any of their officers of the Board ought not to be sought. If the minority had asked or intimated that they wished a division of officers, I am sure it would hav been arranged at once, in the same spirit of magnanimity in which the discussion of the repeal question was laid over. But every attempt at a compromise was repulsed as an affront to the President. When, under these circumstances, he failed to be re-elected, the minority, without any intimation that they desired any arrangement of officers, ceased at once to vote or act with the Congress, and withdrew "to defend themselves"—against whom I know not, unless it be themselves. For they only had made the pretext upon which they withdrew. The majority could then, of course, only fill the remaining offices with their men. The minority left them no other alternative. Of the Vice-Presidents only those were dropped who resigned. There was no understanding whatever that the old officers should be re-elected because of the laying over of the repeal question; nor was there any "trap" or insincerity about it. The "magnanimity" was genuine. It gave the minority a majority on the committees, laid over the question that the majority wished to hav decided, allowed discussion as to officers, endured patiently filibustering and misrepresentation, and would willingly, I believe, hav divided offices, but it could not consent to abdicate wholly in favor of the "old Board" and make the League its private property, under threats and dictation.

I regret that you see fit to throw up again the mud and dead cats collected by a Christian reporter from his inner consciousness, who was rebuked for it on the floor of the Congress, and whose conduct was generally spoken of as a disgrace to the press of Syracuse. There was no disorderly conduct nor improper language, and there is no propriety in Liberals intimating that there was; leave that to others. Now that "the ways hav parted," "let us hav peace," and a year of quiet discussion and work, looking to the future rather than the past. Yours respectfully,

T. B. WAKEMAN.

On the Syracuse Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: "Rule or ruin" seems to be the motto of the "modifiers." They went into the Congress avowing their determination to stand upon a "reform" platform. They were then very willing to press the question to an issue. They wanted to see the League take a position which should not antagonize the "moral sense" of the community. Mr. Abbot and other officers of the organization took the initiative in a movement looking to an authoritative decision by the Second Annual Congress on the question of "reform" vs. "repeal." Well, the Congress convened; the "reformers" discovered that the "conspirators" had a majority. They saw that if the question came to a vote they would suffer an ignominious defeat. Then they pleaded the baby act, and Mr. Underwood and others threatened that if the question was pressed they would withdraw. They had suddenly lost all relish for a "fair" fight. Perhaps the friends of repeal acted for the best in agreeing to postpone the consideration of the vexed question for another year; but I cannot see it in that light. There should hav been no concesston made. It was bad enough for American Liberalism to be compelled to bear the odium of such conduct as that of Mr. Abbot and his lieutenants for the past year; but for the National Liberal League to remain silent whilst one Freethought editor languishes in prison, and another, and other intrepid leaders of the secular hosts, stand even now within the shadow of the dungeon walls, all of them suffering for naught else than for daring to exercise the rights of American citizens, is such a burning disgrace, such a foul stain as can alone be wiped out by the pen which shall erase the Comstock laws from our statute books. The idea that because the Congress did not now decide whether the League should henceforth work for repeal or reform, therefore the members should not hav the right to exercise their individual choice as to who should be the officers for the ensuing year, is simply preposterous, and Mr. Abbot well knows that there has been no violation of agreement upon the part of the repeal party, no "broken faith." Mr. Underwood seems to hav suddenly changed his mind. A short time since, in an editorial contribution to the Index, he averred that the adoption of either repeal or modification resolutions would not commit the League; that such vote would but show what individual opinions of a majority of the members of the Congress were. Now he has gone off to consort with such men as Rev. Gordon, who insists that Mr. Heywood was justly imprisoned and that the demand for repeal arises from those who themselves deal in obscene literature; with J. Mills Blake, who holds substantially the same opinion; and Whyte of Canada, who asserts that the state has the right to suppress erroneous doctrines by force. Such are friend Underwood's present associates. What a position for the foremost champion of Freethought! And how can J. A. J. Wilcox feel in such a crowd?

It is a sorrowful sight to see such trusted leaders thus wander off after strange gods; but one thing we must never forget nor lose sight of for a single moment—the cause is more sacred than any of its champions; and while we may cheerfully concede the sincerity of Bros. Underwood and Wilcox, and some of their coadjutors, we must distrust their judgment, and ever remember that we are *Free*thinkers, blindly following the leadership of no man.

We hav a great struggle before us, a rough and thorny road over which to advance, and we need the assistance of every loyal heart and brain in the camp of freedom. The massed legions of the Church and the State are before us; within our own ranks are indecision and cowardice, and envy and treachery. All these foes we must battle down; all these obstacles we must overcome, and ever keep our cause and banner unstained by thought of concession or surrender. We cannot retreat were we base enough to think of it. Back of us is absolutism and a state Church. We must advance or go to our graves cowed, cringing slaves, leaving to our children the battle that we should hav fought and won. Which is your choice, Freethinkers, Secularists, Infidels of America? Which order do you wish to hear fall from the lips of our chieftains—"Advance! forward all!" or "Retreat! trail the flag in the dust?" The choice is yours, true men and women of our land. May that choice be worthy of our heritage of glory from fathers who dared be free, and of the glorious, never-dying cause which it is ours to guard and preserve—the cause of Equal Civil Rights, of personal Freedom, of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity.

Florence, Iowa, Nov. 6, 1878. E. C. WALKER.

Paine Hall League Resolutions.

At a meeting of the Paine Hall League in Boston on Sunday, the third inst., the following emphatic resolutions were passed by a large vote.

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Paine Hall approves of and indorses the action of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 26th and 27th, 1878.

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Paine Hall declares itself in favor of the unconditional repeal of the United States postal law of 1873, known as the Comstock law, believing it to be unconstitutional and dangerous to personal liberty.

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Paine Hall pledges itself anew to the earnest support of the National Liberal League in its fundamental principles of total separation of Church and State.

These resolutions hav the right ring. They are terse and to the point. It is hardly probable that the League has disgraced itself by their passage; and could every Liberal and every Liberal League in the country indorse them they would, so far from disgracing themselves in the eyes of wise and good people, by standing shoulder to shoulder in the defense of the rights of freemen in opposition to the insidious encroachments of intolerant bigots and sectarians, do themselves great honor, and aid in sustaining the guarantees of the charter of American liberty. All honor to the Paine Hall League.

The Liberal League Movement.

THE OFFICERS ELECTED, ETC.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I hope the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League will make an arrangement with you and other Liberal editors to keep standing in their columns at least the names of the officers of the N. L. L. But I think it would be well to publish the names now of the officers who were elected at the Syracuse Congress so that if any of them for any reason decline to serve, the Board of Directors can at once fill the vacancies. Before the Congress a number of the members of the Executive Committee requested me to hav their places filled by other names but as I do not now remember who these persons were I wish they would again notify me as soon as they read the following list of officers elected at the last N. L. L. Congress at Syracuse.

OFFICERS FOR THE YEAR 1878-1879.

PRESIDENT.

Hon. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Hon. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,	Boston, Mass
Hon. NATHANIEL HOLMES,	St. Louis, Mo
Hon. HENRY BOOTH,	Chicago, Ill
Hon. GEORGE W. JULIAN,	Irvington, Ind
Mr. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,	New York
Mr. WM. J. POTTER,	New Bedford, Mass
Mr. JAMES PARTON,	Newburyport, Mass
Mr. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,	San Francisco, Cal
Hon. ABRAHAM PAYNE,	Providence, R. I
Rev. M. J. SAVAGE,	Boston, Mass
Rabbi B. FELSENTHAL,	Chicago, Ill
Rev. W. H. SPENCER,	Sparta, Wis
Mr. SAMUEL L. HILL,	Florence, Mass
Mr. E. W. MEDDAUGH,	Detroit, Mich
Mr. KARL HEINZEN,	Editor of Der Pioneer, Boston
Mr. HORACE SEAVER,	Editor of the Investigator, Boston
Rabbi ISAAC M. WISE,	Editor of American Israelite, Cinn
D. M. BENNETT,	Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, N. York
Mr. MORITZ ELLINGER,	Editor of Jewish Times, New York
Dr J. R MONROE,	Editor Seymour Times, Seymour, Ind
Rev. ROBERT COLLYER,	Chicago, Ill
Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,	Peoria, Ill
Dr. T. L. BROWN,	Binghamton, N. Y
Hon. R S. MCCORMACK,	Franklin, Pa
Elder F. W. EVANS,	Mt. Lebanon, N. Y
Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,	New York City
Mrs. AMY POST,	Rochester, N. Y
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON,	Tenafly, N. J
Miss SALLIE HOLLEY,	Lottsburgh, Va
Mrs. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass
Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,
FRANCIS W. TITUS,
J. H. W. TOOHEY,	Chelsea, Mass
Mrs. CLARA NEYMAN,	New York City
HENRY DAMON,	Boston, Mass
Hon. STEPHEN BREWER,	Cortland, N. Y

SECRETARY.

A. L. RAWSON, 34 Bond St., New York City

ASSISTANT-SECRETARY.

Mrs. A. C. BRISTOL, Vineland, N. J

TREASURER.

COURTLANDT PALMER, 117 East 21st St., New York City

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, A. L. RAWSON,
COURTLANDT PALMER, H. L. GREEN,
LUCY N. COLMAN.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Alabama,	J. H. HALEY, Selma
Arkansas,	JOHN AHRENS, Monticello
California,	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco
Colorado,	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada
Connecticut,	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport
Delaware,	JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville
Florida,	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprize
Georgia,	Dr. A. A. BELL, Madison
Illinois,	ERNST PRUSSING, Chicago
Indiana,	L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis
Iowa,	J. C. MICHENER, Adel
Kansas,	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott
Kentucky,	S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville
Louisiana,	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans
Maine,	M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland
Maryland,	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market
Massachusetts,	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston
Michigan,	D. C. HAUXHURST, Battle Creek
Minnesota,	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis
Missouri,	J. S. BOYDEN, St. Louis
Nebraska,	L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln
New Hampshire,	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester
New York,	H. L. GREEN, (Chairman), Salamanca
North Carolina,	J. W. THORNE, Warren
Ohio,	E. D. STARK, Cleveland
Oregon,	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin
Pennsylvania,	G. W. BALDWIN, Linesville
Rhode Island,	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence
South Carolina,	P. W. FULLER, Columbia
Tennessee,	Dr. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga
Texas,	Dr. A. DUNBAR, Greenville
Vermont,	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington
Virginia,	S. SPALDING, Norfolk
West Virginia,	A. M. DENT, Weston
Wisconsin,	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee
Dakota,	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton
District of Columbia,	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington
Utah,	W. FERGUSON, Provo City

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

LUCY N. COLMAN,	99½ Gifford St., Syracuse, N. Y.
FRANK RIVERS,	22 School St., Boston, Mass
J. S. VERITY,	Boston, Mass

Bro. Bennett, will you be so generous as to send a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing this letter to each of the above-named members of the Executive Committee who do not take the paper, as I desire to make a request of each to write me immediately whether or not he accepts of his re-election. And I further request those members of the Committee who are not subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER to subscribe immediately so that I may be able to correspond with them by letter through the paper in place of writing to each individual member. And in Territories where we hav no committeeman I would like to get the name of an active Liberal to be appointed in each. H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, Nov. 9th, 1878. Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L.

P. S. Will every reader of this paper who favors the Liberal League movement please send me his or her name with a word of advice as to the best method to pursue to insure success? H. L. G.

Pledges to the National Defense Fund.

We hope our kind and sympathizing friends scattered over the various states and territories will not lose sight of the approaching trials and struggles. Four of us are now under bonds to appear before the Court of Oyer and Terminer, and other arrests are threatened. Some heavy fighting will hav to be done in opposing our intolerant and tyrannical enemies, and funds are necessary to carry the cases triumphantly through the courts, or even to conduct them in any way. There is nothing like being well prepared for battle.

The following are the pledges that, up to this time, hav been given:

Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr., $60.00; James Parton, $25.00; Courtlandt Palmer, $25.00; A. Lohry, $20.00; J. K. Ingalls, $25.00; E. M. Sellon, $10.00; T. B. Wakeman, $10.00; Mrs. E. Wilcox, $10,00; T. R. Smith, $10.00; Chas. Winterburn, M. D., $10,00; G. L. Henderson, $10,00; A. L. Rawson, $10.00; C. A. Codman, $10.00; H. B. Brown, $10 00; T. C. Leland, $10.00; E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., $10.00; D. M. Bennett, $10.00; E. M. Macdonald, $10.00; Asa K. Butts, $10.00; Horace Seaver, $5.00; John C. Wade, $5,00; J. C. McMasters, $5.00; S. Bremer, $2.00; J. S. Verity, $2.00; T. S. Cabot, $2.00; R. L. Meyers, $2.00 J. P. Palmer, $5.00; D. R. Burt, $10.00; H. C. Slee, $10.00; Wm. Crookston, $10.00; G. W. Hall, $5.00; G. H. Warner, $5.00; Amos Scott, $5.00; F. T. Selser, $5.00; J. M. Barnes, $5.00; W. H. Hall, $2.50; S. A. Prater, $2.00; D. W. Patrick, $1.00; J. M. Selser, $1.00; W. F. Porter, $1.00; R. S. Shoemaker, $1.00; Mr. F. W. Titus, $5.00; H. Ellington, $5.00; D R Sparks, $10.00; Joseph Cornell, $5 00; B Dorscher, $5 00; Geo Geer, $5 00; Isaac Palmer, $2 00; Mrs Maggie E Clark, $5 00; Mrs L N Colman, $2 00; Chris Brown, $1 00; John Hetewood, $1 00; Geo W Brewer, $10 00; F Hillenkamp, $5 00; L Vanderburg, $5 00; D C Evans, $2 00; J C Beatty, $1 00; D Buckingham, $5 00; Benj Griffin, $2 00; O H Thomas, $5 00; Albert Taber, $5 00; Wm M Preston, $5 00; A Minski, $10 00; Mrs L N S, $5 00; J A Rooney, $1 00; E G Musgrave, $1 00; Geo Eschelberger, $5 00; Miss M Jones, $2 45; Dr A T Hudson, $5 00; Hannah Kerrison, $1 00; Bessie, $1 00; Martha E D, $2 00; Albert Faber, $6 00; J R Trumpey, $1 00; Wm Preston, $5 00; T R Kinget, M D, $5 00; Dan E Ryan (2d time), $5 00; R W S Briggs, $2 00; D Cummins, $2 00; John A Jost, $5 00; Wesley Milliken, $5 00; John Bardson, $2 00; W S Bell, $5 00; G H Holzgrape, $2 00; Wm Crookston, $10 00; Nelson Porter, $2 00; George Hendee, $5 00; Dr A B Lewes, $2 00; F Hendricks, $1 00; Edward E Martin, $5 00; Henry E Hunter, $10 00; O B Milliken, $5 00; Wm Hellesly, $2 00; E S Pope, $2 00.

The following hav remitted the sums here appended:

Z T French, $1 00; Mrs Henrietta Buckner, $2 00; L H H Ide, $2 00; Geo Cretien, $1 00; Dr D Bodifield, $2 00; Wm W Scholes, 50 cts; John Cosgrove, $3 00; Geo Eschelberger, $1 00; Mrs Elmina D Slenker, 25 cents; Geo W Shock, $1 00; Dr J S Lyon, $1 00; Leonard Gurney, $10 00; Linesville, Pa., Liberal League, $30 00; Geo Géer, $5 00; A B Bradford, $5 00; W E Woodell, $1 00; Frank Tompkins, $5 00; Joseph F Dunn, $1 00; Chris Brown, $1 00; George Wood, $1 00; Joseph Goldsmith, $1 00; Almond Owen, $2 00; Wm Rowe, $5 00; Geo Veloudois, $5 00; E Budlong, $2 00; L Vanderburg, $5 00; Joseph Kirk, 25 cents; John W Fitzpatrick, $1 00; Wesley Milliken, $5 00; W H Burr, $10 00; John Hollenwoods, $1 00; Wm Hart, $5 00; A L Thompson, $1 00.

The thanks of the National Defense Association are extended to those friends who hav so liberally come forward with their contributions. And as considerable more funds will be required to do what the Defense Association hav undertaken, in defending the cases that hav been commenced, it is hoped others will also be liberal in making contributions to the same fund. Will all who hav pledged, or who feel able to do something for the cause of a righteous defense, please remit with as little delay as possible?

The Religion and the God of the Atheist.

"Atheism is a ferocious system that leaves nothing above us to excite awe, nor around us to awaken tenderness."

The above is quoted from Robert Hall. I do not not know him. These are the first words from his pen that I hav ever seen, but they display utter ignorance of the purity of the Atheist's religion and his noble conceptions of a God. He calls Atheism ferocious, showing that he knows nothing of its gentleness. It may assail Christianity with vehemence, but not with ferocity; and then it is not that which teaches us to love our neighbor as ourselves, and to do unto others as we would hav others do unto us, which it attacks, but it is the superstitions which teach us that there is a great God who can save all, and yet saves only a part; who created us weak, and yet dooms us to eternal torture because we are unable to resist the temptations which he places in our way.

The religion of the Atheist involves the strict principles of morality. It teaches kindness and nobleness of soul, and that any sacrifice, however great or trivial, if it is prompted by feelings of love, if it comes from the noble impulses of the human heart, is a godly action, and will make our hearts rejoice to see the good or happiness which is thereby produced, even though we may suffer. It regards the human soul as the fountain from which springs every noble thought, impulse, or action. Which awakens the most tenderness, to regard the human soul thus, or as being totally depraved? Atheism applies the term God to all goodness, to all that is lovely, and this it worships. What is there in it, then, that deserves the scorn that is hurled at it, since it teaches only love for humanity—love for every living creature? A feeling prompted by this love to do good to all men, to liv so that every action of our lives will tend to bring happiness to the present and future generations, to draw them from the cloud of superstition which surrounds them, to giv them liberty of thought and action, to raise their aspirations, and make them free men and women. Humanity, its noblest attribute. Well has it been said, "Above all creeds, above all religions, is that divine thing, Humanity." It gushes from the depths of the human heart, and extends itself to high and low alike.

This is the religion of the Atheist, and his God is all goodness. Who, then, shall dare to assail it? Although it denies the existence of the Christian God, yet is its religion a purer, nobler one. The Atheist worships not through fear of eternal punishment, but from the feelings of reverence which naturally arise in his soul. JEAN INGERSOL.

New Albany, Ind., Oct. 6, 1878.

Memorial to Congress on Spelling Reform.

The American Filolojical Assosiashon at it its anual meeting at Saratoga, N.Y., on July 8, 1878, adopted the foloing memorial on the subject ov Speling Reform:

"Tu the Onerabl the Senate and Hous ov Reprezentativz in Congres assembld: This memorial ov the undersind, memberz ov the American Filolojical Assosiashon, and utherz, respectfully reprezents that it iz curently stated by leeding educatorz that the iregular speling ov the English langwage cauzes a los ov too yeerz ov the scool time ov eech child, and iz a main cauz ov the alarming iliterasy ov our peepl; that it involvz an expence ov hundredz ov milionz ov dolarz anualy for teecherz and for riting and printing superfluus leterz, and that it iz an obstacl, in meny uther wayz, tu the progres ov educashon amung thoze speeking the English langwage, and tu the spred ov the langwage amung uther nashonz.

"It further reprezents that leeding educatorz, amung hoom ar meny teecherz ov much practical experience, and assosiashonz ov lerned scolarz, declare it posibl tu reform our speling, and hav propozd sceemz ov reform,

"The prayer ov yoor memorialists, tharefore, iz that yoor onorabl body ma see fit tu appoint a comishon tu examin and report how far such reform iz dezirabl, and whot amendments in orthografy, if eny, may be wizely introdust intu the public documents and the scoolz ov the District ov Columbia, and acsepted in examinashonz for Sivil Service, and whether it iz expedient tu moov the Guvernment ov Great Britain tu unite in constituting a Joint Comishon tu consider such amendments;

"And yoor memorialists, az in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.

"T. A. MARCH, Prezident Lafayette Colege; J. HAMMOND TRUMBUL, Hartford Colege; W. W. GOODWIN, Harvard Colege; W. D. WHITNEY, Yale Colege; A. HARKNESS, Brown University; S. S. HALDEMAN, University ov Pensilvania; W. D. HENKLE, editor Ohio Jurnal of Educashon."

The Radical Pulpit.

Our Leaders.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

Of our leaders I would speak to you to-day, of our hope for the future, of those upon whom all progress depends.

Day by day as you stand on the shore you may see the waves of the ocean retire, and the sands become dry, and the rank weeds lie around you, and decaying organisms send up their putrefying breath.

To some one unacquainted with the law of tides the thought might arise, How now if this process of diminution were to continue, if the waves would grow still less and less and the ocean finally dry up in its bed? But let him watch now. In a little while there is a movement in the sea, and the ocean, as if angry at the blasphemous thought, raises high its billows, and the surf dashes in angrily, and the surges cast themselves with thundering reverberations upon the shore, and the salt spray cast far inland betokens that the sea has returned once more to fill its borders. There is this ebb and flow in the affairs of men. In religion we have had a long, low ebb, and those unacquainted with the laws of historical tides have believed, forsooth, that this great ocean would now be reduced to the size of the green and festering pools. The rank weeds of superstition have lain around, and the decaying organisms of forms, ceremonies, and usages have insulted the eye. But the tide is turning; a new movement ripples over the surface of the waters; the dead matter will be swept away, and ere long the sea of religion will return once more to fill its natural boundaries.

It has seemed to some that the genius of this age is opposed to religion. True, the majority of men have narrow minds. If there is one thought dominant it excludes every other. The one thought dominant in the minds of this generation has been material power. It is the patent-office that has vied with the church. We have been so busy with inventions for saving labor and increasing production, so conscious of the possession of immense resources, the invitations that trade offers have been so numerous—we have so felt that each one of us was invited to a banqueting table, and that there is a place provided there if we can only find our card—that the desire to obtain satiety of gain overbalances every other desire, and men rush on for wealth. True, very few attain their desire; very few touch the phantom gold, and very few of those who have touched it retain it. But to those who are excluded from the possession there is at least the excitement of the chase, which has for them all the fascination of a game of hazard. So with the great majority. Then there are the finer minds of our age that deal with the powers of nature, that deal with the properties of matter; and they have weighed and balanced, and peered into the skies, and made the heavens and the earth the field of their observation; and they were great, and achieved unparalleled things, and natural science triumphed; and Bible philosophy, like a naughty child, was sent into a corner, and religion and ethics were treated with supercilious disdain. But a turn of the tide is nigh.

Religion is a part of our nature. It is an essential element of the very constitution of man, and not until we lay aside our nature and become otherwise than human will it ever be possible for us to divest ourselves of this great need. It may be an excellent thing to live in fine mansions and dine off of heavy silver plate, and recline on Persian divans and quaff the rich vintage of the Rhine, and fill your coffers with treasure; but treasure does not buy peace of mind, and if there is a black stain in the heart, all the brilliancy of your splendid establishment will not make it white, or make the bitterness of remorse sweet. And it is a noble thing to possess knowledge, but if you are crushed by some heavy affliction, if the heart is bruised and bleeding, of what avail is your knowledge then? Will your Euclid's Geometry console you? Will your new book of astronomy relieve you? Will the profoundest researches in physics or in chemistry take away one moment's ache from your aching hearts? No. There is a department of human life which is embraced under the head of religion, and which has its own laws. It is a mistake to suppose that science can ever become a religion. Science and religion touch boundaries; where science ends, there religion begins. There is now a revulsion of feeling in the direction of this department of human life, and among the ranks of the Liberals this new tendency also has become apparent.

In the olden times Liberalism was a warrior. It struggled; it was in eternal conflict. It said: This is not true. The Church is hateful, and the priests are hateful, and Bible idolatry is hateful. And that was well. But then it became confused and dazed in the smoke of the conflict and said, This thing they call religion also is hateful. And that was not well; for religion and superstition are not identical; religion and church service are not identical; not even are religion and theology identical.

There is another marked change in the Liberal ranks coincident with or consequent upon this revulsion, and that is a desire for association and organization. At first the Liberals were very jealous of our organization. They had with difficulty thrown off their fetters, and they were now careful, and suspicious of any ties, however necessary. Each one was thrown on his own resources, and so each one went his way. There was great freedom of the individual, but there was great inefficiency of the general body. And so it came about that the Liberals of this country have been treated shamefully. Unjust laws have been passed in their despite, in which their principles are not regarded and their sentiments are not respected. The necessity for organization, therefore, has become apparent, and now the desire for union is strong.

But right here we come to a capital difficulty—a difficulty which will check the advance of the Liberal movement in this country for many years unless it be removed, and it is likely to prove fatal to the development of the Liberal cause. I mean lack of leaders. In a recent conference of persons interested in the progress of free religion, reports were brought in from different parts of the Union showing that there are thousands of men who think and feel as we do, but who are unable to give public expression to their sentiments from the absence of capable men to whom they might look for instruction and guidance. In my own recent visit to the Pacific states the desire to form societies similar to our own was expressed in at least three of the most prominent cities of the West. The material is ample, and the men, had we them to send out, could do a great work, a greater than the laggards conceive of. The crops are waiting, but there are no reapers. We have hitherto relied chiefly for our representatives in the press and on the rostrum, on those who were originally educated for the ministry, but who, having changed their convictions, were found willing to undertake the work and responsibility of innovation. But we shall be able to rely on this source no longer, and that for three reasons. In the first place, those who devote themselves to the ministry, those who are intelligent and capable men, are extremely limited in number. In the second place, those who devote themselves to this career are strongly tempted to remain in the orthodox ranks; station, influence, lucrative positions being easily within their reach. And, in the third place, those who do change their convictions are likely to change their profession also, being unwilling to enter upon the not altogether attractive path of the reformer. So that if, in the first place, the capital deficiency of the Liberal cause is lack of leaders, it is true, in the second place, that if we want leaders we must educate them ourselves; and, therefore, I propose this topic for your consideration to-day: How shall we obtain leaders? how shall we train leaders?

Let us look for a moment at the character of those teachers of religion who exist around us. There are two types, the Jew and the Christian. Sometimes, in the loose language of the press, and by persons illy informed, the two are confounded, as though their office were essentially the same. That is not so. The word rabbi means master, the word minister means servant. There is here a radical distinction, and one deeper than the name. Let us consider. Judaism was originally a learned religion. There was a law that had been handed down from heaven; and added to this law was commentary on commentary and volume on volume, in which each generation had recorded its own religious experience; and, every member of this Jewish people being one of the elect, hence a protegé of the Lord, so to speak, he was expected to make himself familiar with the law of his divine commander. So it became a religious duty for every member of the Jewish body to study the law. Here was the only example in history where a whole people pursued theological studies; and here was for the first time presented the immense importance of learning in religion. It was this learned religion which kept the Jews a people, which kept their intellect alive and free from stagnation in that dark, dreary, and dreamy period of the Middle Ages; dreamy, I say, because it was to them like a bad dream, full of nightmares, of fire and slaughter, with all the hounding persecution of the age. But wherever the Jews were driven, wherever they gained even a temporary refuge, they carried their books with them. In those dark, narrow, filthy lanes into which their oppressors crowded them they carried their libraries, they erected their academies, and they had their schools for little children. They lit their lamp of knowledge and sat in its little circle of light, and in the midst of surrounding darkness. For the first time in the history of mankind the word learned acquired a religious meaning. To educate the child was a religious task; and, significantly enough, the Jews among themselves called their synagogues not synagogues, but schools. Among such a people there could be no distinctions of caste or priesthood. The Jewish people had seen their splendid temple on the heights of Jerusalem fall into ashes, and it buried forever the priestly office beneath its ruins; henceforward the whole people were equal. One of their ancient writers said, "We are all princes;" and another said, "We are all kings." Behold here the American doctrine of the sovereignty of the people anticipated.

Among a people where scholarship was the sole distinction, the rabbi who would undertake to be a leader in religion could rest his claims solely upon superior scholarship. And so it has been rested on this from the beginning, a blameless character being presupposed. The Jewish rabbi was, as it were, the head scholar, and the people were the pupils; they were engaged upon a common lesson, and he was the master, not of the people, but of the lesson. And so the training of the Jewish rabbis of the olden times was purely literary.

Quite distinct were the character and duties of the Christian minister. Christianity painted the picture of the world with a brush dipped in the gloom of night. The world is bad, it is said. Religion, which of old was light and joyous as a sporting child, became grave and sombre, and was decked in the cerements of the grave, and the song of life was set to the mournful measures of funeral dirges. The world is bad, Christianity said, and we must prepare for the day of death. The wisdom of life is death; prepare against the day of death, when you will enter into the real world to which this only leads as some obscure hallway leads into spacious lighted chambers, where sits the mighty judge and where your awful fate will be decided.

Judaism had said to mankind, Life is a prolonged school for discipline. Again it said, The life of man is a prolonged soldier's service. Men are sent out upon long campaigns; the plans of their commander they do not know—into his counsels they cannot pry; their duty is to render implicit obedience. Christianity said: The life of man is not a soldier's service, but an exile; man is cast out by his king. Men are a flock of sheep that have gone astray; the earth is a vale of tears; the earth is a desert wherein men wander, and hence the office of the minister. The minister is a servant, the servant of the king, sent out from the other world to bring the erring sheep into the celestial fold. He is the keeper of souls. He has to control men's hearts and discipline them and intercede for them, in order to lead them up to the throne of grace, where they shall ask for pardon. Behold Catholicism, with its grand cathedrals and its dazzling ritual, its high pomp, and its sacraments; all this glory is founded on the idea of man's exile and the ministerial power of priests. Behold, also, the more intellectually free and more wholesome Protestantism, founded on the same thought. The Protestant clergy cling to the same doctrine, whereon depends their influence, as they know, which they dare not abandon for fear that they would give away their power.

So the Jewish rabbi is a student of the revealed law, and the Christian minister is the vicar, the servant of Christ, a fisher of souls. Now I know that there are men in both the Christian and the Jewish pulpits whom this description does not depict. There is a certain class of Christian ministers who do not believe in the triple Godhead, and these ministers have abandoned the trinity. They do not believe in the fall of man and the redemption by the Messiah, and thus they gave up the divinity of Christ; but they believed in the perfect humanity of Christ; that in Christ we have absolute man and a perfect example of every human grace and virtue. But this last stronghold they have now yielded up. A criticism of the New Testament shows that of the life of Christ we know very little; that the tale of Christ's life is woven with miracles and legends; that the real points are few, and these going to show that his was a noble and lovable nature, but by no means one that was free from the frailties that have been the portion of every child of man from time immemorial. But they cling to Christianity still. They are unwilling to forego its social advantages. They will not leave the camp of the majority and stand solitary with the few. If you press them hard they say, we are Christians in a historical sense. That has a plausible sound, but no meaning. Christian in a historical sense means Christian in the sense of Christian parentage, Christian in the sense that your father or grandfather was a Christian, but Christian in the sense that somebody else was a Christian is a manifest absurdity. Christian in a historical sense, therefore, means Christian in no sense at all.

And there are also Jewish rabbis whom the description I have attempted does not fit. These are men who have gone through a long course of gradual emancipation. You must not forget their age and the time of their youth. They began by throwing off the old traditions, and they sheltered themselves in so doing on the authority of the well-known Talmud. They then threw off the fetters of the Talmud, and sheltered themselves in so doing on the authority of the Bible. Then at length they were compelled to throw off also the authority of the letter of the Bible, and now they retain only what they call the spirit of the Bible. That means a certain number of affirmations, containing mainly the moral maxims which make the wealth of the Scripture. All their lives they have burnished this treasure which they rescued from the mold of ages and the fall of centuries. And if you consider the conflicts they underwent, the toil it cost, and the trouble to free these treasures from the heaps of folly that surrounded them, you will concede that they deserve all possible respect, for they have done a hard life's work well.

But now among the Jews a new generation has arisen, a generation of men who never felt the fetters of the old traditions, who cannot read one word of the old Talmud, and who, therefore, don't enjoy the animating consciousness of having broken those fetters. They say, as for the spirit of the Bible, farewell. They accept the ethical statements of the Bible as matters of course; but they ask, What now? This spirit of the Bible is a disembodied ghost unless you give it some new shape that shall be adequate to the demands of the new age. Unto this generation the men of whom I have spoken have brought no message.

And so we have considered four types, the rabbi, the minister, or pastor, and those of either faith, who feel that they belong no longer to the old school, and the rising generation, which foreshadows, as it were, great and noble developments.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Selections.

Voltaire in Exile.

HIS LIFE AND WORK IN FRANCE AND IN FOREIGN LANDS.

BY M. GASTINEAU.

(Translated for THE TRUTH SEEKER.)

VIII.—CONTINUED.

Before his plausible affirmations the balloon emptied itself. But, after having passed at the bar on account of patriotism, the bigot party charged him with having ridiculed the Christian religion and having exposed Christ to derision under the name of "Mahomet," a tragedy played at the Theater Français, the 20th of August, 1742.

More acute than the clergy of Lille, the Parisian clergy saw plainly that by placing "Mahomet" on the stage the author had aimed at Christ, and especially at fanaticism, which, besides, was the secondary title of the piece: "Mahomet ou le Fanatisme." Some doctors of the Sorbonne judged that "Mahomet" was a cutting satire upon the Christian religion. An Englishman had judged the piece in the same way.

"Voltaire," wrote Chesterfield to Crebillon, Jr., recited before me last year, in Brussels, several extracts from his "Mahomet," where I found very fine lines and some thoughts more brilliant than just; but I saw at once that Jesus Christ was aimed at under the character of Mahomet, and I was surprised they had failed to perceive it in Lille."

The representation of "Mahomet" in Paris produced an incredible sensation. The whole tribe of the Desfontaines and Frerons, all the clerical pack, howled against the piece. The main body and rearguard of the genus bigot rose and fulminated—even the Jansenists and the Convulsionnaires (for it was the happy time of the sinister extravagancies of the cemetery of St. Medard), and that so well that the Cardinal of Fleury entreated Voltaire to withdraw his tragedy to put an end to scandal.

"Since I am now the victim of the Jansenists," wrote Voltaire to the Count of Argental, "I shall dedicate "Mahomet" to the Pope, and I expect to become bishop in partibus infidelium, seeing that is my true diocese."

Sure enough, three years later, Voltaire kept his word and sent to Benoit XIV. his tragedy, with a Latin distich to place below his portrait, and wrote him, while dedicating "Mahomet" to him:

"May your holiness deign to allow me to place at your feet book and author. I dare ask your benediction for the one and protection for the other. It is with these sentiments of a profound veneration that I prostrate myself before you and kiss your sacred feet."

Benoit XIV. answers his "dear son Voltaire," while sending him, in a brief of felicitation, his greeting and apostolic benediction. He thanked him for his distich, accepted the dedication of "Mahomet," and became the champion of the author, who, thanks to the brief of the pope, was able again to place his piece upon the stage in 1745.

The Paris clergy spread the rumor that the pope had fallen into a ridiculous trap; but Benoit XIV. knew what he was about. It pleased him to show his amiable Atticism to protect such a genius as Voltaire; and, besides, he would have blushed to play the part of an ignorant friar, always fulminating, always wrathful, which the sovereign pontiffs of the nineteenth century have played in the name of a Catholicism as narrow as inflexible. In the eighteenth century everybody had wit—even the popes!

Let us return to Paris, to the storm raised by the first representations of "Mahomet." Seeing it would not calm down, Voltaire, according to his usual prudence, "pulled up stakes," and regained, with his friend, on the 25th of August, 1742, his secure asylum, Brussels, whence he started again on the 2d of September to answer the pressing call of the King of Prussia, who was then at Aix. The interview was very short this time. Voltaire remained only three days with Frederick.

"He offers me a good house in Berlin and a fine estate," says Voltaire, "but I prefer still my second story in Madame du Châtelet's house. He insures me his favor and the preservation of my liberty, and I run to Paris to my bondage and to persecution."

Yet the two friends had never more congratulated or burnt more incense for one another. For the King of Prussia, Voltaire was the wisest, the most illustrious, the most virtuous of men. As for Voltaire, he wrote to this king, the Alexander and the Solomon of the North, in a dithyrambic tone, wherein a shade of irony peers out:

"Oh, most extraordinary of men who win battles, who take provinces, who make peace, who make poetry and music, the whole of which so pleasantly and gayly!"

Voltaire, who had never better and more quietly worked than in Belgium, acquires more genial appreciation of Brussels. He writes to the Count of Argental:

"We have led in Brussels a retired life, which is much to my taste. I found few men, but many books. I worked without cessation."

To Madame de Champbonin:

"We live in Brussels as in Cirey. We see few people. We study during the day; we sup gayly. We take our coffee and milk on the morrow of a good supper. I am sick sometimes, but very contented with my lot, and feeling no lack but that of your presence."

And to Thiérot:

"Madame du Châtelet still continues her miserable chicanery war here. For me, I am subjected to all the tricks of the printers."

To prevent the closing of the doors of France against him, Voltaire writes from Brussels to the Cardinal Minister de Fleury to render account of his interview with Frederick. He writes him that the king is grieved and piqued by the hostility of France, towards which his tastes attract him. He would not be much adverse to contracting an alliance with his government. He had asked information touching the financial resources of France. Voltaire had answered him that they were immense, etc. It is evident that Voltaire intentionally exaggerates the good dispositions of the King of Prussia for his country, and that he gives court holy water to the Cardinal.

In that same year, 1742, died Rousseau. A subscription for the publication of his works was made. When sending his contribution, Voltaire, forgetting the polemics of old, wrote what follows to M. Segui:

"It appeared as if destiny, in leading me to the city (Brussels) where the illustrious and unhappy Rousseau has ended his life, reserved for me a reconciliation with him. His talents, his misfortunes, and his death have smothered all resentment in my heart, and have left my eyes open to his merits alone."

In November, 1742, Voltaire left Brussels. On the 20th of February, 1743, he put his "Merope" on the stage in Paris. This tragedy met with a complete success. Voltaire was carried in triumph into the lodge of the Maréchale de Villars, and the young Duchess of Villars, urged by an enthusiastic public, was forced to kiss the author of "Merope," amid the plaudits of the whole audience.

Voltaire once more offered himself to the Academy. But its doors were still closed against him by the Minister Maurepas, at the head of a hostile faction. The King of Prussia strove to console Voltaire in this defeat by addressing him the following letter:

"I expected certainly to see Voltaire repelled whenever he appeared before an Areopagus of cross-and-miter Midases. Prevail upon yourself to learn to despise a nation which ignores the merit of the Belle-Isles and of the Voltaires. Come to a land where you are loved and bigotry is not."

Voltaire experienced another and quite as painful reverse. It was the Ministerial interdiction of his "Julius Cæsar," which was upon the eve of being brought out. Indignant at this arbitrary and vexing measure, Voltaire was about to leave France once more, when a diplomatic mission was proposed to this interdicted author, to this publicist so often pursued and exiled. The new Minister of War, the Count of Argenson, had had the idea of utilizing the friendship of Voltaire and Frederick to strive and obtain through it an alliance between France and Prussia. Frederick, at peace with all his enemies, had signed the treaty of Breslau, which greatly displeased the French, whose policy sought to cause him again to take up arms.

Although Voltaire saw all the difficulty of that delicate mission, the consequences of which might be the rupture of his good relations with Frederick, he accepted it to serve his country, which, according to his own expression, had so often treated him in a shameful manner. But he loved France, and blind enemies alone could have accused him of a lack of patriotism, without succeeding in basing their calumnies upon any real fact.

Madame du Châtelet, who had not been initiated into the secret of the diplomatic mission, wrote at that time:

"He has gone to Holland, whence he will probably go to Prussia, which is what I fear above all, for the King of Prussia is a dangerous rival for me. At the end of July I shall go to Brussels, where he has promised to meet me again."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Communications.

Endless Misery.

"The Synod of Albany, during its session at Schenectady, Oct. 9, passed the following paper, plainly pointing to the case of the Rev. Dr. Webber of Troy:

"'WHEREAS, It is notorious that the position of the Church has been challenged in regard to the doctrine of future punishment, the Synod of Albany, under a grave sense of its responsibility, feels constrained to declare that according to the standards of our Church, the word of God does not authorize the hope of any probation for sinners beyond the grave, and that the Lord leaves no room to doubt the eternal misery of all who die in sin impenitent and without faith in Christ. We also feel called upon to declare that it is slanderous to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church to insinuate that they maintain a confession of faith, some of the doctrines of which they are ashamed or afraid to preach.

"'We also insist that any declaration to the contrary, especially if it implies a sneer at the Church and its doctrines, by any accredited minister of our communion, is a gross violation of his covenant obligations, and inconsistent with honorable standing in the ministry.'

"One of the duties of the Synod is to review the records of the Presbyteries. In reviewing the records of the Troy Presbytery the Synod adopted the following committee report.

"'The Committee on the Records of the Presbytery of Troy recommend the approval of those records, with a single exception. From page 450 to page 476 inclusive, they find recorded, as the action of the Presbytery, a paper reviewing and censuring the opinions and expressions of one of its members, as published in a series of sermons. To this paper the committee takes exceptions on the ground that a Presbyter, publishing the opinions and expressions here quoted, so contrary to the word of God and the doctrinal standards of our Church as to constitute an offense in the sense in which the word is used in our book of discipline, should hav been required by the Presbytery of Troy to answer judicially.'—Albany Morning Express.

Archie, the little Irish mason, dressed his cornerstone, picked it up, lugged it to the wall, but failed to lift it on to the corner. Holding the stone against the wall, he sings out to an associate, "George! George! giv us a bit of a luft, I'm too short at one eend jist." Let this go for exordium No. 1.

In the days of Frederick the Great, a certain or uncertain clergyman dropped the endless misery gospel. The pious worshipers were horrified. They informed his reverence that if he didn't restore to them the good old doctrine of endless misery, they must report him to his majesty. He didn't restore, and they did report.

After giving them a judicial hearing, his majesty amiably dismissed them, with a sealed letter to his reverence, informing him of the grievous charge preferred against him, and requesting him to read to the congregation, at the close of morning service, the following certificate:

WHEREAS, My Prussian subj cts, of the parish of ——, are so desirous of endless misery, this is to certify them that they hav my full consent to be damned to all eternity, if they choose it. FREDERICK.

Wasn't he liberal? Let this go for exordium No. 2. Now for the sermon.

Should Frederick, or any other body or bodies, undertake to damn to all eternity all who do not sacrifice on the Rev. John Calvin's altar, the Frederick, or other body of bodies aforesaid, might find him, her, or themself, or selves, not much unlike Archie, "too short at one eend jist." Amen. PRENTISS.

Letter from an Illinois Postmaster.

T. B. WAKEMAN, ESQ., Dear Sir: Allow me to send you from this distant point my heartfelt thanks for your excellent and thorough work on the Comstock laws question.

At the outset of the discussion I was with Abbot for reform of the laws, but a little examination of the subject changed all that. The bull-dozing "Card" was of itself an eye-opener, and your masterly argument completed my conversion to the doctrine of "Freedom and Purity, now and forever, one and inseparable."

There seems to be a sort of panic blindness on the part of some that greatly overrates the mischief done through the mails. I would not by any means underrate it, but I hav been Postmaster for many years where large numbers of children and youth get their mail, and I must say that the amount of impure matter going into their hands is infinitesimal, unless it may be in letters, in regard to which I could not, of course, know anything. The news-stands and train boys do a hundred fold more in the direction of impurity than the post-office.

I was also for a long time in a position to acquire some legal ways of looking at things, and I cannot conceive of any law which would reach the case without subverting the most precious principles of our government, though Abbot claims that it is as easy as rolling off a log.

Thanks again for your excellent work, and, by the way, if you can send me your Faneuil Hall or Syracuse address I shall be much obliged. Yours truly, E. R. B.

EVERY woman suffragist from the commencement has been bombarded with Paul, knocked on the head with somebody else's interpretation of the Scriptures, and branded as heretical.—Ballot Box.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 16, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

Visit from Hon. Elizur Wright.

We felt honored to receive a call from this worthy brother on Saturday last, on the occasion of his visit to this city to attend a reunion of some of the venerable men who organized and composed the old Abolition party of forty years ago. The reunion was held at the residence of Dr. C. S. Lozier, No. 321 West Fourteenth street. The Sun, in giving an account of the gathering, uses the following language:

"It was the fortieth anniversary of the casting of the first anti-slavery votes. In the spacious saloon parlors were many who had, forty years ago, in poverty and obscurity, spoken from public platforms in favor of freedom for the slave, but who were then despised and laughed at. Some ladies, descendants of revolutionists, were there. Mr. Albert O. Willcox, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York Young Men's Anti-Slavery Society in 1833, presided. His hair was white, but his form was as stout as an oak as he stood in the center of the parlor. In a short speech he spoke with energy of the old fights that he had helped to carry on in this city against the then popular institution of slavery.

"Then he introduced John Jay, a yet stouter and whiter haired veteran in anti-slavery days, who recalled the anti-slavery movement begun forty years ago in Philadelphia, and followed up energetically in New York. The movement, he said, began in 1833, and was first in the hearts and on the tongues of the people of this city in 1834. The denunciation of slaveholding and the project of elevating people of color was stigmatized as a crime by almost every one; yet the Society in New York held that slavery should be abolished in the District of Columbia and also in every state to be thereafter admitted to the Union. Meetings held by the Society in Chatham street were broken up by mobs. Dr. Abram L. Cox's church, in Broome street, was threatened, and it was for a long time guarded night and day against the rioters, lest it should be torn down. Then the speaker traced the rapid and powerful rise of the Society from 1836 to 1848. In 1854 came a pull back through Fillmore's signing of the Fugitive Slave law, but it inspired a memorable series of anti slavery meetings in the old Broadway Tabernacle to protest against protecting human slavery. Out of that excitement, added the speaker, arose the public sentiment that caused the Kansas resistance in 1859, whence flowed the rupture between the North and South.

"Chairman Willcox said that there was in those early times one judge in New York who dared to defend the fugitive slave in New York, and he was John Jay. This brought applause from the silvery-haired veterans.

"Elizur Wright of Boston jumped nimbly to his feet, and said that he knew of many a slave who had been helped toward the Canadian boundary by Judge Jay, whereupon more applause followed.

"Mr. Wright, as silver-haired as his compeers, remembered when Southerners had a meeting in Tammany Hall, which was pro-slavery, and which established beyond a doubt, in their own minds, the divine right of the institution of human chattels. But time showed that they were mistaken. Mr. Wright added that his main object in speaking was not to charge any wicked or fiendish purpose upon the Southern slaveholders, but to show how the advocates of universal human freedom suffered in those days. In particular, he praised Gen. James D. Birney, a Southerner, who liberated his slaves. Gen. Birney's picture hung on the wall of the parlor, and the speaker took it down as he mentioned him. A murmur of applause went around, and the picture was passed from hand to hand.

"Then Chairman Willcox said that some were there who were of the old "Liberty party," formed in 1849. He called on Mr. Benjamin L. Mason of Yonkers, who spoke briefly, saying that the work of the Anti-Slavery party is not yet finished. The Indians are not yet treated by Government as they should be.

"Mrs. Dr. Lozier recalled the time, in 1829, when it was perilous in this city to pray in public for the liberation of the slave. Many religious meetings were held in secret, lest the many zealous pro-slavery advocates in the neighborhood should enter the room and break up the gathering.

"Then George L. Downing of Washington said that he had been identified from the first with the anti-slavery movement, and that he, being of the down-trodden race himself, knew that it is not wholly emancipated yet. Negroes in the South are yet oppressed. It is a mistake to suppose that they are free. The whites among whom they liv continue in many ways to oppress them, and the only way to elevate the blacks is to elevate the whites—by education and by wiser statesmanship.

"Here a woman jumped up, and said that it was wrong that the meeting should close without a mention of John Brown's name. The name was received with a clapping of hands. Nothing more was said, however, about that Abolitionist.

"Col. Ralph Plumb of Streater, Ill., related his early struggles in the movement, and told how he was treated, publicly and privately, with contumely.

"Other speakers were William Whitney, the Rev. Phœbe Hanaford, the Rev. Charles B. Ray, and Daniel F. Appleton. Before the meeting broke up, letters were read from a dozen old anti-slavery leaders in the Union. A New York Herald, dated Nov. 3, 1838, which was about a third as large as it now is, containing a three-column newspaper report of an anti-slavery meeting in the Broadway Tabernacle, was handed around and laughed at.

"After the meeting broke up, the gray-haired men related to each other interesting incidents of the anti-slavery strife forty years ago."

An interview with the worthy and venerable Mr. Wright was most agreeable. He took the opportunity while in the city to call upon T. B. Wakeman and several other friends, and all felt honored by the same. He has seen his seventieth winter; his locks are nearly white, but he is still active and vigorous in body and mind; he comprehends the questions of the hour with as much clearness and correctness as any man living. He has a mind of no ordinary perception, scope, and power.

He has been a lifelong reformer, and has been prominent in his defense of mental and physical liberty, and when it was unpopular to be so. There are none who hav a clearer conviction of the importance of Liberals, as a body, firmly defending the rights of the people under the Constitution and maintaining the guarantees of liberty and equal privileges. He is not one who would surrender aught of the principles of American liberty for the sake of being counted moral or respectable, or for the purpose of co-operating with intolerant bigots like Anthony Comstock of the Y. M. C. A. He would not, that he might stand well with the Mrs. Grundyism of the day, or lest some strait-laced conservative should judge him not thoroughly respectable, surrender the most valuable rights, the inheritance of freemen. Even the fear of being denounced as being favorable to obscenity would not make him false to liberty. He would contend for the rights of the people regardless of what opinions the bigoted self-righteous class might entertain of him. He is one whom all good people can honor and love.

To converse with such a man and to know him, one is lost in wonder how such Liberals as B. F. Underwood, Judge Hurlbut, C. D. B. Mills, J. W. Truesdell, and others, could be offended because he was elected President of the National Liberal League, and for that express reason should churlishly withdraw and organize a counter-movement. If it was the spirit of Liberalism that caused them to take such a step, then we hav not had a proper conception of what Liberalism is. It seems most singular that sensible men should become angry and petulant because so grand and good a man as Elizur Wright should receive the votes of three-fifths of the delegates for the office of President of the League for one year. That is all the grounds of complaint they had. No sooner was it announced that Elizur Wright was chosen as principal officer than the Rev. Gordon, the Rev. D. H. Clark, followed by the Rev. F. E, Abbot, B. F. Underwood, and others left the hall in displeasure "to defend themselves," acting more like spoilt children than men of reason, intelligence, and stability. It is to be hoped they may liv long enough to see the absurdity ayd childishness of such conduct.

It can hardly be thought by sensible people that because seventy-six delegates preferred Mr. Wright for President the minority were justified in withdrawing and setting up a separate organization. When the delegates went into an election there was, of course, a tacit understanding that there should be a fair election, and that it should be submitted to by all concerned. This was certainly the intention of the Repealers; they expressed a desire for harmony and a determination to abide by the decision of an election. They would not hav withdrawn had Mr. Abbot been re-elected. They had no intention of doing so under any provocation. Had a majority preferred Mr. Abbot, they would hav submitted with good grace, and not hav gone off in a huff and started a rival concern. It is fair to conclude that it was the intention of the Abbot party from the first to elect their man or divide the League. Rule or ruin seemed to be their governing idea. This some of their members hav admitted. They were resolved all the time, if Mr. Abbot was not re-elected, to break up the League and make him President of a new organization.

It is not the correct principle for governing a city, a state, or a nation. Should a minority of the voters, because they do not succeed in electing the candidate they prefer for mayor, governor, or president, secede and form a rival organization? Every person ought to be able to see that such a course would be destructive of all stability in public affairs, and must eventuate in anarchy and ruin.

It is hardly the correct principle of action, either, for any individual to undertake to play the role of dictator or despot and lay down certain planks or platforms upon which he and all others must stand under any circumstances. It is a spirit so un-American in character, and so objectionable in its nature, that it cannot be submitted to. Mr. Wright has done nothing of this kind, nor has any member of the majority taken this course. There is but one man who has attempted to force this repulsive doctrine upon the League, and he has not found it eminently successful.

Mr. Wright is a prudent, reasonable man; and while he cannot see that the minority had the slightest excuse for dividing the League and leaving it in the manner they did, his course will be conciliatory, and he hopes a reunion may take place in one or two years. This hope is also indulged in by the most of those who are opposed to the Comstock laws. They did not wish to see the League broken in fragments, and they hope it may again be a united, harmonious body. It can hardly be harmonious, however, if any one man must always be its leading officer, or if the majority must submit to the minority. If it is to be owned and run by one man, or if the one-man power be its principle of action, then it had better remain in two organizations as now. Division is preferable to despotism. If Mr. Abbot must be President—if the League cannot maintain respectability except with him as leading officer—perhaps it is well enough to keep a little League for his special benefit.

All readers must admire the excellent spirit of Mr. Wright's Letter of Acceptance, which will be found on another page, and we are sure it will be read with unmixed pleasure. It is to be hoped that the spirit of harmony which he breathes forth will be felt by all members of the National Liberal League, and that he may yet liv many years to be its honored and beloved President.

Judge Hurlbut's Address.

We are pleased to learn that the brilliant address which Judge Hurlbut delivered to the National Liberal League at Syracuse is to be published in The Index. It was eloquently and carefully rendered, and, as it is considered the ablest argument that has been made in favor of the General Government's taking cognizance of the crimes and offenses which belong to the jurisdiction of the states, it will be read with careful interest. We shall expect also that Mr. Wakeman will reply to it, especially as to the legality or constitutionality of the Comstock postal laws.

When in committee at Syracuse with several other gentlemen, the Judge admitted that the anti-Comstock party had the argument on their side, and he also admitted that he had been forced to the utmost of his ingenuity to find an argument in favor of the General Government's interfering to take cognizance of the moral quality of mail matter, and to punish those who sent immoral or indecent matter through the mails, and that at length he found it in the fact that the General Government exercised the power to punish persons who robbed the mails, arguing that if the Government had the power to punish robbery of the mails it can also punish those who desecrate it by sending foul matter in it. The Judge, however, ought to hav been able to see that the cases are not at all analogous. The punishing of robbers of the mail is done for postal reasons and for the good and perpetuity of the postal service, while the inspection or censorship of the mails is of an entirely different character. The espionage which the moral inspection demands is not for postal reasons. The stopping of certain matter because of the opinions it contains is wholly un-American in character, and can in no wise be said to be for the benefit of the service, for it directly curtails its business and lessens its income; and for this the Constitution givs no warrant. We await the Judge's address and Mr. Wakeman's reply.

A Difference.

A perceptible distinction may be observed between the National Liberal League and the National Liberal League of America (is the latter supposed to include Canada and the Fiji Islands?) besides the momentous one of "respectability," and that is the organ, or organs, for each. The new rival organization declared The Index to be its organ, while the old organization passed a resolution that all Liberal papers should be equally regarded as organs, giving no one paper a preference over the others. Which is the broader, more Liberal spirit, can be perceived.

Three Weeks

from the date of this paper we shall hav to hie ourselves away to Watkins to be arraigned before the High Court of Schuyler County for the alleged offense of selling a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" for a little friend when she was absent at dinner. Whether the dire tribunal will consign us to prison for a term of years for such an offense remains to be seen. But we cannot think that the courts of the state of New York will so far lend themselves to the spirit of intolerance and bigotry as to send us to prison for being charged with selling a pamphlet which was written as an argument in favor of a special doctrine or line of belief.

Those Liberal friends who hav made pledges for the Defense Fund are requested to remit. Considerable money will now be needed to defend ourselves against Comstockism. The expenses at Watkins for four of us will necessarily be heavy, and an effort is now also being made to get Mr. Heywood out of prison. The President is now being visited and appealed to, with the petitions that hav been so numerously signed by sympathetic friends, for this express purpose. Let the pledges now be made good.

To Be Regretted.

It is indeed to be regretted that The Index of last week, including very unfair and untruthful extracts from the Syracuse papers, contains many misrepresentations respecting the course and motives of those who do not think precisely with itself. The number of these instances of wilful misrepresentations are by no means small. We have on several occasions pointed them out with definiteness, but do not care to enter into it at this time.

It is indeed sad to see one who holds himself up as a paragon of high morality and respectability falling so easily into the bad habit of misrepresentation, falsification, and detraction as has been practiced in that quarter for many months. Truthfulness, we believe, is still regarded as one of the virtues, and it should not be lost sight of by those who make such special pretensions to morality and purity. It may become an interesting problem in moral mathematics as to how much misrepresentation it requires to equal a very moderate amount of obscenity, or rather, a charge of obscenity not sustained by the facts, or, in other words, how many absolute falsehoods does it require to equal in culpability a suspicion. Truth and honesty are earnestly recommended to the apostle of respectability as virtues worthy of cultivation.

CAPT. H. H. BROWN and M. C. Vandercook have just completed an engagement in Investigator Hall, Boston. About the first of December they start West and would like to hear from parties along the line via Chicago and St. Louis who would like a course of lectures. Address them at Allegan, Mich.

What I Don't Believe.—No. 38.

359. I don't believe it was necessary for Abraham to be assisted by divine aid in begetting his son Isaac in his old age, as described in Gen. xxi, 2, and Heb. xi, 12, when a few years later he was able to beget six more children without any divine aid (Gen. xxv, 1, 2).

360. I don't believe that the promise which God is said to have made to Abraham to give the land of Canaan to his seed as a possession forever (Gen. xiii, 14, 15; xxii, 8) has been faithfully carried out, or that it agrees with Acts vii, 5, and Heb. xi, 9, 13, where it explicitly says that Abraham and his seed did not receive the premises. It is well known that they have not possessed that land for about two thousand years.

361. I don't believe that the statement made in 2 Chron. xxii, 1, that Ahaziah was the youngest son of Jehoram, agrees with 2 Chron. xxi, 16, 17, where it says Jehoahaz was his youngest son.

362. I don't believe that the statement made in 2 Kings, viii, 17, 24, 26, that Ahaziah was twenty-two years old when he began to reign agrees with the statement made in 2 Chron. xxi, 20, and xxii, 1, 2, that he was forty-two years old when he began to reign, which statement would make him two years older than his father.

363. I cannot see that the statement made in 2 Sam. vi, 23, that Michal, the daughter of Saul, had no child agrees with 2 Sam. xxi, 8, where it speaks of her five sons.

364. I am very much puzzled to understand how 2 Sam. xxiv, 1, agrees with 1 Chron. xxi, 1, the first saying emphatically that the Lord tempted David to number the people, while the second says just as emphatically that it was Satan who tempted him to do the deed. The divinities here seem to get decidedly mixed.

365. The statement made in 2 Sam. xxiv, 9, where 800,000 is given as the number of warriors in Israel and 500,000 in Judah seems to greatly disagree with the same census given in 1 Chron. xxi, 5, where the numbers are given as 1,100,000 in Israel and 470,000 in Judah, showing that divine accuracy varied over 300,000 men—rather too much for the incredulous.

366. I cannot think that the number of 700 Syrian charioteers and 40,000 horsemen, as given in 2 Sam. x, 18, agrees with the account of the same victory, as given in 1 Chron. xix, 18, where the number of slain charioteers is made ten times as large, to wit, 7,000. If one is correct, the other cannot be.

367. The price which David paid for a certain threshing floor, as given in two different places, does not seem altogether to harmonize. In 2 Sam. xxiv, 24, the sum is given as fifty shekels of silver, while in 1 Chron. xxi, 25, the price is given as six hundred shekels in gold. If the first was a fair price, the second was immensely too much. If David could have bought it at the first named figures, he was probably too sharp at a bargain to pay the latter sum. There must have been some mistake about the matter.

368. There seems to be some discrepancy as to who slew Goliath, the Philistine giant. In 1 Sam. xvii, 4, 5, it says squarely that it was David who smote the Philistine and slew him, while in 2 Sam. xxi, 19, the honor is conferred upon Ehanan, the son of Jaare-Origim. The words "brother of" were supplied by the translators to avoid contradiction, and are not to be found in the original. Which is the most probable, that there is a mistake in what is called the divine record, or that they both killed the fellow, one inflicting death upon him the second time?

369. I cannot understand how many of the doctrinal or speculative passages of the Bible can be made to harmonize. Thus, in some places it says Christ is equal with God (John x, 30, and Phil. ii, 6), while in other places it states just as distinctly that the Son was inferior to the Father (John xiv, 28, and Matt. xxiv, 36).

370. In one passage it says that Christ is the judge by whom men are judged (John v, 22, 30), and in another it says he judges no man (John viii, 15, and xii, 47).

371. In one instance it admits that Jesus was not all-powerful (Mark vi, 5), while in another it claims that he had all power (Matt. xxviii, 18, and John iii, 35).

372. Several passages assert that Christ's mission was peace (Luke i, 76, 79; ii, 13, 14), while in other places it says his mission was not peace, but that he came to send a sword (Matt. x, 34; Luke xii, 49).

373. In one case Jesus is reported as saying of himself, that though he bears record of himself, the record is true (John viii, 18, 14), while in another instance it says if he bears witness of himself, his witness is not true (John v, 31).

374. In some passages it is asserted that children are punished for the sins of their parents (Ex. xx, 5; 2 Sam. xii, 14), while in others it is equally positive that children are not punished for the sins of their parents (Ezek. xviii, 20; Deut. xxiv, 16).

375. In some places it says man is justified by faith alone (Rom. iii, 20; Gal. ii; 16; iii, 11, 12; Rom. iv, 2); while it afterwards states that man is not justified by faith alone (James iii, 21, 24; 1 Rom. ii, 13).

376. By the reading of some passages it would seem to be impossible to fall from grace (John x, 28; Rom. viii, 38, 39); while in other places it asserts that it is possible to thus fall (Ezk. xviii, 24; Heb. vi, 4–6; 2 Peter ii, 20, 21).

377. Some passages say there is no man that sinneth not (1 Kings viii, 46; Prov. xx, 9; Eccl. vii, 20; Rom. iii, 10); while others assert most positively, Certain ones are sinless (1 John iii, 9, 6, 8).

378. In some places it is asserted that there will be a resurrection of the dead (1 Cor. xv, 52; Rev. xx, 12, 18; John v, 28, 29; 1 Cor. xv, 16); while in other passages it says plainly that there is no resurrection of the dead (Eccl. ix, 5; Is. xxvi, 14).

379. According to some passages, rewards and punishments are to be bestowed in this world (Prov. xi, 31); while according to others they are to be bestowed in the next world (Rev. xx, 12; Matt. xiv, 27; 2 Cor. v, 10).

380. Many passages declare in strong language that annihilation is the portion of mankind (Job iii, 11, 13, 17, 19, 22; Eccl. ix, 5, 10; iii, 19, 20), while others teach diametrically the opposite, and that a large percentage of the human family are to suffer endless misery (Matt. xxv, 46; Rev. xx, 10, 15; xiv, 11; Dan. xii, 2).

381. According to certain passages the earth is to be destroyed (2 Pet. iii, 10; Heb. i, 11; Rev. xx, 11), but according to others it is never to be destroyed (Ps. civ. 5; Eccl. i, 4).

382. Some passages say no evil shall happen to the godly (Prov. xii, 21; 1 Pet. iii, 13), while others have it that evil does happen to the godly (Heb. xii, 6; Job ii, 3, 7).

383. Sometimes worldly good and prosperity are the lot of the godly (Prov. xii, 21; Ps. xxxvii, 28, 32, 33, 37; i, 1, 3; Gen. xxxix, 2; Job xlii, 12), and other times we have assurances that worldly misery and destitution are the lot of the godly (Heb. xi, 33, 38; Rev. vii, 14; 2 Tim. iii, 12; Luke xxi, 17).

384. We are sometimes told that worldly prosperity is a blessing and a reward for righteousness (Mark x, 29, 30; Ps. xxxvii, 25; Ps. cxii, 1, 3; Job xxii, 23, 24; Prov. xv, 6), but in other instances we are assured that worldly prosperity is a curse and an impediment to future reward (Matt. vi, 19, 21; Luke xvi, 22; Matt. xix, 24; Luke vi, 24).

385. We are often assured that the Christian's yoke is easy (Matt. xi, 28–30; 1 Pet. iii, 13), and as often informed that his yoke is not easy (2 Tim. iii, 12; Heb. xxii, 6, 8).

386. We are sometimes told that the fruits of God's spirit are love and gentleness (Gal. xxii), and again that the fruits of his spirit are vengeance and fury (Judges xv, 14, 15; 1 Sam. xviii, 10, 11).

387. On the one hand we are assured that prosperity and longevity are enjoyed by the wicked (Job xxi, 7, 8, 9; Ps. xvii, 14; Ps. lxxiii, 3, 5, 12; Eccl. vii, 15; Jer. xii, 1), and on the other hand prosperity and longevity are denied the wicked (Job xviii, 5, 12, 18, 19; Eccl. viii, 27; Ps. lv, 23; Prov. x, 27; Job xxxvi, 14; Eccl. vii, 13).

388. We are often assured that poverty is a blessing (Luke vi, 20, 24; James ii, 5), and quite as often that riches are a blessing (Prov x, 15; Job xxii, 23, 24; Job xiii, 12), and still again it is said that neither poverty nor riches are blessings (Prov. xxx, 8, 9).

389. We are sometimes assured that wisdom is a source of enjoyment (Prov. iii, 13, 17), and at others that it is a source of vexation, grief, and sorrow (Eccl. i, 17, 18).

390. At times we are told that a good name is a blessing (Eccl. vii, 1; Prov. xxii, 1), and at another that it is a curse (Luke vi, 26).

391. Sometimes laughter is commended (Eccl. iii, 1–4; Eccl. viii, 15; Prov. xvii, 22), and at others it is condemned (Luke vi, 25; Eccl. vii, 3, 4).

392. Sometimes the rod is prescribed as a remedy for foolishness (Prov. xxii, 15), and again it is said that there is no remedy for foolishness (Prov. xxvii, 22).

393. At one time temptation is to be desired (James i, 2), and at another that it is not to be desired (Matt. vi, 13).

394. In one instance we are told that prophecy is sure (2 Peter i, 19), and at others that it is not sure (Jer. xviii, 7–10; Jer. v, 31; vi, 13).

395. In one place we are told that man's life is one hundred and twenty years (Gen. vi, 3), and in another, seventy years (Ps. xc, 10).

396. We are often told that miracles are a proof of divine mission (Matt. xi, 2–5; John iii, 2; Ex. xiv, 31), while we are as often assured that miracles are not a proof of divine mission (Ex. vii, 10–12; Deut. xiii, 1–3; Luke xi, 19).

397. Here we are told that Moses was a very meek man (Num. xii, 3), and there that he was a very cruel man (Num, xxxi, 15, 17).

398. On one hand we are informed that Elijah was taken up into heaven (2 Kings ii, 11), but on the other that none but Christ ever ascended into heaven (John iii, 13).

399. At one time we are asked to believe that all Scripture is inspired (2 Tim. iii, 16), and at another we are told that some Scriptures are not inspired (1 Cor. vii, 6—v, 12; 2 Cor. xi, 17).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

The Bible of Bibles.

We hav received from the publishers, Messrs. Colby & Rich, Kersey Graves' last and great volume, which has long been promised, and which must be admitted on all hands to be a great production. He describes twenty-seven different bibles, and if some of them are passed over rather briefly, he enters fully enough, to make all amends, into a consideration of the Jewish Bible. He claims that there are two thousand mistakes and errors in the inspired volume, many of which are dwelt upon at considerable length. The characters of Jehovah, the Jews, Moses, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Solomon, and many of the prophets are examined without wincing. Those who wish to learn what the entire contents are, are referred to the advertisement on a subsequent page. We can assure the reader that the volume is a perfect storehouse of Bible knowledge, and does great credit to the author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors." Thousands of copies will be required to satisfy the popular demand, and we hope to hav the pleasure of sending out a fair share of them. It is a volume of 440 pages, and is mailed at the low price of $2.00. We shall at all times keep a supply on hand.

Let the Question be Decided.

Judge Dittenhoefer, Elizur Wright, Judge Hurlbut, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, and scores of other excellent lawyers and judges, have pronounced T. B. Wakeman's Faneuil Hall speech, to be an able, clear, logical, exhaustive, unanswerable and most convincing argument upon the unconstitutionality of the Comstock Postal laws of March, 1873, but the editor of The Index pronounces it "an ingenious, plausible, but narrow and sophistical plea for repeal, ignoring distinctions which exist, and inventing others which do not, and raising a cloud of empty technicalities which a small circle of personal followers mistake for solid and substantial arguments."

Now there may be some of our readers who would be glad to hav the opportunity to decide for themselves whether the highly moral editor is right and all those other gentlemen all wrong. To all such who will send us three three-cent postage stamps we will mail a pamphlet of 120 pages containing the speech in full with replies to The Index from the same pen and by others; also James Parton's letter. Those thus sending will be enabled to decide which is in the wrong and which is in the right.

WE are still sending THE TRUTH SEEKER for three months to trial subscribers with a premium of either of the following books: "Paine's Age of Reason," "The Holy Bible Abridged," or "The New American Pronouncing, Illustrated Pocket Dictionary," for 60 cents. One thousand more names wanted.

Addresses at the Watkins Convention.

We hav sent out a good many copies of this new volume, and are glad to be able to report that it is giving excellent satisfaction. All of the addresses are of the most able character, and several of them singly are worth the entire price of the volume. It is a work not ephemeral in character, but of deep thought and rich sentiments which will last for all time. Every Liberal who has $1.25 to spare will do well to send for a copy. Sent, postpaid, by mail at that price.

FREETHINKER ALMANAC for 1880 (in German). We hav just received from the publisher, Carl Doerflinger, of Milwaukee, a copy of his annual "Almanac." It contains 120 pages, and is a rich treat to every German Freethinker. Send to the publisher for it.

MR. THERON C. LELAND hereby announces that he will accept a few invitations to lecture during the coming winter. He will speak on

1. Organization of the Liberal Forces,
2. Social Bankruptcy,
3. Social Evolution,
4. Individual Evolution,
5. Lingual Evolution,
6. The Comstock Laws, Obscenity, and the General Questions which have Divided the Liberal League.

Nos. 2, 3, and 4 are very radical treatments of the most delicate social questions, and none will employ him who cannot bear searching discussions down to the bottom principles of social existence. Address 201 East 71st street, New York.

A Popular Theological Question.

The discussion in regard to hell still continues. It seems to resolve itself into the following considerations: Is there a hell or is there not? If there is one, in what does the punishment consist, how long does it last, and what is its object? If there is no hell, what is the condition into which people not fitted for purity and happiness pass after this life is over?

No symposium, whatever may be the intellectual calibre of its members, or the degree and quality of their training with reference to this special subject, is able to settle this question. It belongs to the sphere of the unknowable, at least so far as the present generation is concerned. There are facts which point toward one conclusion, and facts which point toward another, and endless theories which point toward nothing and do not deserve to be taken into consideration. When believers in the inspiration of the Scripture are unable to agree as to the meaning of the original Greek words which hav been translated "eternal," it might readily be supposed that non-believers would be still more divided. But the contrary is the case. The various sects of professing Christians disagree more bitterly among themselves in regard to this interesting question than the Atheists and the Infidels do.

This war must rage so long as Christianity shall continue to be a power. For, so long as Christianity maintains supremacy, will the inspiration of the Scriptures be believed in and believers give to the original Greek and Hebrew various interpretations. Most people inherit their religion as they inherit fortune, family names, and ancestral peculiarities. They hav not sufficient strength of mind, or integrity of principle, or originality of thought to arrive at any religious convictions in and by themselves. But, nevertheless, though a certain religious, or rather theological bias is thus inherited, still it is being slowly modified by the counter-bias created by the Infidels; a term which we use in no slurring sense. The discussion on hell, which has now lasted for some months, is a striking instance of this kind of warfare.—Telegram.

THE potato is supposed to be a native plant of Peru and Chili, where it still grows wild.

Communications.

Orangism and Comstockism.

BY HORACE SHEPARD.

"Speaking of Gibbon, one of the arch-Infidels of the last century, Byron, to whom the historian's contempt for Christianity was perhaps his chief recommendation, describes him as "'Snapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer.'

The fact was, as Byron must hav known, however much he wished it otherwise, that the solemn creed was not snapped at all, but grew stronger and stronger in men's minds the more frequent and violent the assaults which it resisted unscathed.—N. Y. Weekly Witness.

The above is but a short extract from the Witness of an article over half a column in length, made up mainly of abuse, of which the above is a fair specimen.

The Witness is one of the remaining journals that holds on to the old Calvinistic orthodoxy in real earnest. The quotation from Byron is doubtless a fair specimen of the intelligence and honesty, or perhaps I might more properly say, of the ignorance or dishonesty of the true blue orthodox papers. The quotation has seven words and one of them is wrong—a fair proportion of them. The true version is "Sapping a solemn creed with solemn sneer."

We might suppose a typographical error, but the word is repeated more than once, hence it must hav been from ignorance or dishonesty: which was it? The line may be found in Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, canto iii, verse cvii.

The editor of the Witness spent his own money, and when that failed, a great many thousands of dollars of zealous pietists', in a vain effort to prevail upon the people of New York and the surrounding country to swallow a daily dose of piety as often as they do their daily meals; and as if that were not enough, the Witness loaded itself with two of the most ignorant, stupid, and malignant fanaticisms there are in the country. I refer to Orangism and Comstockism. These are enough to sink a navy. It has much to say for the Orangemen of Canada. The Daily Witness failed

The celebration of the battle of the Boyne on the twelfth of July is decidedly wrong. The proceeding is in exceedingly bad taste, contrary to generosity and magnanimity; belonging to the rude and barbarous ages rather than to the liberal and magnanimous spirit of North America in the nineteenth century. The ostensible cause and professed necessity for the Orange organization hav long since passed away. The objects were, if I am rightly informed, to secure the crown to William, Prince of Orange, and his heirs, and also to secure the Protestant succession to the crown rather than the Catholic. There is no necessity, propriety, or utility for such an organization for such purposes at the present time. There is no Catholic claimant to the crown of Great Britain. Neither does the crown of Great Britain nor the Protestant churches need or desire the aid of the Orangemen. On the contrary, they both repudiate such pretended aid as an injury rather than a benefit to them. The Orange processions are discountenanced by the Government of Great Britain.

Let us now briefly notice certain parties who act on different principles from what the Orangemen do.

The British people celebrated the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, the 18th of June, for nearly forty years. Becoming desirous of cultivating more friendly relations with France, they discontinued public and demonstrative celebrations of that important battle.

When our late civil war was brought to a close, the word was quietly passed around that we would not hav any public celebration of battles or of Union victories, or inscriptions upon flags or banners that would serve to remind our Southern brethren of their defeat. Had the contrary course been pursued we might hav had in some parts of the country an annual crop of riots, outrages, and bloodshed that would hav left those of the Orangemen and Catholics on the 12th of July quite in the shade.

When the Germans in the city of New York wished to celebrate the return of peace after the conclusion of the Franco-German war, they made it a peace celebration strictly and severely; and a splendid celebration it was, without any disturbance or accident.

There was a large population of Frenchmen, Americans, and Irishmen in New York who sympathized with France. Had the Germans blazoned the triumph of war, carried flags and banners setting forth there victories in battle and their capture of Alsace and Loraine, their would hav been almost certainly more or less of disturbance, and perhaps a bloody riot.

We sometimes hear it said that the Orangemen hav the same right to celebrate the battle of the Boyne on the 12th of July as Irishmen hav to celebrate St. Patrick's Day on the 17th of March. The cases are entirely different. St. Patrick was a man of peace. Like St. Paul, he was a worker with his hands. He called a whole people to what we may consider a higher and better religion and civilization. His life and deportment were humble and innocent. There is nothing aggressive and insulting to anybody in the proper and decorous celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

The Protestant population would hav the right to object to the Roman Catholics celebrating the anniversary of the St. Bartholomew massacre as an outrage upon decency and propriety. It would be of the same character with the celebration of the battle of the Boyne, but of a more exaggerated degree. The ultimate results were similar in both cases. They were both fights about religion. The results in both cases were permanently disastrous to the defeated party. When we remember the long course of persecutions and confiscations that followed the battle of the Boyne, and the comparatively speedy ending of the St. Bartholomew business, we are inclined to the belief that the former was the more cruel and disastrous of the two.

The proceedings of the Orangemen is one of those cases where the results are directly the opposite from what they propose to accomplish. Their celebration has so much of coarse absurdity and barbarism in it that it disgraces and injures the Protestant cause and strengthens that of the Roman Catholics. The Orangemen hav no right to call the affair a religious quarrel between Protestant and Catholic. The great majority of Protestants object to being in any way identified with Orangism. We never hear of Irish Catholics attacking Protestant churches or Sunday-school processions. I hav often seen Irish Catholic policemen set to protect from disturbance Protestant church or public religious meetings. So far as I hav observed they fulfilled their duties in honor and good faith. The political Jesuits could well afford to keep the Orangemen in pay to hold on and persevere in their course.

The publishers of the Witness are trying to raise money to start anew the Daily Witness. Let them raise and expend a hundred thousand dollars, and then another and another, until they hav expended a million of dollars, but the paper will never pay its own expenses while it is loaded down with the ignorant, barbarous, and intolerant fanaticisms of Orangism and Comstockism. Let the Witness aid to squelch out these two miserable barbarisms, after which it would stand a tolerable chance of success.

Comstock again to the Front.

Anthony Comstock has not been very active of late, but quite recently he has made himself rather conspicuous by interfering with the exhibition of a copy of a celebrated painting by the noted Austrian artist, Hans Makart. Comstock's conduct in the case has called out merited criticisms from many of our city papers, several of them, while according him full credit for all the good he has done, censure him for his unwarranted course in this case. The World gave this account:

COMSTOCK ON HANS MAKART.

A SUPPRESSED PICTURE.—"PARIS AINT HERE, NOR IT DON'T MAKE OUR LAWS."

Mr. Andrew J. Hope keeps a candy store on Fulton street, near Pearl. He is not only a confectioner but a patron of the arts. A few weeks ago he purched from Mr. Wm. Schaus a finely executed and handsomely framed water-color copy of Hans Makart's painting of "Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp." The original, which is now on exhibition in the Art Gallery of the Paris Exposition, has been much talked of by European critics and connoisseurs. It represents the King's triumphal procession through the streets of the ancient Flemish city, and in the foreground there are several figures of nude women, apparently representing heralds of the royal coming. Mr. Hope's copy was exhibited for several weeks in Mr. Schaus' shop window, and when he purchased it Mr. Hope placed it in his window. There it remained up to last Thursday, when Mr. Anthony Comstock, of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, saw it. Mr. Comstock at once sought Mr. Hope and informed him that the picture was obscene, and that he would not permit it to be exhibited any longer. Mr. Hope protested, but in vain. Mr. Comstock declared that if the picture was not removed he would seize it and arrest its owner. Mr. Hope says that he did not care to hav a conflict with so powerful a society as the one that Mr. Comstock claims to represent. He accordingly promised that the objectionable painting should be exhibited no more, and he caused it to be covered with a placard with the following inscription:

A CARD TO THE PUBLIC.

I purchased of William Schaus, of Broadway, the inclosed picture which he had on exhibition in his window, a water-color copy of Makart's great historical painting of which is at present all the rage at the Exposition. Being the only copy which would reach this country before Christmas, I took pride in showing it to the public.

"Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp,"

A gentleman claiming to be the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Morality came into my store and peremptorily ordered it out of the window.

Surely the world moves!

This notice in the window has attracted even larger crowds than the picture did. All day yesterday people stopped to read the inscription over the handsome gilt frame and wondered. Many of them went inside and asked what it meant.

Mr. Comstock denied that he had threatened to seize the picture or to arrest Mr. Hope. He said he had only called Mr. Hope's attention to the female figures which he considered "injurious to little boys." "This painting," he continued, "may be all right in a gallery, but in a shop-window it is exposed to the sight of little boys and girls, and it is not right to leave it there."

"Was it not exposed to the sight of big and little boys and girls on Broadway?" asked the reporter.

Mr. Comstock did not reply. "There are many works," he said, "which are unobjectionable in a gallery; there are the works of Pompeii (sic) and other classics, but that does not justify the sale of photographs of them. As to this picture, it has its proper place in a public gallery or a gentleman's parlor."

"Is this picture obscene, in your judgment?"

"In a public window, yes," was the reply; "exceedingly pernicious to be placed before young men. It is not, in my judgment and according to the decision of the courts, a proper picture to put in the windows where little boys and girls are passing."

"What would you do if Hope put it back in the window again?"

"I would take action to seize it, most certainly."

"Do you know the original has been exhibited at the Paris Exposition?"

"It may all be. Paris aint here, nor it don't make our laws."

Mr. Comstock went on to say that the exhibition of obscene works of art would not be permitted.

"What do you consider obscene works of art?" asked the reporter.

"Works of art that are obscene," was the reply, which elicited a smile from one of Mr. Comstock's lieutenants who was present.

"But what constitutes the obscenity?"

"I mean the lewdness of nude figures."

"Is a nude figure necessarily lewd?"

Mr. Comstock began to show signs of annoyance. Going into his private office he brought out a pamphlet containing a number of extracts of court decisions bearing upon the question and read from them very rapidly. The reporter asked for one of the books several times, but Mr. Comstock made no reply. When he had finished reading, however, the request was renewed and refused.

"Will you lend or sell me one, so that I can let people understand the laws on the subject?" asked the reporter.

"No, sir," was Mr. Comstock's reply; "these are the points I use in my briefs, and I am not going to furnish people powder to shoot me with."

The World also had an editorial upon the same subject, which we subjoin.

COMSTOCK VS. MAKART.

It is eminently desirable either that the Society for the Suppression of Vice should get another agent in the place of Mr. Anthony Comstock, or that it should cease to clothe its agent with judicial functions and require him to take counsel of some person of sense and discretion before either making or threatening seizures. If Comstock had taken counsel of such a person before stigmatizing a respectable tradesman as a corruptor of public morals, and a great and pure work of art as an indecent picture, he would not hav made the indecent public spectacle of himself which he has made in ordering a copy of Makart's "Charles V." out of a shop window in Fulton street. The picture itself, though a German and not, as the worthy Mr. Comstock ignorantly imagines, a French piciture, has been perhaps the crowning glory of the Paris Exhibition in the department of art. Nothing in it has more thoroughly commanded the admiration of every intelligent person who has looked upon it than the absolute nobility and grandeur of sentiment with which ths painter has treated the stately and superb figures upon which Mr. Comstock seems to hav gazed with the eyes which ages ago shrivelled and dropt out of the swinish head of Peeping Tom of Coventry. It has been repeatedly charged upon this agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice that he is not in the least scrupulous about the methods he employs to do even the legitimate and necessary work which falls to him, and that he is quite willing to entrap into an offense a person who otherwise might not commit an offense, for the purpose of procuring a conviction and making a showing of activity. Doubtless the society, on the whole, has done a needful and useful work. There is as little doubt that the young are better protected from bad influences than they were when it fell to work as there is that butchers and cartmen are more humane in their dealings with horses and sheep and calves than in the old days when they were secure against the vigilance of Mr. Bergh. But the necessary work of such a society is not likely to be undertaken by a very scrupulous or delicate-minded man; and nothing but unscrupulousness and indelicacy could make an issue between such a society and that portion of the public in whose minds Greek sculpture and Italian paintings give rise to different feelings than those which they inspire in Comstock. For it will be observed that the ground on which Comstock threatened the seizure of this picture would hav equally justified him in the seizure of any work of art of its class when publicly exhibited. Mr. Schaus, it appears, has had on exhibition in his window the same engraving which Comstock thinks it proper to seize when it is exhibited in a confectioner's window. He seizes it there upon the ground that "little boys and girls" might see it, and this is plainly as good a reason for seizing it in Mr. Schaus' window as in Mr. Hope's. Mr. Schaus and Mr. Knoedler, it will be perceived, if this is to be the order of things, hold a considerable portion of their stock on the sufferance of Mr. Comstock and his society, under strict injunction not to put any of it in the window. We shall be surprised to learn that they pay any attention to Mr. Comstock's views on the subject, and we shall be surprised if the confectioner whose property has been thus in effect confiscated does not find upon taking counsel that the law will sustain him in exhibiting in Fulton street a copy of a work of art which has been exhibited for months and years to the whole civilized world.

The Philadelphia Times, in making comments on the same subject, used this language:

Mr. Anthony Comstock has been making an ass of himself. We say this advisedly, because there is no reason to suppose that Mr. Comstock was made so by nature. He is a man with a hobby; but like other men with hobbies, Mr. Comstock does not always use the best of judgment, and lately he has been bringing ridicule on his work by some very absurd and arbitrary proceedings. At this date no argument is needed to defend the presence of the nude figure of art, and the general public will simply laugh at Mr. Comstock and vote him a nuisance. It is not the theme but the treatment of it that is to be criticised as pure or impure, and Makart's nude figures are altogether purer than his draped ones. His art, which delights most in gorgeous robes and voluptuous appointments, is essentially impure, false, and vicious, and the world would be none the worse off if all his big canvasses were burned. But that is a matter of æsthetics in which Mr. Anthony Comstock is scarcely qualified to act as censor, and if his patrons and employers, the directors of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, wish their work to succeed, they would do well to suppress their agent a little.

Mr. Comstock seems to know just what course to pursue to make himself obnoxious to many good people. There is hardly another person in the city so much disliked as he by the artists and picture dealers. He has undoubtedly committed a serious mistake in the warfare he has made against them.

In this connection attention may be called to another of his cases, and the results that grew out of it. Louis Wengenrath, it will be remembered, kept a well-conducted confectionary in the eastern part of Brooklyn. He conducted an honorable and legitimate business until an evil hour, when Comstock's first lieutenant, J. A. Britton, called upon the confectioner to repeat the request he had made several times before, that he would procure for a mutual friend a certain indecent device in sugar. By repeated persuasion, the confectioner was induced to make the purchase, and as soon as delivered to Comstock's man he was arrested, and in due time the trial come off, Comstock and Britton appearing against him, and he was convicted and sentenced to prison.

It would hav been comparatively easy to hav procured a pardon from Gov. Robinson, had Wengenrath's attorney been true to him in making the application, but it seems that the attorney and Mrs. Wengenrath had contracted an intimacy which they wished to continue, and poor Wengenrath was allowed to serve out his term, while the attorney continued his visits to Mrs. Wengenrath, not only during the husband's imprisonment, but afterwards. Mr. Wengenrath disapproved of the lawyer's visits, and remonstrated with him against them. The legal gentleman persisted in his visits to Mrs. Wengenrath until the injured husband exasperated beyond endurance assaulted the attorney, when a severe conflict took place in which the attorney was seriously injured and his life endangered. Mr. Wengenrath was placed in prison to await the result of the injury. Thus was a happy family broken up, and its peace destroyed by the machinations and intrigue of Anthony Comstock. If he has done good he has more than neutralized it by the the injury perpetrated upon many persons.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Thirteenth Letter.

GOSSIP AND REMARKS.

ZION HIL, Nov. 11, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: My wife haz about rekoverd her uzual state ov mind and iz feeling about az wel az before I had my trial, and I hope the sisters ov the Church hav also about reganed thare normal kondishun. A grate deel ov uneziness waz experiensed by Sally lest we shood be plunjd in deep and lasting disgrase, and that Mrs. Jones and sum ov the uther prominent wuns wood kro over her; and the littel kommunity haz ben unuzually exsited, and almost innumerable remarks hav ben made.

Sally haz skolded me a good deel when we hav ben by ourselvs bekause I hav brot all this tawk and kritisism upon her and kauzed her to hang her head almost in shame. She haz aknowlejd that she duz not kare how much I reed THE TRUTH SEEKER if uther fokes don't no enything about it. She admits I am reely az good a man az I waz before I began to reed it, and she duz not suppoze that it duz me the leest bit ov harm, but she kan't bare to hav eny stane kum upon our good name; we hav alwaze stood az hi az eny around us, and we hav ben looked up to az being fully az respektabel az eny ov our akkwaintanses, and she kan't bare to lose eny ov our good name and respekt. She sez, when she kan't hold her hed az hi az eny around us, she wants to la down and di.

She waz over a few daze ago to kall on Mrs. Buzby, and thare she pikd up a good deel ov the remarks that hav ben going the rounds ov the naberhood. I ges thare haz nothing happend here for 12 munths that haz kauzd more remarks in our littel kommunity than my arranement and trial for reeding yure paper; and I must sa it iz amuzing to lern what the different wuns hav sed. It duz sum peepel a grate deel ov good to help put thoze down hoo, tha imajin, hav ben thawt more ov than themselvs, and thoze hoo hav ben viktims ov jelusy sho how reddy tha are to help destroy a good name that haz taken a lifetime to build up. I hav observd that thare piety haz not prevented the unfrendly remarks that hav ben made in my kase. In fact, the more pius tha ar, the more tha seem to delite to be sensorius regarding thare deeken. I lern thare wood hav ben a good meny more seveer kritisisms made in referense to me, on the da of my trial, about my avowd departyure from a Kristyan line ov kondukt had not Elder Goodly so timely shut it all off by bringing the meeting to a kloze.

Mrs. Buzby told Mrs. Skidmore what Mrs. Skinner, and Mrs. Gadsly, and Mrs. Runnels wood hav sed had tha had a chanse to fre thare minds. She long had an envius spite towards our family, and tha wer glad ov a chanse to giv a littel vent to thare long pent up feelings. On the uther hand, I find I hav lots of warm frends in the Church and a larj number out ov it. Evry wun hoo haz fare, onerable qualitys ov mind iz wiling uthers shood enjoy the privilej ov investigating and thinking for themselvs, tho I must admit that our kreed duz demand a uniformity and konformity ov opinyan that iz hard for sum minds to yeeld to. I hav had my own trials on that ground, and I hav sumtimes feerd I had not fathe enuf in all the kardinal doktrins to finally prove it to be the saving fathe. It iz a littel hard for me to beleev a thing enyhow whether I kan or not. But ov korse the Kristyan haz hiz trials, and if he kan finally sukseed in saving hiz sole from eternal nite and eternal torment he kan wel afford to submit to all the trivyal annoyanses that he iz subjekted to.

It seems that several ov the extra pius members ov our Church—mostly sisters—hav blamed Elder Goodly for kutting off the meeting so short and not having more persons speek in referense to the heresy ov which I had ben so flagrantly gilty. Tha think evry member ov the Church shood hav ben aloud to express thare komdemnashun ov thare Deeken's reeding so bad a sheet. In that kase tha say I wood hav herd more plane tawk about my rong korse than I ever dreemd ov. On the uther hand, I heer that thare wer 3 or 4 that wood hav kondemd the hul biznes and denounsed it az a Baptist Inquisishun, and that tha wood even hav thrown my good frend Karter in the shade and made what he sed seem moderate and tame.

Sam Kragehed haz told Suzan a good deel ov the gossip he haz herd on the subjekt. Yu no hiz father iz also wun ov the deekens ov our church and iz a littel more pius than I am, tho most ov our nabers wil tel yu that my note iz worth 25 per sent more in this market than hiz iz, and enybody hoo noze us both wood much sooner hav a klame aganst Skidmore than Kragehed, tho I shood sa that thare haz not ben a note ov mine in this naberhood for more than 10 yeers. I don't ask enybody to take my note; if I o them enything, I pa them and hav dun with it. But Bro. Kragehed haz not ben so fortunate az that; he haz ben konsiderably involved, and a good meny ov hiz notes hav ben floting around, passing from hand to hand, and sumtimes tha hav not ben pade til tha wer a good while past du, and wun man thretend to su the Deeken, and he kum to me and borrode 50 dolers to help him out ov his trubbel, and it waz more than a yeer before he pade it. I don't tel yu theze things to brag or to tel too much nuze out ov skool, but that yu ma understand the situashun a littel. The Deeken iz a pretty good sort ov a man, and he iz vary willing that Sam shood take my Suzan for a wife. He haz stood up for me pretty wel in the kathauling I hav had az I kall it, and sez that tho he wood not go so far az I hav dun, to take an Infidel paper rite into my house, setting a bad exampel to children and uthers, he kant see az I hav dun enything I had not a perfekt rite to do; and he thinks it waz foolish for Elder Goodly to lissen to thoze old wimmen and kall a meeting to giv me "down the banks" when I had dun more to bild up that church than al ov them put together. He sed he liked what frend Karter sed, and felt most like going up to him, shaking him by the hand and slaping him on the sholder. Tho he sez he must be vary kareful az to what he sez and duz, and must do nothing that wil hurt hiz standing in the church. He sez a man kan hav his private opinyan and also hiz publik opinyan; the first belongs to himself, and nobody else haz enything to do with it; the sekond belongs to evrybody. He wants hiz publik life to be such az wil meet the approval ov the church or the more pius porshun ov it. He wood be vary kareful and not avow an opinyun that wood giv offense to the better porshun ov sosiety. Sam sez what ales the old man iz, he laks bakbone. He iz most afrade to tel just what he duz think lest sumbody wil not be suted. But on the hole, Bro. Kragehed iz on my side, and he don't belong to the Sister Jones klik.

Sam sez he haz herd a good meny remarks about the trial, and the publik sentiment iz pritty evenly divided az to the propriety or impropriety ov my taking whot papers I pleez, but most all admit that I hav karrid myself onerably in the affare, and tha kommend me for the koolnes I hav shone and the freedom from vindiktivnes that I hav manifested. Sum ov the members ov the chureh sed that if tha had ben brawt up on such a charge tha wood hav got mad, wauked out ov church in hi dudjun, and told the Sister Jones party that tha mite go to gras; that tha shood reed whot tha pleezd, and she mite do the same. Tha admit, however, that my koolnes and pashense wer vary kommendabul. Upon the hole, the hole thing haz razed a big exsitement, but it haz not dun me eny harm. I shal stand az wel az before with the mane part ov the flok, and my pekuniary ade wil be az akseptabel az ever. Let me tel yu in konfidense that a littel munny helps a man along wunderfully in this wurld, az wel in the Church az out ov it. It haz stood by me like a frend in my littel unplezantnes. Had I ben poor and without an inkum I wood hav ben turnd out ov Zion Hil Baptist Church in no time. The good santes wood not hav put up at all with my taking and reeding such a paper az THE TRUTH SEEKER. So long az a man haz plenty ov munny and stands wel with the wurld he wil not very redily be turnd out ov the Church. That iz the klas ov peepel the Church wishes to draw unto itself; that iz the kind ov fish it likes to catch in its net, while the littel, poverty-stricken, insignificant wuns ar kast aside.

I beleev it wood do yu good to heer Suzan go on about this luv ov munny and respektability which the Church indulges in so largely. She sez thare iz little else to thare relijun save a dezire to bild up a fashunable, respektable sosiety, to hav a fashunable preecher, a grand karpeted church, a fine kwire ov singers, with numbers that are wel off in this world's goods and able to kontribut hansomly to keeping up these first klas appearanses. The long fases and the pius looks she sez are all a sham. She haz watchd them klosely and she iz convinsd thare iz far more ov hipokrisy than onesty amung the professers ov relijun, and she haz found already in her short experiense that professers ov religun wil desend to do az ignobel and immoral akts az thoze hoo make the loudest professhuns. To heer her go over with the katalog ov insidents that she haz been noing to herself, iz enuf to make wun think that thare iz not much in the professhuns that peepel make and the self-richusnes that tha indulj in.

Kaptin Smith and Suzan tawk vary much alike. He sez her remarks he haz found to be tru in hiz obzervashuns ov men and thare kondukt. He iz wun that haz wachd men klosely for many yeers and haz studied thare motivs, and it iz hiz opinyun that thoze hoo profes an extra amount ov virchew, karakter, and respektability wil bare ful az much waching az kommon peepel and are equally az liable at last to be found out in underhanded and disonest praktises. He avows that he haz no respekt for a man hoo professes to be better than the averej ov men, but when put to the test wil fall a pra to temtashun ful az eezily az wun hoo makes no speshal pretenshuns to verchew and respektability. He sez, "Shame on a man hoo trys to make the wurld beleev he iz better than hiz fellos when in reality he iz not so good."

Sally duz not sa much about these things, but when she heers them from the Kaptin and Suzan she shakes her hed and sez she noze the wurld iz awful bad.

Let me tel yu that to-morro morning wife and I start erly for Monmouth kounty to make a vizit ov a fu daze to our dawter and son-in-law, hoo liv over thare. We wil ride over in our own karrij, and wil make the trip with my flyaway bays in a fu ours. I ma hav sum news to giv yu in my next about old Monmouth. Fathefully yures,

JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Propheci

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: Your friend, T. M. White, in quiring concerning the prophecies applied to Jesus, has been well answered by you. One of the hardest things for people to get round generally in answering the questions of Christians is their assuming the fact that so many of the prophecies of the Bible hav come true, especially regarding the Jews. The fact that the prophecy had been made was mainly the cause of its being verified. The habits and customs of the Jews were as dissimilar to others as are the wandering Gypsies. After the Bible was accepted by the Christian world, to persecute the Jew was considered a duty, so as to verify the Scriptures, "His name shall become a jest and a byword among men." Can you wonder at this when fifteen thousand of them were slaughtered on the coast of Spain in one day, when they were expelled from the country. To read the history of the Spanish Jews during the reign of that diabolical institution, the "Inquisition," is enough to cause all men to sicken with horror. "Rich as a Jew," "mean as a Jew," "a dog of a Jew," all of those terms were not slow in coming into use, and the dramatic writings of the past did much to give them place and prominence.

Suppose we look over profane history, ancient and modern. You can find hundreds of prophecies that were made and afterwards verified. They, however, gained little notoriety, for it was to the interest of no particular sect or party to push them forward. There were many prophecies concerning the fall of the Roman empire, and all are familiar with the prophecies of Nostradamus.

Swedenborg foretold his own death; A. J. Davis prophesied the discovery of two planets, in a clairvoyant condition, years before they were discovered; also the Grange movement, the palace-cars, and several other things. On page 156 of the second number of a book called the "Modern Thinker," published in 1873 in New York, is an article entitled "A Modern Prophet," that made predictions that came "a long shot" nearer truth than any ones made in sacred writ. One of the prophesies of the Old Testament that is claimed as prophesying of Christ, "Not a bone of him shall be broken," is simply ridiculous when examined; the utmost straining of comparison will not bear it out in any sense whatever. All nations of the East were continually looking for a Messiah, or "anointed one," and they came, too, according to many of them.

There was an immense amount of stealing done somewhere by those old worthies. Philo and Hillel were never credited for the good things that they wrote when used by the evangelists, nor were they willing to let their indebtedness to India be known. I lean, however, to the impression that this was done by the early founders of the Christian Church, and if they had only been able to hold control a bit longer, many another doubtful expression would hav been expunged from the sacred word. There is little doubt if Shakspere had painted the character of Jacob, the term "As cunning as Jacob," or "you can't come Jacob on me," would be as common as the expression, "An old Shylock" is now in its application to a miser.

Freethought is the best of educators, and Christianity is the best element of repression known. One says, "Reason soundly." The other says, "Reason is a daughter of hell." My old father used often to tell me that "many a man thought he had religion when he only had dyspepsia. I hav about arrived at the same conclusion, and am certain it is impossible for a perfectly healthy person to indorse and believe the five points of Calvin. Nothing is so well calculated to free the human mind from superstition as a profound study of the Bible, not on bended knees and with puling prayers, but with fearless courage, guided only by the divine light of human reason, the one link that binds us to the infinite and lifts us above the groveling animal in our nature.

It is all nonsense to tell me that its standing for fifteen or eighteen hundred years is of any weight; use the same influence—fire, prison, rack, torture, ostracism, persecution, seize on every human affection and warp it by education—and any result can be accomplished, even so far as making mankind worship a green frog and fight to prove it a god.

The best thing, and showing "the signs of the times," is the resolution adopted by the last "Woman's Rights" celebration, held in Rochester. I hav now a feeling of real pride in "the woman movement." Before I had a little fear of its Christian timidity. "We cannot serve two masters well." Reason and Christianity are wide spart as the poles.

E. L. S.

Letters from Friends.

LAFAYETTE, VA., Oct. 31, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: As the angel Gabriel directed me last week, I took a journey up into Pulaski county. I had a good visit with your friends Mr. and Mrs. Slenker, had a social time, and looked over all your publications that I cannot get myself for want of means. Thence I went further up and visited an old subscriber that I got for The Index some years ago (before THE TRUTH SEEKER was born). After a friendly greeting we were called to supper. Judge of my surprise when he asked me to call upon the Lord for a blessing. You may rest assured that I declined. The supper was dispatched, however, and we returned to the sitting-room and entered into a lively conversation, the young ladies giving me a description of a great religious revival that sprang up there last winter. I listened, and then "the Spirit of the Lord" came upon me, so that I opened my mouth and began to preach: "Religion—what is it? and what is a revival of religion? Take your own Bible and the definition there given; it is to visit the sick and fatherless, do good to them, live uprightly and honestly, and keep unspotted from the world. Not a word is there about going to meeting, getting up a great excitement, being baptized, joining the church, saying prayers, arousing the passions by working up the nervous and excitable part of our nature by and through the fear of hell; no, not a word of it. Religion is a pure life; nothing more and nothing less. I hav been preaching here in Montgomery county, getting up revivals and organizing a society. Shall I read you my article of faith and belief? Well, here it is:

"'Freethinkers' Association; or, the First Society of Humanity in Montgomery Co., Va.—We, the members of this society, feeling the need of organization and union of all of a kindred nature for social culture and mental improvement, do hereby form a society that shall be perfectly free for all to think and believe as they see fit, with none to dictate or enforce their belief upon others of any kind whatever. If any believe in Methodism, Baptism, Dunkerism, Spiritualism, Quakerism, Shakerism, or any other ism, it is their own business; they shall not enforce their belief upon others. In fact, we are not organized as a society of believers or unbelievers, but as men and women, for intellectual, social, and moral culture, and mental improvement and progress. Moral and upright character is to be our only test of fellowship; none shall be admitted or expelled upon any other terms than life and character.'

"You will see by this that I consider that those who liv most uprightly hav the most religion, without any reference to articles of faith or the observance of forms of any kind whatever; not even pharisaical prayers or asking a blessing on our food are of any use at all.

"Now, friend H., just think how nature has worked to make the soil upon which your wheat and corn hav grown, and of your own work to raise the grain, the miller's work to grind it, and your wife's and daughters' work to make it into the bread that we hav had before us. Can God do more? I do not see how he can. Do you want it blessed any more than nature has already blessed it? I do not. Would you hav any better opinion of me if I asked you for another supper, when you know I hav already enough? Can a parent smile upon a child that is always whining and asking for more when it has enough already?"

My friend admitted that I was correct, and that all the old church forms were useless, and of no value whatever. The girls asked me what I thought their people would hav said to me if I had talked that way at their meeting. I told them I supposed they would hav called me an Infidel and would hav had nothing to do with me. I gave them a TRUTH SEEKERS and retired for the night. The next morning we ate our breakfast and said nothing whatever about it to the Lord or Jesus.

Now, I want to ask you or some of your readers of history, admitting that such a man as Jesus Christ once lived and was crucified, does any one positively assert how many soldiers were placed as guards at his tomb? Alex. Campbell, in his sermons, states that there were sixty-four. Is there any proof that this was true? I referred my friend who gave me these assertions of Campbell's to Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and said that he not only makes statements, but givs his authors, so it can be known whether his statements are true or false.

Please put my name upon your list of lecturers, and state to all your readers in Virginia and West Virginia that I will answer calls to lecture and organize societies wherever my expenses will be paid. I will also lecture upon phrenology, physiology, and kindred subjects, as the people may require, taking with me a supply of TRUTH SEEKERS and other reform papers and books. Yours as ever, J. M. BARNES.

BURLINGTON, KAN., Nov. 3, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: We remit you $2.50; one dollar pledged by myself, and one dollar pledged by John Hollewood; the remainder I send for five photographs—one each of Darwin, Tyndall, Spencer, Huxley, and Draper. I also renew my pledge for one dollar more, if required, for when I had finished reading "Cupid's Yokes" I expressed myself in this wise: The law that was executed when Mr. Heywood received his sentence of fine and two years in the cell of a state prison is a damnable statute—one that is calculated to suppress Liberalism and that only; the Liberals that are opposed to the repeal or amendment of that contemptible statute hav more reverence for the powers that be than has your humble servant. Has it come to this, that a bigoted, superstitious priesthood is to dictate to the people of this boasted republic what they shall print, send through the mails, and read? With my development of mind and the knowledge that I hav of what is known as the Comstock law, I cannot view it in any other light than that it is a cursed law and a disgrace to our country.

CHRIS. BROWN.

LOUDONVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of November 2d is an article by J. G. M., under the heading of, "The Problem of a Future Life," in which the writer makes the assertion that the question of a future life is still as "unsettled as it was in the time of Job." Now I think he is mistaken; if not, how does he account for the millions of Spiritualists of to-day? I never heard that there were any Spiritualists in Job's time, and to-day we hav millions of them who honestly and firmly believe in a future existence, and many of them profess to hav had, to them, convincing proof of the fact.

I wonder if he reads any Spiritualist paper, and hears both sides of the question? I advise him to procure The Banner of Light, volume 43, and numbers 22, 23, and 24, and read Mr. Thomas R. Hazard's article, "Legal Aspect of the Bliss Imbroglio." He might reply, as some hav, that Mr. Hazard is credulous, but he cannot but be impressed with his concise, clear statement of facts, and his apparently honest and gentlemanly bearing. Is it not strange that a man who livd with his wife for years could be so deceived, time after time? How could the Blisses, reduced to the poverty they were, with scarcely a friend in the world, and without the valuable (?) aid of Captain Harrison, and that of the deceased Miss Snyder, hav produced the very same personages, dressed as usual in the former seance? How could Mrs. Bliss hav personated from two to three different spirit forms at one time? And if they were aided in the personations, how could the personage gradually fade away without moving from the spot on which he or she stood.

It seems queer that Mr. Hazard could hav been so readily deceived in the forms represented to be those of his wife and daughters. I must say that his course of allowing the spirits to giv the tests is a much more gentlemanly and humane mode than the one recommended by J. G. M. He reminds me of an incident that occurred to my husband a few days ago: he was walking out in the country with a friend, and came very near being shot in the face by some men shooting partridges. On remonstrating with them for their carelessness, one of them replied that they couldn't "look out for men when they were shooting partridges." J. G. M. "can't look out for men when he is" testing the spirits. One would naturally expect a little more humanity from a Liberal.

Yes! "let every investigator into these phenomena go to the seance prepared to test the truth of the phenomena to the utmost of his ability," not with a pistol, shot-gun, nitric acid in a syringe, etc., but with his eyes open and his reason in full play. It appears to me that if I should attend a seance, and a spirit should be shown purporting to be that of my father, or some other deceased relative or friend, my own eyesight would be a sufficient test.

He speaks of the Mott affair as though the fraud in that case were a settled thing. Allow me to say that it is not, in my mind. Mr. Jenkins and all on his side hav shown a fairness and honesty that I cannot truthfully accord to the other parties. Anti-Fraud may be a very intelligent person, but why, let me ask, does he not come forth and let the world know who he is? Mr. Jenkins was not ashamed to sign his name to his assertions. There is a case where a "dark lantern" might be used to advantage, i.e., in discovering the identity of Anti-Fraud.

In conclusion, let me say that I am not a Spiritualist as you might naturally suppose, but simply a seeker after truth, and one who believes in giving all sides of a question a fair hearing. Because one does not believe Spiritualism to be a settled fact, or has met with a few frauds, must he condemn all, and make sweeping assertions of the fraudulency of thousands of mediums?

No intelligent Spiritualist conceives of "life after death" as a lazy, worthless, meaningless state of existence, and no Spiritualist paper or book teaches such a doctrine.

Respectfully yours, MRS. WINEFORD V. ASPINWALL.

ST. CATHERINES, ONT., Nov. 4, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see from the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER that the Second National Liberal League Convention at Syracuse has passed by and no one quite extinguished yet, but some are badly hurt, more especially F. E. Abbot; still he got no more than he deserved, for I fully believe that had he not opposed that petition Congress would hav given it consideration and modified said laws if nothing more. From an isolated standpoint I hav carefully watched the whole proceedings from the beginning and I think his conduct in the matter easily accounted for. As I see him he is a vain, egotistical, self-conceited man, and although possessed of some talent and education he is lacking in foresight and good sound sense, and the sole cause of his opposing said petition was, in my opinion, jealousy. He was jealous of you, that you were manipulating to don his shoes. He fully believes himself to be the father of the National Liberal League, the alpha and omega, consequently that he should be first consulted regarding all business pertaining to it or its tenets of doctrine, and had you first consulted him in getting up that petition he would hav given it no opposition, but as you did not condescend to do so his jealousy was aroused at once. He has feared for a time past, and is still fearing that you and your paper will yet become the organ of the Liberals' and Freethinkers' associations throughout the country. Those are my views in this matter, and if they prove correct he can blame no one but himself for it. He has taken a suicidal course in the premises which portrays a lack of wisdom.

It is to be regretted that the business of the Convention took the turn it did as it gives the orthodox sectarians encouragement to oppose us, but be of good cheer, brothers and sisters in the good cause, for truth will come uppermost in the end even if kept back for a time. It is an old and true saying that opposition is the life of trade, and I hav ever noticed through life that a certain amount of opposition tends to accelerate new ideas upon any subject.

The choice of a President resulted as I presumed it would, for I felt assured that under the circumstances Abbot would not be re-elected.

The selection you made to fill his place was a sterling good one as evidenced from his pronunciamento on "Cupid's Yokes" and obscenity if nothing more. The Hon. Elizur Wright is a profound, honest, brave and independent man; possessed of no egotism or jealousy.

I notice a number left your organization on account of said choice, but never mind, let them go; as was said at the time, you can do without them; it was only weeding the tares from the wheat. They hav made public their dogmatic propensities by so doing and give proof positive that they are of but slight consequence to any society. The possession of dogmatism of that kind disqualifies any one, be he judge or a doctor or reverend, for real usefulness in any capacity. You are in a better position now than before said purgation, for you are now left with a good working majority made up of the good and true. The attempt that many make to please every one usually fails to please any one, therefore the taking of a decisive stand in all matters is the only correct course to pursue. Two-facedness is unreliable and disgusting.

I am somewhat puzzled of late to define the course of B. F. Underwood, more especially upon the Comstock laws; he seems vacillating in that matter. I hav heretofore given him credit for stability of character, and I hope it may prove correct, for he evidently possesses talent and is favorably thought of in Canada, but his reply to Stark at the Convention didn't indicate it, for he perpetrated what might be termed a contradiction in saying that he did not believe in being "choked off," and was not so narrowminded as not to allow a full and free discussion, and then said if the vote on repeal was pressed those who opposed it would be justified in withdrawing from the organization. J. S. Verity of Boston spoke right well and to the point, and my sentiments exactly; and T. B. Wakeman is the right man in the right place, sound to the core, and able, and his Faneuil Hall speech was excellent and to the point; and Col. Fox disputed the representations of Rev. G. E. Gordon, who is shaky in the faith, in a creditable manner, as also did Mrs. Lucy Colman. I can't understand why Gordon was there at all; he is not half-fledged. Your reply to him in your private conversation was just what he deserved; and I perceive that one Judge Hurlbut is inclined to be shaky and vacillating, and has Abbot on the brain, and thinks that he (Abbot) has "made us" or the League he may mean, and therefore has a right to be its dictator for all time to come, but I presume the rest of you can't see it in that light. It proved finally that Abbot was not equal to the emergency and that his venom oozed out at the ends of his fingers in the face of the audience. I feel to pity him.

Thine as ever, C. B. T.

LIBERAL LECTURES.

468 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, Nov. 9, 1878.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I am for the present partially out of the political lecture field and propose ad interim to make a few attacks on old theology. I hav as many as forty lectures prepared especially for that work, any of which I am ready to go and deliver anywhere for a small compensation. Among my most radical lectures on the Bible and Christianity are the following:

1. Sectarianism, its origin and its results.
2. Churchanity vs. Humanity.
3. God's Revelation, What it is Not, and What it Is.
4. The Gods of the Bible.
5. The Devils of the Bible.
6. Errors of the Bibe.
7. Bible Prophecies—Their Failures, etc.
8. Prayer.—Its Uselessness—Its Silliness—Its Wickedness.
9. Jesus.—The Man, The Medium—His Foibles and his Failures.
10. The Atonement and its Absurdities.
11. God in the U. S. Constitution.
12. Anthony Comstock, the Y. M. C. A., and the Church.
13. Supremacy of Reason.

Besides the above-named lectures and many others on kindred topics, I hav a course of three lectures on the Money Question, one on Gen. B. F. Butler, many on Spiritualism and several on the social question.

For terms, etc., address, MOSES HULL.

WACONDA, KAN., Nov. 4, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I herewith send my subscription for next year's TRUTH SEEKER a little in advance as I can do but little for our cause. I thought if I did that little in advance it would make some amends for those that are in arrears. I want the paper as long as I liv and if I shall become so poor as not to pay for it I hope some Liberal will be liberal enough to giv it to me, and I shall not be too proud to receive it, for I think that there is but little use in Liberalism that is Liberal in sentiment only. Please put my name to the Roll of Honor and to any other roll or document to advocate Infidel and progressive sentiments where material aid is not required, the latter of course needs personal attention and shall hav it so far as my circumstances allow. As ever thine, GEO. W. CHAPMAN.

ROCK FALLS, ILL., Nov. 5, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: There are few expressions more arrogant or more insulting than, "The old flag flies triumphant above the latter" (new L. L.) "every Liberal who refuses to be the willing or unwilling abettor of obscenity and Freelove will speedily rally to its support." I hav always been opposed to the Freelove doctrine and know that Mr. Abbot is not more opposed to obscenity in any of its forms theoretically or practically than I, yet I cannot agree with him in his opposition to repeal. Nor can I agree with him in what seems to me to be an arrogant assumption of superiority over his Liberals coadjutors, in anything except his more extensive education. He certainly has fine abilities, but men of fewer opportunities than he for mental culture can yet think for themselves, and perhaps as correctly as he, though they may not be able to giv their thoughts the scholarly expressions that he uses. I hav no sympathy with aristocracy in any of its forms, not even the aristocracy of talent. His sympathies appear to be with the aristocracy of talent and wealth. A person brought up in ease and luxury can never feel for the poor as one does who has had bitter experience.

I hope you who hav espoused the "indecency" side of the League will eliminate the anti-republican, anti-democratic features of the organization and giv all the members present at any of their meetings an equal right to speak and vote. But I am doubtful of the ultimate success of the League as a political organization while it ignores the vastly more important labor and capital question. On this question The Index editors, with the exception of Sydney S. Morse, hav shown that their predelictions are with the oppressors of the poor. Respectfully, W. E. LUKENS.

DUNLEITH, ILL., Nov. 7, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, My Dear Friend: I wrote you some three or four days since, but forgot to request you to forward THE TRUTH SEEKER to a friend of mine in Boston, who sympathizes with you, who loves humanity and individual freedom, who considers the imprisonment of Heywood an outrage, a disgrace to civilization and our country, overruling the Constitution, an attack on the freedom of speech and the press.

I hav read the last TRUTH SEEKER, containing the proceedings of the Liberal League Congress at Syracuse with mingled feelings of joy and regret. I am happy that Abbot and Underwood were floored and so emphatically taught that they cannot rule if even threatening to destroy. That Underwood should hav threatened to withdraw if they did not elect Abbot is astonishing and disgraceful; that a professed teacher of Liberal principles should exhibit himself as a tyrant and bigot is an inconsistency that appears difficult for him or others to reconcile, and I would advise him to join the Catholic priesthood. The schism will weaken the moral influence of the League. I regret it, as I do the conduct of Abbot, Underwood, and others of the rule or ruin party. But I consider them responsible for the difficulty; they forced it upon you, and had you done less and cringed to their dictum, it would hav been a surrender of your independence and manhood painful to consider. No, sir, never give your support to an unworthy man, though you be threatened with hell, with its yawning mouth a mile wide, near, and approaching.

It is very gratifying to learn that two-thirds of the Congress were brave, fearless, honorable, as well as intellectual men. God bless them for standing for the right. I expected according to promise, that a petition would be circulated for the pardon of Heywood, but cannot learn that there has been. My health is not sufficient, I cannot attend to it. Put my name on one that you may handle. We are seeing the hardest times for many years, but you can depend upon my defense subscription in time.

Respectfully and fraternally your friend, D. R. BURT.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Oct. 26, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: In journeying through the country soliciting subscriptions for your books and publications, I frequently meet with those who make inquiries about "Cupid's Yokes," and quite a number hav requested me to procure the work for them. I hav accepted such orders with feelings of no little trepidation, knowing that the author of that work is languishing in a prison under a two years' sentence (rendered by a judge and jury chosen from amongst our free and enlightened American citizens, chosen, too, from amongst the people who inhabit the great commercial metropolis of the state which is acknowledged to be the most intellectual and cultured of any in our glorious Union, chosen, also, from amongst the inhabitants of the intellectual "hub" of the universe, and the abode of men and women of refinement and culture) for being guilty of writing, printing, and circulating through the United States mail such a wicked and obscene pamphlet. And well might I hav cause for fear in allowing myself to be instrumental in helping to circulate a book or pamphlet (which as yet I had not seen) vile enough to cause such a heavy penalty to be placed upon its author. Not that I am of an unusually timid nature, or afraid under any circumstances to do what I conscientiously believe to be right, but I am strictly opposed to obscenity or profanity, and do not indulge in either (in language or deportment), nor encourage their indulgence in others. And what could I, a humble denizen of this far-off "sucker" state, expect at the hands of the mighty powers that be established, and that are led and marshaled by the great and powerful St. Anthony in case I was caught disseminating vile and obscene literature? But trusting in the honesty, integrity, and fine discrimination of the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and with a mental reservation, to giv the book a careful examination ere I delivered any of them, and if I found them to be obscene, as they had been represented to be by the agent of the Y. M. C. A. and the S. F. S. V., I would either burn or return them. And with this resolve, I sent for enough to fill my orders, which came two days ago, in connection with a large package of other books received by express.

I hav given the book a careful reading, and to my surprise hav not found an obscene word in it. To my surprise, I say, for I was wondering all of the time while reading it what the aforementioned judge and jury found in that little book to ground their indictment and conviction on. It is a work couched in the most refined language, and containing information of great and lasting importance to humanity, information which should be instilled into the minds of the young either by their parents or teachers, as soon at least as they come to the age of puberty. I do not agree with the author in his ideas of promiscuity as a remedy for the lamentable evils arriving from our present illy-regulated customs in regard to the marriage relations, as evinced daily as we walk our streets and look into the pale and haggard faces of so many of the married women whom we meet, evidencing illy-assorted marriage relations; and we see children also, the product of these illy-assorted marriage relations, who are scarcely worth the trouble and expense of raising. And all of these evils come from ignorance of or a disregard for the laws of adaptability, congeniality, and fitness. Yet being a monogamist, in principle, to the extent of believing that a man should hav but one wife, or a woman but one living husband at a time, and that the marriage relation between them should exist as long as they both do live, although I would not hav them compelled to remain together unless they could do so happily; and in case of their separation for any cause, after bearing children, they should not hav the right or power to sequester, set aside, or bargain away the right and the title of such children to claim parentage from either or both their parents. Children are born into this world with no volition of their own, and their abandonment by their parents should be prohibited unless it were in extreme cases of disobedience.

Our present system of laws in regard to the rights of children are very faulty. It is certainly desirable that none should enter the marriage relation before they hav acquired a thorough knowledge of the law of adaptability and congeniality of the sexes; and herein is such teaching as we find in "Cupid's Yokes" and Besant's "Law of Population" valuable.

I am not yet ready to adopt friend Heywood's theory of what I would term selected promiscuity, although it might, and doubtless would, tend to the development of a more athletic and healthier race of children, yet I would by no means hav him debarred the right to disseminate his views. We are all more or less creatures of circumstance, and our opinions are more or less moulded and fashioned by our own experiences.

Had my nearly thirty years' experience of a happy wedded life (in which each recognized the equal rights and privileges of the other, which was terminated by the death of my wife four years ago) been instead one of those little burning connubial hells of which we see so many in the world, my views in regard to the marriage relation might hav been quite different.

And now, notwithstanding my so wide difference of opinion in regard to marriage, or any of the other relations of life, from the opinions advanced by Mr. Heywood, I cannot conceive that it is practicable or politic, that either of us should be deprived of our liberty and incarcerated in a prison or a bastile. After carefully reading "Cupid's Yokes," it does seem to me that all of the evidence necessary to procure Mr. Heywood's discharge from custody, would hav been a careful reading of the entire contents of the book to the jury and leave them to decide whether it contained anything for which its author should be punished for writing or disseminating through the mails, or by any other channel of conveyance.

It has been said in regard to Christianity, that "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church." And is not this saying to-day applicable to the martyrs of advanced thought? and may it not be truthfully said that the names of Heywood, Besant, and every other man or woman who has suffered loss of liberty or property for the cause of truth and for the betterment of the human race, will redound in history as noble and grand, while the names of their persecutors shall rot and be forgotten; and in ages to come, when the names of poets who wrote their pastoral lays, and blind Homer, who sang from door to door for daily bread; when the painters who wove their ideals of beauty on the walls and in the domes of cathedrals now nearly extinct; and sculptors who hav spent a lifetime in giving to posterity some beautiful work of art wrought in marble, hav been forgotten, then shall the names of those who hav given their lives for the good of humanity still grow brighter. And when this earth shall hav become a dead planet, incapable of longer giving sustenance to animal life, and shall hav become a barren and unproductive lump of matter, or been drawn into the sun to make fuel for the heating and lighting of other planets, and amid the wreck of worlds and systems of worlds yet to be, then shall the memory of those who hav sacrificed their lives and fortunes in order that they might blaze a path through the dark and dense forests of intellectual superstition and priestcraft, and to open a way to intellectual and physical liberty, continue to shine with a brightening luster and be sung in peans of praise by the angelic hosts whom their honestly spoken words and noble deeds hav blessed and benefited.

Yours for truth and "Liberty for every man, woman, and child," F. F. FOLLET.

BRO. BENNETT: I hav just finished reading in your paper the proceedings of the "Second Meeting of the National Liberal League Congress," held at Syracuse, N. Y., for the purpose of electing a President and such other officers as were necessary to carry out the objects of the organization. But what a shameful spirit of intolerance was exhibited in their words and actions by those who favored the re-election of F. E. Abbot. This alone would hav been sufficient to call forth severe criticism; but when they capped the climax with actual secession under the shallow pretense of a "breach of faith" by the majority, all forbearance ceases to be a virtue. Hav these men and women not yet learned that in exercising the elective franchise every one must be allowed to consult only his or her views in the matter as to the question at issue, or who should be intrusted with the offices in the gift of the voters? If this privilege is denied (and it clearly was disregarded, at least, by the minority at Syracuse), what remains of the elective franchise? Clearly nothing; for where the right to vote in accordance with our convictions is denied, there can be no choice.

Thanks to our noble T. B. Wakeman, who so fearlessly, and with such ability, trains and fires his guns charged with unanswerable arguments and unassailable logic into the ranks of those who seem to hav no regard but for self. Why should they plead for harmony if they only desire such actions carried into effect that coincide with their views? For no sooner were their views disregarded than they seceded. Of what avail is harmony if we only are harmonious to the end of disregarding the rights of the wronged—to making the innocent serve out their lives in prison and to allow the weak and helpless to be crushed, never more to rise? Again, why should we harmonize with the view of perpetuating the very laws under which and by which this outrage is made possible and carried out? Yes; in harmony and union there is strength. But an act, however harmonious, and a union, however strong, cannot and will not be successful, if tyranny and oppression be its object, be it so willfully or ignorantly. The laws which Abbot's party seek to perpetuate are obnoxious and detrimental to the only thing which makes existence desirable and ennobling. But what is still worse, they are contrary to the Constitution, which they deny. But let us admit their argument for a moment—that these laws are constitutional—is this an argument for liberty-loving men and women for all time and under all circumstances without amending it? If the Constitution has power over men and women (which is cheerfully admitted), hav not men and women also a power over the Constitution? This, I think, was clearly established by our Rebellion. It follows, then, that laws or measures may be enacted by amending the Constitution; but none should be enacted or tolerated not in harmony with the original Constitution or with its amendments.

These being the facts, hav not we a right to exercise this power peacefully whenever the best interests of humanity demand it? I am too full to express the feeling of outrage within me at this continual cry of liberty! freedom! from Liberals a la Abbot. It seems we are at liberty to act as long only as we do not desire to act contrary to their preconceived ideas. Is there any difference in dogma as such between those adopted and promulgated by a Liberal League or those of the Vatican or any church synod? If there is any difference, will some one be kind enough to point it out? Now let all those that hav true liberty, equality, and justice at heart step to the front and act in accordance with the blessings to be derived from them, and by so doing I venture to assert that it will not be long ere some who left us at Syracuse will return to the fold. With best wishes for your success, I am sincerely, J. E. FRICK.

FRANKLIN, PA., Nov. 2, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Having read the several remarks and the discussions in your valuable paper on the "obscenity" question, and believing it to be a free "pitch in," I wish to offer a suggestion on this matter, and that is this, that as the Bible is, in my opinion, the source of obscenity by its too suggestive description of the sexual act, as has been fully proved (this point cannot be gainsaid or denied), that the holy Bible should be put under ban, and that the law-making power should pass a law that all males should be deprived of their virility as soon as they were born by the attending physician or accoucher, and that all females should be deprived of their ovaries. But you will say that this is a crime against the person. This is granted. But as the Supreme Court of the United States, according to Judge Hurlbut, can declare what are crimes, can they not say and giv their opinions that it is not a crime, and thereby aid the Y. M. C. A. (anglicised thus, you may castrate all associations) in suppressing obscenity? and thus giving his obscenityship, Comstock, the opportunity his soul—hold, I made a mistake, I should say his gizzard, if he has any—would delight in, and cause him to turn from his espionage of the mails with disgust to the hunt of males and females just born with satanic delight, so that the aforesaid abortion of law, made by the United States Supreme Court, may be fully carried out in all its disgusting and law-abiding details to the glory of the obscenity smellers above referred to—Y. M. C. A. If the above suggestions should be approved with all due levity and abhorrence, at the sanguinary pictures that would be called to your shocked minds, remember they are no more inimical to liberty than the Comstock laws, as they are called, and giv them consideration, for I believe in out-heroding Herod, and thus doing away with all laws that tend to abridge the right to "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness," guaranteed by the Constitution of the U. S. Yours very respectfully,

GEO. M. BOWMAN.

TRUXTON, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Defender of liberty and justice, I again take up my pen to let you know that I received all the books I sent to you for, only a copy of "Cupid's Yokes." Now whether the mistake is on my side or on yours—or Comstock & Co.—I don't know, but I think that I sent the money for one copy. Would hav written to you ere this only I expected to see you in Syracuse, and buy some of your books, as I had some money with me for that purpose. I tried hard to find out where you stopped, but failed in so doing, but think I had the honor of receiving THE TRUTH SEEKER from your hand. It was a generous and manly act in you to hav the papers there, as many of your subscribers were there and away from home. I watched the proceedings of the Congress, and thought ye had a lovely time of it. I was glad that the majority went for the repeal of the Comstock law; there is no use in coaxing them to modify it. Let Liberals stand for their rights, and hav them if they can.

Now, Mr. Bennett, I told you in my last letter that I would send you the price of your dinner when you went to Watkins, and to make my promise good I send you $2. Inclosed in this letter find one dollar for your dinner and the other for books, which I will mention hereafter. I wish I could hav talked with you for a short time. I think it would hav done me good. A man pointed you out to me from the gallery where we sat, on the right side, and I was glad when you called for the letter, for I knew he could show no such thing. But my letter is growing longer than I meant, so I will conclude by wishing you may come out from the Watkins trial triumphantly and successfully. Your friend,

JOHN DEAN.

ALLEGHENY CITY, PA., Nov. 6, 1878.

DEAR FATHER BENNETT: Having read your splendid paper for the last three months, I hav become slightly acquainted with some of the direct infamies of the pretended followers of the so called savior, or Christ the XIII; also with some of the civilizing influences and hopeful tendencies of that blessed religion that can giv sweetest pleasures while we liv, etc.

After reading, I send all my TRUTH SEEKERS to friends throughout the country, and I rejoice to say that by this means, and "shooting off my mouth," I hav been the means of liberating the minds of a dozen or more from the thrall of superstition. I call that good work for a man that has no education. I work every day for a living. Inclosed find one dollar, for which send "Cupid's Yokes," photos of Thomas Paine, R. G. Ingersoll, and the boss woman of the age—Mrs. E. D. Slenker—and "Examination of the Prophecies and Truth Seeker Tracts of your own choice for the remaining fifty cents. Add my name to the Declaration of Rights. Truly yours, J. D. CRAFFT.

Woman Suffrage.

"D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Allow me to suggest that female suffrage would absolutely defeat the best efforts of Liberals, for the reason that a great majority of the members of orthodox churches are females, and of a nature that priests could influence. For popularity they would, if they could, put God in the Constitution; and, more than that, I think, would make strong efforts to establish religion by law in the United States. Please don't let universal suffrage be advocated in THE TRUTH SEEKER for the present.

"Most respectfully, J. W. BABBITT, M.D."

Although the above was written with a good motive—to promote the cause of Liberalism—yet the sentiments therein expressed are very selfish and illiberal. To withhold from woman her political rights would be placing upon her the yoke of thralldom; and this yoke she has carried for thousands of years, and she is still wearily plodding along under it. Why should she not arise and exclaim, like Patrick Henry, "Giv me my political and natural rights—my liberty—or giv me death!"

Ever since the foundation of the Christian religion, the right to make laws has been claimed solely by man. When an Infidel has begged for his political and natural rights, the Christian has refused to grant them to him; and now, when woman pleads earnestly for hers, she is ignored by both Christian and Infidel. The former thinks she is only what could be produced from a rib (although God could make a woman from a rib, man can only make a fertilizer of it); while the latter fears that if she were allowed her political rights she would aid priestcraft in persecuting him. I feel much grieved to find that they hav so little respect for God's works. I think she was the best thing he made while in the manufacturing business; and if he were to undertake it again, I do not think he could make even a fence-post from one of man's ribs.

At present we hav neither God in our Constitution nor religion established by law, but we hav one of our Liberals in prison who was put there for writing his ideas and sending them through the mails. And it has been proved that he did it for the benefit of mankind, not to deprave society, as was claimed by his persecutors. Those laws that imprison a person for endeavoring to enlighten and improve mankind were not made by woman, but by man, and woman has had to suffer from them, viz.: Mrs. Sara B. Chase and Josephine S. Tilton. Is it equitable to persecute a woman with a law that she has had no voice in proposing or opposing? Any man that will answer this question in the affirmative has forgotten his dear mother or wife, and is perfectly willing that she shall be tortured by law that was created without her voice, either pro or con.

Giv woman her vote, and then try to teach her that it is not necessary to pin her faith to the sleeve of a clergyman to get within the golden gates of heaven; for I hav been credibly informed that all those who hav a vote in this world are passed through them without any credentials from the clergy.

Relative to woman's persecuting Liberals by inserting God in our Constitution and establishing religion by law in the United States, I will say that she is of too fine a nature to inflict pain and suffering upon human kind, and wherever she has had the power to protect mankind from injury she has done it, showing all how deeply embedded within her bosom was human love.

When the tree of life ceases to bring forth selfishness; when the cloud of indifference disappears from the heavens; when the river of malevolence flows no more; when the spirit of inequality departs, never to return; when the sun of persecution sinks below the horizon, never to rise again; when the cold, pale moon of sorrow veils its face forever—then the flower of the human race will burst forth, sending its perfumes of intelligence and love into the heart of man, causing him to cherish and admire what he had once neglected and despised.

RAY CHAPMAN.

A Love Song.

BY C. FANNIE ALLYN.

Oh, tell me again that you love me,
And fold me again in your arms,
For, with your dear head bent above me,
E'en heaven itself hath no charms.
Then whisper again with its sweetness,
The story that often you've told;
Like melodies filled with completeness
It never grows charmless or old.

Oh, tell me again that you love me,
For heaven hath no song so sweet;
No power from my soul can erase it;
No woe with this bliss can compete.
I'm questioned if I love a Jesus,
And all of his angelic host;
If he loves as you love, I love him,
Yet, darling, I love you the most.

Then tell me again that you love me,
'Tis sweet as the birdlings' clear tune;
Rich as the summer-noon golden;
Fragrant as roses in June.
I smile when they ask if God's mercy
Hath saved me from Adam's dire fall;
They know not I find in your arms, love,
"My God, and my heaven, my all."

Then tell me again that you love me,
For if it is true God is love,
Then all of these manifestations
Prove he is within as above.
So fold me again in your arms, love,
Let nothing this moment eclipse;
Death loses all sting if he calls, love,
For I'll die with your kiss on my lips.

The Gates Ajar.

One night, as old Saint Peter slept,
He left the door of heaven ajar,
When through a little angel crept
And came down with a falling star.

One summer, as the blessed beams
Of morn approached, my blushing bride
Awakened from some pleasing dreams
And found that angel by her side.

God grant but this, I ask no more,
That when he leaves this world of sin,
He'll wing his way to that bright shore
And find the door of heaven again.

Whereupon Saint Peter, not liking this imputation of carelessness, thus (by a friend) replies:

ON THE PART OF THE DEFENSE.

For eighteen hundred years and more
I've kept my door securely tyled;
There has no little angel strayed—
No one been missing all the while.

I did not sleep, as you supposed,
Nor leave the door of heaven ajar,
Nor has a little angel strayed
Nor gone down with a falling star.

Go ask that blushing bride and see
If she don't frankly own and say
That when she found that angel babe,
She found it in the good old way.

God grant but this, I ask no more,
That should your numbers still enlarge,
You will not do as heretofore,
And lay it to old Peter's charge.

Ether.

SOME SPECULATIONS ON AN ABSTRUSE POINT.

BY JAMES M'CARROLL.

He who travels deep into the darkness approaches the light—not the darkness of ignorance or superstition, however, but that which necessarily embarrasses all profound research, and separates the grosser forms of matter from the sublime realities that lie beyond.

Although science may properly be termed the glory of the intellectual world, I venture to surmise that, recently, some of its votaries hav not been pursuing their investigations on a sufficiently elevated plane. They hav not, in my opinion, sought to relate cause and effect in the broadest and most logical sense, or establish the conviction that there are other than merely material forces at work in the grand economy of the universe. And yet they seem to hav had opportunities of distinguishing themselves in this relation, that, fully improved, might possibly hav resulted in the lifting of a corner of the veil that hangs between all mortal vision and the more immediate presence of the Great First Cause.

In advancing the now generally accepted theory that the boundless realms of space are filled throughout with an invisible and intangible medium, or essence, called ether, it appears, as inseparable from this proposition, that not only matter, per se, but all its modifications and configurations, are nothing more than simple expressions of this all-pervading something—this sublimated element, that passes through the diamond as if it were an open window, and that reigns as free and as absolute in the cold, dark bosom of the granite mass as it does in the measureless sunlit spaces that stretch among the stars.

As no two particles or atoms of anything conceivable can possibly occupy the same pace, this deduction regarding matter is obously in logical sequenee with the ubiquity ether; and, such being the case, it ought not to be difficult of comprehension that this latter self-existent soul of things, so to speak, which is subject to no law, possesses, in its omnipresence, one of the attributes of deity.

Should this be conceded, and I see no good reason why it should not, we instantly emerge into broader light through the channels of inductive reasoning, and are led at once to the conclusion that, possibly, the possession of one infinite attribute involves that of all the rest. Certainly, in submitting that of omnipresence to the ordinary standards of human judgment, we shall be able to discover, without much difficulty, that it is the very life-blood, as it were, of omnipotence and omniscience, as disassociated from it these become utterly impossible. It is the great body of which they may be called the heart and the head, or, more properly, the mind and the soul; for it seems sufficiently plain that omnipotence and omniscience are rather faculties of the infinite existence than the infinite existence itself. It is, in addition, quite obvious, to me at least, that omnipresence involves a condition of being savoring of distinct entity or individuality, however sublimated and inexplicable such entity may be.

This may, I am aware, be called hazardous work; but the age is one of bold flights and experiments, and I am only speculating in the regions of metaphysics. Having dared so much, however, I shall venture still further, and submit respectfully that there are some grounds for adopting the idea, if not the belief, that ether is absolutely the body of the deity himself, and that the countless worlds throughout infinite space, as well as all things visible and invisible, are the work of its myriad, ubiquitous hands.

And now let us endeavor to discover how far this proposition is sustained by science and true philosophy—by observation and education; for it is upon these cornerstones only that I shall attempt to rest this theory of mine—if mine it be. Let me, then, in the first place, direct attention to the fact that light and heat, which are the two great primary factors in the production and maintenance of all animal and vegetable life, are declared, upon the highest scientific authority, to be but simple expressions of ether or the visible operations of what I shall venture to term God's right hand and left. These operations, which are characterized by a power and an intelligence that transcend not only all human comprehension, but the comprehension of even the highest order of created being, hav for their object the accomplishment of projects and designs possible to an all-wise and an all-powerful God only, and of a grandeur and dignity commensurate with his infinite greatness and goodness: The formation of new worlds, and the sustaining and beautifying of those already in existence; the administration of all law, and the development of life and happiness, and of higher physical and mental conditions throughout the ages of eternity.

Turn where we may, from the modest violet at our feet to the stars that strew the fields of space, and we find light and heat performing the miracles of creation in connection with other expressions of the divine body of the ether, which is the source and executive of all law. In the majestic command, "Sit Lux!" we can venture to suppose that simultaneous with the sublime expression, God stretched forth his omnipotent right hand, "et Lux fuit!" It was the first visible expression of his power in the work of creation; and as heat was inseparable from it, the inference is logical that both these omnipotent factors are his right hand and left, which, multiplied to infinity, are engaged, without cessation, in all the glorious works that feast the senses and the understanding, and that make his great name worthy of all honor and praise.

This subject will, I am satisfied, increase in interest the more we investigate it; and, perhaps, lead us to the conclusion already glanced at, namely, that ether is the source of all natural phenomena and of all law. The vibratory theory of light, heat, and sound would seem to point in this direction, as the very existence of three of our senses, seeing, feeling, and hearing, seem to depend solely upon it. And if three of our senses are indebted for their functions to vibrations of the ether—for I don't take the atmosphere into consideration here—why not taste and smell also? The optic nerve is, as we all know, appealed to by the ether; why not the gustatory and olfactory likewise? And, besides, when the ether is, if we are to credit the researches of scientists, subject to no law, should we not sequentially and in view of its attributes make it the source of all law? But as this branch of the subject might betray me into a discussion which would exceed the bounds that I hav set for myself in this brief paper, I shall, for the present, leave the case with the intelligent and speculative reader; but not without a hope that I may one day return to it with a larger knowledge respecting it than I now possess, or than is to be found in mere text-books.

CHRISTIAN AND DEIST, AND THE PROPHETS: Being a Business Man's Views upon Religious and Social Matters. By D. V. A. Extra cloth, 12mo, 206 pp. $1.00. New York: Charles P. Somerby.

This is a book divided into two parts, prose and verse respectively, but having one general aim—to expose, truthfully and fearlessly, the gross fallacies, absurdities, and pernicious effects of the Bible and the Christian religion. The first part details a conversation between a Christian and a Deist, in the course of which the latter astonishes the former no less by his perfect familiarity with the "sacred" writings than by his incontrovertible arguments proving their human origin, many of their authors nothing but a set of designing knaves, and their adherents a lot of willing or unwilling dupes, as the case may be. He does this in so clear and dispassionate a manner that the poor Christian is forced to the significant admission that his instructor has "given him much food for reflection," and that "it shall not go undigested." The concluding portion of this part of the book gives us a vivid picture of the writer's conception of a possible future, which is really eloquent and beautiful in its descriptive imagery. Perhaps the most marked feature of this conversation, however—certainly that which will command the greatest attention at the present time—is the author's ventilation of the social and property question. The bold and trenchant blows which he deals "Society," in all its ramifications of rottenness and inhumanity; his scathing rebuke of the purse-proud church-member, who, while he hypocritically professes the greatest reverence for the "meek and lowly Jesus," crushes and dooms to wretchedness and despair his poor fellow-beings; his earnest and manly plea for the social regeneration of the lower classes—cannot fail to make the book the best-abused and best-liked production of the day by these two classes respectively.

"The Prophets" is a sort of half-humorous, half-sarcastic history in rhyme of these geniuses and their "wonderful" doings, from Moses, the meek, down to the very latest installment—Brigham Young. This part of the work, besides its original and pungent hits, which will make even a Christian swear and laugh by turns, contains much information that will be new and interesting to a great many.

Taken altogether, the book is one of the most readable we hav met with in a long time, combining with an earnest style a freedom from dryness which we could wish were oftener the case with our Liberal books; and it has the crowning merit of having been written with a sincere desire to do good, as well as to sell; as its very low price and the fact that its author is a philanthropic man, and has not written it to make money, sufficiently prove. A curiosity to see what a business man has to say upon the social problem, from a poor man's standpoint, will probably alone induce many to buy the book.

Liberal and Scientific Lectures!

BY W. F. JAMIESO ,

172 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Courses of two, three, five, or more lectures will be given, as desired. Correspondents will please state, by number, which lectures are preferred.

SUBJECTS.

FIRST COURSE.

1. The Struggle for Truth.
2. "What will you Give in Place of Christianity?"
3. Genesis and Geology Irreconcilable.

SECOND COURSE.

4. How was the Bible Made; or, Did God ever Write a Book?" [N. B. In this lecture facts are given of which the clergy are ignorant, else carefully conceal from their people.]
5. Are the Prophecies of the Bible True?
6. Damaging Confessions about the Bible by Eminent Christians.
7. Contradictions!—Inconsistencies!—Are those of the Bible Real or Apparent?
8. Liberalism and Liberal Demands.

THIRD COURSE.

9. Scientists and their Achievments.
10. Antiquity of Man.
11. Darwinism; or, Who were our Ancestors?
12. Evolution; or, The Law of Progress.
13. Protoplasm; or, The Origin of Life.

FOURTH COURSE.

14. Texts from the Book of Nature.
15. The Mystery of Matter.
16. Matter and Energy Indestructible.
17. Acoustics (Illustrated).
18. Electricity (Illustrated).

FIFTH COURSE.

19. Religious Sneers at Science.
20. Martyrs of Science.

SIXTH COURSE.

21. The Solar System.
22. The Wonders of the Sun.
23. The Scenery of Saturn.
24. Are there Inhabitants in Other Worlds than Ours?

SEVENTH COURSE.

26. Comets, Meteors, Nebulæ.
27. Zodiacal Constellations.
28. Galaxy (Milky Way).
29. The Star Depths.
30. How to Study the Stars.

EIGHTH COURSE.

31. Religious and Irreligious Beliefs.
32. Difference between Deism, Theism, Pantheism, Atheism.
33. Is the Christian Church a Friend to Woman?
34. Common Sense vs. Orthodox Christianity.
35. Is Natural Morality better than Christian Morality?

NINTH COURSE.

36. Theological Goats and Sheep.
37. Are Christianity and the Bible the Cause of Civilization?
38. The Blood-stained History of Christianity.
39. Were the French Revolution and "Reign of Terror" due to Infidelity?
40. Paganism Compared with Christianity.

TENTH COURSE.

41. Thomas Paine as a Statesman.
42. Thomas Paine as a Revolutionary Hero.
43. Thomas Paine's Religious Belief: How he Lived, and how he Died.

ELEVENTH COURSE.

44. Does the Bible Sanction Polygamy?
45. Does the Bible Sustain Slavery?
46. Does the Bible Teach Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Drinks?

TWELFTH COURSE.

47. Jehovah, King of Heaven, and George III., King of England, compared.
48. The Folly of Prayer and the "Foolishness of Preaching."
49. The "Lord's Prayer" analyzed and Criticised.
50. Has Jesus Christ any Followers on Earth?

THIRTEENTH COURSE.

51. Do the Bible and Science Agree?
52. Conflict Between Religion and Science.
53. The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic.
54. The Pulpit and the Theater.
55. Humanitarianism vs. Creeds.

FOURTEENTH COURSE.

56. The Devil is Dead.
57. Hell Closed for Repairs.

FIFTEENTH COURSE.

58. The Future of the Race in Art, Science, and Invention.
59. True Marriage in the Light of Physiology, Phrenology, and Physiognomy.
60. Political, Religious, and Social Slander.

SIXTEENTH COURSE.

61. The Rigid Rule of the Rich Makes Many Millions Mourn.
62. The Good-Natured Man.

SEVENTEENTH COURSE.

63. Astronomical Origin of religion.
64. Zoroaster, and the Ancient Religion of the Persians.
65. Roman Catholicism is Logical Christianity.
66. Revivals of Religion, with life-like illustrations of the Revivalists' Arts.

EIGHTEENTH COURSE.

67. Scientific View of Death.
68. Do Freethinkers Meet Death Calmly and Rejoicingly?
69. Do not Christians evince more Fear of Death than Infidels and Pagans?

NINETEENTH COURSE.

70. Science of Psychology.
71. Governing Power of Mind.
72. Mental Force the Highest Form of Energy.

TWENTIETH COURSE.

GEOLOGICAL.

73. The Earth once a Blazing Sun.
74. The Story of the Rocks.
75. Silurian Seas and their Inhabitants.
76. Devonian Age.
77. Carboniferous Age.
78. Reptilian Age.
79. Mammalian Age.
80. General Survey of Geological Science.

From the foregoing list it will be perceived that the Lecturer does not confine himself to any single class of subjects, claiming the right to speak upon any topic with which he may familiarize himself. Nothing which pertains to humanity is foreign to him. True, the very mention of some of these themes will excite the ire of bigots. Their support is not expected. That of the Liberal-minded is solicited.

While no sentimental plea is offered of laboring solely for the good of humanity, yet the compensation for delivering two, three, five, ten, or more lectures is reasonably low, and is usually raised by subscription, thus making them free to the public.

Engagements a few weeks, or even months, in advance preferred.

Discussions of theological questions are nearly as important, to say the least, as legal and congressional debates. The interests of mankind require them. It is vain to oppose them. Men and women will discuss them. They will discuss all things. The question which one age does not investigate, another will. Nothing will be allowed to escape. The countries where speech is untrammeled contain happy, free people. The Lecturer, entertaining these sentiments, is, therefore, willing to engage in friendly discussion, to the end that truth may prevail. It is despotism which calls liberty license, and fears the fiery furnace of criticism.

All inquiries concerning lectures and debates will be answered by addressing

W. F. JAMIESON,
172 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containg the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the
Missionary and Bible Societies,
Sunday-schools,
The Young Men's Christian Association,
Societies for the Suppression of Vice,
American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally,
and especially to
ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

184 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

BIBLE OF BIBLES:

OR

TWENTY-SEVEN

"DIVINE REVELATIONS:"

CONTAINING

A Description of Twenty-Seven Bibles, and an Exposition of Two Thousand Biblical Errors in Science, History, Morals, Religion, and General Events;

ALSO A DELINEATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE

Principal Personages of the CHRISTIAN BIBLE,

AND AN

Examination of Their Doctrines.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Biography of Satan."

As will be remarked on perusal of the table of contents, the ground gone over by Mr. Graves in the course of this new work is simply astounding, and the literary labor performed is worthy of receiving the approximate reward of an extensive reading at the hands of the public. In the sixty-six chapters into which the book is divided, almost every question of interest which arises in the mind at the mention of the word BIBLE is considered in that straightforward style which has made the volumes of Mr. Graves so extensively sought after.

LIST OF CONTENTS:

The Leading Positions of this Work.
CHAP. 1.—The Signs of the Times; The Coming Revolution; Reason will soon Triumph.
CHAP. 2.—Apology and Explanation; Jehovah not our God; Relationship of the Old and New Testaments.
CHAP. 3.—Why this Work was Written; The Moral Truths of the Bible; Why Resort to Ridicule; The Principal Design of this Work; Don't Read Pernicious Books; Two Thousand Bible Errors Exposed; All Bibles Useful in their Place.
CHAP. 4.—Beauties and Benefits of Bibles; A Higher Plane of Development has been Attained; Bible Writers Honest; General Claims of Bibles.

TWENTY-SEVEN BIBLES DESCRIBED.

CHAP. 5.—The Hindoo Bibles; The Vedas; The Code of Menu; Ramayana; Mahabarat; The Purans; Analogies of the Hindoo and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of India.
CHAP. 6.—The Egyptian Bible, "The Hermas"; Analogies of the Egyptian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Egypt.
CHAP. 7.—The Persian Bibles; The Zend Avesta; The Sadder; Analogies of the Persian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Persia.
CHAP. 8.—The Chinese Bibles; Ta-Heo (Great Learning); The Chun Yung, or Doctrine of the Mean; The Book of Mang, or Menclus; Snoo King, or "Book of History"; Shee King or "Book of Poetry"; Chun-Tsen, "Spring and Summer"; Tao-te King, or Doctrine of Reason; Analogies of the Chinese and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of China.
CHAP. 9.—Seven other Oriental Bibles; The Soffees' Bible, The "Musnavi"; The Parsees' Bible, The "Bour Desch" The Tamalese Bible, The "Kallwakam"; The Scandinavian Bible, The "Saga," or Divine Wisdom; The Kalmucs' Bible, The "Kallo Cham"; The Athenians' Bible, "The Testament"; The Cabalists' Bible, The "Yohar," or Book of Light.
CHAP. 10.—The Mahometan's Bible, The "Koran"; The Mormons' Bible, "The Book of Mormon"; Revelations of Joseph Smith; The Shakers' Bible, "The Divine Roll."
CHAP. 11.—The Jews' Bible, The Old Testament and the Mishna.
CHAP. 12.—The Christians' Bible, Its Character.
CHAP. 13.—General Analogies of Bibles; Superior Features of the Heathen Bibles.
CHAP. 14.—The Infidels' Bible.

TWO THOUSAND BIBLE ERRORS—OLD-TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 15.—A Hundred and Twenty-three Errors in the Jewish Cosmogony; The Scientists' Story of Creation.
CHAP. 16.—Numerous Absurdities in the Story of the Deluge.
CHAP. 17.—The Ten Commandments, Moral Defects of.
CHAP. 18.—The Foolish Bible Stories, A Talking Serpent and a Talking Ass; The Story of Cain; The Ark of the Covenant; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar; Sodom and Gomorrah; The Tower of Babel; Stopping the Sun and Moon; Story of Samson; Story of Jonah.
CHAP. 19.—Bible Prophecies not Fulfilled.
CHAP. 20.—Bible Miracles, Erroneous Belief in.
CHAP. 21.—Bible Errors in Facts and Figures.
CHAP. 22.—Bible Contradictions (232).
CHAP. 23.—Obscene Language of the Bible (200 cases).
CHAP. 24.—Circumcision a Heathenish Custom; Fasting and Feasting in Various Nations.
CHAP. 25.—Holy Mountains, Lands, Cities, and Rivers.

BIBLE CHARACTERS.

CHAP. 26.—Jehovah, Character of.
CHAP. 27.—The Jews, Character of.
CHAP. 28.—Moses, Character of.
CHAP. 29.—The Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Character of.
CHAP. 30.—David, His Numerous Crimes; Solomon, Character of; Lot and his Daughters.
CHAP. 31.—The Prophets, their Moral Defects; Special Notice of Elijah and Elisha.
CHAP. 32.—Idolatry, Its Nature, Harmlessness, and Origin; All Christians either Atheists or Idolaters.

BIBLE ERRORS—NEW TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 33.—Divine Revelation Impossible and Unnecessary.
CHAP. 34.—Primeval Innocency of Man Not True.
CHAP. 35.—Original Sin and Fall of Man Not True.
CHAP. 36.—Moral Depravity of Man a Delusion.
CHAP. 37.—Free Agency and Moral Accountability Erroneous.
CHAP. 38.—Repentance, The Doctrine Erroneous.
CHAP. 39.—Forgiveness for Sin an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 40.—An Angry God, Evils of the Belief in.
CHAP. 41.—Atonement for Sin an Immoral Doctrine.
CHAP. 42.—Special Providences an Erroneou Doctrine.
CHAP. 43.—Faith and Belief, Bible Errors respecting.
CHAP. 44.—A Personal God Impossible.
NOTE.—In the twelve preceding chapters it is shown that the cardinal doctrines of Christianity are all wrong.
CHAP. 45.—Evil, Natural and Moral, Explained.
CHAP. 46.—A Rational View of Sin and its Consequences.
CHAP. 47.—The Bible Sanctions every Species of Crime.
CHAP. 48.—The Immoral Influence of the Bible.
CHAP. 49.—The Bible at War with Eighteen Sciences.
CHAP. 50.—The Bible as a Moral Necessity.
CHAP. 51.—Send no more Bibles to the Heathen.
CHAP. 52.—What Shall We Do to be Saved?
CHAP. 53.—The Three Christian Plans of Salvation.
CHAP. 54.—The True Religion Defined.
CHAP. 55.—"All Scripture given by Inspiration of God."
CHAP. 56.—Infidelity in Oriental Nations—India, Rome, Greece, China, Persia, and Arabia.
CHAP. 57.—Sects, Schisms, and Skeptics in Christian Countries.
CHAP. 58.—Modern Christianity one-half Infidelity.
CHAP. 59.—The Christians' God, Character of.
CHAP. 60.—The One Hundred and Fifty Errors of Jesus Christ.
CHAP. 61.—Character and Erroneous Doctrines of the Apostles.
CHAP. 62.—Erroneous Doctrines and Moral Defects of Paul and Peter.
CHAP. 63.—Idolatrous Veneration for Bibles—Its Evils.
CHAP. 64.—Spiritual or Implied Sense of Bibles—Its Objects.
CHAP. 65.—What shall we Substitute for the Bible?
CHAP. 66.—Religious Reconstruction, or the Moral Necessity for a Religious Reform. Conclusion.

Cloth, large 12mo., 440 pp. Price, $2 00, postage free.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8th St., New York.

A GREAT OFFER.

A GENUINE
Grover & Baker
SEWING MACHINE.

For the Holidays.

I will deliver, boxed, at any Freight or Express Office in New York, one of the Genuine Grover & Baker Sewing Machines, with Latest Improvements, for $15.00 EACH.

This Machine is guaranteed perfect, completely finished, of which the cut is a perfect representation, except that the machine I will send has a box cover fitting over the works on the table. The following attachments are supplied free with the Machine:

Three Hemmers, Braider, Friller, Quilting-Guage, Embroidery Plate, dozen assorted Needles, Screw-Driver, Oil Can, and Book of Instructions.

This Machine will be sent on receipt of price, or will be sent C. O. D. on receipt of $5 in advance. This offer is limited as to time, and it is a chance to secure a guaranteed, first-class Machine at a saving of $55. The regular price is $70. Refer, by permission, to the editor of this paper. Address W. V. R. POWIS.

45 4t Box 255, New York City.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,

WINNERS OF THE

ONLY GOLD MEDAL

AWARDED TO AMERICAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AT

Paris Exposition, 1878;

the highest distinction in the power of the Judges to confer.

PARIS, 1878 Two Highest Medals.
SWEDEN, 1878
PHILADA, 1876
SANTIAGO, '75
VIENNA, 1873
PARIS, 1867.

AT EVERY WORLD'S EXPOSITION FOR 12 YEARS

They have been awarded the

HIGHEST HONORS

At the Paris Exposition, 1878, they are awarded the GOLD MEDAL, the highest recompense at the disposal of the jury; also the BRONZE MEDAL, the highest distinction for excellent workmanship. They have also received the GRAND GOLD MEDAL OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY, 1878. No other American Organs ever attained highest award at ANY World's Exposition. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES, with newest styles, prices, etc., free.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
BOSTON, NEW YORK, or CHICAGO.

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous reques's have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co Augusta, Maine.
1y7

The New Gospel of Health.

BY DR. STONE.

This is a masterly work of most progressive character, calculated to teach every person how to keep well without drugs, stimulants, or narcotics. 519 pages, highly illustrated. Cloth, $2.50, postage 18 cents; paper, $1.25, postage 12 cents. For sale at this office. tf30

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted.
6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK,

His Career of Cruelty and Crime.

A CHAPTER FROM

"THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH."

Giving the base means employed by this Matthew Hopkins of the nineteenth century to persecute and annoy his unfortunate victims.

120 pages. Price, 25 cents.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine. 1y7

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

Proceedings and Addresses

AT THE

FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION

HELD AT

Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons.

Will be ready by Oct. 20th. It is a volume of rare value, containing much of the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Sirieus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella, Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp. octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation.

Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

MRS. BESANT'S

Law of Population.

SECOND TEN THOUSAND

of the author's American Edition, with

FINE STEEL PORTRAIT

(By Ritchie, the best artist in America) on extra tinted paper and binding. Cloth, 75c.; paper, 50c.

AGENTS are informed that the best thing to sell to make money on, and also to benefit mankind, is this book. It explains and advocates the only harmless and practical means of avoiding the evils of celibacy, on the one hand, and of overburdened parentage on the other. It advocates more and earlier marriages, and increase of family only when health and pecuniary means will permit, but it most efficiently opposes abortion, prostitution, and all undesired and inconsiderate procreation. It contains the latest medical researches and results of science. The medical directions are easy, plain, explicit, though chaste and delicate. No married couple should be without it.

ASA K. BUTTS, 19 Dey st., N. Y.

TO AUTHORS.

A proof-reading printer, disabled Union soldier, wishes work. Can fit MSS. for printing, including spelling and punctuation, and can shape and clothe ideas in words which burn but leave no sting. Can work by mail.

6'41 Address "STAR," this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 43 75

Gems of Thought.

THE highest exercise of charity is charity toward the uncharitable.—Buckminster.

BE the day weary or be the day long,
At last it ringeth to even song.

NOTHING not a reality ever yet got men to pay bed and board to it for very long.—Carlyle.

IT is more profitable to reckón up our defects than to boast of our attainments.—Coleridge.

CONVERSATION enriches the understanding but solitude is the school of genius.—Gibbon.

FIFTY thousand echoes of a voice leave us only one voice and fifty thousand echoes.—Dr. J. F. Clarke.

TRUTH is the offspring of silence, unbroken meditation and thoughts, often revised and corrected.—Wollaston.

FEAR to do base, unworthy things is valor;
If they be done to us, to suffer them
Is valor, too.—Ben Jonson.

OFT times nothing profits man
Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well managed.—Milton.

YOU may rest satisfied that what is nonsense upon a principle of reason will never be sense on a principle of religion.—South.

OF love, true honor, happiness, the price
Is fixed and must be given—self-sacrifice.
—Sharpe's Letters and Essays.

GOOD thoughts, though God accept them, yet towards men are little better than good dreams except they be put in act.—Bacon.

THE husbandman hath long patience for the precious parts of the earth, till he receive the early and the latter rains.—James v. vii.

HE that preaches to man should understand what is in man; and that skill can scarce be attained by an ascetic in his solitude.—Atterbury.

OF natural duties we affirm that in authority they are higher than law; in time, older than creation; in worth, more valuable than the universe.—Horsley.

THAT man that doth not know those things which are of necessity for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides.—Tillotson.

THERE are few mortals so insensible that their affections cannot be gained by mildness, their confidence by sincerity, their hatred by scorn and neglect.—Zimmerman.

ALL beings hav their laws; the Deity has his laws, the material world has its laws; superior intelligences hav their laws, the beasts hav their laws, and man has his laws.—Montesquieu.

TO AWAKEN a dormant spirit of discussion by pointing out the imperfections of accredited systems, is at least one step gained towards the further advancement of knowledge.—Dugald Stewart.

UNIVERSAL love is a glove without fingers, which fits all hands alike, and none closely; but true affection is like a glove with fingers, which fits one hand only, and sits close to that one.—Richter.

THAT an opinion is the opinion of the multitude is, to some, a powerful recommendation; to others it appears an infallible criterion of error; to those who are truly rational, it will be neither.—Dr. G. Campbell.

"I CAN forgive, but I cannot forget," is only another way of saying, "I will not forgive." A forgiveness ought to be like a canceled note torn in two and burned up, so that it never can be shown against the man.—Beecher.

"BLESSED are the poor, for they shall obtain the kingdom of heaven, and the mourning, for they shall be comforted in a future life," hav been a millstone upon the neck of humanity, dragging it down to suffocation beneath the dead sea of faith in a fraud.—Charles Ellis.

THERE are eternal verities, such as were never made and no beginning nor can ever be destroyed or cease to be. Neither are there such eternal truths only in mathematics and concerning quantity, but also in ethics concerning morality.—Cudworth.

THE instinctive and universal taste of mankind selects flowers for the expression of its finest sympathies, their beauty and their fleetingness serving to make them the most fitting symbols of those delicate sentiments for which language itself seems almost too gross a medium.—Hillard.

TRULY a thinking man is the worst enemy the Prince of Darkness can hav; every time such a one announces himself I doubt not there runs a shudder through the nether empire, and new emissaries are trained, with new tactics, to, if possible, entrap him and hoodwink and handcuff him.—Carlyle.

IF a man deals sincerely with himself and suffers not himself to be blinded with the love of any wickedness, there is something in the frame of the mind of man, and something in the nature of truth itself which makes them agreeable and connatural to each other, as objects are suited to their proper organs; even as the eye is fitted to distinguish colors or the ear to judge of sounds.—Dr. Samuel Clarke.

LET every Infidel strive to liv a good, upright life, so that the fruits of an honest conviction may be so good that all will do them honor. Let us strive each day for purer, nobler, and better thoughts. Good thoughts make good men and women. In goodness alone is found pure, true happiness. Therefore we see that in living out a good theory we shall crown our belief with such an amaranthine wreath of beautiful and lovely deeds that all who see shal admire, love, and embrace them.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

JUST FROM MEMPHIS.

In the bar-room stepped a stranger,
O'er his face a winning smile
That betokened there was danger
To the whiskey from his gulle.

Scant his nose and very seedy;
Red his clothes, and from his eyes
Blinked expectant look and greedy,
Which he struggled to disguise.

When he grasped the whiskey bottle
Which the gay bar-tender passed,
He remarked there were a lot lil
In the place where he was last.

Then he paused; as he expected,
Came a score of questions quick:
"Just from Memphis?" and suspected
With the fever he was sick.

"Go away!" they yelled, affrighted,
"Take the bottle—don't you pay!"
And he took it, so delighted,
To the curb across the way.

Kissed it there and hugged it tightly;
Talked to it with accents sweet;
Grinned with horrid mirth, unsightly,
At the way the boys were beat.

While his fevered breath grew shorter,
Came a tremble o'er his frame:
Then he drank some—cold, cold water;
For they knew his little game.
—Oil City Derrick.

THE YOUNG TRAMP.

Hello, thar, stranger! Whar yer from?
Come in and make yerself ter hum;
We're common folks, ain't much on style,
Come in and stop a little while;
'Twon't do no harm to rest yer some.

Youngster, yer pale, and don't look well,
What! way from Bosting? Naow, du tell!
Why, that's a hundred miles or so;
What started yer, I'd like to know,
On such a tramp? Got goods ter sell?

No home, no friends? Naow, that's too bad!
Well, cheer up, boy, and don't be sad.
Wife, see what yer can find ter eat.
And put the coffee on ter heat,
We'll fix yer up all right, my lad.

Willing ter work; can't get a job,
And not a penny in yer fob?
Wall, naow, that's rough, I do declare!
What, tears? Come, youngster, I can't bear
To see yer take on so, and sob.

How came yer so bad off, my son?
Father was killed? 'Sho; whar? Bull Run?
Why, I was in that scrimmage, lad,
And got used up, too, pretty bad;
I sha'nt forgit old 'sixty-one!

So yer were left in Bosting, hey?
A baby when he went away—
Those Bosting boys were plucky, wife,
Yer know one of 'em saved my life,
Else I would not be here to-day.

'Twas when the Black Horse Cavalcade
Swept down upon our small brigade
I got the shot that made me lame,
When down on me a trooper came
And this 'ere chap stuck up his blade.

Poor feller! He was stricken dead;
The trooper's sabre cleaved his head.
Joe Billings was my comrade's name.
He was a Bosting boy, and game!
I almost wished I'd died, instead.

Why, lad! what makes you tremble so?
Your father? What, my comrade, Joe?
And you his son? Come ter my heart!
My home is yours; I'll try in part
To pay his boy the debt I owe.
—Detroit Free Press.

TESTING THE CIDER.—Yesterday afternoon a farmer, having a barrel of cider on tap in his wagon, was doing a fine retail business near the market at five cents per glass, when a man with a very thin voice and very old clothes softly advanced and said:

"Has the State Inspector of Pomological Juices inspected that cider yet?"

"I—I guess not," replied the farmer, greatly embarrassed in a moment.

"I thought not," continued the thin-voiced man; well, sir, you can draw me a full glass.

The farmer drew one, scanning the man with considerable anxiety, and when the "Inspector" had received it he held it up between his eye and the sun, and said:

"The precipitation appears most too rapid, while these floating particles denote unusual compression. Perhaps a second glass will be clearer."

He swallowed the contents of the first at exactly four gulps, and taking a second glass, he critically examined it and said:

"Ah! The precipitation is clearing away. This cider seems to hav been made from apples."

"It was, sir, and they were nice apples, too," replied the farmer.

"Let's see how a third glass will look. I'm not quite satisfied on the point of compression."

He drained the second and received the third, and as he sipped it he inquired:

"You used a hand cider press, didn't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Ah! I thought so. Worked with a lever, didn't it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Did the mill stand in a draught of air while you were working it?"

"I—I—don't know, sir."

"Well, I think it did. Be a little more careful after this. The Inspector of Pomological Juices grades this barrel 'A No. 2,' but if you take a little more pains you can increase the grade every time in the future. All right, sir—go on with your selling."

The man had been gone ten minutes before any one mustered courage to remark that he was a fraud.

"I know he's all right," persisted the farmer. "The minet I see him draw his coat tail around to wipe out the corner of his mouth I knew he was a big gun, and I was just shivering in my boots for fear he'd ask me why I didn't punch the seeds out of the apples before grinding."—Detroit Free Press.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2
114.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
115.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
117.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
118.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
119.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. 5
2. Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 3
3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 3
4. Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. 5
5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. 3
6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 5
8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. 2
9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 2
10. The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. 11. Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. 10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50: cloth,	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jean Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. B. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27,00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion.	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus.	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge. Common Sense Thoughts. Be Thyself. What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text. God Proposed. Spiritualism True. Orthodoxy False. 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism. Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 00
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 25
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 50
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah.	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	2 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	25
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	3 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	4
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D.	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Beason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	50
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.	3 50
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett; $3 00, $4 00, and	4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	50
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	50
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS

FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 47. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, November 23, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Elders, the Clyde shipbuilders, will soon discharge 1,200 men. Cause, nothing to do.

"Allow me," roared the Rev. Joe Cook the other day, "allow me to pluck up the territory of the American Union, as Milton's angels did the hills of Heaven." Oh, Joe; don't!

THIS is likely to be a winter of dreadful distress in England. In the cotton districts the forebodings are of the gloomiest kind. The glut of goods is unprecedented, and production is being restricted on all sides.

According to the Swiss tables of mortality just issued, 597 persons committed suicide last year in Switzerland, which is at the rate of one in every 4,600 inhabitants, a greater proportion han obtains in any other European country.

THE California Constitutional Convention has adopted a section providing that three-fourths of a jury may render a verdict in all cases except felony. In cases of felony a jury must be unanimous in order to secure conviction or acquittal.

IN Cincinnati the theatres are open on Sunday evenings, as well as a great number of small variety halls in which beverages are sold. There is no law against Sunday entertainments there, like the disregarded one in this city, but the clergymen are uniting in an effort to stop what they regard as a desecration of the Lord's Day. But the Germans insist that their orderly music gardens shall not be interfered with.

THE Rev. William Parry, of Worcester, Mass., comes out of an investigation badly damaged in reputation. One witness testified that the reverend gentleman was for several days on a frolic in Bristol, R. I., where he slept in a barroom, putting a bottle full of whisky under his head before he went to sleep on a bench, and taking it out empty in the morning. He did not pay his liquor bill until threatened with exposure.

PROTESTANT hymns are sung in the public school of Waltham, Mass. Fourteen Roman Catholic pupils refused to join in the singing, and were sent before the school committee to be disciplined; but the committee took no action. The only way to adjust this business is to let the psalm singing, praying, and Bible reading be attended to at the various churches, and let the public schools be devoted to educational matters alone.

THE recent recommendation of an English Bishop that his rural clergy should ride on bicycles receives a damper in the accident which happened a few days ago to the Rev. Mr Wall, a Wesleyan, at Mollingten. While he was riding down hill on a bicycle the vehicle became unmanageable, and he was thrown. He received a severe dislocation of the shoulder and enough internal injuries to keep him out of his pulpit and off of his bicycle for some time to come.

THE bad boy who put chestnut burrs under the saddle of the horse of Pastor Dietrick, near Nebraska City, ought to be severely dealt with. The pastor had been visiting some of the church sisters, and left his horse tied to a tree. On remounting him, the irritated animal speedily threw him off, breaking his arm and otherwise damaging him. Mr. Dietrick has charge of two German Lutheran churches, both of which will hav to giv him a vacation of several weeks' duration.

THE Sunday-School Times has a good and fresh story on the ten lepers, which is very opportune, as all the old ones were wearing a little threadbare. It is to the effect that a little girl in Philadelphia, when asked what had been her lesson, as she came back from Sunday-school on a recent Sunday, said: "It was about the ten tigers." "Ten tigers!" was the response. "You mean ten lepers, don't you?" "Well, anyhow, it was about some of the animals at the Zoological.

THE women of Wyoming Territory are said not to fully use their exceptional privilege of voting. They do not take much interest in politics, and to vote has not become fashionable among them. A certain class of women vote always, apparently for the sake of exhibiting themselves, but the rest go to the polls only when some man belonging to their own church or social circle is a candidate. Still, the friends of woman suffrage in Wyoming hope to make voting general by their sex.

MOODY says that the people who hold fairs in churches hav now "got so far that for twenty-five cents young men can come in and kiss the handsomest women in the room." This is bad enough, but Brother Moody is probably not informed that in some of the churches things hav come to such a pass that instead of fixing the price of this particular sort of entertainment at twenty-five cents, it is down to a dime. It is not probable that the fair-going public will demand further reductions.

ON the occasion of a recent festival in Valencia, Spain, a bull, which had been tormented all day by displays of red cloth, pricks of iron instruments, and knife cuts, was covered with spirits of turpentine at night and set on fire. He was tied by the horns to two strong posts, but broke loose and ran in agony through the streets until killed by a compassionate butcher. Valencia has long been defined by Spanish poets as a "paradise inhabited by demons." It is emphatically a Christian city with not a Libral thinker in it.

ALL the parties to lawsuit in Los Angeles, Cal., were Chinamen, and it was deemed proper to swear the witnesses Chinese fashion. The Judge, jury, lawyers, and witnesses went into the yard of the court-house, where the ceremony was conducted by a Chinese priest. Wooden tapers or joss sticks were stuck into the grounds. The oath, written in Chinese characters on yellow paper, was read aloud by every witness, after which each stepped solemnly over the burning sticks, and a priest cut off the head of a chicken. To the Chinese mind that is doubtless more solemn than kissing an old book.

NEW YORK city and adjoining New Jersey are infested by detectives, of whom some belong to the police, many to private firms, and the rest are amateurs; but, so far as can be ascertained, the whereabouts of Mr. A. T. Stewart's body is still a mystery. The search becomes keener every day, and public interest in the case is unabated. With thousands of policemen at work, and scores of detectives on the scent for that $25,000, and every citizen on the qui vive for any clue that may turn up within the range of his observation, it is surely impossible that an object so difficult to hide should long remain concealed.

A PARTIAL list of the public cash contributions of Northern cities for the relief of the yellow fever sufferers foots up $1,369,000. Of this sum, New York alone has given $395,000, or more than a quarter of the whole. Philadelphia comes next, with a contribution of $132,000, and Chicago next, with $90,000. Boston is sixth on the list, and Cincinnati tenth, the former city being credited with $55,000, or nearly one-seventh of New York's contribution, and the latter with $35,000. St. Louis and San Francisco gave more than Boston, while Cincinnati was outrun in the race of generosity by Baltimore, Louisville, and Washington.

JOHN MCINTYRE was a colored Methodist preacher, in Somerset county, Md., who aspired to be a regular pastor. His power as an exhorter was great, and he was a constant revival worker. The presiding elder was expected as a visitor by McIntyre, who, no doubt, believed that good fare might affect his chance of promotion. His larder was bare, and in the emergency he stole a hog from a neighbor's pen, killed it, and made ready to feed some of it to the presiding elder. However, the theft was discovered, and an officer searched the house. The pork was found in a bed, in spite of McIntyre's misleading assertion that it was a sick child. He has gone to state prison.

DECLINE OF RELIGION IN LONDON.—Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided at a great meeting in the Philharmonic Hall last night, when about three thousand people attended, including most of the leaders of the Union. Mr. Morley spoke in behalf of the Church Aid Society. He believed the great feature of the present day was a growing indisposition to attend public worship. This was pre-eminently the case in London. He held London to be one of the most heathenish parts of her Majesty's dominions. It was considered that if fifty-eight per cent of the people were anxious to attend the churches and chapels next Sunday morning, there would be required 1,000,000 more sittings than were provided. The most appalling truth connected with that fact was that of the sittings provided not more than one-half were occupied.—London Times.

ELOPEMENT FROM SACO, ME.—The disappearance of the Rev. Charles H. Webber alone would not attract unusual attention perhaps but when a girl is known to hav been induced to join her fortune with his it becomes very interesting. Webber was formerly a regularly ordained preacher of the Gospel in the Charlestown District, Boston, and received a call some time previous to 1875 to the Cross street Free Will Baptist Society of Saco. After several years laboring in the vineyard, Parson Webber went into the insurance business. He was an admirer of horseflesh, and of late has been very attentive to certain young women, and it was rumored that his business was not going on as swimmingly as of yore, but nothing criminal was traced to the parson's door until Tuesday. On that day he took a train on the Eastern road. It was soon afterwards noised about that one of Saco's favorite misses, belonging to a most respectable family, and 24 years of age, had taken the same train. The city Marshall started in pursuit, but as the train connected in Portland with the through train to Montreal, the fugitive escaped.—Boston Post.

A MOST interesting discussion appears in the Contemporary Review for November in regard to the use and abuse of alcohol. Sir James Paget holds that moderation in the use of what are called "strong drinks" is better than total abstinence. "As to working power, whether bodily or mental," he observes, "there can be no question that the advantage is on the side of those who use alcoholic beverages." He thinks that it conduces even to longevity, and he is clear in his conclusion that "west against east, north against south, the heirs of the moderate drinkers are better men in form of body and mind than are the heirs of abstainers." Dr. Lander Brunton, on the other hand, reasons that for most individuals alcohol is wholly unnecessary; that other stimulants which are not intoxicating are more useful; that it should never be taken except with meals or under medical advice; and that, though not positively hurtful if used in moderation, it would be better dispensed with. Dr. Albert Bernays considers the moderate use of drink to be true temperance; and while agreeing with Dr. Brunton, that, "it may be considered a matter beyond dispute that it is incorrect to partake of any alcoholic drink without some solid food," declares that "the pleasant anæsthetic effects of a single glass of good beer at a meal in which meat or cheese forms an important feature cannot be denied by those who have tasted it."

CLERGYMEN'S RECENT UTTERANCES.—The Rev. Henry Jefferson, African Methodist, of Antonio, Texas, being arraigned in court for stealing a barrel of flower, says: "Guilty, your Honor."—The Rev. James Berriman, Baptist, of Davenport, Iowa, said that the woman who bleached her hair or painted her face was unfit to be a member of any church.—The Rev. Doctor Dixon, Methodist, of New Albany, Indiana, replied to the accusation of trying to induce a young woman of his congregation to elope with him: "It is an outrageous lie."—The Rev. Doctor Withrow, Presbyterian, of Boston, expresses the opinion that "children who hav, when grown, the greatest influence in worldly affairs are not born beneath elegant canopies."—The Rev. James Hodgson, Adventist, of Petersburg, Virginia, thus advises his congregation: "Get your ascension robes ready by the 5th of next January, for that day will see the end of the world."—"I meant no harm," said the Rev. Joseph H. Beale, Methodist, of Wallingford, Connecticut, when arraigned before a church committee on a well-sustained charge of kissing seven young women.—The Rev. George Hazzard, Seventh Day Baptist, of Indianapolis, said that all persons who observed Sunday as the Sabbath would go to hell, because they broke one of the ten commandments.—The Rev. Mr. Clay, Lutheran, of St. Louis, advocates a political Christian party, whose candidates should be only Christians, and whose principle should be the Christianizing of the country. A President, he believed, could be elected on this basis.

Events of the Week.

BUSINESS failures are becoming alarmingly frequent in England.

FULTON Fish Market, this city, was burned the 19th. Loss, $125,000.

THE Oneida Community has purchased large addition to its farm.

TWELVE negroes were killed during the election excitement in Tensas parish, La.

FARE from Cincinnati to New York is down one dollar, owing to railroad competition.

WASHINGTON Territory has elected a Republican Congressman (Brents) by 1,500 majority.

A MAN was recently found dead in Cincinnati with half a gallon of whisky in his stomach.

THE lower portion of Rome, Italy, is overflown, the river Tiber having burst its banks.

FOUR corpses were recently captured from a party of resurrectionists in Zanesville, Ohio.

A MAN was stabbed and killed in Chatham Square, this city, in broad daylight a few days ago.

THE Buffalo clergy are laboring hard to annihilate Ingersoll. He affects the parsons as a red rag does a bull.

THE American ship Lookout was wrecked a short time ago on the coast of one of the Japanese islands. Three men lost.

THE explosion of a locomotive boiler, in Mahanoy City, Pa., on the 16th, caused the death of five persons. Several others were severely injured.

THE largest safe in the world has just been completed for the United States Sub-Treasury in this city. It is as large as an average farm house.

A TERRIBLE fight between blacks and whites occurred at Xenia, Ohio, on the 17th. Ten intoxicated men were engaged. Three men were killed. Further trouble is feared.

A FRUIT peddler of Bridgeport, Conn., has accomplished the feat of walking 521 miles in six days, beating the record of O'Leary, the world's champion, by nearly half a mile.

THE Marquis of Lorne, son-in-law to Queen Victoria and newly appointed Governor-General of Canada, is on his way to his new country. Grand preparations are being made in Canada for his reception.

A CATHOLIC priest was found drunk in the street in this city a few days ago. He had $500 in gold, a gold watch and chain, and a thousand dollars' worth of diamonds in his possession when taken to the station-house.

FIVE acres of the business part of Bradford Pa., were burnt on the night of the 14th. The loss is very heavy. Atlantic City, N. J., came near sharing the fate of Cape May on the 15th; several buildings were destroyed by fire.

AN attempt was made to assassinate King Humbert of Italy on the 17th. While the King was entering the city of Naples, a young cook thrust at him with a dagger fastened to the end of a pole; but the King escaped with a slight scratch.

COLD-WATER MURPHY and pure-water Mundy, the great Come-to-Jesus temperance apostles, are in hot and muddy water at present. Cause: Murphy spells God thus, G-o-l-d, and insists upon having $200 worth of it every week for his services.

A SANITARY conference, composed of some of the leading physicians in the country and delegates from the different state boards of health, is now in session in Richmond, Va. It will endeavor to discover the cause and preventive of yellow fever.

THE Episcopalians of Arlington, N. J., recently gave a "nigger minstrel" show in the Methodist church of that town for the purpose of raising money to help build a new church. The Methodists hav rededicated the church to appease their offended deity.

MR. HOPE, whose picture of Charles the Fifth was considered obscene by Comstock, has opened a free art exhibition over his store. His notices say that "small boys unaccompanied by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Morality not admitted."

Selections.

[From The Index.]

The Liberty of Printing.

AN ADDRESS AT THE SECOND ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT SYRACUSE, OCT. 26, 1878, BY THE HON. E. P. HURLBUT, OF ALBANY, N. Y.

MR. PRESIDENT, AND BRETHREN OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE—LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: My subject is "The Liberty of Printing"—a matter of the utmost concern to an enlightened age, and priceless in a land of freedom; and should I stumble under its weight, by reason of age or infirmity, I trust that, in your charity, I may hav credit at least for good intentions, which are considered by some as not a mean order of talents.

The Liberty of Printing—what is it? It is, speaking figuratively, to enjoy an intellectual atmosphere as free as the material one which we breathe, being on our guard against impurities.

It is to stimulate and be stimulated by the oxygen and ozone of the cultured human intellect, avoiding the deadly malaria lurking in the marshes and sewers lying at the base of the depraved mind.

It is the parent of science, the educator of our race, the unfettered moral and intellectual giant, under whose tread and at whose call mankind hav torn the serf's collar from their necks, broken the chains of kings and emperors, and compelled pope, prelate, and priest to giv a reason for the faith that is in them, or thenceforth to resign their leadership of mankind.

In France it demolished the Bastile; in Spain it abolished the Inquisition, and in New England Cotton Mather as an "institution;" although the latter died hard, maintaining with his latest breath "that there is a God, a devil, and witches."

Public sentiment, stimulated by the press, abolished the slave trade in Great Britain, slavery in her West India colonies, and finally slavery in these United States. It consolidated Italy, and shut up the vicegerent of heaven in the Vatican. Without the liberty of printing, a democratic republic cannot exist; a plea for the former is a plea for its life.

Thus knowledge, science, virtue, human enlightenment, and progress—law, order, and free government—are founded on books, as the world was once fabled to rest on Atlas. We hav been taught to reverence the Book; let us rather hold all good books to be sacred.

But all books are not good; and here we encounter a difficulty which the wisest philosophers, jurists, and statesmen hav been greatly embarrassed in their attempts to remove.

Attend to one of the most gifted of mankind, treating of this subject. "I deny not," says he, "but that it is of the greatest concernment in the Church and Commonwealth to hav a vigilant eye how books demean themselves, as well as men, and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors: for books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a progeny of life in them, to be as active as that soul whose progeny they are; nay, they do preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively and as vigorously productive as those fabled dragon's teeth, and, being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men.

"And yet, on the other hand, unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as a good book; who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself—kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit, embalmned and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. It is true, no age can restore a life, whereof, perhaps, there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary, therefore, what persecutions we raise against the living labors of public men—how we spill that seasoned life of man, preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be committed, sometimes a martyrdom; and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at the ethereal and fifth essence, the breath of reason itself—slays an immortality rather than a life."

Thus wrote that great scholar, statesman, and poet, John Milton, on "The Liberty of Unlicensed Printing." His argument was designed to overthrow a statute, then in full force in England, "To regulate printing, that no book, pamphlet, or paper shall be henceforth printed, unless the same shall be first approved and licensed by such, or at least one of such, as shall be thereto appointed." The statute once abolished, he claimed that all printing should be free—except that authors should be held responsible for the abuse of their freedom; or, to use his own words, that the law should "thereafter confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors," for the printing of offensive books.

How are we to enjoy the benefit of good books without incurring the evil of bad ones?

In the olden time it was attempted to draw the line in Greece; and books which were regarded as Atheistical and blasphemous, or libelous, were burned, and the authors banished. Of books tending to voluptuousness they took no heed; and an ancient poet complained that for this reason there was a dearth of chastity.

Ancient Rome did but little on the subject; some books were condemned and burnt—books that were blasphemous—but a censorship was never established until after the invention of printing, when the popes were alarmed at its influence in the diffusion of knowledge. They prohibited the printing of certain heretical books, and forbade their subjects to read them, by their famous Index, under pain of censure or excommunication.

This censorship spread over Europe like a malarious atmosphere, until even liberty-loving England at last embraced it. But as she was the last to adopt, so, let it be remembered to her honor, that she was the first to abolish it; and now, so far as I know, the main, if not the only restrictions which are in practical operation on the liberty of the press in that country are in reference to libels on private character, and obscene books, prints, drawings, and pictures.

In these United States there has never existed a censorship of the press; but of late it has been compelled to attend to a grim farce, in which a notable Paul Pry has been the sole actor. Such has been the success of his performances that he has completely "brought down the house"—but mainly, I trust, on his own head. Now, while I do not object to the ostensible aim and object of this procedure,—to wit, the suppression of obscene literature—I protest, in the name of liberty and human rights, against the course and manner of it, as low and mean, too cunning to be innocent, too sharp to be honest, oppressive, and at war with the whole theory of administration in a free government.

Let us examine this subject, with a view to secure the just freedom of the press, and at the same time to prevent so much of its licentiousness as is practicable. I know this is delicate ground, and is rendered doubly so under our complicated system of government; so that we need all the lights of the law, and of human experience and philosophy, in order to achieve success.

Now, as I have said, England intends that her press shall be free; and yet in the reign of her present beneficent queen she has passed statutes against obscene books, pictures, etc., and endeavored to suppress them.

The wilful exposing of an obscene print, or indecent exhibition, is an indictable offense at common law, ranking with the indecent exposure of the person. As there is no absolute freedom for man in the social state, so there is and can be none for the press. All social and moral freedom is limited by rights. There is a natural, and there is a civil freedom; and the latter only is accorded to man in the social state. The first, if he were the only ape-like man existing at the beginning of our evolution, was absolutely free. But the moment he came to have peers, he found he had to conduct within certain limits, which respected the rights and feelings of others, or he would be treated not as a respectable Adam, but rather as the first "tramp."

At length, after long ages of experience in the social state, the idea of not doing to another what he would not have done to himself became seated in the fibres of his brain, and was transmitted by heredity, so that now the essence of all morality and all law may be summed up in a precept of eight words, and can be taught without express revelation or a burdensome priesthood, to wit, Be just and kind to all sensitive beings.

There is, as I was saying, no liberty in the social state which has not respect to others' rights and feelings. You may not slander a man or woman without being amenable to the law; and yet this responsibility, which is a decided infringement of the absolute freedom of speech, obtains in every state in the Union.

The constitutions of these states all, however, declare that speech shall be free; but by what language do they declare it? In this—to wit: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." And in the New York Constitution it is written that "in all prosecutions or indictments for libels, the truth may be given in evidence," clearly showing that the constitutional freedom of speech and of the press, thus secured to every citizen, was to be limited by the rights of others; that libelers should be held responsible as for an abuse, and that the just restraint and punishment of the licentious exercise of that freedom was not to be regarded as a violation of it.

If by the words, "being responsible for the abuse of that right," it were intended to limit such abuse to libels on private character, as some contend, why did not the framers of the Constitution say so in exact words, instead of employing a phraseology which implied a great deal more? They were familiar with the common law, which went further, and condemned as offenders as well the authors of obscene prints, drawings, and pictures as others who offended against good morals and manners.

The Constitution of Louisiana in the days of Edward Livingston declared that "Printing presses should be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the Legislature, or any branch of the government; that the free communications of thoughts and opinions are one of the invaluable rights of man, and that every citizen may freely speak, write, and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

Mr. Livingston was appointed a commissioner to frame a criminal code under this Constitution. He was a truly great man, statesman, and jurist. No American lawyer ever enjoyed a higher reputation, either at home or abroad. He was a firm supporter of the liberty of the press, and his code provided penalties against its infringement. He was liberal in his views of religion, and expressly provided, for the first time in this country, that the religious opinions of a witness should neither affect his competency nor his credibility. His code as reported was the admiration of jurists and publicists all over the world, and will endure as a perpetual monument to his fame. I feel the utmost assurance that, in framing the law on this subject, Mr. Livingston weighed most critically all the objections that can be raised against a law punishing the authors of obscene prints. While deliberating on the provisions of the common law as to the offenses of a moral nature, he had doubts and misgivings as to what portion of them he would embody in his code; and, "while yet he had formed no decision," he wrote to a learned doctor of the civil law, expressing his doubts and difficulties, asking for advice and suggestion, and saying that one of his embarrassments arose from "the difficulty of defining the offense." He objected to the "general expression of the English law," as "putting too much power in the hands of a fanatic judge with a like-minded jury." But after full reflection, he at last settled upon the following as a safe and salutary law, and reported it to the Legislature of Louisiana for enactment.

Title sixteen of his code concerns "Offenses against Morals," and the second chapter of this title provides for the punishment of "Offenses against Decency," the first section whereof is as follows:

"If any one shall make, publish, or print any obscene print, picture, or written or printed composition, manifestly designed to corrupt the morals of youth, or shall designedly make any indecent or obscene exhibition of his person, or the persons of others, by which pudicity" (modesty or chastity) "is offended, he shall be imprisoned not more than six months, or fined not more than one thousand dollars, or both; and the imprisonment, or a part of it shall be in close custody."

This statute he considered to be in entire harmony with the liberty of the press, as secured by the American Constitutions; and I emphatically concur in his opinion, and see now how wise and guarded is the law he proposed. The print or picture must be "obscene." The instinct of every man and woman of ordinary intellect and common modesty defines the meaning of that word. You seem to need hardly any explanation about it, any more than you do to define the peculiar odor of that animal of which this country is so happy as to enjoy the monopoly, and known to our natural history as mephitis Americana. Your sense of smell defines his odor. So in the case of an obscene picture; you look at it, and turn away offended, disgusted. You read the obscene book, and are shocked in every modest fibre of your brain. If you need any further guide, the common law everywhere prevalent will supply illustrative cases.

But this wise and cautious law-giver did not stop with the one word "obscene;" the book or print must also be "manifestly designed to corrupt the morals of youth"—the author having the wisdom to forsee that any further abridgement of the liberty of the press would work more evil than good; while the suppression of obscene prints, designed, or mainly tending, to corrupt the morals of youths, was such a beneficial work as no law-giver could properly neglect.

There are those who demand that the statute shall define what it means by "obscenity." With jurors in general it would not be necessary, and it requires their verdict in order to convict. I confess I hav not the capacity to define it by words, so as to preclude all possibility of error in the courts. That cannot be done for any law. Perhaps the only thing that can be done would be to specify certain prints that shall not be deemed obscene, which would be saying what is not rather than what is obscenity. You see the difficulty when the law is applied to pictures, in which case you would have to giv illustrations, in order to be definite, and your statute book itself would become pictorial and immoral at once. The picture defines itself, and so do most obscene prints. A lawyer would say, after adopting Mr. Livingston's provision, leave it to the juries and the courts under the common law, and be sure you have intelligent juries and competent judges.

I hav no objection, however, to a proviso, by which it should be declared that an agument or treatise written in sincerity and good faith—in which no obscene words should be employed, although its doctrines, if carried into practice, would hav a corrupting influence—should not be deemed within the meaning of the statute against obscene prints; but I feel assured that, when we narrow down the offense, as in the Louisiana code, we shall be reasonably secure from dangerous constructions.

A case has arisen in which the author of a pamphlet, without employing an obscene word, has advocated a course of conduct between the sexes utterly subversive of civilization, the family, and the state; leading to a return to the manners of the ape-like man, or rather to those of the man-like ape. It is a clear case of inverse evolution; of an author, as the phrase is, "exceedingly backward in coming forward," and particularly forward in going backward; but I should pause long before I held it to be obscene in a legal sense, or if so, such a species of obscenity as the law could condemn, without danger of trenching on the freedom of discussion and the proper liberty of printing. It might be indictable in the court of Judge Lynch, as "an assault and battery" on society and morals, and the culprit be punished according to his code, which some are inclined to regard as an implied and necessary supplement to the democratic constitution of government.

When young and sanguine, I published certain essays on human rights, in which I remember to hav argued in favor of their natural origin; and among other things I maintained that a man had a legal right to be a fool, since nature made him so; but that society could not afford to allow him to be a knave, however nature may hav abused him, and now that I am old I see no reason to depart from that doctrine, and I would apply it to the liberty of printing. If there were nothing else to be considered but practicability, think what an army of martyrs would spring up in the literary world under a contrary rule! As the world even now can scarcely contain all the foolish books, including dollar and dime novels, so the prisons could by no means contain their authors; and moreover Dame Nature would have to get up a special evolution of Pillsbury's in order to supply the keepers!

Here, then, I take my stand. I will ask no further limitation of the liberty of printing than the code of Mr. Livingston creates, and I incline to accept no less. It is in harmony with the common law; it is constitutional; it is called for by the cultivated sentiments of mankind; and it is conservative of the morals of youth. If we maintain the residue of our criminal code, let us by no means omit that.

Having now drawn a line of separation between the liberty of the press and its licentious abuse in the state governments, we are prepared to look at the Constitution of the United States, and to see what rule is to obtain in our Federal Union.

We encounter at once the provision in the Constitution of the United States, that "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press;" so that the question again recurs, What is this freedom of the press; and is it one in the states and in the confederacy? I hav labored in vain unless I hav shown that it is not absolute and unlimited; that the press is not at liberty to print false libels on private character, nor to publish obscene prints or pictures. This would not be freedom, but licentiousness; and it is nowhere written that laws cannot be passed by the proper authorities restraining that. That which the state constitutions and laws ordain on this subject defines the freedom of the press. Nay, the framers of the constitutions of the states and also of the United States, in employing the phrase "freedom of the press," used it in the sense well understood, and as defined by the writers on the common law; and let us see what they say on the subject. Sir William Blackstone, the most accomplished of them all, who wrote before any of these constitutions were framed, holds this language:

"The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints on publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matters when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiment he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done both before and since the Revolution, is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man, and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion, and government."

He argues then in favor of punishing the licentiousness of the press, and concludes thus: "And to this we may add that the only plausible argument heretofore used for the restraining the just freedom of the press, 'that it was necessary to prevent the daily abuse of it,' will entirely lose its force when it is shown (by a reasonable exertion of the laws) that the press cannot be abused to any bad purpose without incurring a suitable punishment; whereas it never can be used to any good one when under the control of an inspector. So true it will be found that to censure its licentiousness is to maintain the liberty of the press."

Now, I hold that the phrase, "freedom of the press," means the same in the Federal and the state constitutions, and in all nothing more than freedom from previous censorship; the states, and not the Federal Government, having the power to punish abuses.

And now assuming that the states where the printing is conducted by their laws condemn and punish obscene prints, can a paper containing matter condemned by such laws gain any new right or exemption by being placed in the mails? Is it suddenly cleansed there? The obscene print was not free at its birth, and can gain nothing by setting out on its travels through the mails. The stigma and the disability still rest on it. It was never free (except from a licenser), and can never become so until obscene literature becomes innocent and right by the common law and the statutes of the several states. And when that shall happen, it will be of little consequence what matter shall be printed or mailed, for law, reason, and morality will hav departed from the land.

It is a maxim of the law that a man shall gain nothing by his illegal act. A print that has no right to exist can claim no protection from the law, which does not cherish, but rather abates, nuisances. Shall the law, then, not only protect, but carry thousands of miles, and distribute to tens of thousands of people, prints which it condemns as infamous, and whose authors it punishes by fine and imprisonment? Shall the government become an accessory after the fact, and at the same time hold its lash over the head of the principal? This would be to the last degree unreasonable.

The state and Federal governments together constitute a complete sovereignty over the press and the distribution of printed matter through the mails, and this would be the sum of their joint operations; the state would define and control the liberty of the press, would punish and condemn obscene prints, and imprison offenders; while the United States would circulate such prints to the utmost limits of the very state that forbids and punishes them. The state would fine the offensive author and printer, while the United States would take a fee from them, a reward as carrier, and assist their trade in corrupting the morals of youth. The state would hav acted wisely, but Uncle Sam would hav played either the knave or the fool, and he might devoutly cry "In God we trust" forever, and stamp it holily on every poor penny he has got, but he would share the fate of other hypocrites, for nobody would trust him.

Now the power to establish post-offices, and post-roads, and to carry the mails having been delegated as a Federal power, resides in the Government of the United States, to the exclusion of the several states. In executing this power, the Government is clothed with a limited sovereignty, and may do whatever is necessary and proper or conducive to the end of carrying the mails, so as to answer the intent and object of their institution. It may appoint and control its agents; may punish fraud, robbery, and other offenses which obstruct, hinder, or prevent the success of the mail enterprise. When it punishes a robbery, or other offense against the mails, it is not for the purpose of a general correction of the public morals, or of enforcing any o he Ten Commandments, but to enable it to succeed in safely delivering the mails. It is the duty of the Government to remove all obstacles to the complete and beneficial exercise of its power, which is useful, beneficent, and concerns all the people. It therefore punishes offenses which interrupt, prevent, or embarrass its operations, lest it should fall short and fail of its duty.

But the power delegated to the General Government was bestowed by the states, which made criminal the printing and sending abroad of obscene publications; and when they surrendered the power of carrying the mails, did they intend to destroy or defeat their own purposes, and to arm an enemy in the agent which they created that should destroy the efficacy of their own laws? Was it not expected that the power delegated should be so exercised as not only to be beneficial, but innocent in its operation? that in respect of the matter carried, the states and the United States should act in concert? that the latter should not disseminate what the former stamped with infamy?

Would the state itself, if carrying the mail, imprison the obscene author, and yet carry and distribute his filthy goods? And shall we hold to such a narrow construction of the Federal powers as will make the states and the United States thus play at cross-purposes? I think not.

By stuffing the mails with obscene matter, the service is made to exceed and overdo its proper office; to be harmful and a nuisance rather than a benefit to the people; and it seems hardly to be straining a point to hold that, by the delegation of power to Congress to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers conferred in reference to the mails, authority is desired to prevent as well the mischiefs of carrying obscene literature as those arising from mail robbery, so that the service should be protected as well from the dangers of excessive, as those of inadequate performance, and be not only useful, but harmless—at least to such extent as not to be accessory to crime. It is but a mode, in either case, of protecting its limited sovereignty, and discharging its office with integrity and decent dignity.

The case is widely different from that presented in the days of Jackson, when Congress was agitated by a proposal to exclude printed articles against slavery from the mails. Slavery is not sanctioned by the law of Nature, nor by the common law, and can only obtain by local and wrongful legislation. Being contrary to natural right, and offensive to the just sentiments of the civilized world, it was universally lawful, and even commendable, to write and speak against it.

The exception in a few Southern states, created by unjust legislation, could not render a dissertation against slavery, written and printed in a free country, unlawful in itself. If the paper were innocent in its inception, by the law of the place where it had its origin, it did not lose its character by being placed in the mails. And so it is evident that Congress could not throw it out of the mails without trespassing on the right of property and abusing its power. The only act of repression could be done by the slave state after the mail service was completed. The paper was innocent when placed in the mails, innocent while being transported, and when delivered, and could only become offensive by force of a local law, operating on the person to whom the printed matter was addressed, after he had received it. No wonder that learned jurists and wise senators refrained from laying hands on such printed matter, and thrusting it out of the mails, as mentioned in the very able an ingenious argument of Mr. Wakeman, delivered at the late "Indignation Meeting" in Boston.

But the printed matter which I would exclude from the mails is unlawful in the place of its origin, unlawful during its transit, and unlawful at the place of its destination. Its preparation is a crime, its author a criminal, its possession and circulation a crime, in most, if not all, civilized countries, and wherever the common law prevails, or its spirit has been embodied in a statute; and if the carrier or distributor be a private person, he would be particeps criminis in judgment of law. And now shall we place the Federal Government in the same category?

This government assumes the burden of the mails; it may say when and where it will carry them, what it will carry, and what it will not; for it seems too clear for debate that a power to choose implies also a power to reject. And if there be a power to reject any printed matter—as I contend there is, if it be obscene and unlawful—an incidental power exists to make that rejection effectual. This is usually done by the infliction of pains and penalties; and in the infliction of these the government proceeds, not as against moral offenses, but offenses against the proper regulation of the mail service. I concede that any step beyond this would be pure usurpation and tyranny on the part of the Federal Government.

It is a business, this carrying of the mails, within the competency of private persons. Let us imagine our Uncle Sam carrying the mail-bag on his own broad shoulders, having told everybody what he would carry and what he would not, and a person should come and insist upon cramming his mail-bag with bad matter which the old gentleman had sworn he would not carry, I think our uncle would make no bones of settling the matter off-hand, pedibus et manibus, to the utter discomfiture of the assailant; and he would serve him right. It would be a mode, according to the rhetoric of such cases, of "putting a head on him"—an article of furniture which he would seem greatly to need.

It is conceded that a single undivided sovereignty like the Government of Great Britain can exclude obscene literature from the mails by seizing the foul prints, and the infliction of pains and penalties. But it is claimed that in our distribution of powers between the states and the Federal Government this authority has not been conferred on the latter. Where, then, can it be found? If reserved to the states, or the people, it is clearly not available; for no state can touch the mail service without trenching on a power it has in general terms delegated to Congress; and no popular mass can meddle with the mails without being guilty of riot. So it is left that, if the Congress of the United States has not the power to exclude obscene prints from the mails, this one item of sovereignty is lost, and our government has tied its hands, so as to be at the mercy of those who deal in obscene literature as a profession and business. A construction of the Federal Constitution which leads to such a conclusion is surely too narrow to be sound.

Now to my mind there seems to be nothing in the way of protecting the mails from foul matter but the fear of violating the freedom of the press; and as I trust you are by this time satisfied that there ought to be no obstacle in that, we come to the inquiry, What is the Federal Government to do in reference to obscene prints?

In my judgment, Congress should declare that such prints are not mailable matter; but in doing so should employ the word "obscene" only, following the language of the provision in the code of Mr. Livingston as to the corruption of youth; being exceedingly particular, so that no religious fanatic or visionary moralist could find a word or clause on which to base a persecution of anybody for God's sake!

A God of ordinary ability is supposed to be capable of taking excellent care of himself, and to scorn the assistance of a creature but imperfectly developed from the ape.

The law should then affix such a penalty as would be sufficient to deter people from mailing obscene publications, and no more; for the object is not to make a moral code, nor a penal code, nor enforce a creed, nor build up a catechism, but simply to protect the government in the fit and proper discharge of its function as mail carrier.

A fine of a moderate sum for the first offense would be sufficient, say not exceeding fifty or a hundred dollars; and for the second offense, imprisonment not exceeding six months. In all cases where punishment and penalties are inflicted, the legislature should be careful to observe the supreme law, which ordains that excessive fines shall not be imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

If the Government should find it necessary to go further, and to seize the foul matter mailed (a delicate procedure, and one which nothing but necessity can warrant), it would encounter a provision in the Constitution securing the people against unreasonable searches and seizures, and forbidding warrants for that purpose except upon probable cause, and supported by oath. The people are not secure from all searches, but only from unreasonable ones, without probable cause and legal warrant.

So used are the people to this, that the first thing a plain man thinks of when he loses anything mysteriously is a search warrant. It is the one idea with him, as was an "alibi" in every case at law with Tony, the venerable parent of Sam Weller.

It may be a very difficult process, but it can hardly be deemed "unreasonable," to search for and to seize prints whose aim is to corrupt youth, whose existence is a crime, and which are forced into the mails against the express injunction of the law. I will leave this to the mothers of the land: they hav a right to be heard on this subject, and to hav their feelings respected by the laws. Let their quick sense of fitness, their apt and delicate judgment, make the decision, and woe to that man and that nation that ventures to disregard it!

But if the Government shall be compelled by the persistence of wrong-doers to seize the foul prints, how shall this be done? The only course which occurs to my mind, from what reflection I hav been able to bestow on the subject, would be to commit the search to the several deputy postmasters, who should apply to a United States commissioner or judge for a warrant, and under that to seize the suspected prints, and carry them before the officer issuing the warrant, who should determine on reading or inspection whether obscene, and tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or not. If he held them obscene, the owner should hav notice and a right of appeal to the Circuit Court, and thence to the Supreme Court of the United States; for no man should be thus deprived of his property, and stigmatized as a public offender, without the full benefit of a judicial trial.

It is better that obscene literature should prevail for a season than that any man, however humble, however depraved, should be deprived of his legal rights without due process and the enlightened judgment of the law.

Brethren of the National Liberal League, you are organiz d to perform a necessary and a noble work—no less than that of perfecting our system of free government, founded by a wise and virtuous generation, and intended to effect a perfect separation of the Church from the State. The task which you hav assumed to execute is herculean, taxing your strength and resources to the utmost. You hav to make war on the myths, traditions, and prejudices of long ages. You hav a thoroughly organized majority, misled by their spiritual guides, to contend against—a majority which, though differing in many things, and forever disputing among themselves, nevertheless is always ready to unite against you; as a common enemy; and you see Catholic and Protestant hugging each other in sweet embrace, as of late in New Haven, while maintaining the Bible, prayer, and psalmody in the common schools. If all the discordant religious sects could unite, they would paralyze your efforts, render the idea of a purely secular government infamous, and make religion the parent and master of the state. The plan of our forefathers would be stamped out, and time might restore that grand Christian invention, the Inquisition.

Be sure, then, that you do nothing to unite and consolidate forces so dangerous to a free state. As yet you are not surrounded by such intelligence as will forgive your slightest mistake in reasoning, or error in morals. A believer can do with impunity what will excite the utmost horror if done by a skeptic. As such of you as have no Redeemer may not commit fraud nor forgery, nor rob a bank, nor poison, nor commit adultery with impunity, so you cannot commit a mistake, even in respect of the liberty of unlicensed printing, without calling down on your heads and on your cause the loudest denunciations of the "unco guid." "Ah! ha!" would say those who pardon the offenses of the godly, "it is just as we expected. These Infidels oppose our holy religion from no other motive than to get rid of the moral restraints which it imposes; for you see that where two or three of them are gathered together, they incontinently betake themselves to reading and circulating the 'Fruits of Philosophy' and 'Cupid's Yokes.'" And all the congregation would lift up their pious voices, and exclaim in the language of the immortal Widow Bedott, "O Elder Sniffles, how true that is!"

I entreat you, therefore, to be wise; and being in fact the true friends of morality and enlightened freedom, that you take no such position on the subject of the freedom of the press as will enable even a Jesuit to argue that you are the friends of licentiousness.

Above all things, reverence the family as founded in Nature, and tolerate nothing which can corrupt the morals of youth. All power, even the most salutary, is capable of being abused; but an argument based on its abuses cannot overthrow the power itself. If otherwise, no government could stand. Let imperfect laws be amended; let unjust ones be abolished; let abuses in administration be corrected; and when government appoints to office one who, like Satan, becomes

"The tempter ere the accuser of mankind," a spy whose moral qualities fall below the requirements of even that mean office, let him, but not the government, be abolished.

Judge Hurlbut then read the following draft of a United States statute on this subject:

A LAW TO PREVENT THE FORWARDING AND DISTRIBUTION OF OBSCENE LITERATURE BY THE MAILS.

SECT. I. Be it enacted, etc.

That there shall not be forwarded by the mails, nor distributed by any deputy post-master, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, manifestly designed, or mainly tending, to corrupt the morals of youth.

SECT. II. If any person shall deliver at any post-office, with intent to hav forwarded, or distributed, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be fined for the first offense, not exceeding ——dollars, and for the second or any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not exceeding ——months.

Provided, however, that no printed book, argument, essay, treatise, or disquisition, put forth in sincerity and good faith, and in which no obscene words, phrases, or pictures shall be employed, although its doctrines or sentiments, if carried into practice, would have a bad influence on society or government, shall be deemed obscene within the meaning of this law.

Communications.

Muddled Edward.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav never before now ventured to send communications to the press, for the reason that my friends hav always told me that I was too "innocent-hearted" and "muddled." But this has never been said to me since the last Congress of the National Liberal League. I had the great honor to be a "regularly appointed delegate" to the Syracuse Convention, and while there read the Syracuse daily papers, and thus lost my first disqualification for newspaper writing. I also had the additional great honor of being introduced and personally speaking to that great man who combines in one office editor, minister, president, of being a Bostonian—in short, the man whose name stands first among us Liberals (in the alphabet). After several conversations with this great man I hav ceased to be "muddled." Ever since the Convention my mind has been perfectly clear—clear enough, I think, to write to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

This morning, after a very refreshing sleep and a clear head at the breakfast table, I read, on the leading page of one of the most orthodox of New York's daily papers, the editorial which I hav copied below. I thought I was dreaming, or that I must hav in my hand either The Index or the Syracuse Courier. But that you may know that I was not dreaming, I will certify that the following is copied directly from an editorial in the first leading column of the New York Tribune (founded by Horace Greeley), of the date of November 15, 1878:

"Yesterday's session of the International Humane Society, which is another name for a convention of Mr. Bergh's societies, was made noticeable by a singular announcement from one of the officers that he had purposely refrained from inviting a single clergyman of Baltimore to the meeting, because 'they differ so much in their views generally that he thought their presence might break up the harmony of the society.' Mr. Bergh himself also reflected very severely upon the cloth. It will astonish a good many excellent men to discover that they are regarded as such inveterate disturbers of the peace that they hav been excluded on that account from all participation in the meeting of a peculiarly benevolent society. Mr. Bergh ought to justify himself, if he can, by proving to what extent clergymen are looked upon as a dangerous class in the community, and submitting a schedule of the meetings they hav turned into riots during the last year."

Now, sir, I hope you will put this editorial in large type in THE TRUTH SEEKER, thereby giving it the benefit of your extended circulation, so that the Syracuse papers and your Boston contemporary may see it.

Though, now, I hav lost my former "innocent-heartedness," and am clear as a bell, yet my understanding tells me that you may BE ASSURED, Mr. Editor, that the Syracuse papers, the National Liberal League of America, and the man whose name stands at the head (of the alphabet) will immediately proceed to aid Mr. Bergh in submitting the schedule suggested by the Tribune.

Your "assuring" friend, EDWARD.

P. S.—If the Tribune article could reach Milwaukee, the Rev. Mr. Gordon would be very efficient in making up the schedule for the International Humane Society. E.

Sherwood, N. Y., Nov. 15, 1878.

The Late Liberal League Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I regret very much that our friends who seceded at Syracuse could not hav remained with us, but, as they feel it their duty to leave, we should wish them nothing but success in their enterprise. And I was in hopes, now that a separation had been effected, there would be no more contention between us, and that each League would go to work in earnest for the cause we all love, but I fear my desires are not to be fully realized in that respect, for I notice my old friend, Mr. Mills, in The Index of this week, is making some very serious charges against the members of the old League, some of which I know to be untrue, which shakes my faith in his other statements. He says, "The Committee on Membership had been instructed by the Convention to make out a roll of the members in attendance, and it was by neglect of their duty that it was not at hand." I was Chairman of that Committee, and Mr. D. G. Crandon was one of the members of the Committee, and he was one of the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League, and he informed the Committee that the Board had made out a full list of the members, and that he saw no necessity of making out another list, and, as no one was admitted to the hall only on tickets issued by the Board of Directors, we unanimously decided to report the list as perfected by the Board of Directors, as there were no contesting delegates. If there was any error, therefore, it was the fault of Mr. Abbot and his friends, and not that of the Committee on Membership. But I am confident there was not an illegal vote cast, and it is very unjust for Mr. Mills to insinuate any such thing.

And now permit me to refer to another thing that my friend Mr. Mills should explain. We all remember that the Syracuse papers, in their first reports of the Congress, stigmatized the majority as Freelovers. Why was this? The Syracuse Journal answers, in its issue of Monday after the adjournment, "In relation to the designation of one faction of the Convention as 'Freelovers,' it is but fair to state that the Journal was informed by several leading members of the other party that their opponents were properly so characterized."

Now who were these "several leading members" who represented the majority as "Freelovers?" One of the editors of the Journal, in a private letter to me, justifying himself in making the charge, says, "The case was stated as it was indicated to me by others." Now who gave these "indications?" The two leading friends of the Abbot party on the delegation from the Abbot League in Syracuse were C. D. B. Mills and John W. Truesdell. I am perfectly satisfied that it was not Mr. Truesdell, for I heard him state that it was not true; that neither party were Freelovers, and he was the man who first suggested to me the idea of publicly denouncing the reporter of the Journal for representing me as one of the leaders of the Freelove party. Mr. Truesdell also said that the reporter ought to be expelled for making the aspersion, so I am confident it was not Mr. Truesdell. But I know Mr. Mills was very active in the city and in the newspaper offices in behalf of the Abbot side; and if he was not one of those "leading members" who made those false representations, he now owes it to himself to say so publicly. And the charges that he now unjustly brings against the majority will still further tend to make many believe that he was one of those "leading members." I shall be pleased to hav Mr. Mills make a full denial that he so misrepresented so large and respectable a body of Liberals as was the majority of that Congress.

But be assured, Mr. Editor, I shall not trouble you with further articles of this character. There is too much work to do to spend time in contention, and if my advice would be of any value, I would say to the friends on our side of this controversy, drop it at once and go to work. Show our opponents "by our works" that we are too much in love with our principles to be drawn off of duty into the discussion of side issues. The enemy is well organized and preparing to make a desperate attack along the whole line; they only now compliment our friends who hav left our ranks because they trust it will weaken us, not because they love them more than they do us. Then let us cease firing at each other and turn all our guns on the common enemy.

The minority party represent that we are Freelovers and an immoral set of people generally. If that be so, they are well rid of us now, and it will make us no better to continue to call us bad names. I think that is the poorest way in the world to reform the vicious. For the sake of the argument we will admit that they are all as pure as the driven snow, and therefore the best way for them to reform us unfortunates is to set us a good example in good living as well as in good working. And I will suggest to my friend Mills, if he, as Chairman of the new Liberal League Committee, will go to work and organize Local Leagues all over the country, he will do the cause much more good than to find fault with the majority, especially if he is to do it so incorrectly as he has in the last number of The Index.

Probably the fact is, none of us are what the grand principles we profess demand of us as men and women. Liberalism demands very much more of its adherents than orthodoxy does. But knowing my own failings, I am willing to recognize as a brother or sister any human being of the human family, and as a Liberal Leaguer, I recognize and fellowship as co-workers all who are earnestly in love with our principles, whatever may be their opinions on other subjects, or whatever may be their private characters. I hav little fear of being injured by others' faults, but great fear from my own. The fight in this country against ignorance and superstition is to be a warm one, very much more than any of us now anticipate, and I predict that before it is ours we will be thankful for aid and support from any quarter.

Friends of freedom, let us all be true to ourselves and the principles we profess, and prepare for the coming "irrepressible conflict." In our love for humanity let us forget all diversity. H. L. GREEN.

DR. J. L. YORK spoke at Adrian, Mich., Nov. 15th, 16th, and 17th; and will speak at Sturgis Dec. 1st to 7th; at Mason, 11th to 15th; at Grand Ledge, 18th to 22d; Lansing, 26th to 29th.

THE Liberals of Saranac, Mich., will hold an anniversary meeting in honor of Thomas Paine on Jan. 29, 1879, at 7 P.M. A red-hot time may be expected. Come and bring your wife. Good speakers and music in attendance.

The Poets on Freelove.

BY THERON C. LELAND.

That famous editorial accompanying the "Card" and "Call" of the President of the National Liberal League, in The Index of Sept. 26th, contains this passage: "If it should consent to parley or compromise with the Freelove folly, or surrender itself to the management of those who are deluded by its feeble sophistries, the National Liberal League will simply commit suicide." The pretended "private letter" of September 7th, quoted in the same editorial, says: "The danger is that from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, in all of which cities, as I think, the Freelove doctrine has obtained among Liberals a considerable foothold, the Convention may be overborne and swamped. Then there is more or less of an infusion of this virus all through the country." Also in that feeble crow of "victory" screamed out by that game chanticleer who fought and run away [Index of Oct. 31st], this passage occurs: "The old flag flies triumphant above the latter," [the bolting League] "and every Liberal who refuses to be the willing or unwilling abettor of obscenity and Freelove will speedily rally to its support." Also the bolting party in the Convention continually charged Freelove upon the majority. So much for the denial of the Freelove Christ on one side of this house divided against itself.

On the other side, in his letter of October 29th, to the N. Y. Times (republished in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 9th), in correction of the Times' report of the Syracuse Convention, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer says, "If I thought that there was the slightest shadow of real reason for believing that either faction of the Liberal League had committed themselves to obscenity or Freelove, I should not remain an hour in such company." Mr. Bennett also, in his editorial of Nov. 2d, says, "Not a word was said by either party in favor of Freelove, not a word in favor of obscenity, still the slanderers hav persisted in calling those opposed to the Comstock laws by the vile terms named;" and further on he couples "indecency and Freelovism."

Thus it seems this Freelove is the "enfant terrible" at every reform fireside. Repudiated by everybody, this little illegitimate Cupid is the "poor pauper whom nobody owns; rattle his bones over the stones." He is like "morality" in the time of Hudibras:

"Morality, a crime
The most notorious of the time;
Morality which both the saints
And wicked, too, cry out against."

And denunciation of this ever-present intruder (confessed secretly, but denied openly) ranks with the hypocrisy of the same age and described by the same satirist:

"Hypocrisy, the thrivingst calling,
The only saint-bell that rings all in."

Now a term of such dire import ought to mean something, and ought to be defined by somebody. What idea, at its worst, does the epithet Freelove convey? We ought to know the bottom horror to which Freelove would plunge us if any of the flings from the League of "America" should stick, or any of the tucked-up skirts of the League, minus "America," should stay. In order to be perfectly fair and impartial, let us go to an authority that The Index and New England culture will not dare dispute, and that New York leaguers will heartily accept.

That grandest product of American philosophy and scholarship, Ralph Waldo Emerson, a writer of such genius and a poet so pure that, after his death, the Christians will move heaven and earth to prove him one of their order, as they did of late the great Prof. Henry and the poet Bryant. I say Ralph Waldo Emerson, who has often been enthusiastically commended by The Index, shall contribute a gem of definition to the odious term in question.

The poem, "Giv all to Love," has no doubt been read and admired by many thousands of English-speaking people, and among them great numbers who never penetrated to its deep and subtle meaning and who never had the slightest idea that it contains the whole doctrine of Freelove. Translate it into prose, or study it with a critical insistance on the meaning of words, and its doctrine is as rank as anything Wollstonecraft, Warren, Woodhull, Andrews, Nichols, Heywood, or Besant ever wrote.

GIV ALL TO LOVE.

Giv all to love;
Obey thy heart;
Friends, kindred, days,
Estate, good-fame,
Plans, credit, and the muse—
Nothing refuse.

'Tis a brave master;
Let it hav scope;
Follow it utterly,
Hope beyond hope;
High and more high
It dives into noon,
With wing unspent,
Untold intent:
But it is a god,
Knows its own path
And the outlets of the sky.

It was not for the mean,
It requireth courage stout;
Souls above doubt,
Valor unbending:
Such 'twill reward—
They shall return
More than they were,
And ever ascending.

Leave all to love:
Yet, hear me, yet,
One word more thy heart behoved,
One pulse more of firm endeavor:
Keep thee to-day,
To-morrow, forever,
Free as an Arab
Of thy beloved.

Cling with life to the maid;
But when the surprise,
First vague shadow of surmise,
Flits across her bosom young
Of a joy apart from thee,
Free be she, fancy-free;
Nor thou detain her vesture's hem,
Nor the palest rose she flung
From her summer diadem.

Though thou loved her as thyself,
As a self of purer clay;
Though her parting dims the day,
Stealing grace from all alive—
Heartily know,
When half-gods go,
The gods arrive.

I ask the careful attention of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER to this poem. I ask them to read it two, three, yea, seven times, till they apprehend every shade of its meaning. The Boston masters of a superficial, backward looking culture will never get beyond the letter of its import. It will seem to them but the jingle of a mystical rhyme of no more significance than the same writer's "Humble-Bee;" when, in fact, his "Giv all to Love," states in the terms of science as well as of poetry a vital condition of human happiness and a necessary requirement in true social relations. However, in the hope that I may succeed in opening to the Abbot class of mind some glimpses of the real meaning of these lines, I put in prose some paraphrases of the subtle thought of the poet. I cannot hope in the whole range of English speech to find other words to state the idea so poetically, so beautifully, as it is done in the poem. I shall paraphrase it prosily and simply on purpose to bring it down to the meanest capacity so as to surely include The Index people and League of America, in the hope that they may get a clearer, brighter insight than they hav ever yet done into the practical, social, and scientific meaning of the poem.

The first branch of the poet's counsel is, surrender everything to love. Do not palter and cipher and calculate and keep back a part. Giv everything, refuse nothing. Love is a brave master; let it hav its own way; follow it utterly in the confident assurance that it will guide and protect you and you will come out safe. With wing unspent, it never tires; untold intent, it never tells. It is a god—that is, it is a supreme motive and resistless force. It knows its own road, its own range, and all the little retreats, labyrinthian trails, exits and entrances, and avenues of escape. It knows how to trammel up its own consequences. Love is not for the mean. No suspicious nature, no sordid soul, no cowardly spirit, can be a pattern lover. It requireth gentle men, undoubting men, valorous men. Such it will reward, such it will exalt to heaven after heaven, and ever ascending. By implication, all lower natures, all cowards, all who liv by permission of Mrs. Grundy and move and hav their being with reference to her opinion and her respectability—such it will not reward, and they shall return less than they were, and ever descending.

Giv all to love—but this is not the hardest requirement. Be brave and devoted and loyal to your love—this, though difficult for selfish natures to do, is not of all efforts the most impossible to put forth. Leave all for love—this, though a sacrifice attainable only by the noblest and best, is yet not the severest condition prescribed by love. One word more is to be said; one command more is to be obeyed; one pulse more of firm endeavor must be imposed upon the heart, and that is, "Keep thee to-day, to-morrow, forever, free as an Arab of thy beloved." No place for bonds and vows, contracts and plighted faiths here. Cling with life to the maid while love lasts, while she loves you; but when she loves you not, when the first dawn of a change of heart, of a thought in which you hav no part, flits across her young bosom, why then the concert is over, the curtain is rung down, the lights are out, and there is no use of your sitting any longer on the benches. "Free be she fancy free," (within a hair's breadth of being the odious phrase "Freelove" in terms) and don't you detain even the hem of her garment nor the palest rose she flung from the wreath with which she crowned your last year's love. She loves you no longer. Crying won't unspill the milk of her kindness. Calmly, cheerfully, let her go. Though you loved her as yourself, as a self of purer clay; though her leaving you dims the day, darkens the light, and carries with it the grace of all the living, heartily know that when half loves—equilibrated loves, realized loves—go, whole hearts with new interests arrive.

Now the two duties, indeed, what ought to be deemed the two delights, here inculcated are, on the one hand, thorough devotion to love while it lasts; and, on the other, absolute freedom to change and even to terminate when it must. It concedes to woman the deciding power in all affairs of the heart and denies to man any right to pursue her beyond her wish, and especially denies his right to command. It insists on her queenship and his loyal subordination in the realm of love; and that is all that the wildest Freelover ever dreamed. Freelove, if it means anything, means the emancipation of woman from the domination of man in the whole affectional side of human nature. In all the interests of benevolence, charity, love, maternity, instruction of children, she should be sovereign; her power should be dominant and undisputed and her decrees supreme. That is what the poem means, and the poet and the Freelover are at one. The offense of the Freelover has this extent, no more; it is the tendency of the age which he is to blame for noting; it is the course of woman's empire taking its victorious way; and she, and her friends, can serenely smile at the slings and arrows of outrageous retrogrades, while awaiting the unfolding developments which are ushering in newer and truer social institutions for the human race.

In another place Emerson says:

"If love his moments overstay,
Hatred's swift repulsions play."

And again, in another poem he says,

"Alas! that neither bonds nor vows
Can certify possession;
Torments me still the fear that love
Died in its last expression."

Now all these sentiments so charmingly expressed, if realized, if reduced to practice, are as explosive of marriage and the family as it is now constituted, and of things as they are, as anything in Swedenborg or Fourier, Eugene Sue or George Sand, or the dreamiest romancer, seer, or Socialist who ever wrote.

But it is not Emerson alone among all the poets who utters these treasons against the established order of things. Literature—and especially poetry—is full of the same upheaving force. Pope, Milton, Watts, Moore, Byron, Burns, Shelley, Goethe, Bailey, Swinburne, Tennyson, Whitman, Mrs. Browning, are all Parnassian protestants against a scheme of social relations so full of tyranny and revolt as that now in vogue. What means this general testimony of the poets? What is the significance of these Orphic utterances, all nine of the Muses according with one voice, sitting up there in their Olympian abodes inspiring their favorites with such contraband thoughts? Is it all a lie? Is it inspiration from the pit? I think this will hardly be charged, even by the pseudo-Liberals and the apologists for Comstock. These are in fact the words of truth and soberness, as far removed from obscenity as daylight is from the dark. These are the thoughts of development and progress, dwelling in the heads and cherished in the hearts of the supremest men, gentlest men, and the queenliest women, gentlest ladies, on the planet. These are the beckoning hailings and signals of the skirmisher and the scout blazing his way and ours in the advance. This is attested by the fact that the thinkers and readers, the best brains universally, sieze on these shrilling signals from the sentinels in advance, these prophecies of the future and treasons against the past, admire them best, remember them longest, and quote them most. Another fact, too, is apparent—that the best inspirations of the best poets are at one with science, and reveal through the intuitions the same social truths that are discovered by the investigator and decreed by the scientist.

One gratifying lesson from all this for the really free-thinkers then is that New England culture soils only its own nest whenever it attempts to Cupidly yoke obscenity with Freelove. It will not succeed in the attempt. The Liberals of the United States are not fools, however they may be of "America," and they cannot be imposed upon by illusory similitudes nor by relations which do not exist.

Financial Policy.

I see by your papers of Sept. 21st and 22d ult., that you admit articles on both sides of the financial question, and as this is the topic of highest interest at the present time, I beg to say a few words.

I agree with Mr. Truesdell that too much stress is laid by the greenbackers on the contraction of the currency as exhibited in the Treasury statistics. Neither the $830,000,000 of seven-thirties, nor the compound-interest notes, whether designed for currency or not, could long remain in circulation. Their interest-bearing quality made them too valuable as an investment. So that although the fact that they were paid out to soldiers and contractors distributed them among the people, and thus gave a temporary impetus to business, yet they must soon hav gone out of circulation, and their funding into five-twenty bonds was no substantial contraction.

The fact is, as mentioned by Mr. Truesdell, that the paper circulation of the country per capita prior to 1860 was very much less than it is at the present time as shown by Treasury statistics. In 1836 it was but $9.20, in 1839 but $8.20, in 1846 but $5.10, and in 1856 but $7.00. These were all years of prosperity, but now with a paper circulation of $15 per head poverty and distress are upon us greater in degree than was ever known in the history of the country. It is evident, therefore, that we must go beyond Treasury statistics to get at the cause of the hard times.

Machinery, railroad transportation, interest on money, all bear their share in producing the present state of things; but at present finance is the main subject of discussion and I shall confine myself to that question.

In 1870 the valuation of the real and personal estate of the country was about $30,000,000,000. Considering that real estate has shrunk in value at least fifty per cent, and personal estate nearly in the same proportion, we can scarcely estimate that valuation now at over $20,000,000,000. To offset this there are interest-bearing debts due the national banks, about $1,000,000,000 besides their United States bonds; due to state and savings banks and trust and loan companies about $1,200,000,000 due in United States bonds about $1,900,000,000. The immense aggregate of state, municipal, and railroad bonds can only be guessed at, but can scarcely be less than four billions; while private debts and bonds and mortgages swell the amount to an aggregate variously estimated at from fifteen to twenty-three billions. It is save to say that the whole capital of the country is covered by the debts of the country, and much of this capital is at the present time unremunerative. The labor of the country, when but one-half or two thirds employed, is called on to pay interest on this vast amount at rates probably averaging not less than eight per cent, say $1,600,000,000 annually. Is it any wonder then that debtors giv up in despair, and that the impossibility of raising this large sum so presses upon the industrial classes that bankruptcy not only stares them in the face, but seizes upon and devours them?

But, we are coolly told that there is plenty of money in the seaboard cities to be had at two or three per cent. So there is, and why shouldn't there be, when the very effect of this high interest system is to carry money from every state, every indebted county, every great or little city, and every individual debtor of the land, into these all-absorbing money centers, there to be piled up and hoarded until the speculator who can deposit United States bonds comes forward with his security?

The remedy for this state of things must be sought in low rates of interest. If the rate were reduced to three per cent, which is about the natural increase in the wealth of the country, this great accumulation would cease, and capital, instead of seeking gain through usury, would be turned to the promotion of industry. But this cannot be done through usury laws. It is notorious that they are everywhere disregarded and violated. The only way seems to be that the Government, either by its own act or through the state and county organizations, should become the only money lender, and that all laws for the collection of loans between individuals should be repealed. In that way a fixed and low rate of interest could be established.

"But," says a clergyman of our place, holding up his hands in holy horror, "this would make such a field for corruption as the world never saw." Surely the field for corruption could not possibly be greater than that now possessed by the national banks and the money power leagued together and shaping the whole legislation of the country in their own interest for the last seventeen years. I say, on the other hand, that this system would set the wheels of industry in motion, and, by making money cheap and labor profitable, would take away the inducements to steal. Not all the labors of the forty thousand clergymen of the United States, carried on for a whole generation, would tend so much to produce honesty and integrity among the people as one year's experience of a well-regulated industrial system on the basis of low interest and fairly remunerated labor.

The policy I am advocating was substantially tried in France at the time of the German war; for although the Bank of France is a private corporation, there is no reason why the same measures might not hav been adopted by the Government itself, through a bureau or department instituted for that purpose; and we all know the beneficial effect of that policy. Why, then, should we not learn from her example? L. BRISTOL.

Vineland, N. J., Oct. 10, 1878.

Resolutions of the Cattaraugus County (N. Y.) Liberal League.

At a meeting of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League, held in Salamanca, Nov. 13th, the following resolutions, after discussion, were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we indorse the action of the Congress of the National Liberal League, recently held in Syracuse, and pledge ourselves to renewed exertion in behalf of the fundamental principles of the Liberal League movement, viz: The entire separation of Church and State; and express the opinion that the welfare of this cause demands that all other questions, so far as possible, be ignored by us until this one is settled in favor of equal rights for all.

Resolved, That we regret the secession that took place at the Congress at Syracuse, and desire to see each party maintain a conciliatory course towards the other, that in the end will result in a reunion that shall enable all the friends of the state secularization to work together for our common cause.

Resolved, That we believe the United States laws known as the Comstock laws, as construed by the courts, violate not only the spirit but the letter of the National Constitution in preventing the utterance of honest opinions, and should therefore be repealed.

Resolved, That we decidedly approve of the avowed object for which these laws were enacted—the suppression of obscene literature—and will favor and sustain the enactment and enforcement of any law for that purpose that is constitutional and so worded that it cannot be construed so as to infringe on the rights of free speech or a free press.

Resolved, That the opinions one may hold on the Comstock laws, or any other question, shall not in any manner be a test of fellowship with us, but that all who believe in the entire separation of Church and State we welcome to our ranks. H. L. GREEN, President.

A. L. BRAINARD, Sec'y.

THE New York State Liberal League Committee as now constituted is as follows: H. L. Green, Salamanca; D. M. Bennett, New York; G. L. Henderson, New York; Dr. John Winslow, Ithaca; Hon. Stephen Brewer, Cortland.

WE again urgently call upon those who are in arrears to remit the amount they are indebted to us. If they knew how badly we are in need of the money due us, we feel sure they would send it along. It is but little due from each individual, but in the aggregate the sums will amount to a good deal. We need it all sorely to enable us to pay off the demands against us and to defray the heavy expenses we are constantly under. The hard times which are pinching everybody do not allow us to escape, and we feel them severely. We ask our friends in arrears to help us out. Every patron, by looking at the little tab pasted on his paper, can tell when the time he paid for expired, and by adding twenty-five cents per month up to the end of the present year can easily tell how much to remit us. Let our appeal be not in vain.

B. F. UNDERWOOD spoke at Hannibal, Mo., Nov. 12th, 13th, and 14th; at Moberly, Mo., Nov. 16th and 17th; at Bushnell, Ill., Nov. 19th, 20th, and 21st; and will speak at Peru, Ill., Nov. 22d, 23d, and 24th.

The Radical Pulpit.

Our Leaders.—Concluded.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

Now, we ask, who shall be our leaders, and how shall they be trained? In the first place, our religious teachers must be perfectly free. We cannot tie our leaders to any set of opinions. And we ask of them two things: perfect honesty in the formation and expression of conviction, and an attempt to solve, not the religious problem of two thousand years ago, but the religious problems of to-day.

Now, we cannot find schools which will educate the men we want. Theological seminaries, or divinity schools, as they are called, do not fulfil our requirements. It is true that now and then an individual teacher in such a school is of a progressive, liberal, and scientific spirit, but the schools as a whole are hostile to free religion. The society which founded the divinity school of Harvard University—one of the most liberal in the land—prescribes that free encouragement be given to the serious, impartial, and unbiased investigation of, what? Why, the serious, impartial, and unbiased investigation of Christian truth! So you see truth has a label. A thing is not true when it is true, but it must be Christian truth. You have heard of Christian charity and Christian gentility, and now we hear of Christian truth.

Now, this is a caricature of freedom. The theological seminary says to its students, you shall inquire for yourselves, certainly, but here are limits which you dare not transgress. The divinity school says to its students, you shall inquire seriously, impartially, and with unbiased minds; but have a care that you arrive at the same conclusions as your elders, or our free scholarships and our patronage are not for such as you.

The divinity school does not meet our requirements. New demands require new institutions. We have schools for the science of law; we have schools for the science of theology; we have schools for the science of medicine, and we demand a school, not for divinity, but for the science of religion.

Do you understand, my hearers, what a mighty change is here involved? We shall no longer tremble for the result of the very principles which characterize our young society; we shall no longer have the fear that on the tenure of a single life our best hopes depend. We shall build institutions which will secure our future.

We want a school for the science of religion in which shall be taught the principles of the prevailing religious systems, in order that the student may not be trained in any one religious system, but may have all religious systems set out before him, that he may select from them what is to him the truth. We want, in the second place, instruction in ethics, including the study of the history of philosophy and a thorough mastery of at least one great philosophic system.

In the third place, we want a system of social science, as that wherein the new plans shall be chiefly distinguished from the old; for the purpose of our movement is the elevation of humanity, and in order to elevate humanity teachers of religion must know humanity, must be acquainted with the laws that govern social action, must be familiar with the age and the tendencies of the age in which they live and move.

Such a school should be established in connection with some one of our leading universities. The difficulties in our way are not such difficulties as strong wills and a conviction of the absolute necessity of the measure cannot overcome. You say the university will not recognize your school. Well, we will overcome that. We will build our school in a university town, as it has been done before. We will open our lecture rooms, and the students will flock into them, thirsting for the free waters of the new thought.

You say we need the means to establish schools. Yes, but this difficulty also can be surmounted. We need no endowments in the beginning. It is only necessary that a few thousand Liberals shall subscribe a dollar or so, no great sum, a paltry, insignificant sum, such as every poor man would willingly lay a side for some cause in which his heart is interested. If this were done, we should ere long have a princely income for the purpose. I say, we need no great sums in the way of endowment in the beginning; we need only a few earnest workers—a few great hearts to stir the people to their duties. When the time comes, I trust you will also answer readily. We are here to do the work for you, and you, as well as others, understand the need of it. You have begun now the third year of our society, and you can judge of its benefits. You would not have your boys and girls go back to the slimy superstitions and the illiberal and ignoble methods of another day. You would not have this monument, which we are seeking to erect to liberty, become a ruin—a monument only to the impotency of even the best human aspirations.

We demand, in such a school as I have indicated, three things. We demand freedom—perfect freedom; honesty—perfect honesty, and the greatest adequacy obtainable. By freedom I mean the substance, not the semblance. We desire to place before the growing mind of the student all the material necessary to his own advancement, giving the amplest scope to his conscience and his judgment, so that in making up his decision he shall be perfectly unfettered. And if there be no constraint to mar the judgment, if perfect freedom be granted, perfect honesty follows of itself.

It has been the great bane of theological seminaries that they place a premium on dishonesty. Take a young man who devotes himself to the ministry, often influenced by his relatives, who desire, perhaps, to find a comfortable income for their young friend. The young man, an inexperienced boy, enters with avidity upon his theological studies. In these surroundings he hears but one-sided views; no impartial statement of the great issues is possible in an institution whose avowed object is to address the minds of the students to some particular creed; no fair interpretation of the text is possible to men whose judgment is warped by their very fees, who are bound to a particular set of dogmas, and who cannot, if they would, see truth if it clashes with their creed. The young man for a time accepts his master's views, and looks through his master's glasses, and the whole world wears one color. But after a time he suspects, and, withal, the monotony tires him. Then comes the day when the first skeptical book falls into his hands. His soul catches fire, and he thirsts for more and more. Day after day he steals in secret and in stealth to the forbidden fountain to quench that insatiable thirst that is burning within him. Night after night the outwatcher importunes the silvery stars for an answer, and watches for light—for light until the gray and shadowy dawn. After a time it is done; the change is accomplished; he has now a new conviction. His friends have noticed nothing; he has grown a little paler, and a few furrows on his brow and a firmer setting of the lips give out that he is troubled with an aching head; and so the mighty struggle has proceeded and is consummated, and a trifling ailment suffices to shield it all. And imagine what a change! What ties have been rent, what hopes dashed, what promises broken! Now the youth has changed into a man. He must take his part in the affairs of men; he must earn the means of support. What shall he do? Shall he give up his profession? He has been trained for this; he knows no other. He becomes a castaway on the shores of life. Shall he continue in his profession and become a falsehood and a disgrace unto himself? You say there is no greater hardship in this than in any other case in which a young man has chosen wrong. Perhaps he could never do his best work there, as many a young lawyer or physician finds he has selected the wrong profession. Ah! but there is this difference: they have erred in judgment, but they have not erred in character; they have chosen the wrong profession, but their integrity is not affected. But to the teacher of religion his conviction is his profession; and if he has chosen the wrong profession, if he professes a false conviction, and goes on day after day, and week after week, and Sunday after Sunday, then he becomes a lie through and through, and a pollution to the office which he holds. That is what makes his office so sacred; that he shall tell his convictions, for he is placed there to say what really is, what he knows to be, not what men would have him say. And that is what makes his profession often so exquisitely painful; that he has no right to privacy at all; that he should unbare his inward convictions; that he must lay bare to the view of all that sacred territory of the soul before which every other man has drawn an impenetrable veil. Though he mistakes his mission, his meditations are public property, for the honorable to honor; yes, and for the boor to trample on and besmirch. And that is what makes his profession such a shameful, grinning mockery of truth if he be not perfectly honest, if he be not wholly true.

You will concede, my friends, that in a republic morality is the ark of safety. Dishonesty is the root of evil; honesty is the healing panacea. Is our civil service corrupt? Let men be honest and it is sound. Are our politicians tempted to sacrifice the public good to private ends? Let them be honest and we shall have a band of Solons in our capitol. Are our social manners debasing to manhood and degrading to womanhood? Why, they are lying manners; let them be truthful and they will elevate and adorn. From the beginning to the end honesty is the only safeguard, and is what a republic most needs, because it is so. Therefore has religion so grand an office in a republic, so much grander in a republic than any where else, and so much more awe-inspiring. De Toqueville has already pointed out the importance of religion in preserving the state, and every superficial observer can observe the same.

If the churches did their duty in this matter, if they would fence about and nurture the honesty of the land, then we should observe a studious silence; then we should not say a word to their discredit; then we should do violence to our reason and accept all of their strange arithmetic, their wild imaginations, their dreary sermons, and their superstitions, all because of this one good.

But there it is, there it is; the churches themselves are dishonest; the physicians themselves are down with the infection; the teachers of sincerity have become insincere. Therefore we must heal the physicians in order that they may heal the others afterwards.

It is a good thing for a nation to have rich mountains—mountains in which mineral treasures abound; to have broad plains on which the golden crops of grain ripen, and rivers on which proud navies go forth to the ocean; it is a good thing to have all these things which add to a nation's material wealth; and it is a good thing also to have halls of learning and galleries of art, for by these the mind is strengthened and refined; but it is a better thing than all this for a nation to have virtue, and men who protect its virtue, for without that all those others are but corroding substances that bring on more speedily and surely the process of national decay.

Because we need truth above all things, and preservers of truth; therefore we propose this school for the science of religion, whose one mission it is to give back the teachers of religious truth; to restore those who will tell their beliefs conscientiously and honestly; who will not be tied down to some scheme of doctrines before their minds are yet old enough to distinguish between right and wrong; who will have ample time to weigh opposing arguments, to hear all that philosophy has to repeat, and impartially interpret it; ample time to mature their convictions before they go out upon their course of life, so that they may not be, as so many are now, unfaithful to their trust and feeling it, but that they may go out as men who are wholly at one with themselves, as men who have achieved the righteousness of repose, and can therefore command peace to the doubt-distracted souls and the passion-hunted hearts of men.

And, lastly, I want to say a word about adequacy. The school for the science of religion shall give us, not what the last generation wanted, not what was deemed wise or necessary centuries ago, but what we need to-day. It shall train men who shall be able to look upon the Medusa's head of tremendous fate without quailing or turning to stone before that terrible gaze.

The world is indeed out of joint. Men's ambition has surpassed their power; the ideal of justice transcends the social possibility. While unrest has seized upon the hearts of men, chaos and disorder fill their minds. A cry for change goes up, a low moaning, like the heavy breeze that precedes the storm, liable at any moment to break forth into the fury of the whirlwind.

But as of old, my friends, let the divine spirit breathe over the waters and they are still. But who is he from whose lips that divine spirit shall send forth its command? Who is he whose saint-like soul shall cry anew, "Let there be light" into this darkness? He shall be as God to this new world of justice that is making; he shall be the leader of the people's lives.

They say there must be some fixed point amid the flux of opinion. Righteousness is that fixed point; therefore we make righteousness the pivotal point of our scheme of instruction, and demand that all the tendencies of the school shall center upon this one point. We shall demand that the young men there taught shall be instructed in the examples of the past—shall be wise in the philosophy of past ages; and we demand, more than all that, that they shall know and be able to interpret those laws by which they are surrounded—what is occurring in the world about us. We want more knowledge of ethics and of social science to tell us what righteousness means, and we ask that the thought of our leaders be turned upon this one question, What does righteousness demand of our age?

Ours is a questioning age; all things are questioned. Our laws of property are questioned; our laws of inheritance are questioned; everything is questioned. Our whole competitive system, whereby commerce is carried on, is selfish, is gross, and founded on the baser side of man. It is the duty of religion to reply to all these questions.

Are you alarmed, you timid souls, you faithless hearts that doubt the new religion? Do you not know that the new righteousness is the soul of the new religion? The school for the science of religion shall send forth, in this sense, fearless men to struggle unceasingly for the truth, even when the truth calls them to rebuke the selfishness of men—even when it calls them to make sacrifices against which their whole soul rebels. The school for the science of religion shall send forth men instructed in the philosophy of the ages, wise in the examples of the past, and able to interpret the present, who shall counteract the moral deluge of social corruption that is sweeping over the land. The school for the science of religion shall send forth, not rabbis, or students of revealed law, not pastors of flocks of erring sheep, but true leaders and far-sighted teachers of the science of mankind.

It is a hard task which these future teachers of religion have before them, yet let them not despair. In the end, the people who now murmur and ridicule what they do not understand will be grateful for the real manhood that has been revealed to them. In the end, truth alone will command respect, truth alone will prevail; and in the end, in the far-off time, truth shall make every heart of man its empire and in its throne.

Selections.

Voltaire in Exile.

HIS LIFE AND WORK IN FRANCE AND IN FOREIGN LANDS.

BY M. GASTINEAU.

(Translated for THE TRUTH SEEKER.)

IX.

Voltaire went on to the Hague in the course of the month of June, 1743, in order to spy out the attitude of the Hollanders and the military forces of England in that country. He was lodged in the palace of the old court property of the King of Prussia, whom he soon rejoined in Berlin. There Voltaire thought of his mission, and undertook to win over Frederick, who was rather surprised and displeased to see his philosopher transformed into a French diplomat. However, he did not discourage him at first, and listened to him with a careless ear. Voltaire played his part seriously. To compel Frederick to make him some categoric answer, he would send him his political observations upon a sheet of paper of which a large margin was left blank. But Frederick replied by jests, by small rhymes and pleasantries. By the side of Voltaire's observation that the friends of Austria burned to open the campaign in Silesia, Frederick put on the margin the burden of an old comic song, running something thus:

"Ah! we will be on hand for the lads—fee dle dee—
In the fashion of old Yankee doodle dandee—
You shall see!"

The most curious phase of this diplomatic comedy was that at the very moment when Voltaire strove to bring the courts of Prussia and France together, Frederick sought to compromise him with the Court of Versailles.

"I would embroil him forever with France," said the King of Prussia. "That would be the way to have him at Berlin."

And to accomplish this aim Frederick caused the circulation in Versailles, under false covers, of satirical verses of Voltaire upon the court, upon the ministers, and even some fragments of the "Pucelle" which had escaped Emilie's scrutiny.

The progress of this little plot of the King Prussia was divulged and stopped by some indiscretion. Voltaire felt much hurt by it. "He thought to obtain," he has written, "by ruining me in France." After considerable moping, a reconciliation took place, nevertheless, and Voltaire familiarly said to Frederick, "Never play me any more tricks!" Then he spoke seriously of his mission to him, and begged the king to charge him with some mission to the court of Versailles.

Frederick, in his turn, took up a serious tone. He said to him that he had no connection with France and no answer to make, having received no direct application. "The only mission which I can give you for France is to counsel her to act more wisely than she has done up to the present."

Voltaire perceived some change had come in his relations with Frederick. "He scented the spy," he has himself said. Voltaire, as a skillful diplomat, alternated his mission by saying that, after all, he had only been charged with fomenting sentiments of concord between the two monarchs. The cloud passed over.

Nevertheless, Voltaire held his ground. As Frederick was about to leave Berlin to make a review of the little principalities of Germany to test and sound them in view to the eventualities of the future, Voltaire asked to go along, which was granted him. At Bayreuth, Frederick left our philosopher-diplomat with his sister the Margrave, and went on his way.

Voltaire remained nearly a month in Bayreuth, in Brunswick, in Anspach, in the midst of homages, of feasts, of a veritable enchantment. Frederick's sisters, the Moergrave of Bayreuth and the princess Ulrich, loved letters and men of letters as well as their brother. Voltaire, charmed with his reception, addressed gallant verses and madrigals to the princesses, who, on their side, were delighted with his wit and jollity.

Here is a bouquet to Chloris which Voltaire addressed to the princess Ulrich, and which is too charming for us to fail in culling it from among his witty poetical blossoms:

"'Tis often that a grain of truth
Is mingled with the coarsest lies:
This night, in dreams, I saw, forsooth,
Myself to rank of kings arise.
Ah! princess, I loved thee—to thee my flame avowed.—
I waked. The gods in part to keep my dream allowed;
I only lost the crown, the thing I did not prize."

"It is a celestial voyage, during which I pass from planet to planet," has said Voltaire about his agreeable excursion among the little German principalities.

"He is absolutely intoxicated, he has gone mad with the German courts," wrote Madame du Châtelet, who during all this time uttered the cries of a forsaken Ariadne. "He remained fifteen days at Bayreuth without the king. He was three weeks without writing me. For two months past I learn of his whereabouts by the embassadors and the gazettes. You will easily understand how much I am to be pitied. But, in spite of myself, I cannot tear away from him. Notwithstanding all I suffer, I am well convinced that the one who loves the most is the happiest, after all."

She writes again from Paris to the Count of Argental, on the 23d of November, 1743, a melancholy letter, in which is found this passage:

"I return to Brussels, there to end a life in which I have had more happiness than sorrow, and which is terminating at a time when I could no longer bear it."

At last Voltaire, after having torn himself away from the delights of the little German courts, returned to Berlin to take his leave of the king, who gave to the philosopher-diplomat, it appears, some good word for the court of Versailles. Then he rejoined Madame du Châtelet in Brussels in the last days of October, 1743. But he could only grant her a few hours. Was he not obliged to go to Versailles and render account of his mission? As it had produced no immediate results, he received no thanks for it. The favorite, Madame de Châteauroux, was piqued at not having been consulted concerning the sending of the philosopher to Prussia. And yet, to use a celebrated phrase, the fault did not lie with Voltaire. The King of Prussia, exposed to the hatred of England and to the grudges of the Queen of Holland, would have naturally inclined to a French alliance could he have placed any dependence upon a court abandoned to Jesuits and favorites, upon a king whose policy was as vacillating as his character.

The following year, however, the King of Prussia decided for a favorable attitude towards France. Voltaire has himself established the efficacy of his mission and of the service he had rendered to his country by the following:

"I gave to the court of Versailles the hopes given me at Berlin. They were not fallacious, and the following spring the King of Prussia did, in fact, make a new treaty with the King of France. He invaded Bohemia with a hundred thousand men while the Austrians were in Alsace."

Thus repelled, and having reaped ingratitude as a reward for his mission and his efforts, the ubiquist and Wandering Jew Voltaire, to follow whom puts one out of breath, returns to Brussels, on the 1st of February, 1744. He remained there for some time quiet and laborious, at the hearth of the divine Emilie. His printed correspondence contains but one letter dated from Brussels, the 2d of February of that same year, 1744, and addressed to the Count of Argental. Here follows a fragment of it:

"The Hollanders do not declare themselves. The King of England will bear all the burden, which is somewhat heavy. The Hanoverians who are camping at the gates of Brussels publicly say they are led to slaughter, and feel quite sorry for the trip. I saw the Flemish troops, ragged and badly paid. Eleven months' pay is actually due the officers. Well, well! sons of France, rejoice!"

M. Desnoireterres thinks that Voltaire must have written several letters from Brussels at this period, and that they must have been lost, by a deplorable mischance.

About this time the King of Prussia addressed him, at Brussels, a missive terminating in this pleasant manner:

"Adieu, admirable historian, great poet, charming author of the "Pucelle," that invisible and sad prisoner of Circe; adieu to the lover of Valori's cook, of Madame du Châtelet, and of my sister (the Moergrave of Bayreuth)."

From Brussels Voltaire went to the castle of Cirey, where the tedious suit of Madame du Châtelet was at last terminated by a transaction advantageous to her.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

(From the Boston Investigator.)

"Jean Meslier's Confessions."

This is one of the most remarkable pamphlets ever published. Jean Meslier was a French Roman Catholic priest, who, after a pastoral service of thirty years, wholly abjured the Christian dogmas. Voltaire had a high opinion of Meslier, and D'Alembert said that the following should be his epitaph: "Here lies a very honest priest, who, in dying asks God's pardon for having been a Christian." These "Confessions," translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll, and published by D. M. Bennett, are for sale at this office. The following opinion of the book is given by the distinguished writer and historian, James Parton, Esq., in a letter to the translator:

"MY DEAR MADAME: The work of the honest pastor Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which was produced during the last century. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. Paine and Voltaire had reserves, but Jean Meslier had none. He keeps nothing back; and yet, after all, the wonder is not that there should hav been one priest who left that testimony at his death, but that all priests do not. True, there is a great deal more to be said about religion which I believe to be an eternal necessity of human nature, but no man has uttered the negative side of the matter with so much candor and completeness as Jean Meslier. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well. I am, Madame, very truly and respectfully yours.

"JAMES PARTON."

ANTHONY COMSTOCK has been distinguishing himself by compelling the removal from a public window of a water-color copy of Hans Makart's painting, "Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp."—Portland Press.

It is one of the unaccountable mysteries that the fellow Comstock is allowed to commit his raids on art and science like a vandal of the dark ages; and it is another mystery why the minority of the National Liberal League, instead of trying to "reform" the fellow and his bigoted law, didn't vote to repeal them both. We are sorry to see, so soon as the second year of the League's existence, that "the fine gold has become dim!"—Boston Investigator.

Communications.

The Great Strike.

MY DEAR BENNETT: So they went and took their hats and went right out of meeting did they? Did they make up faces? did they slam the door? What a pity! all the piety, respectability, decency, cleanliness, chastity, all, all gone! nothing left but nastiness, obscenity, Freelove—love freedom—squeezed dry as aunt Grundy's checkered apron or Bishop Onderdonk's necktie. What in the world are you going to do? Seventy-six men and women in the Congress would not take the rule offered by fifty! Too bad! too bad!

And so there are two organizations to do the work that one would accomplish far better! But then, such things happen in the best ordered families. I remember a like event happened in the old anti-slavery organization. There were a few very nice ministers who had crept in—crept in? no; Garrison had invited them in—and these cultured priests came face to face with such women as Lucretia, Edna, Maria, Ann Green, and a hundred other women whose names are to-day written on as many grave-stones, and it was an appalling sight. These women knew more, were more statesmanlike, than the he ministers of the cloth, and so they scolded and quarreled and made up faces, and said it "wasn't according to Paul" any how to have Lucretia, Sarah, Isabella, and Lydia gabbling in meeting with heads covered or uncovered, and when they found they could not scare, coax, or drive the lions who got up the old organization they, Abbot and Underwood-like, went out and organized under a clean ticket. And—and now for the millennium. No more obscenity, no more government money, greenback or fiat, paid to nude women for the growth and prosperity of Zion and the delectation of young Christians not well established in continency; no more scandal on the Liberal League No. 2. Well, this is just what I was looking for. When men send you word that if you will not choose them to reign over you, I am reminded of Jotham's parable, "And all the trees of the forest said unto the bramble, Come thou and reign over us. And the bramble said unto the trees of the forest, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your trust in my shadow; and if not let fire come out of the bramble and devour the cedars of Lebanon." And so we see the torch lighted, and it will devour the chaff of egotism, the straw of self-conceit, but, mark my word, the cedars of Lebanon will remain unscathed. An eye for the Jesuits.

A. H. WOOD.

W. F. JAMIESON will commence a course of lectures Nov. 20th, in White Hall, Ill., and remain one week. He will lecture in that vicinity for 30 days if required. Address at White Hall, Ill.

Liberal Lecturers.

Parker Pillsbury,	Home address,	Concord, N. H.
B. F. Underwood,	"	Thorndike, Mass.
Prof. Wm. Denton,	"	Wellesley, Mass.
W. S. Bell,	"	New Bedford, Mass.
Charles Ellis,	"	8 Portland St., Boston, Mass.
Prof. J. H. W. Toohey	"	Chelsea, Mass.
Wm. F. Jamieson,	"	Albion, Mich.
E. C. Walker,	"	Florence, Iowa.
R. B. Bement,	"	Clyde, O.
T. R. Kinget,	"	Manassas, Va.
Ella E. Gibson,	"	On the wing.
H. G. Ellington,	"	———, Iowa.
C. Fanny Allyn,	"	Stoneham, Mass.
J. M. Barnes,	"	Lafayette, Va.
Wm. Ostin Hutchings,	"	Clarinda, Iowa.
Moses Hull,	"	438 Tremont st., Boston.
Laura Kendrick,	"	Hotel Lafayete, Columbia ave., Boston, Mass.
Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol,		Vineland, N. J.
J. W. Stillman (Home address),		New York.
Mrs. Clara Neyman,	"	97 Maiden Lane, N. Y.
Theron C. Leland,	"	201 East 71st st., N. Y.
Dr. A. J. Clark,	"	Shively Block, Indianapolis, Indiana.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 23, 1878.

"The Liberty of Printing."

We are sure our readers will be glad that we hav reproduced from The Index the Hon. E. P. Hurlbut's able address upon this subject, given on the second and third pages of this issue. As an argument in favor of freedom of speech and freedom of the press it is sound and is on the side of American liberty. But inasmuch as it is regarded as the ablest argument that has been produced in favor of retaining the Comstock postal laws upon the statute books, and as —aside from the slanderous charges and reiterations that those in favor of the repeal of those laws are vile abettors of immorality and indecency—it is about the only argument that has been advanced by the "high moral" party, it is to be regretted that it is not clear on the point as to where the United States obtains the authority to take cognizance of the morality and opinions of the citizens of the various states. Here is where the Judge's paper fails to impart the information which thousands are so anxious to obtain, and very many will be sorry that he passed over this vital point so easily. And from this very fact we perceive the weakness of the position that such marplots as Anthony Comstock hav any rights under the General Government to impose upon the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, and the freedom of the mails. All who are desirous to learn how the United States Government obtains the right to inquire into the opinions and moral sentiments of the people of this country, and to employ its courts to convict and punish them therefor, will be disappointed in Judge Hurlbut's address.

So far as he quotes that eminent jurist, Edward Livingston, in framing the criminal code of Louisiana, it is all right. Every Liberal in the country will admit that Livingston was correct in his definition of obscenity, and that the penalties under the state law which he named were just and reasonable. It is under state laws that obscenity is a crime and should be punished. But the judge quotes nothing from Livingston or any other jurist in favor of the General Government's taking cognizance of obscenity or punishing it. Here is just the point of difference between the "high moral" party and those they characterize as low, vile, and indecent—the one holding that the General Government has the right to inquire who is obscene, and to punish them with severity, while the other insists that the General Goverment has nothing to do with it, but that it belongs exclusively to the states as Livingston proposed. As this is the ground upon which the Liberals of the country are divided, and as it was upon this point that the National Liberal League disagreed, we can but be sorry that the Judge had so little to say about it. He did not quote any jurist or any authority whatever in favor of the General Government's taking the obscenity business from the hands of the states, where it justly belongs. The Judge hits the matter squarely on the head when he says: "The states and not the Federal Government hav the power to punish abuses." This is emphatically the doctrine of the hated Repealers, and if the holding of it makes them amenable to the charge of immorality, vileness, and indecency it ought to apply to the Judge as well. If it is indecent for them to deny the powers of the Federal Government in cases of freedom and censorship, the Judge is also indecent.

The Judge certainly does not make a strong argument when he undertakes to show that the Federal Government possesses the power of inquisitorial jurisdiction over the moral quality of the mails. He very correctly states that the power conferred upon Congress by the Constitution to establish post-offices and post-roads confers also the implied power to punish robbery and other offenses against the mails which hinder and obstruct the postal service, which power is strictly for postal purposes. He distinctly says of the General Government that "when it punishes a robbery, or other offense against the mails, it is not for a general correction of the public morals, or of enforcing any of the Ten Commandments, but to enable it to succeed in safely delivering the mails." But this is no argument in favor of inquiring into the opinions or morals of those who deposit matter in the mails, and there is no sort of analogy between the two cases. The first is to facilitate the transmission of the mails by removing obstructions, while the other throws obstructions in the way of such transmission by holding the mail matter until it is examined and then throwing it out if found to be of an immoral character, or what a fallible or bigoted man would consider immoral. Punishing mail robbers bears no similarity to questioning the opinions and morals of those using the mails. How the mail robbers giv the Government the power to be a moral inquisitor we fail to see.

The Judge seems to favor a somewhat moderate method of procedure, when he says: "The law should affix such a penalty as would be sufficient to deter people from mailing obscene publications, and no more; for the object is not to make a moral code, nor a penal code, nor enforce a creed, nor build up a catechism, but simply to protect the Government in the fit and proper discharge of its function as mail carrier." But why the Government, in order to protect itself in the capacity of mail carrier, should find it necessary to examine into the moral character of the mail matter intrusted to it is not made clear.

But further on, the Judge makes the proposition for a system of censorship and espionage which to us seems the most monstrous and most destructive of the freedom of the press and of personal rights of anything that has been yet proposed. He says: "The only course which occurs to my mind, from what reflection I hav been able to bestow on the subject, would be to commit the search to the several deputy postmasters, who shall apply to a United States Commissioner or Judge for a warrant, and under that to seize the suspected prints and carry them before the officer issuing the warrant, who should determine on reading or inspection whether obscene and tending to corrupt the morals of youth or not." Now is that a practicable process for a Judge to propose? How are the postmasters to smell out obscene mail matter except they open it and examine it, and, Paul Pry like, look over what the people send out? It could only be done by establishing a system of espionage the most repugnant ever known in the world! And then when the deputies or clerks think they hav found something that is not quite correct or that might tend to corrupt the morals of youth, they must go to a commissioner or judge for a warrant, when the suspected matter must be taken before said commissioner or judge, who must read it over and see whether it really is improper to be sent forward, or whether it must be detained and the mailer punished by a suit in the courts of the United States, and this Judge Hurlbut calls facilitating the mail service, and advocates it upon the grounds that mail robbers are punished! This is represented as a powerful and unanswerable argument in favor of the Comstock postal laws, to oppose which is to be denounced by the immaculate "reformers," as vile and obscene.

If the post-office in this city be taken as one most necessary to be inspected and scrutinized for indecent matter, where at least a hundred tons of mail matter leave daily, a full regiment of deputies or inquisitors would be required to ferret out the immoral matter that might be mailed; and if such quantities are constantly being sent to schools and seminaries as Comstock and Abbot assure us are being sent, it would require a great number of commissioners or judges to issue warrants and bring to justice the vile offenders. It would make such an inquisition of the general post-office and United States courts as would put Dominic and Torquemada to shame. It cannot be believed that the American people are yet ready for a censorship of this kind, and it can hardly be believed that the intelligent Liberals of the country are prepared to accept a system of espionage of that sort, or that it is needful to uphold such a rule in order not to be denominated Freelovers, defenders of obscenity, etc. Far sooner would we indorse what the Judge utters when he says: "It is better that obscene literature should prevail for a season than that any man, however humble, however depraved, should be deprived of his legal rights, without due process and the enlightened judgment of the law." That sounds far better than proposing the odious system of inquisition we hav briefly considered.

He states a potent truth when he says: "A believer can do with impunity what will excite the utmost horror if done by a skeptic. As such of you as hav no Redeemer may not commit fraud or forgery, nor rob a bank, nor poison, nor commit adultery with impunity, so you cannot commit a mistake, even in respect of unlicensed printing, without calling down on your heads and on your cause the loudest denunciations of the 'unco guid.'" This is particularly true, but it seems a very indifferent argument to convince Liberals why they should advocate throwing away the guarantees of the Constitution, which is the only protection we hav for the liberties of the people and advocating a censorship and an inimical tribunal which will judge skeptics and Freethinkers far more severely than believers and favored ones and pronounce them guilty of sending obscene matter when in others it would not be noticed. If that is a good reason why unbelievers should shout themselves hoarse in favor of Comstockism we fail to see it.

Rather than to advocate this tyrannous and unfriendly rule, we insist it would be far better to punish obscenity by such state laws as Edward Livingston devised for Louisiana and similar to that which every state has in its criminal code. The state laws are amply sufficient for almost all cases of obscenity, and it is certainly better to giv them a fair trial before making a detective spy system of the post-office department. The aphorism which the Judge quotes from Blackstone is worthy of repetition. "The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state. . . . Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiment he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press." In the same connection we will also quote a worthy sentiment from Chas. A. Dana: "Liberty cannot be overthrown in this country by direct attacks. The only danger is that it may be insidiously undermined." It is in yielding assent to the plausible doctrines advanced by Judge Hurlbut, and more urgently demanded by Anthony Comstock and Francis E. Abbot, that Liberty's greatest danger lies.

Every person acquainted with the early history of our nation understands that the Confederacy or General Government possessed no powers over the people save what was conferred upon it by the states by the instrument known as the Constitution, and that that charter says nothing about the postal department save that Congress shall hav the power to establish post-offices and post-roads. It nowhere, by implication or otherwise, even hints that Congress shall hav the right to examine into and decide upon the moral character of the mail matter which the people transmit. It is a little curious to notice how artfully the Judge gets ove this difficulty. He comes to the conclusion that, because obscenity is furthered and promoted by the postal department, therefore the central government has the right to take cognizance of it and punish it. If this argument amounts to anything, it urges with equal force that the General Government has the power to take cognizance of and punish fraud, conspiracy, seduction, adultery, larceny, forgery, robbery, burglary, arson, and murder, for all these may be aided and abetted through the postal department. Nobody will hardly be zealous enough to contend that the General Government ought to spy out and punish all those crimes; but it has just as much warrant for it as for searching out and punishing obscenity. It has nothing to do with any of these crimes, or the punishment of crimes the dominion over which belongs exclusively to the states.

But we did not intend to review Judge Hurlbut's address at length. We learn that Mr. T. B. Wakeman, as early as his business will admit of it, will reply to as much of the Judge's argument as conflicts with the correct and constitutional view of the "Comstock" laws. When that is done, we will cheerfully giv place to it, affording our readers a chance to read what can be said pro and con touching Comstockism. The question is a vital one and cannot be too well understood.

Indorsers of the "High Moral" Party.

It evidently affords the editor of The Index not a little pleasure to quote what the Christian papers say in defense of the position he and his friends took in withdrawing from the League because Elizur Wright was elected President, as well as the slanders they utter against those who had the temerity to prefer Mr. Wright for their principal officer, denouncing the Liberal League as an "infamous" organization. It seems to be a favorite occupation of The Index editor to reproduce what Christian papers say about him and his friends being "men of high moral character," and characterizing those who differ from him as men of "vile purposes." The Christian Union is a favorite defender of his course, and several times has he derived solace from quoting it in his favor. It is a nice question which is the more culpable course—to be guilty of slander and detraction direct, or to quote approvingly, and without contradiction or correction, the slanders of others.

The Milwaukee Christian Statesman is also quoted, for it takes up warmly on the side of Abbot, and says "the sympathies of all decent people must be with Abbot and his party." It says, "We honor him for the stand he has taken against the lawless clique who think that Freethought requires them to become the champions of indecency and vice."

Mr. Abbot well knows how unjust these slanders are. He well knows that Mr. Wright, Mr. Seaver, Mr. Verity, Mr. Rivers, Mr. Damon, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Wakeman, Mrs. Post, Mrs. Colman, Mrs. Bristol, Mr. Cosad, Col. Fox, Mr. Holcomb, Mr. Root, and all the others who are opposed to the spirit of the Comstock laws and the crushing of the guarantees of the Constitution are not "the champions of indecency and vice," and that they are not in favor of obscenity and immorality; still he persists in saying so and repeating what others say when they assert it. Few things are meaner than falsely imputing vile and disreputable motives to an opponent. But this has been done in The Index for nearly a year, and it seems to be its principal argument to make the public believe that those who do not agree with it are in favor of the free publication and circulation of obscene books and pictures. It knows this is false, yet it still quotes Christian maligners who reiterate the false charge. This culpable course is far worse than obscenity itself.

Mr. Underwood, as we remarked on a previous occasion, has had the fairness to proclaim openly the truth in this matter. He said in the Syracuse Congress that those who favored the repeal of the Comstock laws were no more in favor of obscenity than those who opposed it; and he is almost the only person of the Abbot party who has had the honesty to admit this truth. The Rev. Gordon, the Rev. Clark, the Rev. Abbot, and the almost Rev. Mills hav persisted in endeavoring to cast odium upon those who honestly disagreed with them on the beauties of Comstockism, repeatedly asserting that we are the defenders of vice and obscenity; that they are the moral, decent, intellectual party, while we are the low, the vile, the degraded ones who would destroy all purity and morality. If such false and contemptible tactics will always continue to delude and blind intelligent, fair-minded people, then we are mistaken. We cannot think they will.

Mr. Underwood well understands that the position of the repealers is that, while they are opposed to obscenity, and think it ought to be punished, they do not think it is any part of the duty of the General Government to meddle with it, and that the business of punishing that crime, like nearly all others, belongs exclusively to the state governments, which hav ample power for suppressing it. He knows that the repealers regard the circulation of obscenity through the mails precisely as they do by express, by the freight lines, and by private conveyance, and that one mode of conveyance is no more contaminated by it in transit than the others. He knows that the repealers are in favor of using the state laws already in existence, and which hav been found effectual for the suppressing of obscenity, and opposed to the General Government meddling with it at all, inasmuch as it cannot do so constitutionally, any more than with fraud, libel, assault and battery, forgery, burglary, arson, and murder. He knows that the Repealers are opposed to a system of censorship and espionage being set up in the forty thousand post-offices of our country to examine the mail matter deposited there by the people for immediate conveyance, to decide whether it possesses the necessary morality and decency to admit of its being forwarded to its place of destination. He knows that they agree with what The Methodist of this city said nearly a year ago, and quoted at the time in these cofumns.

He knows that the repealers are opposed to a class of sectarian laws, framed by the influence of the Y. M. C. A., and at the instance and direst procuring of one of the most bigoted and intolerant men this country has ever produced; which laws can easily be construed so as to cause the arrest of persons for the honest expression of their convictions and for heretical and blasphemous doctrines, as has already beendone; and which was promised, within the past year—in this city, in public meeting, by the President and Secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice—should be further extended until Freethought and Freelove publications were effectually "stamped out." Mr. Underwood knows all this; he knows that the repealers are not in favor of obscenity and indecency, and, we repeat, he has had the fairness and honesty to say so. Mr. Abbot knows it equally well, but he has not had the fairness and honesty to admit it. Is such a man fit to be the leader of the Liberals of America? Not much!

The Christian Statesman, as quoted by The Index, regrets that Mr. Abbot has strayed away or outgrown the Christian religion, and hopes that he will yet be re-converted to that faith. In this particular we think The Christian Statesman is half right. It evidently has reasonable grounds for its hopes; aad so far as we are concerned, we will not object to its hope being fully realized. It is questionable whether the church is not the proper place for him, and whether he had not better return with as little delay as possible. Perhaps one more secession will carry additional joy to the hearts of thousands, and not be particularly inconsistent with his late course.

Letter from Mr. Frothingham.

We are permitted to lay before our readers the following letter from one of the ablest, soundest, and most reputable Liberals in the country. None can charge him with a want of virtue, or of being a defender of vice or indecency. The letter speaks for itself. Will The Index please copy?

50 West 36th St., New York, Nov. 18, 1878.

My Dear Sir: Your note of the 10th inst. admonishes me of a duty that should hav been discharged before—the duty of telling you that your argument on the "Comstock Postal Law," has made me an advocate of repeal vs. modification. The discussion of this autumn has brought me to the conclusion that this is the simple, logical, sensible, and only satisfactory method of dealing with the obnoxious piece of legislation. The Liberals of the other opinion call for repeal of as much of the law as threaten freedom of thought and discussion. The insolent association of Freethought with obscenity so stirs my indignation that for honor's sake, if for no other reason, I should feel compelled to demand that the whole be swept away. The friends of decency must look for safeguards elsewhere. Yours cordially,

T. B. Wakeman, Esq. O. B. Frothingham.

Heywood's Pardon: Will it be Granted?

On Friday morning, the 15th, Mrs. Laura Kendrick, of Boston, arrived here on her way to Washington, bearing petitions to the President, with more than six thousand signatures, praying for the pardon of Ezra H. Heywood, who for months has been immured in a Massachusetts prison for sending a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" through the mails. He is a man of culture and refinement, but his prison associates are felons of all kinds, and of the lowest character. During a portion of the time his health was very poor and he seemed to be breaking down under the cruel confinement. His wife and children are in very needy circumstances, and, if they are not positively suffering from his absence, they require his presence and aid.

In view of the insignificance of the offense with which he was charged, of the time he has already passed in prison, and of the earnestness with which Mrs. Kendrick will plead in his behalf and in behalf of his needy family, it is to be hoped her mission may prove successful.

She made a trip to Manchester, N. H., the residence of Judge Clark, before whom Mr. Heywood was tried, and who ruled against him on the trial with needless severity. When he learned of Mr. Heywood's illness, of the needy condition of his wife and little children, his heart naturally softened and he seemed touched with the pitiful facts of the case. Tears even came to his eyes. Said he, "The man really ought to be pardoned out. Tell the President that I think so. Say to him from me that I think Mr. Heywood ought to be pardoned." This was indeed an unlooked-for softening down in a quarter where only hardness of heart had been shown before.

Mrs. Kendrick bore with her some excellent letters to the President and other influential parties in Washington from some of the first citizens of Boston, which it would seem ought to hav some influence with "the powers that be." Among them was one from our honored friend, Elizur Wright, and this we were permitted to copy, and with pleasure we giv it to our readers. It is as follows:

LETTER OF ELIZUR WRIGHT TO PRESIDENT HAYES.

To the President of the United States, Dear Sir: This will be presented to you by the bearer of a petition for the liberation of Ezra H. Heywood, now suffering imprisonment under the sentence of a United States Court. I am one of those petitioners; first, because I believe Mr. Heywood has violated no principle of sound or Christian morals; second, because I do not think the Government of the United States has any jurisdiction over the malls of the people of the states, or any right to dictate what sort of literature shall be conveyed in the mails; and third, because if he deserves punishment, I do, and so, I believe, does every citizen who owns a considerable library, including the Bible, or has had occasion to use the mails extensively.

I cannot but regard the imprisonment of Heywood as a more inexcusable and dangerous attack on the freedom of the press and the liberties of the people than the burning of certain publications, which had been taken from the mails, in the streets of Charlestown in 1835. The authors of those publications, of whom I was one, were not imprisoned, but the vast number of your petitioners, if not others, must be imprisoned if the principles applied in the Heywood case were to be carried out.

In a life dating back to the first decade of the century, I hav never known a case better deserving of executive interference. Grateful that the power which you may now so beneficiently exercise is constitutionally entrusted in your hands, I am, dear sir, yours truly, Elizur Wright.

Armed with such documents, the noble utterances of an honest, worthy man, and the earnest petitions of thousands of sympathetic citizens from all parts of the country, it would seem that the President ought to be induced to grant a pardon for a man who has committed no offense, save possibly one against good taste.

If the pardon is not obtained, we feel sure it will be owing to the influence of the Christian religion. The President and his wife are said to be members of the Methodist Church, and it is to be feared they hav a little too much of the spirit of the Church for him to sign a pardon for a despised unbeliever. We, however, indulge a strong hope that the natural impulses of human nature and a kindly sympathy may rise superior to the narrow bigotry and intolerance of the Church—the very spirit that threw Mr. Heywood where he is.

Opinions on Anthony Comstock.

The Sun of the 10th inst. gave an account of a dinner party held after the election by the anti-Tammany party called the Tuscaroras. It gave a description of several of the speeches as well as the conversations. The following reference to the meddlesome and inquisitorial Comstock will show the state of feeling that generally prevails in reference to him:

"The table talk exceeded in interest the after-dinner speeches. While eating snipe a reference was made to Anthony Comstock's action in removing a copy of Hans Makart's painting of Charles the Fifth's entry into Antwerp from a window in Fulton street. Major McLean was especially indignant. He flourished the head of a snipe between his fingers, and wanted to know where Comstock got authority for his action. 'Why,' said he, 'I hav got a picture of Diana and one of Susannah and the Elders in my gallery. They are old paintings and one of them cost me $2,000. Comstock might as well come into my house and seize them. I didn't purchase them for anything except on account of their coloring. The flesh tints are perfect, but neither Diana nor Susannah are especially attractive. They are fat and logy looking, and hav turn-up noses and red hair. There is nothing about them that would attract any one's admiration but the coloring. It seems to me that it is time that some one sat upon this man Comstock.'"

The Daily Graphic of the 11th, contained this among its editorials:

"The quasi victory achieved by Anthony Comstock in compelling the withdrawal from a downtown window of a colored photograph of Makart's 'Entry of Charles V. into Antwerp, has been followed up by a pressure which has led to a withdrawal from the Loan Exhibition of Bourguereau's beautiful picture, entitled 'After the Bath.' If the public indignation does not now giv a pause to Anthony Comstock's trespasses beyond the pale of his authority, the galleries of the city may yet be stripped of their very choicest gems of art. Bourguereau's 'After the Bath' is the farthest possible remove from a suggestion of impurity. What is there impure in the innocent, laughing naked babe, nestled in its mother's lap? Isn't it about time that a check was given to Comstock's prudish and offensive usurpation of power?"

The Herald of the 17th has this editorial bearing upon the same subject:

"The recent action of Mr. Anthony Comstock, the agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, in compelling a Fulton street confectioner to remove from exhibition in his window a copy of Hans Makart's great painting of "Charles V.'s Entry Into Antwerp," on the ground that it is an "obscene picture," is an affair of great cry and little wool. Many people have supposed it to have been only an advertising trick, like Mrs. Tom-Ri-Jon's fancy dress. But the President of Mr. Comstock's society treats it as a serious matter, and draws some curious distinctions to show when, in the society's opinion, art is art and when it becomes obscenity. For instance, copies and photographs of the original of the picture that excited Mr. Comstock's anger may be imported and sold by booksellers, exhibited in print stores, or reproduced in engravings in pictorial papers. That is Comstockian art. But they must not be displayed in confectioners's windows, where bull's eyes and lollipops attract juvenile customers. That is Comstockian obscenity. Powers' Greek Slave in an art gallery would be a very proper female; in a retail store window a very improper one. But the President of the Comstock society says that the offending picture was never ordered to be removed from the candy man's window. This conflicts with the statements of the confectioner and the agent, the former of whom states that its removal was ordered under penalty of seizure and arrest, while the latter has declared that he would hav carried out his threat if the exhibition of the picture had been continued.

"The Society for the Suppression of Vice has, no doubt, accomplished much substantial good in this community. So has the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The public morals are better protected now than they were a few years ago, and dumb animals of the present generation are better off, thanks to Mr. Bergh, than their ancestors were. But Mr. Bergh's excellent society does not add to its popularity and usefulness when it interferes with pigeon shooting, and turtle tying, and Mr. Comstock's society will not win laurels by taking up the cudgels against works of art on the ground of the naughtiness of slimly-draped figures."

The Washington Capital has the following spicy article on the same subject:

"Comstock, the licensed pimp and decoy-duck, is moving on in a healthy manner towards a violent and sudden death. Not long since, in New York, one of his pals had his head broke and his eyes put out by an indignant husband whom Comstock and partner had sworn into the penitentiary so that the partner could seduce the wife of the unfortunate. The regret among the better classes in New York was that Comstock did not himself get the punishment. His latest efforts excite not only indignation, but ridicule. It is said that in New York he made a shopkeeper take a cast of the Venus of Medici out of his window, which suggests that Mr. Comstock belongs to the class described by Mr. Charles Reade as prurient prudes, and it is a fact that he has similarly suppressed a photograph from Makart's exhibition picture of the triumph of Charles V., for the reason that the composition includes two nude female figures in the foreground. The mistake here is not so much in act as in the reason for it. At this date no argument is needed to defend the presence of the nude figure in art, and the general public will simply laugh at Mr. Comstock and vote him a nuisance. It is not the theme, but the treatment of it, that is to be criticised as pure or impure, and Makart's nude figures are altogether purer than his draped ones. His art, which delights most in gorgeous robes and voluptuous appointments, is essentially impure, false, and vicious, and the world would be none the worse off if all his big canvasses were burned. But that is a matter of æsthetics in which Mr. Anthony Comstock is scarcely qualified to act as censor, and if his patrons and employers, the directors of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, wish their work to succeed, they would do well to suppress their agent a little."

The Nation of the 7th, in commenting upon what The World had to say upon the same subject, used this language:

"It is stated that an engraving, or reproduction of some kind, of Hans Makart's immense picture, which has formed and still forms the center and chief ornament of the Austrian Art Gallery at the Paris Exposition, had been hanging until lately in a shop window down town, until one morning the frame appeared empty of its picture and bearing a sarcastic legend to the effect that the Society for the Suppression of Vice had ordered it taken away. If this is true, the time has come for some public-spirited person to resist the Society named above, and, if possible, punish such uncalled-for interference with private rights. Makart's picture is thirty feet long, and the figures in the extreme foreground are much larger than life; those in the middle distance and full light are life size. It stands all across one of the entrances to the Austrian gallery, and an honor is paid to it which no other picture of all the thousands at the Champ-de-Mars this year has received: fixed seats are set before it at what is assumed to be the best distance. Now a small colored print of it is pronounced unfit for a New York shop window. If this picture should be brought to New York and exhibited at fifty cents admission, would agents of this Society dare interfere?"

It may be proper to state in this connection that Mr. Hope, from whose window Anthony Comstock ordered the picture to be taken, has opened a picture gallery over his store at 44 Fulton street, a prominent feature of which is the copy of Hans Makart's great production. It remains to be seen whether Comstock will deem that the cause of virtue and decency, as well as the fame of his Society and the forthcoming of his own salary of $4,000 per year, requires him to seize the picture or forbid its exhibition; and also whether, in that case, the extra-virtuous and respectable Liberals of the Gordon-Abbot school all over the country will loudly defend him and denounce as "obscene Freelovers" all who do not do the same.

Scores of papers all over the country hav had the courage to censure Comstock's course with regard to his interference with these works of art, which is far less culpable than his interference with the publication of opinions upon theology, physiology, and diseases. They still seem afraid to speak out as to his contemptible course in this line, and some papers which call themselves Liberal are in the same category, and are so far infatuated with the man and his spying, inquisitorial work that they condemn their brethren who cannot approve it. This will not always continue. We predict the time will come when it will not only not be considered disreputable to denounce Comstock, his work, and his laws, but when every good, sensible, independent-minded man will not fail to do so.

The Wisdom of Bergh.

Mr. Bergh's Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, called the National Humane Society, held a convention in Baltimore on the 14th inst. It seems by a report and editorial in the Tribune, referred to elsewhere by a correspondent, that Mr. Bergh saw fit to exclude clergymen from the convention, on the ground that he had found by experience that they differ so greatly and make so much dissension as to interfere with the harmony of the meeting. The gentlemen of the cloth seem to be somewhat chagrined that he should thus discriminate against them, but his position is doubtless well taken. Mr. Bergh has shown himself to be a man of human heart and a sound head. He knows whereof he speaks when he says clergymen are a disturbing element.

Other persons hav found this to be true. A strong instance of this kind was exhibited at the session of the Liberal League Congress, held a month ago at Syracuse. The clergymen and the ex-clergymen were decidedly a disturbing element there. They introduced dissension, they traduced those they should hav regarded as their brethren, they accounted themselves as better than those who disagreed with them, and they attempted to throw slime and filth upon men at least as honorable, as truthful, and as pure as themselves, and finally succeeded in disrupting the League because the majority exercised their right of voting for President of the organization as their choice dictated. Those who made themselves conspicuous and more or less offensive in this business were Rev. G. E. Gordon, Rev. D. H. Clark, ex-Rev. F. E. Abbot, ex-Rev. Charles Ellis, and others who might as well be called reverends and troublous elements in a convention. Mr. Bergh is quite correct in estimating clergymen as fomenters of discord.

Communications.

Currency Again.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker: My attention has been called to a very friendly criticism of my letter on the currency question published Sept. 28th. Mr. F. J. Emary perfectly agrees with me as to the amount of paper money in circulation at different periods with the exception of the 7-30 loan; he claiming, and quoting Mr. F. E. Spinner to sustain his position, that the loan did circulate among the people as currency, and should be classed in that account; while I maintain that it should not be called currency, but properly belongs among the bonded securities. Perhaps neither of us will be able to convince the other that he is wrong, but there will be no harm in trying, I believe, provided we both maintain the same courtesy that characterizes his first letter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his official report to Congress, June 30, 1875, page 29, says:

"The act of June 30, 1864 (13 Statutes, 218), authorized the issue of $200,000,000 Treasury notes, of not less than $10 each, payable at not more than three years from date, or redeemable at any time after three years, with interest at not exceeding 7 3 10 per centum per annum. The act of March 3, 1865 (13 Statutes, 468), authorized a loan of $600,000,000, and the issue therefor of bonds or Treasury notes. The notes to be of denominations not less than $50, with interest in lawful money at not more than 7 3 10 per centum per annum."

Early in the history of this loan, at the request of the Salt Springs National Bank, of Syracuse, where the writer was then employed, I addressed a letter to the Comptroller of the Currency, asking permission to substitute 7-30 bonds or notes in our vaults as a part of our reserve in lieu of the fifteen per cent of immediate liabilities which the national banks were required by law to constantly hold in legal tenders as a reserve fund.

Inquiries of this kind, from nearly all parts of the country, called out a printed circular from the Comptroller addressed to every bank in the Union, refusing to grant the request, and calling the bankers' attention to the last clause in the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Statutes, 218), "Nor shall any Treasury note bearing interest issued under this act be a legal tender in payment or redemption of any notes issued by any bank or banker, calculated or intended to circulate as money."

At this time the legal tender notes absorbed by the national banks as a reserve fund amounted in the aggregate to over $100,000,000.

It is plain, therefore, that the framers of the 7-30 law had no intention of making this very popular loan take the place of currency, or in any way swell the amount of paper money in circulation. The 7-30 bonds were a time obligation, payable three years after date, bearing interest at the highest nominal rate of any Government loan. Moreover, they were payable to order, the word order being plainly printed on each bond, a blank space being left so that savings banks, insurance companies, trust companies, and other heavy investors, might insert the owner's name, and hold them as an investment with nearly as much safety as they could a registered bond. The loan was very popular on account of the high rate of interest; but the 7-30 notes did not circulate as money among the people to any extent, not even so freely as the 5-20 coupon bonds which were payable to bearer, and no one ever imagined that those were currency.

The writer stood at a bank counter all through the life of this loan, handling millions of dollars in currency, but never to my knowledge was a 7-30 note received or paid out over the counter as currency.

The 7-30 bonds could not circulate among the people as currency from the very nature of the loan, which commanded quite a premium at once, every $1,000 increasing in value twenty cents per day. With twenty-two years experience in the banking business I hav had occasion to use the word currency and to hear the word used by practical financiers an indefinite number of times, but never until recently hav I heard the term applied to an interest-bearing time obligation payable to order.

This is but a matter of opinion, however, and if we cannot agree as to the true definition of the word, I am sure Mr. Emary and myself will agree to disagree amicably.

The Truth Seeker of Nov. 2d contains an article written by Kersey Graves, criticising me in such an unkind spirit that I had concluded not to reply, notwithstanding the fact that his position, in my opinion, is entirely untenable and cannot be supported by the facts in the case. Quite a number of friends having called upon me, however, and having examined for themselves no less than ten official public debt statements published by the Secretary of the Treasury in the year 1866—copies of which I hav now in my possession—and finding such official statements to differ so widely—not having the slightest resemblance to the statements made by Mr. Graves—I am urged in justice to myself and friends to reply. I will try to be brief and as far as practicable avoid personalities in the discussion of these facts and principles.

I forgiv Mr. Graves for the tone of his letter and his strong intimation that I am very ignorant upon this question; perhaps he will some day change his opinion.

In quoting from my letter as to the aggregate currency outstanding in 1865, Mr. Graves has made a mistake of 500 million dollars, which I presume was unintentional.

In order to analyze Mr. Graves' remarkable statement, I must reproduce it. He says:

"I go to headquarters for my statistics. I draw from an authority that cannot be disputed. The Secretary of the Treasury I regard as the most reliable authority in such cases, and here is his report with respect to the currency circulation of 1866:

	1. Temporary loans	$107,000,000
	2. Certificates of indebtedness.	85,000,000
	3. Five per cent legal tenders.	83,954,000
	4. Coin-interest legal tenders.	217,000,000
	5. Seven-thirty notes	850,000,000
	6. Greenbacks	433,000,000
	7. Fractional currency	344,000,000
	8. Cash, or coin	88,218,000
	9. National bank notes	131,452,000
	10. State bank notes	240,000,000
I add	11. Confederate notes	450,000,000
		$3,029,624,000"

It would hav been well if Mr. Graves had kindly informed us what month in 1866 the Treasury report was issued from which his table was computed. I hav in my possession ten official public debt statements for the year 1866, and I can find no figures, either in detail or aggregate, which can be successfully compared with his figures. The fiscal year in our Government finances always ends in June, and to the June statements I refer all readers who wish to compare my figures published Sept. 28th. I hav again carefully looked them over, and unhesitatingly pronounce them correct. The bank statements are furnished quarterly, and are called for by the Comptroller of the Currency irregularly as to date. The banks are never notified in advance, but are required to furnish a sworn detail statement of the condition at some prior date designated by the Comptroller. A slight discrepancy may therefore be found in the aggregate currency in June each year, as the bank statements may hav been called for in May, but the difference can in no case be material.

In order to compare the genuine with the counterfeit I herewith present a correct abstract of the official public debt statement for June, 1866, as published by the Secretary of the Treasury and republished at the time in the World, Herald, Tribune, Times, and nearly every leading daily newspaper in the country:

Debt bearing interest.
Five per cent bonds	$198,241,100
Six " " " due in 1867 and 1868	18,323,592
" " " " of 1881	283,745,500
" " " five-twenty bonds	695,515,000
" " " bonds	5,402,000
Three years 7-30 bonds	812,221,600
Temporary loan	124,561,486
Certificates of indebtedness	43,925,000
Three years compound interest notes	162,012,140
	2,343,047,418
Debt on which interest has ceased	4,900,430
Debt bearing no interest.
United States legal tender notes	402,128,318
Fractional currency	27,334,965
Gold certificates of deposit	22,568,320
	2,799,979,451
Coin and currency in Treasury, deducted	129,691,083
Total debt June, 1866	$2,670,288,368

It will be seen at a glance that both statements cannot be correct, both cannot be copies of official records.

I hav neither time nor inclination to fill your valuable space with a complete review of Mr. Graves' figures. Suffice it to call your readers' attention to a few points which I trust Mr. Graves will be able to see for himself are incorrect. The fractional currency in circulation, which he claims in 1866 amounted to 344 million dollars, did not at any time during that year reach 29 millions, the June statement showing $27,334,965. The greatest amount of fractional currency ever in circulation was published in June, 1874, at $45,881,295. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his official report to Congress for 1873, page 29, says:

"The act of July 17, 1862 (12 Statutes, 592), authorized the use of postal and other stamps as currency, and made them receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars. The fourth section of the act of March 3, 1863 (12 Statutes, 711), authorized the issue of fractional notes in lieu of postal and other stamps and postal currency; made them exchangeable in sums not less than three dollars for United States notes, and receivable for postage and revenue stamps, and in payment of dues to the United States, except duties on imports, less than five dollars; and limited the amount to $50,000,000. The fifth section of the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Statutes, 220) authorized an issue of $50,000,000 in fractional currency, and provided that the whole amount of these notes, outstanding at any one time, should not exceed this sum."

The state bank notes in circulation, which Mr. Graves claims in 1866 amounted to 240 million dollars had all been withdrawn from circulation with the exception of about 20 millions nearly two years prior to 1866. The Comptroller, in his official report for June, 1866, says: "There are $19,966,163 in state bank currency unredeemed, but not more than one half of that amount can be estimated as actually in use, the balance having been lost or destroyed."

The coin interest legal tender notes, which Mr. Graves modestly puts down at 217 million dollars, had no existence whatever except in the fertile mind of the writer. No such loan was ever passed by Congress, and no such item ever appeared in the public debt statements. Many of the other items, including 450 millions of Confederate currency, I must decline at this time to consider, they being unworthy of refutation. Now if Mr. Graves will take the trouble to send my article published Sept. 28th, together with his criticism to the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, or to the Secretary of the Treasury, asking for further information, and publish the reply in The Truth Seeker, if I am wrong and he is right, I will humbly acknowledge through the same channel that the vast number of public debt statements and the annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency, together with many other valuable statistics which I have been carefully collecting for a quarter of a century—supposing them to be official—are all base counterfeits, and that annually I have been imposed upon by our member of Congress and others, of all shades in politics, whom I supposed were sending me genuine documents. If, on the other hand, Mr. Graves finds he is in the wrong, I hope his acknowledgment will appear as public as his attempted criticism. Fraternally yours, John W. Truesdell.

Syracuse, Nov. 5, 1878.

Borrowed Abuse as a Weapon of Warfare.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The Index of November 7th has commenced the campaign in behalf of "reform" by discharging its vials of wrath, in nine columns, on the heads of the majority of the National Liberal League. As one of the majority delegates, I must again protest against any and all of the misstatements by the "official organ of the National Liberal League of America" made with the avowed purpose of influencing the Local Leagues "to dissolve their connection with the old National League." The Index commences by declaring that at the opening of the Congress "the spirit of the 'repeal' party immediately revealed itself," and that "a fair, orderly, and expeditious course of business was evidently not desired." Now, this sweeping accusation that the majority did not desire to act fairly in the method of conducting the business of the Congress is unwarranted, and is entirely disproved by The Index itself when, shortly after, it admits that the majority organization gave the "reform" minority four members out of five on the Committee on Resolutions, and three "reform" members out of four of the Committee on Nomination of Officers, which, The Index says, were the two leading committees. What could be fairer than this? It also accuses the majority of "long and profitless wrangling," "wasting of time," "perversity," etc. Now, does it suppose that anybody is going to believe that a majority which was united on repeal did this thing all alone?

I hav a vivid memory of a wide-awake minority who used economically (not "wasted") all the time they could get to prevent the majority from carrying any point in the Congress, from first to last; and it is to their honor that they exhibited their fair share of "perversity" in a very lively and able manner. These charges are repeated in varying form over and over again, such as "the repeal party betrayed a reckless disregard of fair play," and so on ad infinitum.

These things are heaped upon a majority who postponed for a year the whole question of repeal, for peace and harmony, and to save time, so that the fundamental principles of the League (the separation of the Church and State) could be acted upon the last day of the session. But, passing by all other things, The Index, in copying the following shameful article from the Syracuse Daily Standard, has by implication wilfully misrepresented the character of the majority delegates, because its editor knows this article to be an abominable caricature and a tissue of most scurrilous falsehoods as applied to either the majority or minority of the National Liberal League. Read this delectable extract from The Index, and make up your mind if it intends to show fair play to the reputations of its late companions and associates:

The Syracuse Daily Standard of October 28th had these plain-spoken words to say on the events of the two preceding days:

The Congress of Radical Thinkers held at Wieting Opera House Saturday and yesterday must hav furnished much food for thought to those who hav any regard for the decency of society and the purity of mankind. But one question arose for consideration, and that related exclusively to obscene literature. By persistent as well as quiet effort, a majority of the League was composed of Freelovers and dirty literature defenders, and from first to last they were determined upon making a point in favor of its free circulation. Their remarks sometimes almost polluted the atmosphere of the Opera House, and one who said that "if they should be left alone, they would stink themselves to death," was not so far out of the way as he might hav been.

The decent element was compelled to leave; it had no other refuge than the organization of a new association. The League in Syracuse represented by Messrs. C. D. B. Mills and John W. Truesdell repudiated the perfumers and joined the new association. The one represented by Mrs. Colman remained.

The seceders are entitled to the commendation of all defenders of morality for the course they took. Such a spectacle was never presented in Syracuse before as that when men and women rose in their places and openly advocated the uprooting of principles of morality. The Journal was severely criticised by them for calling things by their right names. In place of "socialistic privileges" it said "Freelove;" instead of "radical publications" it said "obscene literature." The adherents of immorality should thank the Journal, rather than blame it, for not speaking yet more plainly, and sinking not a few members of the disgraceful combination to a level beneath that of brothels.

Let an intelligent public judge, if they desire to leave and unite with a new League whose principal weapons of warfare thus far, as shown by its official organ, are gross misstatements and abuse of the majority, who happen to honestly differ with the minority as to the constitutionality and dangerous tendency of a United States law, and therefore desire its repeal. Yours for justice,

Boston, Mass., Nov. 10, 1878. Henry Damon.

Ingersoll the Enemy of Moses.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The following appeared in the Syracuse Daily Journal of Saturday, Nov. 9th:

"The Rev. D. Norman Seaver, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, will to-morrow (Sunday) morning preach a discourse upon 'The Mistakes of the Enemies of Moses; or, The Law of the Old Testament Vindicating the God of the Old Testament.' There are many in this community who hav heard one side of the important question involved in the discussion of this subject, and Dr. Seaver's presentation of the other side of it will be interesting and profitable to all such who may hear him to-morrow. There is deep interest in the tendencies of the American people, and Christian teachers hav a duty to perform in aiding to stem those tendencies towards immorality (sic) and licentiousness" (sic).

Also, in the Sunday Courier, the following:

"Ingersoll Meets a Foeman.—Rev. Norman Seaver, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, will preach this morning from his own pulpit on 'The Mistakes of the Enemies of Moses.' The discourse will be an exposure of the sophistries expounded in this city last week by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Dr. Seaver is a scholar of theology eminently able to cope with even as able an adversary on the other side as Col. Ingersoll."

Having heard Col. Ingersoll's lecture in Syracuse on Oct. 31st., on Sunday morning I repaired to the church aforesaid to hear the Old Testament God vindicated and the "exposure of the sophistries" by the "able adversary," Dr. Seaver.

As might be expected, he never attempted to "cope" with them (the "sophistries"), or Ingersoll either, but, after announcing his text and reading the law of God, given to Moses (Deut. v and x), he stated that a lecturer (referring to Ingersoll, but not by name), said, "If the God of the universe be the God of the Bible, then I cannot worship him." After an eloquent and lengthy wonder how any one could hav any objection to the God of the Bible, he disclaimed any intention to condescend to "any picayune criticisms" on the number of blades of grass that might or might not hav grown on Mt. Sinai; whether there was a sufficiency to feed all the cattle that came out of the land of Egypt or not; whether there could hav been an increase from the seventy souls who went down into the land of Egypt to the number who returned or not. It was enough for him to know that such a nation existed, etc. You must know that Col. Ingersoll had made estimates of these Bible facts (?) and utterly disproved their possibility, and this was the summary way in which this theologically "eminently able scholar" exposed the "sophistries" of the Colonel, and performed "his duty in aiding to stem those tendencies towards immorality and licenticusness," viz: by evasion and duplicity. He went over the Ten Commandments, pronouncing them all "good," and "very good," and inquiring at the close of each, "What is there in that that any man should attempt to deny and defy?"

One would hav supposed he had never read of all the wars, murders, rapes, incests, wife-stealings, and human sacrificial burnt-offerings which it is said in the book God commanded and took delight in; neither his laws for the provision of slavery, nor yet his preference for such men as adulterous David and polygamous Solomon, of whom he (Dr. Seaver) made mention of in the highest terms—so utterly did he ignore the whole Old Testament for his pet code of morals, the ten commandments, to the total exclusion of the entire remainder of the book, with the exception of these two holy men of God, David and Solomon. And there sat his listening congregation, never questioning, it is to be presumed, the honesty of the man who was thus duping them with a pretense of "the mistakes of the enemies of Moses" being fully answered in this laudation of the law of Moses. How long will the world be thus deceived by these men of God and enemies of all science and truth? Just so long as those who disbelieve the myths of the Bible will attend their places of worship and act devoutly and seem to pray when they hav no belief in prayer, pay enormous sums into their treasuries to support such means of grace, and suffer the cause of Liberalism to languish and pine for the want of support, from their moral cowardice, their impecuniosity, or any other motive.

The Prophetic Conference in your city last week, the present Week of Prayer for the young men of this nation and of the world, the effort made through the Women's Home Missionary Society, and various other "new departures" from the old-established Christian usages, plainly show that they are not dead yet, and that the friends of Freethought hav a mighty battle to fight with these Jesuits before they will gain for this republic the freedom for religious expression and belief that the framers of our Constitution and the winners of our independence intended when they declared, "All men are born free and equal."

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1878. ELLA E. GIBSON.

A Letter of Dissatisfaction.

Neither of the following letters were writ en for publication, but possibly they may interest the reader as much as others. The first is evidently written by an intelligent but somewhat unfair gentleman, and was deemed worthy of an answer. The reply was written hurriedly and was about to be mailed when, upon being shown to a friend, it was advised that both the letter and the reply be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The advice was acted upon, as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Sir: For some two or three weeks past there hav been mailed to me (I know not from what source) copies of your paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. I write now to request that, if they come from your office, they may be discontinued. If you desire it, I will return the three copies already received.

The unfair and vindictive tone of your editorials and the personalities indulged in by yourself and many of your contributors tend only, in my opinion, to disgrace and degrade the Liberal cause. Your paper has, moreover, been the chief instrument in thrusting upon the Liberals of the country the defense of the right to print and disseminate through the mails obscene and filthy literature—a question entirely foreign from and inimical to the cause for which they should unitedly work. By the insane attempt to force this nauseous pill down the throats of Freethinkers and get them to indorse its views upon this dirty subject, your paper has succeeded in breaking up a useful organization which had no business whatever to identify itself with this question. If Freethinkers throw overboard, along with the superstitions of Christianity, all restraints upon natural morality and virtue, they can never hope for success, and, in fact, do not deserve it. Rather the bonds of virtuous superstition than indecent and immoral license! will be the verdict of every right-minded person.

But Freethought is not necessarily allied with immorality and indecency, although it has long been so charged by the orthodox. Your paper, having made itself the organ of the Freelove clique, has indeed done much to strengthen the force of this orthodox charge, and assisted in affixing upon Liberalism a most disgraceful stigma.

Wounded thus by the hands of those who were supposed to be its friends, the future progress of religious Freethought will be materially retarded unless common sense speedily reasserts itself in the place of blind infatuation with the class of which your sheet appears to be the representative.

Yours for a pure and decent Liberalism,

CHAS. M. CUYLER.

REPLY.

MR. CHAS. M. CUYLER, Dear Sir: Yours of the 12th is received. I think it quite likely that copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER were sent you from this office, as I think your name was, with others, handed me by a friend. I am sorry that they are so distasteful to you. It is my wish to be fair and truthful in all I hav to say. My style may be rough and uncultured, but I hope I am not dishonest. You may act your pleasure as to returning the copies of my paper sent you. They are not of much consequence, any way.

Allow me to say I think you do me injustice, as well as the class to which I belong. Let me mention some of the points:

1. Your charge of unfairness I will not enlarge upon, but will only repeat that I hav not intended to be unfair. If I hav told one untruth in all this Comstock controversy I do not know it. Personalities hav been used, but they seemed necessary, and they hav been resorted to in self-defense. They were not begun in my paper. They were commenced, in a most offensive manner, in The Index. Its editor has repeatedly charged me with being a defender of obscenity, and he needlessly went out of his way to try to prove me guilty of forgery. He wrote to enemies in this city to obtain damaging facts to publish against me, and twice did he resort to the same personal and untrue charges, to my injury. When I was arrested a year ago by a warrant from a United States court, issued at the instigation of Anthony Comstock, backed by the Young Men's Christian Association, upon a false and cruel charge of obscenity, which was a convenient one to cover what was regarded by the same Christian censors as blasphemy, and when a grim prison seemed to yawn to receive me, I felt impelled, by as honest and earnest an impulse as I ever felt in my life, to do what I could to stay the surging tide of bigotry, intolerance, and Comstockism which threatened to overwhelm the Liberals of America; and when I caused petitions to be sent over the country to be signed, asking for the repeal or modification of one of the most infamous laws ever placed upon the statute books of our country, then it was that F. E. Abbot denounced the movement and misrepresented the motives of those moving in the matter; then it was that he showed his cloven foot; then it was that he stabbed me in the back; then it was that he tried to blacken my reputation and destroy the earnest work in which I was engaged. This very Liberal (?) business he has continued at brief intervals since. Had the same course been pursued against yourself, I presume that you would hav shown quite as much "vindictiveness" as I hav. Mr. Abbot did me a deep personal wrong before I ever said one uncomplimentary word against him in my paper. There is abundance of proof of this.

2. You say my paper "has been the chief instrument in thrusting upon the Liberals of the country the defense of the right to print and disseminate through the mails obscene and filthy literature." You wrong me grossly. My paper has never advocated anything of the kind. I hav never advocated the publishing and dissemination of filthy or obscene literature. I am no more in favor of it than yourself. I hav repeatedly denounced that vile class of stuff, and hav insisted that it ought to be suppressed and its authors duly punished, but in a legitimate and constitutional way. I am opposed to the General Government's taking in its hands what belongs solely to the states. Of course, obscenity is a crime that should be arrested and punished the same as forgery, perjury, arson, homicide, and murder, but the United States Government has nothing to do with any of them. The punishment of them belongs exclusively to the states. It is not the mailing of obscenity that specially makes it wrong; it is the publishing of it and sending it abroad in any way. It is just as bad sent by express, by freight, or by private conveyance. As stopping the circulation by mail can possibly reach but a small part of what may be disseminated, I am in favor of fighting it on broader grounds. I am in favor of arresting its publication so effectually that it cannot be sold openly over the counter or secretly in the rear room; so that it cannot be packed and shipped with other literature, or sent by railroad, steamer, express, or mail. It is practicable to do this.

It is not difficult to suppress the publication of obscene books and prints; it can easily be done, as it has been done, without suborning the postal department of the General Government. This work was done nearly six years ago, and there has practically been no circulation of the stuff since. This alarm about the quantity that is being sent through the mails is without grounds. Besides, THE TRUTH SEEKER is not responsible for the matter being brought to the attention of Liberals. The remark that it was so brought will apply with far more truth to The Index than to my paper. The Index first raised the hue and cry about the enormity of asking Congress for a repeal or modification of the Comstock laws. The Index forced it upon the attention of the League, and called for a discussion of the question that the League might decide it. It was Mr. Abbot who laid down the planks upon which he would stand, and upon which he demanded that he and his companions should be elected. If it was not the spirit of dictatorship, then I am no judge of the article.

3. You say my paper "has broken up a useful organization," meaning the League. This is most unjust. My paper has not broken up the organization, nor ever contained a line in favor of disruption. It was Abbot and his friends who divided the League, and the only excuse was because another man than himself, but one of the wisest and best that the country can produce, was elected instead of him. Cast not the sin of disruption on my head.

But let me assure you that the Liberal League is not broken up. We are as thoroughly organized as ever. We hav a noble Liberal for President, who, while he holds reputation and respectability at their just value, prizes liberty and constitutional rights still higher. He is not in favor of surrendering the dearest rights which the Constitution confers upon the people for the sake of standing well with the Mrs. Grundys of society or for aiding and abetting Comstockism.

4. You intimate that I am in favor of throwing overboard all restraints upon the natural passions. It is not so. I hav never advocated anything of the kind. I hav lived to see sixty years, and hav led a moral life, and will not object to comparing records with yourself.

5. You say my paper "has made itself the organ of the Freelove clique, and has done much to strengthen the force of the orthodox charge, and assisted in affixing upon Liberalism a most disgraceful stigma." This is utterly false. My paper is not, and has never been, the organ of Freelovers. I am not a Freelover in theory or practice, and I hav never written a paragraph in favor of Freelovism. But I do not hold myself to be any better or more righteous than those who believe in Freelove. My position is that those who do believe in Freelove hav a right to do so, and hav a right to hold to their convictions, to publish them, and to send them through the mails. I do not think much of the Liberalism of any man who cannot accord to others the same right to think and speak and print that he claims for himself. Bigotry and intolerance are just as obnoxious in those who pretend to be Liberals as in any people in the world. It is no better in them to proscribe others for thinking differently from themselves than it is in Christians to proscribe Radicals for blasphemy and sacrilege. Probably blasphemy seems worse to a real Christian than does lewdness or obscenity. If the General Government has the right to set up a censorship over the mails to throw out what is not proper to pass through them, it has just as much right to throw out blasphemy and heresy as it has indecency and obscenity. If we once surrender the rights guaranteed to us by the Constitution and allow a system of espionage to be set up over us, we know not where it will stop. It is just as lawful for our orthodox opponents to throw out what they may class as immoral as what they may hold to be obscene. Neither are defined with the slightest accuracy. What may be regarded as immoral by one may be moral to another. What may be obscene to one may be not at all so to another. It is wholly in opposition to the genius of American institutions for any one class to set up a standard of opinion for others. For the life of me, I cannot understand how any Liberal who is a Liberal can be in favor of it. I cannot understand how a Liberal like Judge Hurlbut can advocate the inspection of the public mails by postmasters and their deputies to see whether the matter is proper to be forwarded or not. It is the most monstrous proposition that I ever heard advanced by a Liberal, and is one of which a reasonable Christian ought to be ashamed. If that system of inspection and espionage is not resorted to, how are postmasters to know whether the mail matter is obscene or not?

I cannot think that the people of this country, much less the Liberal element, are yet ready to advocate the official inspection of the public mails before they can be forwarded to their places of destination, even with the hope of finding, now and then, a little obscenity. It would be one of the most unpopular and abhorrent practices that has ever been perpetrated under our government; and would be more destructive to the principles of free speech and a free press, and in the aggregate a thousand times worse than if a small amount of indecent matter occasionally passed through the mails. But without an abhorrent system of espionage and censorship, something like the one suggested by Judge Hurlbut, it is difficult to see how the Comstock laws are to be fully applied, and how it may not be possible for obscenity to occasionally find its way through the mails.

Let me say, here and distinctly, that if the class that are denominated Freelovers are the only portion of the Liberal element who hav the moral courage to stand up in defense of liberty, free speech, a free press, and free mails, I shall stand with them. If they are the only defenders of the rights inherited under the Constitution, I will be counted one. I had rather be called a Freelover than be false to the most vital principles of American liberty.

I am not in favor of obscenity but I am in favor of liberty and will oppose everything whose aim it is to destroy it. It is just as untrue and mean to taunt our party with being in favor of obscenity as it was to accuse the anti-slavery party with being in favor of miscegenation and amalgamation. The devotees of liberty hav always been charged with indecency and immorality. Probably we shall have to trust to time for vindication.

I cannot but feel grieved that you do not like my paper. It has been my effort by hard work and economy to make it as good as I could and to keep it alive through the five years of hard times we hav passed through. I do not claim that it is as good as your favorite The Index: but it contains fully a third more reading matter for the money and has managed to get along on less than one-tenth the aid the cultured sheet has received. I am glad there are thousands of persons in the country, with tolerably fair mental capacity, who seem to think far more of it than you do. So long as they sustain me I shall go on and continue to do the best I can.

It is useless for me to write more at length. I can see that your mind is prejudiced and I fear you are one of those who value respectability above liberty and right. As for me I shall continue to approve what I believe to be right and to oppose what I believe to be wrong. You may think me vindictive if you choose, but I think Abbot far more so. Besides he is so unfair that he has made more than fifty positive misrepresentations in connection with this subject. You of course hav the right to approve of his conduct and his falsehoods. I had rather, even, be untruthfully accused of "obscenity" than be so false and unfair as he.

Let me say, in closing, that while you of the Comstock reform party claim you hav the larger share of reputable Liberals on your side, there are a few who hav some reputation for intelligence and respectability who have pronounced themselves opposed to Comstockism and is favor of repeal. Prominent among them may be named James Parton, A. B. Bradford, and O. B. Frothingham. I hav just seen a recent letter from the latter gentleman in which he says that since looking into the subject and examining the arguments he is compelled to acknowledge himself in favor of unconditional repeal. It may be deemed necessary for Mr. Abbot or yourself to take Mr. Frothingham to task. It will perhaps hardly do for so eminent and worthy a man to ally himself with the disreputable side of the lovers of liberty—with Freelovers and obscenists, as you and others delight to call us. Will Mr. Frothingham be peacefully allowed to place himself in such odious company? Possibly Bennett is not the only one who may be counted among the vile. According to my view, time and investigation are only necessary to bring thousands over to the position occupied by Mr. James Parton and Mr. O. B. Frothingham—the side of American liberty and personal rights.

I will annoy you with no more papers.

Yours for liberty and truth, D. M. Bennett.

Mr. Cuyler seems to hav a decided dislike for The Truth Seeker and its editor. To show that there are good and intelligent men who entertain different views, we take pleasure in giving the following letters by way of contrast:

50 West 36th st., N. Y., Oct. 24, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, My Dear Sir; Your valuable present of books was brought yesterday afternoon. I am ashamed to accept them, as they must consume no small part of the modest sum of money which I intended as a gift. But that cannot be helped now. You speak of my "kindness" to you. The phrase a little jars on me. There is no "kindness" in an act of simple appreciation. I recognize in you a stalwart, disinterested, devoted worker; and when I see one such, I hope I hav good sense enough to honor his fidelity to his own convictions and methods.

Faithfully yours, O. B. Frothingham.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 13, 1878.

Mr. D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: You hav my warmest thanks for the neat volume containing the Addresses at Watkins Glen, with your kind letter, received this morning. May you more and more hav the joy of success in your efforts to liberate and liberalize the human race.

Yours truly, Elizur Wright.

Letters from Friends.

NOTES FROM MICHIGAN.

BY DR. J. L. YORK.

Dear Bennett: Since I wrote you last I hav been actively engaged in driving the red-hot plowshare of Freethought.

My stay here has been prolonged far beyond my expectations, and, from present prospects, I will remain here during the winter and visit the East in the spring.

The outlook for our cause in Michigan is truly hopeful; a good audience almost anywhere can be gathered to listen to the gospel of nature.

The rage of orthodox heathen is growing every day more intense. Salvation by faith is losing its hold upon the people more and more as the Bible of nature is better understood.

Revivals of religion are quite rare in this state at present, and they hav no bright prospect for the future.

Our Bob Ingersoll has been stirring things up again in Michigan, and poor old theology crumbles to its fall—not that the churches are dead, not so. But theology is dying, and the church is simply working for place and power.

Money power and ecclesiastical power join hands to-day to hold the people in bondage to the craft of priest and gold, and if there was ever a time to work, that time is now.

No daubing of untempered mortar will meet the wants of our people to-day; they are digging down to get at the bed-rock of truth.

Our whole social, religious, and political structure is undergoing the most critical search after truth. Something is wrong, and the people are on the track of many hoary-headed lies in both church and state. These two thieves hav always robbed the people and kept them poor, but their day of reckoning is at hand.

Oh, for a baptism of helpfulness! The people want help to break the yoke of bondage to the paganism of religion, and also the barbarism that lies wrapt in our financial system, which is sucking the life-blood of our poor, crippling the industries of the country inducing poverty, intemperance, and crime, that the few may ride rough-shod over the natural rights of the many in the name of God, religion, and republicanism.

The people want help to rebuke sin in high places. Some questions hav been settled in the past, but at what a fearful cost. Negro slavery cost us five hundred thousand soldiers sent to heaven, and uncounted treasure worse than sunk in the sea, besides the demoralizing effects of a war which this nation will not outgrow in a hundred years to come. What for but to gratify the selfish greed of man—unrequited toil sent the retributive hand of justice.

To-day a slavery worse than negro slavery confronts us for solution—the slavery of white men, women, and children. They cry unto God for deliverance. Happy are we if we profit by the experience of the past and find a solution of the great issues of the day at the ballot box. May God and the good angels bring in the light and save our nation from itself.

I am watching the conflict going on in The Truth Seeker, and can but say, God bless you, Brother Bennett. Stand up for truth, and I do hope the time will soon come when our guns will be turned against the common enemy outside our lines rather than so much good ammunition wasted upon enemies within our own lines.

I would that my brother of The Index could do his work in his own way, and The Truth Seeker its work in its own way. The field is large. The Index fills its sphere ably and well; but the sphere of The Truth Seeker is the larger one, and meets the wants of the masses, and is growing better every week. God bless you, brethren, of both papers. This friction hurts the cause and wastes the forces and strengthens our enemies.

Our people are exercised just now about a state camping ground. The committee appointed at Grand Rapids last September have found a beautiful spot on the brink of one of those bright little lakes for which Michigan is noted—15 acres of fine grove, with railroad facilities second to none in the state. The committee meet at Lansing on the 20th of this month to take steps looking to the legal existence of the Camp-Meeting Association of the Spiritualists and Liberals of Michigan.

The stock will be issued and placed on sale at the Convention which meets at Lansing next March. This is not an individual enterprise, but of the entire Liberal element of this state to build a monument, an objective point around which tender memories will cling while we live, and a permanent institution to transmit to the children who come after us.

This committee—composed of such men as S. S. Shaw, Jas. White, John Butler, J. P. Wait, John M. Potter, and others—mean business, so get ready, Liberals of Michigan, to purchase the stock when placed upon the market, that the improvements may go forward in early spring.

From the engagements I hav on hand I will be in Michigan some time. My engagements are full up to January 1st, after which I am open for work, and if my work does not suit, I ask no pay. Any live man or woman in a town can open the door for a course of lectures if they will. Open the door, dear friends, to any worthy worker, and let the work go on.

My address will be at Ionia, Mich., until further notice.

THE WAR AGAINST THE GHOSTS.

WAR OF THE WEE GIANTS AGAINST THE GODS (GHOSTS. SEE INGERSOLL).—FALSEHOODS ARRAYED AGAINST TRUTHS.—PATTEE CALLED UPON FOR AID.—JAMIESON OUT ON THE WARPATH.—A TREMENDOUS BROADSIDE OF FANCIES TO ANNIHILATE FACTS.—PATTEE CALLED UPON FOR HELP.—PROVES THAT MOTT IS A FRAUD BECAUSE THE JENKINSES ARE EXPERT AT SWALLOWING.

Mr. Editor: Some one has said that a lie well stuck to is as good as the truth. And after Anti (or Ante) fraud has repeatedly proclaimed Mott "a fraud," an "exposed fraud," and a "thoroughly exposed fraud," and called upon, or referred to, Pattee to prove his assertions for him; and W. F. Jamieson has harped upon the same string until nearly out of tune or monotonous; and Ayres proclaimed Mott a "transparent humbug" because Mott practised the fraud he (Ayres) taught him, and returned to Ayres his own falsehoods, and Pattee comes in aid of his friends and proves Mott a fraud; 1. Because he saw him and heard him tell big stories; 2. Because he reproduced his own falsehoods and fraud; 3. Because he could actually squirt dye-stuff upon him in his cabinet; 4. Because he smelt him through a tin trumpet and found him a fraud; and, to clinch all these sage proofs (?), brings the testimony of a lady all the way from Indiana who testifies that she knows he is a fraud; and that squirting upon and smelling him were the only methods (rejoice, O ye enemies of Mott!) whereby he could hav been proved a fraud. She also volunteers the information that Spiritualism is an "old ship," and that Mott is a "disgusting barnacle" attached to her, etc.

This same lady is one of the crew of that same old ship that but yesterday elected Her Majesty Victoria Figurehead Woodhull Captain, sought also to elect her President of the Model Republic, and even their Deity—even to pronouncing benedictions in her name at their great gatherings as a God. Surely such are the best judges of barnacles and smells.

We hav repeated Pattee's proofs, which, Anti-Fraud says, "leave nothing to be said." As we wish to help our opponents all we reasonably can, and judging by the wretched case they make out, they need more help than we are able to giv.

A letter on page 606, Sept. 21st, givs testimony by some mysterious method supposed to bear upon this case, and written sometime we are not told when; somewhere we are not told where; by some one we are not informed whom. And such are your proofs, O enemies of Mott!

When you hav selected these and such other weapons as the Pattee arsenal has furnished, and gained a victory over omnipotent truth, we hope you will wear your laurels with becoming modesty and dignity. Soon?

Strange that the testimony (excepting that of the lady of the barnacle and smell) comes mostly from self-convicted frauds and authors of the very falsehoods which Mott has been accused of uttering or rather repeating. Thus "Satan is still rebuking sin."

Mr. Jamieson is out (in The Truth Seeker of Oct 5th) again where he fires a tremendous (?) broadside of fancies to annihilate my facts, producing about as much execution as a cloud hurled by the wind against a rock. He also refers to Pattee for defense of everything that has a bearing upon the question, although that poor arsenal is long ago exhausted, excepting the forty more letters resembling that which the lady of the barnacle has furnished, which probably are still in reserve.

Jamieson maintains that Mott is an "exposed fraud," and engaged in the manufacture of "humpbacked Spiritualistic camels" for "gullible" ones to swallow. Behold a specimen of his rhetoric. After calling me "Simple Simon Jenkins," etc., he says: "You are very gullible, Mr. Jenkins. We did not need this fresh proof of the fact of your credulity. Your articles, already published, show you to be a person with an immense maw, capable of swallowing, without winking, all the humpbacked Spiritualistic camels that Mott can make. If you think the 'conditions' require it, you are fully prepared to stand with your hands tied behind you, your eyes shut, your mouth open, and gulp. You are so easily 'satisfied' that you are quite content without inquiring what is your weakness. If you inquired more you would believe less. Nor would you, in a printed article, speak as you hav of the 'things you hav seen done' in a totally dark room, except what few rays of light sneak out from beneath a turned-down light, under a transparency in an adjoining room. What hav you seen in that little dark room? Ghosts born of your own credulity."

There! is not that convincing? Will any one hereafter maintain that the enemies of Mott cannot argue a case fairly, logically, and in a manly and dignified manner? And if the Jenkinses, as he says, are good at swallowing, does not that prove Mott to be a fraud almost as clearly as if Jamieson had like Mr. Pattee actually smelt a hole, and scented a fraud by the aid of tobacco.

I hav been the most incorrigible disbeliever in Spiritualism according to the testimony of my friends, and my own experience, after a thorough examination reaching over nearly a quarter of a century. Does Mr. Jamieson expect to demolish my facts with such ridiculously false fancies? The greatest instance of credulity that I was ever accused of being guilty of, was when I had nearly fallen into the ridiculous error of supposing Mr. Jamieson a high-minded, honorable, courteous gentleman and opponent. But thanks to Mr. J. I stand corrected. I hope, however, that he will soon resume his dignity and manliness and not be again ambitious of thus disgracing himself.

I am strongly reminded of hearing W. T. C. Garrison at a convention many years ago in New York who when hissed by his audience pointed his long finger towards them, saying, "Hiss ye geese; hiss ye serpents, they're the best arguments you've got." Nearly as good arguments as the enemies of Mott hav yet been able to produce. We do not fear to meet his royal majesty the zion enemy, but do not feel able to cope with the weapons of his scurviness—the skunk. We hope should this act upon Mr. Jamieson as an emetic and giv him another touch of the black vomit, that he will not foul the fair columns of The Truth Seeker with the result. We hope however that he is relieved.

Rejoice and be exceeding glad; yea exalt the hour of your salvation, ye enemies of Mott, for behold ye hav found champions worthy of your cause. Selah.

"Ghosts born of your own credulity." We hav heard of ghosts generating gods; and gods creating a universe from nothing; but never before heard of ghosts born of a credulity that never existed; out of Jamieson's fertile imagination. Mr. Jamieson seems to be ignorant of physiology, or deities, for credulity belongs to the head and not to the "maw," or stomach. "Nearly all the intelligence that purports to come from the other world would disgrace a schoolboy of twelve years," says J. No doubt Mr. Jamieson knows or ought to know as we are told by those who profess to be well informed and refer to abundance of testimony to prove that the veriest twaddle and most disgusting specimens of pious prayer and loud profanity, comes from Mr. Jamieson himself that they hav ever witnessed when under spiritual control or influence. Probably he speaks from experience, and it is a Spiritualistic doctrine that men attract spirits most resembling themselves. In charity to Mr. J. we may infer that he wrote the article we are reviewing (in T. S.) under just such influence. It would certainly do no credit to a boy twelve years of age, or girl either.

Mr. J. ridicules the idea that light should be subject to conditions of restraint and control, to produce the desired effect, or permit them to be produced; but having made thousands of pictures (photographs) by controlling it we know whereof we affirm and can verify it at any time by experiment, and the reference we made was perfectly proper—Mr. Jamieson who has drawn a distorted picture unlike myself without proper light to the contrary, however.

We hav, Mr. Jamieson, seen and recognized individual apparitions in that "little dark room," even to the color of their hair, eyes, peculiarities of dress, etc., where no light is admitted; the light surrounding and rendering luminous those apparitions in a room so dark that by experiment no face of a real person could be seen at a distance of six inches from the aperture. Hundreds of others have seen the same and are not mistaken. Will some of the "thorough exposers" disclose to us the nature of, and show us how this mysterious light which seems to emanate from, and illuminates only the object) is produced?

Mr. J. intimates that there are many of the Jenkinses who are so "gullible." Yes, Mr. J., they are numerous and increasing daily. And if it will not sicken the small-mawed Jamieson, we may carefully tell him that they are increasing faster since the "thorough exposure" than ever before; gathering into the church daily such as shall be saved—from unbelief. The Pattee "expose" so called, awakened the curiosity of some, who informed the writer that they had previously felt no desire to investigate; they had since examined, and now believe.

Dr. Corry, late of this place, says, after several visits to Mott's: "If Mr. Mott should himself tell me that it was all a fraud I would believe he lied, for it is impossible." C. A. Treat, manager of Quealy car foundry, etc., here and family are equally divided in belief after repeated visits. Col. Eaton, I am told, ex-Land Commissioner of Hannibal and St. J. R. R., after fully investigating, are decided believers. T. J. Higgings, a Roman Catholic, lost a daughter under peculiar circumstances, was persuaded to go to Mott's staid there one night, saw, recognized at once, and had a satisfactory conversation with the departed. All belonging to the Jenkins genus or family of gullibles, according to Jamieson.

Says William Brown, one of the oldest, best known, and respectable citizens of Quincy, Ill., Oct. 9, 1878: "I hav attended the seances of J. H. Mott, and do certify and am willing to be qualified by oath, that I hav entered his seance with but a few minutes' acquaintance with the medium and saw friends whom I recognized who had been long in spirit life, and had conversations with and recognized spirit friends who passed from earth long ago in Scotland, with their old peculiarities; and of these things I cannot be mistaken, but am as certain as I would be on meeting and conversing with any of my friends here." He is a solid citizen, whose word is as good as his bond, and no one would think of disputing his word. He has been at several of Mott's seances, which only confirmed his belief. He gulps well, friend Jamieson.

Col. H. D. Mackay, of Leavenworth, Kan., whose name has been repeatedly dragged into this paper by Anti-Fraud without his knowledge or consent, and intimations thrown out that he is Mott's enemy, says, Oct. 1, 1878, in letter to the writer: "You hav unqualified authority at all times and under all circumstances to use my name as vouching for Mott's true mediumship. Of that fact I hav no doubt, and am satisfied I can prove it beyond all question. From that issue I shrink not. I hav full faith and confidence in his manifestations," etc.

This member of our rapidly-increasing and now numerous family, gulps well and seems able to contain more than the small-mawed Jamieson. Probably because these facts are contained in their heads while Jamieson tries to contain his in his stomach.

Hon. James Rogers, of Kansas, instantly recognized his wife who had been dead for years, at the first seance, and was called by name, although his name was not revealed to any one present, also the whole person of his sister as well, and held lengthy conversations with them both. He too belongs with scores and hundreds of others to the Jenkins family of gullibles.

Space will not permit many more who hav been there often and stayed long. And thus the battle goes on of those who hav not seen against those who hav seen; those who hav never heard against those who hav heard; and those who hav investigated but slightly or not at all against those who hav experimented and obtained more thorough information. Almost like a war of the eyeless fishes of the Mammoth Cave against the seeing fishes on the question of what they see, and the deaf arguing with acute hearers against what they profess to hear, and the ignorant disputing with knowledge as to what it knows on the platform of The Truth Seeker.

Mr. Jamieson wishes to "unite all Liberals under one broad banner," and with characteristic good sense and consistency wages unrelenting war against one of the most efficient corps of his own army, blindly fighting them, to unite them under the very banner they were already marching if let alone.

We will give up to Jamieson, and acknowledge his truth (?) when we are prepared to ignore common sense, stultify reason, call our eyesight a "fraud," our hearing a "humbug," deny well-known facts, and impeach the testimony of hundreds who for veracity, judgment, and character will compare at least favorably with Jamieson's, and whose capacity for discovering, appropriating, and retaining truth is at least equal to his, and deny stronger evidence than has been presented by scientific men in demonstration of some of the best known and universally acknowledged facts of science.

And must we deny all these facts, too, not at all dependent on the honesty or dishonesty of the medium in order to believe J. H. Pattee, Mrs. Indiana Barnes, Anti-Fraud, and W. F. Jamieson. Yours,

D. JENKINS.

AN OPEN LETTER TO FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

FLORENCE, IOWA, Nov. 11, 1878.

Sir: Before me lie two reports of the proceedings of the Syracuse Congress. One is fair, candid, courteous, considerate, breathing a spirit of amity and good will, and evincing a desire for fraternal harmony and unity of action between all classes of Liberals. The other is just the opposite of all these, being unfair, specious, insulting, and truculent, harsh and inconsiderate of the feelings of opponents, breathing a spirit of rivalry and hatred, and evincing a desire only for the triumph of a faction at the cost of all harmonious relations between the classes of Freethinkers who hav been unable to reach the same conclusion upon one certain question. The former of these reports appears in THE TRUTH SEEKER, presumably from the pen of the "uncultured" D. M. Bennett, and the latter is found in The Index and is the production of the "cultured" divine who edits that journal.

Now, sir, I hav nothing to do with the report in THE TRUTH SEEKER beyond calling your attention to the contrast in the spirit manifested therein and that which is the most salient feature of your own. The animus of the theologian shows itself in every line of your article. You write as a believer in the doctrine of free moral agency, and it seems impossible for you to attack these doctrines, which seem to you erroneous, without at the same time aspersing the characters and impugning the motives of those who hold and advocate these doctrines. This is unworthy of your reputation and of the position which you hold.

I am sorry that I am compelled to confess that you do not stand alone in this un-Liberal attitude toward those who differ from you upon the mail and social questions, but that many of those who act with you are imbued with and manifest the same spirit toward the repealers. It may serve your purpose to charge the repealers with being Freelovers, because that class of people are held in derision and regarded with loathing by the "respectable" part of the community, but you well know that but a small proportion of those who favor "repeal" entertain the principles of social freedom. The cry of "Freelove" is but a "mad-dog" cry to distract the attention of the people from the real issue, and is used to frighten the timid and uninformed into the ranks of your party.

But even were the repealers all Freelovers, charging them with the fact as though it were a crime, and accusing them of being "immoral," "dealers in obscene literature," etc., as was done by your henchmen in the Syracuse Congress, is no way to answer the arguments which they adduce in favor of the total and unconditional repeal of the Comstock laws. You must not forget, Mr. Abbot, that the motive of the Freelovers may be as pure, and their characters as much above reproach, as is your own.

You speak of the "pert unscrupulousness of 'repeal.'" Permit me to inquire if you regard the repealers as so many saucy, "pert" little boys and girls, who hav failed to show to your fatherly highness that deferential respect and unquestioning obedience which you imagined were your due? Allow me to suggest that the friends of repeal are grown-up men and women who may venture to differ from you without being either impertinent or "pert." How long is it since Freethinkers were forbidden to doubt the infallibility of a Supreme Court, or of a retired judge, or to refuse to obey the commands of the President of a Liberal organization under penalty of being considered "pert" and disrespectful towards their equals?

Judge Hurlbut is undoubtedly a gentleman of culture and legal lore, and I shall not quarrel with you about the merits of his books, but it is presumable that he is still liable to err, and if he imagines that innocent radicalism could not be punished by the enforcement of that proposed statute of his, then I must beg leave to differ from him, even at the risk of being regarded as somewhat "pert." Under that proposed statute it still lies with judge and jury to decide as to the "manifest intention" of an author, or whether it is not "mainly tending" to corrupt the young. And the proviso does not help the matter. Still must prejudiced judges and juries decide as to whether certain "words, phases, or pictures," are "obscene," and there is no way out of this dilemma.

You say: "During the afternoon it had leaked out that a majority of the Committee on Resolutions were in favor of 'reform' not 'repeal.'" This is the merest demagoguery. Every person who had watched this controversy for the last ten months knew the position of all the gentlemen on that committee, and so there was nothing to "leak out." I notice that all or nearly all the friends of "reform" try to carry the impression that the repealers alone desired to "press" the question to an issue, and that they alone "hungered and thirsted for a decisive vote." This may be true, after the assembling of the Congress. Before that time the reformers were just as anxious as the repealers for the question to come to an issue, and they even got out a "Card platform," upon which alone they would stand, they emphatically declared. Perhaps the discovery that the majority of the delegates were in favor of repeal was what cooled their arder for a vote, and made them less hungry and thirsty for ballot nourishment than they had been before they left their homes.

It strikes me, Mr. Abbot, that for a Liberal editor and leader, you are very anxious to quote slurs and lies about your brother Liberals from sheets whose enmity toward Freethinkers and Freethought is virulent and well known. You hav exemplified this somewhat peculiar tendency of yours in the past by selections from the World and the Christian Statesman, and now you giv another evidence of the continued possession of the same spirit by your quotations from the Syracuse papers.

You quote the Syracuse Standard as saying, among other things, that "Rivers, of Boston, now resting under indictments for the sale of obscene literature," etc. Why do you parade this in your paper, without a word of denial or comment, to the injury of your brother? You well know that, by your own definition, the pamphlet for the sale of which Mr. Rivers has been proceeded against by Massachusetts bigots, is not obscene. Then why do you give currency in your columns to this stale lie? Why do you quote that second batch of little, sneaking falsehoods from the same paper? Is it because you hav not the courage to pen them yourself, and so hav to rest satisfied with a second-hand retailing of them? But you cannot thus escape responsibility for publishing them to the Liberal world, or to such somewhat limited portion of it as reads The Index. A pretty mess of "pure" reading hav you spread before the readers of the "cultured journal of Freethought." And we are to thank you (or the braver man who wrote the slander) for not "smoking out a few members of this disgraceful combination (the repeal party) to a level beneath that of brothels." Thank you for nothing. Now the only amends which you can make to your outraged brothers and sisters is either to retract all these vile lies to which you hav given your indorsement by printing them from another paper without a word of condemnation, or name the guilty ones, that the foul imputation may not rest upon all the friends of repeal. This much you owe to "decency" and the truth. Will you pay the debt?

Your attempt to make it appear that because the consideration of the question of "repeal" versus "reform" was postponed for one year, the delegates were therefore under obligations to elect a certain set of officers is simply absurd and a pitiful begging of the question. I grant your right to secede, but doubt either the wisdom or patriotism of such action, and I at the same time strenuously insist upon the right of the majority to elect such men to office as they liked best, without imputation of "treachery" being thrown upon them. You say: "If a new Board had been elected which, like the old one, stood four to one in favor of 'reform' and against 'repeal,' we should hav refused to withdraw and remained with the old League, a contented and satisfied member." Indeed! Quite likely that you would. Most people are "contented and satisfied" when they hav things all their own way. If you could hav had the position of the League remained unchanged, though three out of five of the delegates desired a change, and could hav had four out of five of the officers of your way of thinking, you would not hav bolted. How generous! How unselfish! I am filled with "awe," even as you were when you marched out of Wieting Opera House in the wake of the choleric minister. Were you thus "awe"-struck when Rev. Gorden asserted that the demand for "repeal" came from those who themselves dealt in obscene literature, or when you were making those delectable selections from the Standard? With a respect engendered by your early services to the cause of secularism. I remain yours, etc. E. C. WALKER.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Nov. 11, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: Once more I am thy grateful debtor for the pleasure of reading a good book, full of interesting, instructive, entertaining, and truthful ideas, facts, and sentiments—"The Addresses at Watkins." I hav just read the last page of it, and hav truly had a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." When so many people of intelligence meet together, and each one says the very best things he can, and in the very best manner, there will always be something to interest any one who reads the "droppings from the sanctuary" of the mind.

I hardly know which speech of them all I like best. The opening one, by T. L. Brown, is brimful of gems of thought. I feel just as if I would like to select a whole sheet full of them for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but can only giv one or two as specimens.

"All that time, space, matter, and motion can do for us does not require the help of priests or their theology."

"As a rule, healthy, educated people are good; while ignorant, diseased, and idle persons are bad in both body and mind. Moral people, scientific and Infidel, are generally free from the more common causes of diseases, either physical or mental, for the plain reason that most of their time is spent in attending to the most important secular duties of this life."

"Better women, better men, and healthier children will be the result of educated liberty."

"To know is to be scientific."

Ella E. Gibson givs us some excellent reasons why we hav a right to criticise Jesus, and why his words and actions need criticising. In closing, she asks, "Shall we fear to discuss this question, and break the yoke that a false Christianity has imposed upon us? No!" A. L. Rawson, too, speaks well and logically. Mrs. Gage comes out strongly on the woman question—one of the greatest questions of this age. She makes some excellent points, too. She says, and says truly:

"The Christian Church is based upon the fact of woman servitude, upon the theory that woman brought sin and death into the world, and that therefore she was punished by being placed in a condition of inferiority to man—a condition of subjection, of subordination—and this is the foundation to-day of the Christian Church."

No speech of them all is more interesting than that of James Parten, yet there is much of it that I think objectionable; that is, while acknowledging it all to be far in advance of the times, yet it is really behind the radical cultured thought of the age. Not that he himself is not as radical as the most pronounced Materialist, but it givs reasons why some need a religion, and these reasons, though seemingly good on the face, are really baseless and uncalled for. For instance, the idea that the coming man needs and will hav a religion, I object to entirely. All religions must in time giv way to science, fact, and truth, because they are false and mythical. The world may keep the name religion, but it will hav a new meaning, and consequently will not actually be a religion at all. Calling a horse a man will not make it so, nor will naming a rule of life, a religion, make it so. The first day of the week is still called Sun-day, though the civilized world has long ceased to be sun-worshipers.

Bridget, among her "pots and kettles and soap and suds," would enjoy one day in seven spent in cheerful, healthful amusements, walking, riding, visiting museums and gardens in company with some choice friend, and listening to an hour's lecture upon health or some simple scientific subject just as much and far more than she now does her "mass," and it would be a million times more refining and civilizing. The Church crushes out all other forms of amusement and then claims to be the only joy and comfort of the poor and the oppressed! Mr. Parton also doubts if there are one hundred and fifty Atheists in the United States. I send in my name as one. Will others follow suit and get Bro. Bennett to keep tally. I fancy we could soon roll up into the thousands! To the substance itself of friend Parton's religion, I hav not a word of objection:

"It will offer no prayer, nor require men to kneel to any deity. . . . It will not be a revolution, but evolution . . . . it will hav an awful hell in it—many hells—as many as Dante's Inferno, . . . are we not every one of us every hour expiating the sins committed by our ancestors from the beginning of time? And do we not, most of us, go on committing sins which our descendants, alas! will hav to expiate in agony and shame? . . . It will hav a heaven also; most of us are enjoying a portion of it at the present time, for all the happiness in the world is the consequence and reward of past virtue. There is a joy in being alive; in a happy home. . . . The coming man will hav a Bible, also. What a Bible! The sum of human wisdom. The sound and high part of every literature. . . . all the kindliest things the heart of man ever uttered . . . the golden words, of which there are few in every language; to which every century contributes a few." But I must shut the book! It is so full of nice things that to be appreciated it must be owned and read and re-read. To read it is to feel nearer to every speaker who is therein represented. To feel that your list of loves is widened and increased till it enfolds every one of those workers for the beloved cause of Liberty. What do we not owe to D. M. Bennett, each one of us, for giving us so many grand, good books? He stands in the "fore front of the battle" and I hope every one who wishes for the highest good of humanity will help to "hold up his hands" by buying his books, papers, and tracts, and circulating them in every home on the continent. Rally round our noble standard bearer and make glad his heart by showing a just appreciation of his labors, his toils, his trials and his triumphs. This is from one of his truest friends and warmest admirers. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

MEMPHIS, MO., Nov. 8, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I find in T. S. of the 2d inst. this:

"Would you be kind enough to publish a reasonable question in your paper for some professed Spiritualist to answer? I asked the same some time ago in a Spiritualistic paper, but received no reply. The question is, How can that which has neither form, size, nor locality—in other words, how can spirituality, which, according to our definition of spirit, is intangible, invisible, immortal, universal, and omnipresent, as the word is usually defined—how can that assume tangibility, visibility, locality, etc., etc., the latter being clearly the properties of matter, as I think, universally recognized?

"I read and hear a great deal about 'wonderful spirit manifestations,' glorious news from the spirit-land,' materializations of spirits,' etc. Now, there would be no one happier than myself could I hav the assurance that our present is but a 'caterpillar existence,' and that the chrysalis life of perpetual and pure enjoyment is yet to come. Of the many Spiritualists is there no one who has compassion enough to lift one poor mortal out of 'darkness visible?' If there is, I shall feel forever grateful. . . . I crave an answer from some kind reader (Spiritualist) to the above. Yours in truth. J. MULLER, M.D."

Assuming the above to be a candid question, I submit some off-hand thoughts by way of reply, should you not receive a response to our friend from some abler pen.

Your correspondent defines spirits from the ultra material standpoint, taking for granted the idea that everything having a real existence must be visible to the eye and palpable to the touch of all in the flesh when in a normal condition. To that idea I would oppose this: "Chemistry tells us that the diamond, which to our senses is inert, ponderable matter, can be volatilized in the fire of the burning mirror só as to develop neither smoke nor cinders." Yet no one will contend that the substance of the diamond has been absolutely annihilated, but that it has only been rendered invisible and impalpable to our bodily senses. And although spiritual beings, in their normal condition, are neither visible nor tangible to our bodily senses while we are in our normal condition, there are thousands of clairvoyants and clairaudients to-day who can see and hear human spirits that hav left this stage of existence; but, contrary to our friend's definition, they hav form, size, and locality. These clairvoyants prove the truth of their assertions by accurately describing our spirit friends whom they never saw nor heard of while in the body of flesh.

Spirits, so far from being nothing, or, as the freethinking Irishman expressed it, "the little end of nothing whittled down," as our friend and the priesthood seem to believe, is, according to the great Swedish philosopher and seer of the last century, Swedenborg, more substantial than matter; in fact, is substance itself, while matter is evanescent. The spiritual world is the world of causes—this of effect.

And now, although I can no more grasp and explain how spirits can clothe themselves for brief periods with earthly matter, so that all present, in their normal condition, can see, converse with, and touch them, than I can grasp and explain how grass grows; yet I know it to be no less a fact.

Within the last year and a half I hav attended over one hundred and forty of Mott's seances, and I could as easily doubt my own existence as to doubt having seen, touched, and conversed with many of my relatives and friends who hav passed through the beautiful change called "death." I came an utter stranger, but asked for no "test conditions," being confident that if my spirit friends really met me they would be able to giv me convincing proof of their identity, irrespective of the medium's honesty or magical skill. And scores of tests I hav had. I giv one as a sample. One evening my father related the particulars of an incident which occurred over forty-seven years ago and one thousand miles off, and of which I am confident I had not thought in more than forty years. And I hav had scores equally convincing.

If Mr. Mott can of himself perform all that takes place in his presence, and wishes to become a millionaire, he has only to get the churches to make a fund to that figure, on condition of his going into the principal churches in the principal cities and showing how it is done; for the churches would raise millions in order to crush Spiritualism, as they know that it is honeycombing them.

If Dr. Muller wishes to know materializations to be a reality, he has only to come to Mr. Mott's to be gratified.

STEPHEN YOUNG.

P. S. I will add that neither myself nor any other person has any pecuniary interest in Mott's mediumship. S. Y.

LUNENBURG, PA., Nov. 11, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT: We liv in trying times, beset with foes without and tories within. Fierce enemies on all hands abroad, traitors within. The sorrows of Jesus were those of his own household. But I am glad the fun is in our hands and we must thoroughly purge the floor. How success befools wise men? How we love approbation even when engulped in the jaws of Christian hate and pious persecution.

We, as a people, are rushing up-hill very fast or sliding downhill very rapidly. I may not liv to see it, but as sure as the attributes of matter shape actions of such matter the day of judgment is at hand. Justice and brain must rule or justice and arms will rule. The sun rises in the east and gathers up the dew-drops to sweeten for the evening flower. The little cloud condenses in the west charged with thunder and red-hot thunderbolts—which will my countrymen choose to worship? The times are ripe, and rotten-ripe for change. The tide of human progress has no ebb. Suffering and sacrifice still walk abroad and will at last conduct the race to freedom. I am glad to see you so determined; all our thinking men are waking up; I heard Wakeman in Faneuil Hall. I wish we had a special God, I would crave special blessings on his head. A. H. WOOD.

"Give Us Liberty or Death."

BY C. FANNIE ALLYN.

Ring again the war-cry sterling,
Sound it as in days of yore.
When its bannered truth unfurling
Echoed over sea and shore;
Let it wake a slumb'ring nation
With its earnest, vital breath,
Till they join the aspiration,
"Give me liberty or death."

Death! 'tis but a shadow, flitting
For a moment by our side;
Death! 'tis but a myth, unfitting
For the soul's high royal pride;
Less than chains of slavish terror,
Fettering the free thought's breath;
Ring triumphant o'er this error,
"Give us liberty or death."

Freedom for the mind and spirit,
Freedom for the thoughtful brain,
Freedom, that we may inherit
Truths that conquer ev'ry pain;
Freedom till investigation,
Growing deeper with each breath,
Sounds the holy inspiration,
"Give us liberty or death."

Freedom lives not by abuses,
But would seek the highest law,
Searching for divinest uses,
From which ev'ry soul can draw;
Giving, asking thoughts most royal,
Ready for each new-born breath,
Till the world to wisdom loyal,
Asks for "Liberty or death."

Grasp the sturdy blade of Reason,
Sharpened by the thoughts within,
Cowardice is direst treason,
Ignorance a selfish sin;
Nature's arsenal is ready
To uprise like magic breath,
Freemen, form, then, strong and steady
Ask for Liberty or death."

Tho' the many who are choosing,
Cling beside the cross of Fear,
Let our souls, the false refusing,
Seek the truth to speak and hear,
And with earnest, high endeavor,
Joining in each onward breath,
Dare from old-time wrongs to sever,
Chosing "Liberty or death."

For themselves, let souls be thinking,
Learning from all life around,
From dear Nature's fountain drinking
Till true freedom here is found,
Chorus yet again the glory,
Free from slavery-tainted breath;
Men and women sound the story,
"Give us liberty or death."

GOLD MEDAL

has been awarded at the Paris Exposition of 1878 to

J. & P. COATS,

for their best Six-Cord Spool Cotton, confirming the estimate placed upon their goods at all the World's Expositions, from that at London, 1862, to the Centennial Exposition of 1876, where they took a Diploma for "SUPERIOR STRENGTH AND EXCELLENT QUALITY."

A Second-class Prize of a Silver Medal was taken by the Willimantic Linen Company, which claims to be the special champion of American industry, and which has extensively advertised a Grand Prize at Paris.

NO GRAND PRIZES were awarded for Spool Cotton at PARIS.

J. & P. Coats have established in Pawtucket, R. I., the largest Spool Cotton Mills in the United States. Every process of manufactuae, from the raw cotton to the finished spool, is conducted there. Their American-made Spool Cotton took the award at the Centennial, and while they have never claimed special merit for their American-made Spool Cotton over that manufactured in their Scotch Mills, we have the satisfaction of announcing that they have so identified themselves with this country, that AMERICA as represented by J. & P. COATS, IS STILL AHEAD IN SPOOL COTTON.

AUCHINCLOSS BROTHERS,
Sole Agents in New York for J. & P. COATS.
1t47

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

The New Gospel of Health.

BY DR. STONE.

This is a masterly work of most progressive character, calculated to teach every person how to keep well without drugs, stimulants, or narcotics. 519 pages, highly illustrated. Cloth, $2.50, postage 18 cents; paper, $1.25, postage 12 cents. For sale at this office. tf30

The Scientific American.

THIRTY-FOURTH YEAR.

The Most Popular Scientific Paper in the World.

Only $3.20 a year, including postage. Weekly. 52 numbers a year. 4,000 book pages.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of sixteen pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest Inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all newsdealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 34 years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN of all Inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention, can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to the undersigned. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning patents, MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, N. Y.

Branch Office, cor. F. and 17th Sts., Washington, D. C. 1t47

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,

WINNERS OF THE

ONLY GOLD MEDAL

AWARDED TO AMERICAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AT

Paris Exposition, 1878;

the highest distinction in the power of the Judges to confer.

PARIS, 1878 Two Highest Medals.
SWEDEN, 1878
PHILADA, 1876
SANTIAGO, '75
VIENNA, 1873
PARIS, 1867.

AT EVERY WORLD'S EXPOSITION FOR 12 YEARS

They have been awarded the HIGHEST HONORS

At the Paris Exposition, 1878, they are awarded the GOLD MEDAL, the highest recompense at the disposal of the jury; also the BRONZE MEDAL, the highest distinction for excellent workmanship. They have also received the GRAND GOLD MEDAL OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY, 1878. No other American Organs ever attained highest award at ANY World's Exposition. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES, with newest styles, prices, etc., free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., BOSTON, NEW YORK, or CHICAGO.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation. Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

A GREAT OFFER

A GENUINE Grover & Baker SEWING MACHINE.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

Proceedings and Addresses

AT THE

FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION

HELD AT

Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

Will be ready by Oct. 20th. It is a volume of rare value, containing much of the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

MRS. BESANT'S

Law of Population.

SECOND TEN THOUSAND

of the author's American Edition, with FINE STEEL PORTRAIT

(By Ritchie, the best artist in America) on extra tinted paper and binding. Cloth, 75c.; paper 50c.

AGENTS are informed that the best thing to sell to make money on, and also to benefit mankind, is this book. It explains and advocates the only harmless and practical means of avoiding the evils of celibacy, on the one hand, and of overburdened parentage on the other. It advocates more and earlier marriages, and increase of family only when health and pecuniary means will permit, but it most efficiently opposes abortion, prostitution, and all undesired and inconsiderate procreation. It contains the latest medical researches and results of science. The medical directions are easy, plain, explicit, though chaste and delicate. No married couple should be without it.

ASA K. BUTTS, 19 Dey st., N. Y.

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

I will deliver, boxed, at any Freight or Express Office in New York, one of the Genuine Grover & Baker Sewing Machines, with Latest Improvements, for $15.00 EACH.

This is a double thread Machine is guaranteed perfect, and will not rip, completely finished, of which the cut is a perfect representation, except that the machine I will send has a box cover fitting over the works on the table. The following attachments are supplied free with the Machine:

Three Hemmers, Braider, Friller, Quilting-Guage, Embroidery Plate, dozen assorted Needles, Screw-Driver, Oil Can, and Book of Instructions. All inquiries cheerfully answered and samples of work sent on application.

This Machine will be sent on receipt of price, or will be sent C. O. D. on receipt of $5 in advance. This offer is limited as to time, and it is a chance to secure a guaranteed, first-class Machine at a saving of $55. The regular price is $70. Refer, by permission, to the editor of this paper. Address W. V. R. POWIS, 45 4t Box 255, New York City.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo, 543 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN. A novel. By Frederika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc. 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp, 12 mo, 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. By Henry C. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus i. 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404pp. Postpaid, $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Profesor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK,

His Career of Cruelty and Crime.

A CHAPTER FROM

"THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH."

Giving the base means employed by this Matthew Hopkins of the nineteenth century to persecute and annoy his unfortunate victims.

120 pages. Price, 25 cents.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland Maine. 1y7

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted. 6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

BIBLE OF BIBLES:

OR

TWENTY-SEVEN

"DIVINE REVELATIONS:"

CONTAINING

A Description of Twenty-Seven Bibles, and an Exposition of Two Thousand Biblical Errors in Science, History, Morals, Religion, and General Events;

ALSO A DELINEATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE

Principal Personages of the CHRISTIAN BIBLE,

AND AN

Examination of Their Doctrines.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Biography of Satan."

As will be remarked on perusal of the table of contents, the ground gone over by Mr. Graves in the course of this new work is simply astounding, and the literary labor performed is worthy of receiving the approximate reward of an extensive reading at the hands of the public. In the sixty-six chapters into which the book is divided, almost every question of interest which arises in the mind at the mention of the word BIBLE is considered in that straightforward style which has made the volumes of Mr. Graves so extensively sought after.

LIST OF CONTENTS:

The Leading Positions of this Work.
CHAP. 1.—The Signs of the Times; The Coming Revolution; Reason will soon Triumph.
CHAP. 2.—Apology and Explanation; Jehovah not our God; Relationship of the Old and New Testaments.
CHAP. 3.—Why this Work was Written; The Moral Truths of the Bible; Why Resort to Ridicule; The Principal Design of this Work; Don't Read Pernicious Books; Two Thousand Bible Errors Exposed; All Bibles Useful in their Place.
CHAP. 4.—Beauties and Benefits of Bibles; A Higher Plane of Development has been Attained; Bible Writers Honest; General Claims of Bibles.

TWENTY-SEVEN BIBLES DESCRIBED.

CHAP. 5.—The Hindoo Bibles; The Vedas; The Code of Menu; Ramayana; Mahabarat; The Purans; Analogies of the Hindoo and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of India.
CHAP. 6.—The Egyptian Bible, "The Hermas"; Analogies of the Egyptian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Egypt.
CHAP. 7.—The Persian Bibles; The Zend Avesta; The Sadder; Analogies of the Persian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Persia.
CHAP. 8.—The Chinese Bibles; Ta-Heo (Great Learning); The Chun Yung, or Doctrine of the Mean; The Book of Mang, or Mencius; Shoo King, or "Book of History"; Shee King or "Book of Poetry"; Chun Tsen, "Spring and Summer"; Tao-te King, or Doctrine of Reason; Analogies of the Chinese and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of China.
CHAP. 9.—Seven other Oriental Bibles; The Soffees' Bible, The "Musnavi"; The Parsees' Bible, The "Bour Desch" The Tamalese Bible, The "Kaliwakam"; The Scandinavian Bible, The "Saga," or Divine Wisdom; The Kalmucs' Bible, The "Kallo Cham"; The Athenians' Bible. "The Testament": The Cabalists' Bible, The "Yohar," or Book of Light.
CHAP. 10.—The Mahometan's Bible, The "Koran"; The Mormons' Bible, "The Book of Mormon"; Revelations of Joseph Smith; The Shakers' Bible, "The Divine Roll."
CHAP. 11.—The Jews' Bible. The Old Testament and the Mishna.
CHAP. 12.—The Christians' Bible, Its Character.
CHAP. 13.—General Analogies of Bibles; Superior Features of the Heathen Bibles.
CHAP. 14.—The Infidels' Bible.

TWO THOUSAND BIBLE ERRORS—OLD-TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 15.—A Hundred and Twenty-three Errors in the Jewish Cosmogony; The Scientists' Story of Creation.
CHAP. 16.—Numerous Absurdities in the Story of the Deluge.
CHAP. 17.—The Ten Commandments, Moral Defects of.
CHAP. 18.—The Foolish Bible Stories, A Talking Serpent and a Talking Ass; The Story of Cain; The Ark of the Covenant; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar; Sodom and Gomorrah; The Tower of Babel; Stopping the Sun and Moon; Story of Samson; Story of Jonah.
CHAP. 19.—Bible Prophecies not Fulfilled.
CHAP. 20.—Bible Miracles, Erroneous Belief in.
CHAP. 21.—Bible Errors in Facts and Figures.
CHAP. 22.—Bible Contradictions (232).
CHAP. 23.—Obscene Language of the Bible (200 cases).
CHAP. 24.—Circumcision a Heathenish Custom; Fasting and Feasting in Various Nations.
CHAP. 25.—Holy Mountains, Lands, Cities, and Rivers.

BIBLE CHARACTERS.

CHAP. 26.—Jehovah, Character of.
CHAP. 27.—The Jews, Character of.
CHAP. 28.—Moses, Character of.
CHAP. 29.—The Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Character of.
CHAP. 30.—David, His Numerous Crimes; Solomon, Character of; Lot and his Daughters.
CHAP. 31.—The Prophets, their Moral Defects; Special Notice of Elijah and Elisha.
CHAP. 32.—Idolatry, Its Nature, Harmlessness, and Origin; All Christians either Atheists or Idolaters.

BIBLE ERRORS—NEW TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 33.—Divine Revelation Impossible and Unnecessary.
CHAP. 34.—Primeval Innocency of Man Not True.
CHAP. 35.—Original Sin and Fall of Man Not True.
CHAP. 36.—Moral Depravity of Man a Delusion.
CHAP. 37.—Free Agency and Moral Accountability Erroneous.
CHAP. 38.—Repentance, The Doctrine Erroneous.
CHAP. 39.—Forgiveness for Sin an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 40.—An Angry God, Evils of the Belief in.
CHAP. 41.—Atonement for Sin an Immoral Doctrine.
CHAP. 42.—Special Providences an Erroneou Doctrine.
CHAP. 43.—Faith and Belief, Bible Errors respecting.
CHAP. 44.—A Personal God Impossible.
NOTE.—In the twelve preceding chapters it is shown that the cardinal doctrines of Christianity are all wrong.
CHAP. 45.—Evil, Natural and Moral, Explained.
CHAP. 46.—A Rational View of Sin and its Consequences.
CHAP. 47.—The Bible Sanctions every Species of Crime.
CHAP. 48.—The Immoral Influence of the Bible.
CHAP. 49.—The Bible at War with Eighteen Sciences.
CHAP. 50.—The Bible as a Moral Necessity.
CHAP. 51.—Send no more Bibles to the Heathen.
CHAP. 52.—What Shall We Do to be Saved?
CHAP. 53.—The Three Christian Plans of Salvation.
CHAP. 54.—The True Religion Defined.
CHAP. 55.—"All Scripture given by Inspiration of God."
CHAP. 56.—Infidelity in Oriental Nations—India, Rome, Greece, China, Persia, and Arabia.
CHAP. 57.—Sects, Schisms, and Skeptics in Christian Countries.
CHAP. 58.—Modern Christianity one-half Infidelity.
CHAP. 59.—The Christians' God, Character of.
CHAP. 60.—The One Hundred and Fifty Errors of Jesus Christ.
CHAP. 61.—Character and Erroneous Doctrines of the Apostles.
CHAP. 62.—Erroneous Doctrines and Moral Defects of Paul and Peter.
CHAP. 63.—Idolatrous Veneration for Bibles—Its Evils.
CHAP. 64.—Spiritual or Implied Sense of Bibles—Its Objects.
CHAP. 65.—What shall we Substitute for the Bible?
CHAP. 66.—Religious Reconstruction, or the Moral Necessity for a Religious Reform. Conclusion.

Cloth, large 12mo., 440 pp. Price, $2.00, postage free.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 8th St., New York.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. tol

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containg the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the
Missionary and Bible Societies,
Sunday-schools,
The Young Men's Christian Association,
Societies for the Suppression of Vice,
American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally,
and especially to
ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

Liberal and Scientific Lectures!

BY W. F. JAMIESON,

172 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Courses of two, three, five, or more lectures will be given, as desired. Correspondents will please state, by number, which lectures are preferred.

SUBJECTS.

FIRST COURSE.

1. The Struggle for Truth.
2. "What will you Give in Place of Christianity?"
3. Genesis and Geology Irreconcilable.

SECOND COURSE.

4. How was the Bible Made; or, Did God ever Write a Book?" [N. B. In this lecture facts are given of which the clergy are ignorant, else carefully conceal from their people.]
5. Are the Prophecies of the Bible True?
6. Damaging Confessions about the Bible by Eminent Christians.
7. Contradictions! — Inconsistencies! — Are those of the Bible Real or Apparent?
8. Liberalism and Liberal Demands.

THIRD COURSE.

9. Scientists and their Achievments.
10. Antiquity of Man.
11. Darwinism; or, Who were our Ancestors?
12. Evolution; or, The Law of Progress.
13. Protoplasm; or, The Origin of Life.

FOURTH COURSE.

14. Texts from the Book of Nature.
15. The Mystery of Matter.
16. Matter and Energy Indestructible.
17. Acoustics (Illustrated).
18. Electricity (Illustrated).

FIFTH COURSE.

19. Religious Sneers at Science.
20. Martyrs of Science.

SIXTH COURSE.

21. The Solar System.
22. The Wonders of the Sun.
23. The Scenery of Saturn.
24. Are there Inhabitants in Other Worlds than Ours?

SEVENTH COURSE.

26. Comets, Meteors, Nebulæ.
27. Zodiacal Constellations.
28. Galaxy (Milky Way).
29. The Star Depths.
30. How to Study the Stars.

EIGHTH COURSE.

31. Religious and Irreligious Beliefs.
32. Difference between Deism, Theism, Pantheism, Atheism.
33. Is the Christian Church a Friend to Woman?
34. Common Sense vs. Orthodox Christianity.
35. Is Natural Morality better than Christian Morality?

NINTH COURSE.

36. Theological Goats and Sheep.
37. Are Christianity and the Bible the Cause of Civilization?
38. The Blood-stained History of Christianity.
39. Were the French Revolution and "Reign of Terror" due to Infidelity?
40. Paganism Compared with Christianity.

TENTH COURSE.

41. Thomas Paine as a Statesman.
42. Thomas Paine as a Revolutionary Hero.
43. Thomas Paine's Religious Belief: How he Lived, and how he Died.

ELEVENTH COURSE.

44. Does the Bible Sanction Polygamy?
45. Does the Bible Sustain Slavery?
46. Does the Bible Teach Total Abstinence from Intoxicating Drinks?

TWELFTH COURSE.

47. Jehovah, King of Heaven, and George III., King of England, compared.
48. The Folly of Prayer and the "Foolishness of Preaching."
49. The "Lord's Prayer" analyzed and Criticised.
50. Has Jesus Christ any Followers on Earth?

THIRTEENTH COURSE.

51. Do the Bible and Science Agree?
52. Conflict Between Religion and Science.
53. The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic.
54. The Pulpit and the Theater.
55. Humanitarianism vs. Creeds.

FOURTEENTH COURSE.

56. The Devil is Dead.
57. Hell Closed for Repairs.

FIFTEENTH COURSE.

58. The Future of the Race in Art, Science, and Invention.
59. True Marriage in the Light of Physiology, Phrenology, and Physiognomy.
60. Political, Religious, and Social Slander.

SIXTEENTH COURSE.

61. The Rigid Rule of the Rich Makes Many Millions Mourn.
62. The Good-Natured Man.

SEVENTEENTH COURSE.

63. Astronomical Origin of religion.
64. Zoroaster, and the Ancient Religion of the Persians.
65. Roman Catholicism is Logical Christianity.
66. Revivals of Religion, with life-like illustrations of the Revivalists' Arts.

EIGHTEENTH COURSE.

67. Scientific View of Death.
68. Do Freethinkers Meet Death Calmly and Rejoicingly?
69. Do not Christians evince more Fear of Death than Infidels and Pagans?

NINETEENTH COURSE.

70. Science of Psychology.
71. Governing Power of Mind.
72. Mental Force the Highest Form of Energy.

TWENTIETH COURSE.

GEOLOGICAL.

73. The Earth once a Blazing Sun.
74. The Story of the Rocks.
75. Silurian Seas and their Inhabitants.
76. Devonian Age.
77. Carboniferous Age.
78. Reptilian Age.
79. Mammalian Age.
80. General Survey of Geological Science.

From the foregoing list it will be perceived that the Lecturer does not confine himself to any single class of subjects, claiming the right to speak upon any topic with which he may familiarize himself. Nothing which pertains to humanity is foreign to him. True, the very mention of some of these themes will excite the ire of bigots. Their support is not expected. That of the Liberal-minded is solicited.

While no sentimental plea is offered of laboring solely for the good of humanity, yet the compensation for delivering two, three, five, ten, or more lectures is reasonably low, and is usually raised by subscription, thus making them free to the public.

Engagements a few weeks, or even months, in advance preferred.

Discussions of theological questions are nearly as important, to say the least, as legal and congressional debates. The interests of mankind require them. It is vain to oppose them. Men and women will discuss them. They will discuss all things. The question which one age does not investigate, another will. Nothing will be allowed to escape. The countries where speech is untrammeled contain happy, free people. The Lecturer, entertaining these sentiments, is, therefore, willing to engage in friendly discussion, to the end that truth may prevail. It is despotism which calls liberty license, and fears the fiery furnace of criticism.

All inquiries concerning lectures and debates will be answered by addressing

W. F. JAMIESON,
172 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words, Postage paid on all.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 560 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 43 75

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

Gems of Thought.

I WOULD rather be a devil in alliance with truth than an angel in alliance with falsehood. —Feuerbach.

THE nursery cockered child will jeer at aught
That may seem strange, beyond his nursery.
—Tennyson.

MEN'S actions to futurity appear but as the events to which they are conjoined to giv them consequence.—Joanna Bailie.

THE most affluent may be stripped of all, and find his worldly comfort, like so many withered leaves, dropping from him.—Sterne.

THERE is nearly as much ability requisite to know how to profit by good advice as to know how to act for one's self.—Rochefoucauld.

IN adversity be spirited and firm, and with equal prudence lessen your sail when filled with a too fortunate gale of prosperity.—Horace.

AFFLICTION is the wholesome soil of virtue, where patience, honor, sweet humility, calm fortitude, take root and strongly flourish.—Mallet.

WHAT a man knows should find its expression in what he does. The value of superior knowledge is chiefly in that it leads to a performing manhood.—Bovee.

NO ONE can be a great thinker who does not recognize that, as a thinker, it is his first duty to follow his intellect to whatever conclusion it may lead.—John Stuart Mill.

INDOLENCE is a delightful but distressing state; we must be doing something to be happy. Action is no less necessary than thought to the instinctive tendencies of the human frame.—Hazlitt.

PATIENT study and perfect impartiality must precede rational conviction, whether ending in faith or in doubt. Need it be asked how many are capable of such an examination?—Sharpe.

JEREMY TAYLOR is an excellent author for a young man to study for the purpose of imbibing noble principles and, at the same time, of learning to exercise caution and thought in detecting his numerous errors.—Coleridge.

THE heart will commonly govern the head; and it is certain that any strong passion set the wrong way will soon infatuate even the wisest of men, therefore the first part of wisdom is to watch the affections.—Dr. Waterland.

PROPER dealings with evidence consists in two things: First, the full collection of it; secondly, the equal reception of it. With regard to the first, it is knowledge that is concerned. With regard to the second, it is fairness.—West, Review.

THE life of a professor is not as brilliant as that of a courtier; but how much more useful is it! how much more usefully does it serve humanity! Oh! holy profession, which teaches how to know the nature of God, the duties of man, and the wonders of intellect.—Melancthon.

WHEN you hav learned to nourish your body frugally, do not pique yourself upon it, nor, if you drink water, be saying upon every occasion, "I drink water." But first consider how much more frugal are the poor than we, and how much more patient of hardship.—Epictetus.

HOW SACRED, how beautiful, is the feeling of affection in pure and guileless bosoms! The proud may sneer at it, the fashionable may call fable, the selfish and dissipated may affect to despise it; but the holy passion is surely of heaven, and is made evil by the corruptions of those whom it was sent to bless and preserve. —Mordaunt.

BOTH Charles himself and his creature Laud, while they abjured the innocent badges of popery, retained its worst vices, a complete subjection of reason to authority, a weak preference of form to substance, a childish passion for mummeries, an idolatrous veneration for the priestly character, and above all, a merciless intolerance.—Macaulay.

FRIENDSHIP is a vase, which, when it is flawed by heat or violence or accident, may as well be broken at once; it can never be trusted after. The more graceful and ornamental it was, the more clearly do we discern the hopelessness of restoring it to its former state. Coarse stones, if they are fractured, may be cemented again; precious ones never.—Landor.

HOW UNFORTUNATE that religion, which should hav been the guiding star, the good genius, the elevating impulse of humanity, has done nothing but enact its solemn farce of interpreting to mrn the will of the gods, forever playing with the unknown and unknowable, and holding mankind in slavish bondage through his ignorance and consequent susceptibility to fear. —Charles Ellis.

IN the history of spiritual civilization and of European progress, Arminius and his followers take an honored place as daring to stem the current of tendency in their time and to maintain, with their lives in their hands, that the "clay," if it ceases to be clay and becomes human, has a personality, not to be extinguished by God himself, a personality involving rights which, if justice admits of any definition whatever, can be pleaded against forever, even when infinite.—Peter Bayne.

AIM thou towards speaking good words and doing good deeds if thou wouldst liv fully and usefully thy short life lease. Seek truth and shun falsehood, love science and ignore creeds and faith, shun idleness and love labor. Build up a good physical and moral strength so thou wilt hav something to depend upon that will not fail thee in the hour of need. Sound bodily health and an intelligent cultured morality will giv to any individual the highest form of happiness humanity is capable of enjoying.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

THE end of man—his feet.

GREAT influx—watermelons.

A GRAND shell race—the oyster.

HENS are often set in their ways.

DOES our standing army ever sit down?

A SARATOGA train is always a trunk line.

STRIPED stockings cover a multitude of shins.

CHINAMEN and billiardists stick to their cues.

THE whoop-skirt—Skirt of the Indian country.

A SPIRIT wrapper—The paper round a bottle of whisky.

WHEN a woman gets worsted she knits; when a man gets worsted he knits his brows.

"GOATS consume time," says an observant contemporary. Yes; they consume everything but eternity.

THIS season's yield of patent medicine almanacs contains more jokes and less tape worm than for some years past.

"A FIRM in Belleville, Ill., turns out annually 100,000 gallons of castor oil." And the castor oil turns out——but we pause.

"DO NOT marry a widower," said the old lady. "A ready-made family is like a plate of cold potatoes." "Oh, I'll soon warm them over," replied the damsel, and she did.

THE phonograph has been so improved by Mr' Edison that it has sore throat, earache, measles, etc., drinks whiskey, and has in one instance raised a mustache and experienced religion

THE grandest, purest manhood that ever blessed this old world was evolved from suffering and born in anguish, but somehow a man never seems to think of that when he spills a tablespoonful of red-hot solder in his boot.

THERE is a man in Pittsburgh who is so thin that a window-glass company there hav hired him to cut glass with his elbow joint. (Private to the reader.—This is a lie, but it is stranger than the truth; he really cuts the glass with a diamond.)

ONLY six months ago, when John Stilson, of South Hill, married Nora Johnson, he called her "his darling Nora." And now when he gets up in the night to fasten a spring clothespin over her vocal nose, he uses the same tender expression, but leaves out the "darling."

WHO is it with a funeral tread
Comes slowly home and goes to bed,
And utters what is best unsaid?

'Tis he who's fished since rose the sun,
Subsisting on a single bun,
And after all's caught nary a one.

IT is really consoling to read in the country papers of the farmers drawing large loads of perfumed hay in town. "Oh, would we were a boy again," on the dear old farm, in the glorious country, up in the large barn, mowing in the top loft, the perspiration and hay-seed streaming adown our back as we struggle with the avalanche of timothy which comes in clouds, while the hired man keeps up a persistent yell of "Blast your picter; why don' yer stir yerself up there?"

HOW HE GOT A SEAT.—He was a man with a nose like a signal lantern, and his shoes were tied with pieces of wire. He got into a Wylie avenue car that was crowded, and said to the conductor:

"Lemme out at Congress street."

Then he squeezed himself beside a bloated millionaire and fanned himself with a chip hat that had seen better days. Finally he said:

"Pardner, can't you move up a leetle furder and giv a feller more room?"

The millionaire scowled and became to all intents more interested in the paper he was reading, but didn't budge.

After a brief silence the red-nosed man said, as though communicating with himself:

"When you first gets it you never know as there is anything wrong with you."

Here the millionaire glared over the top of the paper, but said nothing.

"But after a while," continued the red-nosed man, "you gets a sweat and then you gets a chill, and then, afore you knows where you are, it has the deadwood on you."

Here all the passengers became interested, and the millionaire folded up his paper and gazed inquiringly at the fat man who sat opposite.

"But," said the red-nosed man, crossing his legs as well as he could in his cramped condition, "when thirteen of 'em were laid out with it, I says to myself, says I, 'Jack, it's time for you to git;' and I got."

"Did you say thirteen?" asked the millionaire, and then he looked at his paper again, and edged away from the red-nosed man.

"There were thirteen at last accounts," said the man.

"Thirteen what?" shrieked the millionaire, while everybody looked at him and the red-nosed man.

"Patients," said the red-nosed man.

"Where?" shouted the millionaire.

"Where I was," said the man.

"And where was that?" said the millionaire.

"On the John Porter," said the red-nosed man, quietly.

The millionaire made a plunge for the door, the fat man followed suit, and before the car had gone half a square the red-nosed man swung his wire-tied shoes up on the opposite seat, and stated to the conductor:

"That's good enough. It makes it easier on the hosses, and gives a feller a fair shake in pint of elbow room."

"And you wasn't on the Porter?" inquired the frightened conductor.

"Not if I knows it," said the red-nosed man, "I was runnin' a ingine in the oil country."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine.	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's
101.	Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
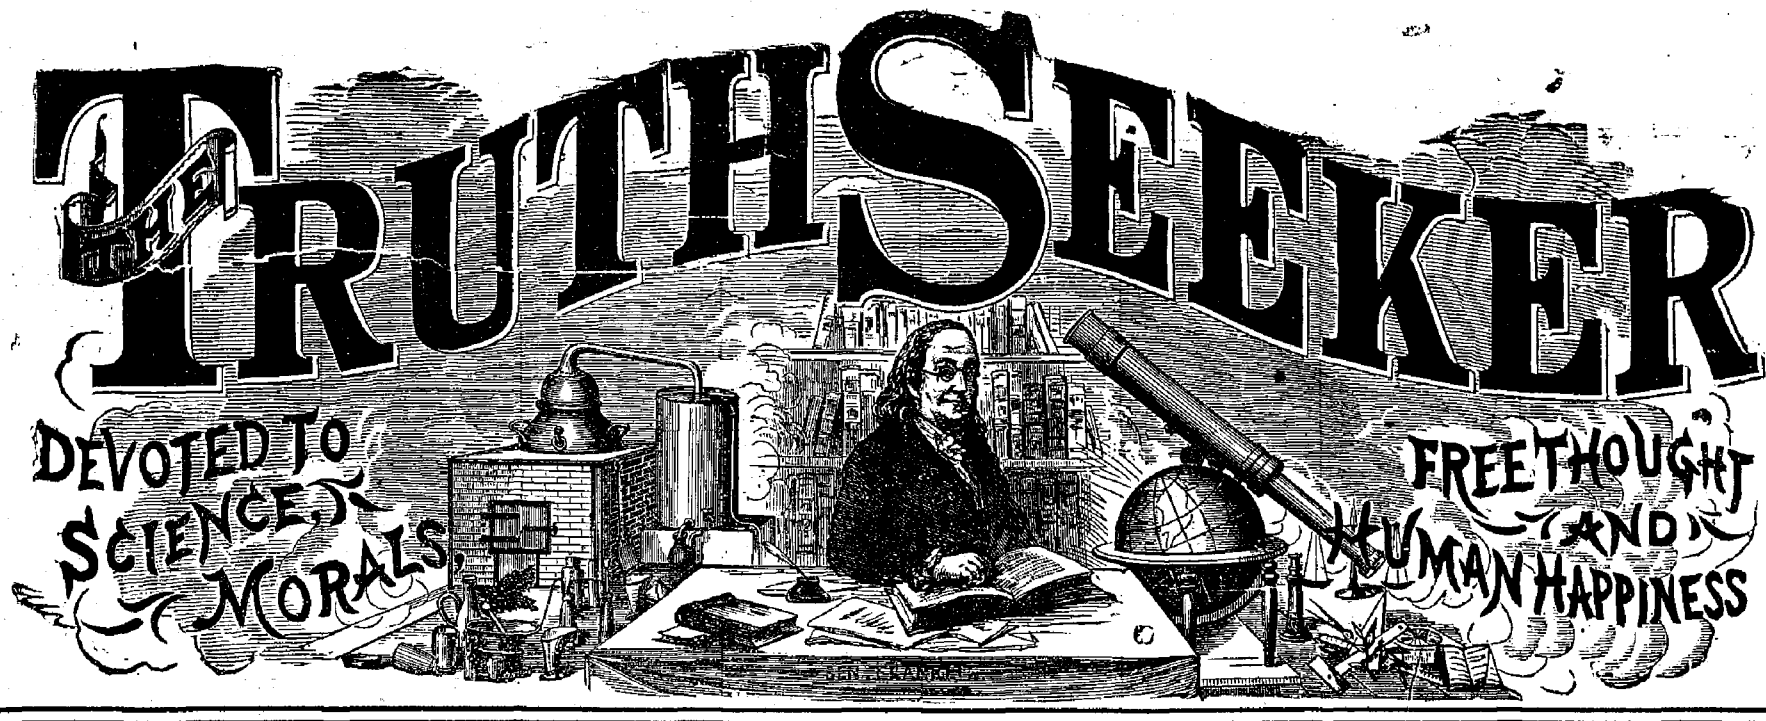
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2
114.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
115.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
117.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
118.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
119.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	2
10.	The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures.
11.	Is America the New World? L.L.Dawson.	10

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.



As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jea Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. B. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works,	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion.	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus.	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit, Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet. Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall, Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible, Wright.	35 & 50
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 50
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	50
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion,	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah,	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book, Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way,	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	25
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	6 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	2
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain,	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	50
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature, D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.,	3 50
Sexual Physiology, Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow,	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 50
The Champions of the Church. Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and	4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc.,	75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade.	30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	20
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

Vol. 5. No. 48. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, November 30, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE is no part of a man that will stand so many blows as his nose.

THERE is a financial panic in New Orleans. Repudiation of the state debt is proposed.

REV. JAMES DIXON of New Albany, Ind., is in a heap of trouble. Her name is Lizzie Kepley.

THERE is a controversy as to whether Adam and Eve were white or colored persons. We can't throw much light on the subject, but eve now-a-days is generally dusky.—Puck.

A PRIEST has just been expelled from the Vatican for selling the late supreme pontiff's old slippers and drawers to rich pilgrims. Probably he should hav kept them for a rise in the market.

THE New York Observer mentions the case of a Kentucky Presbyterian minister who, at a Monday meeting of his brethren, prayed, saying, "Lord, thou hast seen by the morning papers how the Sabbath was desecrated yesterday."

IT was in a stumptown Sunday-school a visitor who was interrogating the children, asked the question: "Why was Lot's wife turned into a pillar of salt?" There was a pause, and then a small boy with a preternatural growth of head piped out: "I suppose it was because she was too fresh."

ROMAN Catholic schools taught by nuns are found in most of the large towns in Scotland. The charges are so low that the schools are largely attended. The Catholics are very shrewd, and understand the importance of commencing very early to instill their doctrines into juvenile minds.

JOHN WILLIAMS, an Indiana religious rascal, devotes himself almost exclusively to the difficult task of swindling widows. His usual plan is to go into a town as a clergyman, start revival meetings, make the acquaintance of a pious widow with money, promise to marry her, borrow $500 to $1,000 and run away. He has been caught at last.

THE Breckenridge (Ky.) News says: "A rumor has reached our town that in Grayson County a serious difficulty occurred between the two Baptist preachers, Thomas J. Robertson and Cliff Buchanan, in which both were killed." The editor observes that he had been unable to get a confirmation of the rumor, but does not regard it as improbable, because the reverend gentlemen hav long been bitter enemies.

THE Graphic replies to a correspondent thus: "No, the Rev. Mr. Talmage does not ship either by mail or express samples of the gestures and contortions used by him in his recent Sunday lectures. They cannot be packed to keep." But so long as he can thus exhibit himself in the Brooklyn Tabernacle at $12,000 a year and get the cash right in his fist he will continue to exhibit his legs and to perform intellectual and physical gymnastics.

THE Rev. David Shurtleff and the Rev. Horace Parker are against each other in a slander suit now on trial in Fitchburg, Mass. The trouble arose out of Parker's free criticism of Shurtleff's manner of courtship. The young woman whom Shurtleff loved was engaged to a poor young man, and she felt bound to keep her promise. The reverend wooer, according to the testimony, offered the poor young man $1,000 to giv her up, and argued that she ought to hav a husband with money. "She will not be able," he said, "to stand the trials of life and do the washing." But he didn't get her.

A SENSATIONAL preacher in Newport, R. I., announced for his subject, "How Jonah Lost his Umbrella." His hearers supposed that possibly the prophet had this useful little piece of personal belongings in his hand when he was tossed into the Mediterranean, and they were anxious to know whether the whale swallowed it or whether Jonah dropped it into the sea. Imagine their disappointment when they found that the sensationalist wanted to discuss only what became of Jonah's gourd. Bible students will remember that this climber suddenly grew up as a shade for Jonah and as suddenly withered. To speak of it as an umbrella is just as correct as to speak of the Newport preacher as a sensationalist.

A WESTERN evangelist has an outfit consisting of four horses, a large covered wagon like a circus van, a tent that can be packed compactly, and appliances for cooking and sleeping. He is a clever exhorter, and his wife, who travels with him, does the singing. He goes from place to place, staying in each as long as his meetings are successful. He sells hymn books, but claims that the profit is only sufficient to pay his expenses. He is hoping for a better business when he gets well agoing.

COMSTOCK IN ROCHESTER.—The papers bring us the intelligence that the active agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice has made a big seizure and arrest in Rochester. The arrested person is one Dr. Soule, and the seizure consists of some tons of circulars. It is, of course, represented by the agent as being horribly obscene, but it is well known that what he regards as obscene other people fail to find so. If it turns out that the doctor was engaged in a nefarious business, and was really sending out obscene publications, all good men will be glad to see his business stopped, but if, as in many other cases, Comstock has made himself overofficious and arrested a physician without sufficient cause, simply because he was doing a business not approved by the regular schools, it will be but another proof of the meddlesomeness and tyranny of this Christian agent. Time tells many a story.

DURING a religious revival in Livingston, Ky., the Rev. Robert Carter was to conduct a meeting in the Baptist church. He came on horseback, dismounted, put the saddle on his shoulders, and in that way carried it into the church. The congregation stared at him, but, as he was a somewhat eccentric revivalist, it was thought that he intended to draw some novel religious lesson from the saddle, which he gravely placed on the desk. Then he knelt as though to pray, but remained so long on his knees that a brother went to see what was the matter with him. The revivalist was discovered to be very drunk. An almost emptied whisky bottle stuck out of his pocket. The meeting was closed; but Carter was bent on preaching, and fought so hard against being silenced that a general melee was the result, a party of roughs taking advantage of the chance for diversion. A child was wounded by a pistol shot.

STRIKING THE CLERGY.—Rumsellers Styled Vipers, and Some Ministers even Lower than They.—The Widow Van Cott made a temperance speech in Clarendon Hall, Sunday afternoon. She began by sliding the desk out of the way and declaring she must hav room. She averred that she was against rum—"dead against it;" and she didn't know but she would gibbet every man that manufactured rum, if she could hav her way. Sometimes she almost doubts that there is power enough in the infinite God to save such men. She has never been in favor of woman suffrage, generally speaking, but she thinks woman suffrage would be "an A No. 1 thing on the liquor question." A noble woman is the noblest work of God, and an evil woman the evilest in creation. If a woman is good, then, sinners, stand from under; if she is bad, God pity the man who comes under her influence. In regard to ministers dealing out sacramental wine, the widow said: "I contend before my maker that any minister who will do such a work will on the judgment day find himself where he will call for the rocks and mountains to fall upon him." She characterized the rumsellers as "contemptible vipers," and classed ministers who administer the sacrament of bread and wine a little lower than the rumsellers, for the reason that the rumsellers have a pecuniary incentive, while the ministers havn't. She went from this hall to Cooper Institute, where she said that any clergyman who used alcoholic wine in the sacrament was unworthy of his position, and should be replaced by a woman. The applause at this was feeble.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK IN CHICAGO.—From the necessity of increasing the income of his Society and extending its influence, Anthony occasionally makes journeys to Western cities to organize branch societies, as auxillaries to the parent society in this city. His last effort in this direction, about the middle of the month, was at Chicago. By advertising a call thoroughly in the papers, some three hundred clergymen and pious people of prominence assembled. Anthony made his little speech to them, and told them the same old story about the vast amount of vile matter that is flooding the mails and inundating the schools, seminaries, etc. He told them of the numbers of books he had suppressed, the tons of plates and sheets he had seized, and the rest of the old, old story which he has been repeating for years. He asked the fathers if they wanted their daughters debauched by the direst villains in the land, and questions of that character. Of course they did not, and with the help of the clergymen a tolerable amount of indignation was expressed, and a committee was appointed to draft a constitution for a society, with an admission fee of five dollars. Doubtless the men, in being thus maneuvered by Comstock, thought they were doing a great amount of good, and they did not know that they were being hoodwinked by a designing, tricky individual. It is very easy for Anthony to make thrilling statements which hav little foundation in fact. If such floods of vile matter are constantly being sent through the mails, instead of talking about it from year to year, why does he not cause the offenders to be arrested and brought to justice? If he knows what he states is true, why does he not make some effort to put an end to the iniquity, instead of hawking frightful statements about the same from one end of the country to the other? The stories he tells are either untrue or he is derelict in his duty.

A REMARKABLE CASE.—Last Sunday's Sun had a full-page description of the peculiar phenomena attending the case of Miss Mollie Fancher of Brooklyn, who over thirteen years ago was seriously injured by being dragged some distance by a street-car, since which time she has not been able to leave her bed. From the statement of intelligent and credible physicians, clergymen, teachers, and others who for years hav been familiar with her condition, the most remarkable features hav existed that were ever narrated. It is asserted that during the thirteen years she has not eaten as much as a hearty man would eat at a single meal, and that she does not sleep at all. For nine years she laid in a rigid and comatose state so nearly resembling death that many times it was thought she really was dead. After this, relaxation and consciousness returned, with alternate loss of the power of seeing, hearing, speaking, and feeling. At times her throat has been paralyzed for protracted periods, so that she could not swallow a particle of anything. It seems that when in a relaxed condition she has often passed into the trance state, when she described the most remarkable interviews with her departed mother and others. During her lucid periods she is described as working in the dark the most intricate specimens of needlework, embroidery, waxwork, etc., etc., and this when she was totally blind, and when her right arm was in a state of rigidity and the hand cramped up back of the head. The most remarkable part of the phenomena is the second-sight, or clairvoyance, which, if the statements are true, is most wonderful. She has often seen people out of her room, out of the house, and out of the city, even to the distance of the Bermuda Islands. She has seen people approaching the house at the distance of many squares, and announced their approach before they reached the house, which announcements invariably proved true. She easily reads letters and newspapers in people's pockets, and books while they are unopened and covered in her bed. Letters, etc., hav been cut up in squares of half an inch, and mixed promiscuously in a sealed envelope and placed in her hands, when she would read them off accurately by comparison with a copy expressly taken, and without the envelope being opened. The young lady and her immediate friends deny all connection and sympathy with professional clairvoyants and Spiritualists, and will hav nothing to do with them. They also shun publicity, and hav never aimed to make a cent of profit from the lady's remarkable psychical powers. The report of the case has created no little excitement, and the whole story has been denounced by some of the ablest physicians of the city as a humbug, who pronounce it a marked case of hysteria, which is frequently attended with a disposition to deceive. They insist that the lady must eat more than is represented; that she must sleep, and that she cannot perform the second sight or clairvoyance that is claimed for her. As the case stands, it is a puzzle for the psychologists, who, it is hoped, will giv it further investigation.

Events of the Week.

GOLD and greenbacks are at par.

MAYVILLE, N. Y., was partially destroyed by fire on the 21st.

THE farmers around Constantine, Mich., hav struck a mastodon bonanza.

ONE brother recently killed another in a family quarrel over their supper, in Sparta, Wis.

EIGHT men were killed by the explosion of gas in a coal mine near Terre Haute on the 21st.

TWO MEN were killed and several injured by the explosion of a boiler in Springfield, Ill., on the 21st.

THREE vessels were wrecked and eighteen lives lost during a gale on the coast of Portugal last week.

A YOUNG lady was recently rescued from the Indians after a captivity of two months. All her relatives had been killed.

THE pious defaulting Secretary of the New Rochelle Savings Bank has been sentenced to five years in state prison.

ANGELL, the fugitive Secretary of the Pullman Car Co., has been captured in Lisbon, Portugal, and $80,000 of the stolen funds recovered.

ENGLAND is making light work of the Afghan war. Already she has captured some of the most important of the enemy's strongholds.

EIGHT female preachers held forth in this city on Sunday last, and as St. Paul looked down from his holy perch in high heaven, his teeth gnashed and the thorn in his flesh rankled again.

OUR Minister to Great Britain has just handed over to the British Government a little check for $5,500,000 in behalf of our Government, being the award of the Fisheries Commission lately assembled at Halifax.

THE Marquis of Lorne and his wife, the Princess Louise, arrived at Halifax on the 25th. They were given a grand reception, after which the Marquis was sworn into office as Governor General of Canada.

M. GAMBETTA, the French statesman, fought a duel recently with M. de Fourtou. Cause, some offensive personal remarks in the Chamber of Deputies. The duel was fought with pistols at thirty-five paces. Neither of the duelists was injured.

THURSDAY was Thanksgiving Day, and if so be as how there is a Great Jehovah turning the crank of the universe he may consider himself thanked for whatever little assistance he has rendered us in the grand work of knocking the Devil and Himself into everlasting smithereens.

THE reward offered for the capture and conviction of the men who robbed the grave of the bones the Stewart Cathedral was built to glorify has been raised to $50,000, but it looks as though the costly tomb would go untenanted; and the disembodied spirit obstinately refuses to assist in the search.

AT a Baptist church fair in this city, a few days ago, they had a rifle-shooting match in the church, the bulls-eye being placed immediately above the pulpit. The contestants were young lady members of the congregation, and the prize was a silver cake-basket. God was present, and it is presumed he took part in the proceedings and enjoyed the affair hugely.

A FIRE in a Catholic church in this city on Sunday last burned the lace and linen off the altar, ruined the wardrobe of a timeworn Virgin, melted and depilated the waxen head of the chiefest of the Apostles, singed the starboard wing of a freshly feathered and newly varnished Holy Ghost, and scorched the hands of the holy father who extinguished it with a bucket of holy water instead of a powerful prayer.

THE Franciscan Fathers are building a new monastery in Paterson, and as soon as they get the running gear in and the machinery in working order they expect to run eighteen hours per day and manufacture a superior quality of worship which will eventually drive all other brands out of the markets. Jersey mothers, look out for these Franciscan Fathers! Our street corners swarm with little Italian bootblacks said to be shining results of the pious labors of these ghostly Fathers in sonny Italy

Selections.

What is the Bible?

M. W. HITCHCOCK, IN THE N. Y. "SUN."

Under the above title J. T. Sunderland has prepared and the Putnams have published a little volume which undertakes to present in a compact form the results of recent biblical study. This book bears evidence of wide research, and is written in a reverent spirit. In fairness and elevation of tone, and in the catholic scope of its inquiry, it will remind the reader of "Ecce Homo." The author has patiently endeavored to make himself acquainted with the fruits of scholarship in Germany, Holland, and England; but while some of his materials are drawn from Strauss, Rénan, Colenso, and Weiss, he is careful to set forth the very different views of orthodox theologians. We know of no treatise in which information so large and various, upon a theme of superlative importance, is made accessible to those who hav neither the leisure nor the training for prolonged investigation. And even for such as hav access to more elaborate works, this little volume will hav value, considered in the light of a lucid and compendious review.

It is seemingly not the author's purpose to overthrow, but rather to preserve, the Bible. In his judgment there is but one basis upon which our sacred book can stand as long as time endures and stand safe from all assaults, and that is the basis of fact—the basis of what it really is—the basis of the shining and transcendent excellencies which it indisputably possesses. From the writer's point of view there is no truer conception of the Bible than as a gold mine—inestimably rich—yet a mine still, where quartz and earth, in a certain measure, are mixed with the royal metal. And it is Mr. Sunderland's aim, as it is the object of Ewald, of Kuenen, of Dean Stanley, and other sincere truth seekers and truth tellers, to persuade rational men and women neither to resort to the folly of asserting that the particles of quartz and earth are gold, nor yet the opposite and equal folly of declaring there is no gold at all because they can detect the occasional admixture of less precious elements.

In a most interesting chapter on the origin and growth of the sacred writings of the world, the author points out some of the similarities in these various records. And first, as regards the more superficial and ritualistic doctrines propounded, we are reminded that sacrificial ideas and notions of atonement were shared by the Jewish and Christian religions with the cults of the heathen world. If Mr. Moody, says our author, would but go to the Zoroastrian, the Buddhist, and the Brahmanic books he could find texts enough to weave twenty sermons on "The Blood." So, too, the rite of baptism is affirmed by German scholars to hav existed long before the time of Christ, and in many parts of the world besides in Palestine. A substantial analogue to the Sacrament, or Eucharist, or Lord's Supper is said to hav been discovered by the student in other religions. Circumcision, according to Strauss, did not originate with the Jews, but was practiced in Egypt long before the sons of Jacob came to sojourn in Goshen. The ideas of immaculate conception, and of virgin mothers, and of virgin-born gods are apparently common to many religions and religious books besides the Jewish and Christian. Thus the Greek god Ares was fabled to hav been born by an immaculate conception of Heré, and the mythical origin of Athené, sprung from the virile essence without commerce with the feminine element is sufficiently well known. Prof. Whitney tells us that the birth of Zoroaster is ascribed to an immaculate conception by a ray from the Divine Reason. Both Buddha and Krishna are reported to hav been immaculately conceived, the Vedic scriptures averring that the mother of the latter was overshadowed by the god Brahma. Even the messianic idea is said to be reproduced in other sacred books, as well as in our own. According to Samuel Johnson, the Chinese sacred records contain prophecies of a Chinese messiah who was to come. The Brahmanic scriptures, Max Muller assures us, likewise foretell a Hindoo messiah. Miracles, it would seem, are common to most religions, and even the very same kinds of miracles, such as raising the dead to life, healing the blind and lame, voices speaking out of heaven to persons favored of God, the Holy Spirit coming in the form of a dove, etc. Almost all of the seven great religions, according to Higginson, who draws his materials from Ewald and Kuenen, hav similar ecclesiastical institutions, such as monks, priests, pilgrims, and missionaries—the same ritual comprising prayers, liturgies, and sacrifices—the same implements including frankincense, votive offerings, relics, amulets, candles, and holy water, and, finally, the same symbols, namely, the All-Seeing Eye, the halo of rays, the serpent, and the cross. We are told by the Portugese chroniclers that when the first Christian missionaries went among the Buddhists they were astounded to find a religion so much resembling their own in its rites and ceremonies and many of its ideas, and that the perplexed padres could only account for the likeness by supposing that the devil had forestalled God in that far corner of the world by setting up a counterfeit as near like Christianity as possible. And how can the Protestant reader fail to share their wonder when he learns from Oriental scholars that Buddha was born of a virgin, that his name means the Word, the Logos, but that he is known more tenderly as the savior of man, that he embarrassed his teachers when a child by his understanding and answers, that he was tempted in the wilderness when older, etc., etc. In the mythology of the Nile land, within the sphere of whose teachings the sojourners in Goshen dwelt, Egyptologists hav revealed a still more startling parallel with the history of the Christian messiah. Osiris, it appears in the esoteric faith, expounded to certain disciples by the priests, is the Son of God; he is called the revealer of life and light; he first teaches one chosen race, then goes with his apostles to teach the Gentiles, conquering the world by peace; he is slain by evil powers; after death he descends into hell, then rises again, and presides at the last judgment of mankind; and lastly it is inculcated that those who call upon his name shall be saved.

But it is not simply in regard to external and less important things that there is a great deal in common between the different religions of the world. Before marking, however, some of the more striking points of coincidence, it may be well to call to mind what are commonly accounted the sacred books of mankind. Besides the Jewish and Christian Scriptures there are the Vedas of the Brahmans; the Tripitaka of the Buddhists, and the Zend Avesta of the Persians and Parsees; also the Chinese sacred writings of Confucius, the Chinese sacred book of Laou-Tsze, and the Mohammedan Koran. All of these, except the last, are anterior by many centuries to our New Testament, while they are contemporary with a portion, and prior in point of date to a large part of the books contained in the Hebrew Bible. Now we find that some of the noblest ethical teachings embodied in our scriptures may be paralled in one or another, sometimes in all of the so-called heathen books. For example, in a collection of Buddha's sayings is one to this effect: "Let a man overcome anger by love, evil by good, the greedy by liberality, the liar by truth." And here is another: "Hatred does not cease by hatred at any time; hatred ceases by love." The "eight steps" which, according to Buddha, lead to the highest happiness, are right views, right thoughts, right speech, right actions, right living, right exertion, right recollection, right meditation. A more surprising instance of identity is to be found in four commandments of the Buddhist canon, namely: 1. Thou shalt not kill. 2. Thou shalt not steal. 3. Thou shalt not commit adultery. 4. Thou shalt not lie. Or, as says the canon of the Brahmans; "Let no man be offended with those who are angry with him, but gently reply to those who curse him.

According to the Zoroastrian scriptures, "to strike a man or vex him with words is a sin;" and the following prayer is to be used by all who would sincerely worship God: "In whatever way I may have sinned, against whomsoever or howsoever, I repent of it with thoughts, words, and works. Forgive."

Passing to the sacred records of China, we find that when a disciple asked Confucius to define benevolence, he said, "It is love to all men;" and elsewhere, "My doctrine consists only in having the heart right, and in loving one's neighbor as one's self." When he was asked, "Is there one word which may serve as a complete rule of living?" he answered: "Is not reciprocity such a word? What you do not like when done to yourself, do not do that to others." With this may be compared a sentence from the other Chinese book—that of Laou-Tsze: "Recompense enmity by doing good." From the Koran we need not cite at any length, because its ethics may be held fairly enough to be derivative in large measure from a Christian source. But the following injunction will be observed to perfectly accord with the passages just quoted. "None of you," says Mohammed to his followers, "can be called a true believer till he loves for his brother what he loves for himself." In general, says Mr. Sunderland, we find that neither faith, nor love, nor truth, nor disinterestedness, nor forgivness, nor patience, nor peace, nor equality, nor education, nor missionary efforts, nor prayer, nor honesty, nor the sentiment of brotherhood, nor reverence for women, nor the spirit of humility, nor the fact of martyrdom, nor any other good thing is altogether monopolized by any form of faith. All religions, on the contrary, recognize more or less remotely these principles; all do something to exemplify; all, it may perhaps be added, with the exception of the New Testament, do something to dishonor them.

We are not, of course, to understand—and no such inference will be drawn by the reader of Mr. Sunderland's little volume—that all the great sacred books of the world stand on an ethical level, or are identical in all their teachings. The passages cited are among the finest to be found in the various bibles of the so-called heathen, whose contents range all the way from doctrines of like elevated tone down to the basest superstitions and the most childish follies. It seems that the affirmations of the broadest and best scholarship go no further than this, viz., that while all the great books accounted holy by mankind hav enough in common of things trivial and superficial, if not erroneous, so that no one of them can say to the rest, "I am wholly of God," it is also true that all have enough in common of things that are deep, and high, and eternally true, so no one of them, looking down from the vantage ground of its own ethical injunctions, can say to any of them, "You are wholly of man, or of the devil." To the question, therefore, which serves as title to this treatise, the author's first answer would be, that it is one—unquestionably the highest and best—but still only one of the seven or eight great sacred volumes of the world.

In another chapter the writer describes succinctly the formation and final settlement of our scripture canon. He points out the men who wrote (so far as scholarship enables us to solve that question) the several parts of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, the dates and motives of composition, the changes which those writings underwent in the course of transmission from age to age, and the gradual process of elevation to the rank of sacredness. Of course, the notion formerly held that the first five books of the Old Testament were written by Moses substantially as we have them, nearly 1,500 years before Christ, is no longer tenable in the light of modern critical and philological research. Few of the most competent authorities—even among the Dutch Protestant investigators, who approach the study of the question, not from an aggressive, but a conservative standpoint—now put the date of those compositions in their present form earlier than the reign of Manassah (696–641 B. C.) or of Josiah (636–609 B. C.). Indeed, it seems difficult to evade the arguments adduced by the Dutch scholar, Kuenen, to show that some passages relating to the ceremonial law must hav been indited as late as the Babylonish captivity. Probably the oldest complete books of the Bible are the prophecies of Amos, Hosea, and Micah, which are thought to hav been written in the eighth century before Christ.

The origin of the Book of Job, as to author, time, and place, is one of the great Bible riddles; but, according to the weight of opinion, it came into existence about the time of Josiah's reformation—a little before 600 B. C. As for the remaining parts of the Old Testament, they were produced at much later dates, fixed by different authorities anywhere between the epoch of the Peloponnesian war and the time of Marius and Sulla. As regards the propriety of ascribing books to particular authors, it may be said that even Protestant scholars accept the evidence as conclusive against the names attached by popular opinion to most of the Old Testament writings. There is some reason to think that the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings were put in their present form by the anonymous writer of Deuteronomy, in other words, not much earlier than the time of Solon. So, too, Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah seem to hav been originally written as one book about 400 B. C.; that is to say, while Plato was teaching philosophy at Athens. And, finally, just as laws are ascribed to Moses, which had their origin many centuries later than that legislator, so it is certain that few of the Psalms were composed by David, few of the Proverbs by Solomon, and that only a part of the prophecies attributed to Isaiah and Jeremiah really emanated from those prophets.

Turning to the books of the New Testament, we find a somewhat similar condition of uncertainty regarding date and authorship. We are reminded that oral tradition preceded any written gospel record, and that the first trace of the latter's existence is a statement by one of the early Fathers that the apostle Matthew had indited a collection of sayings of the Lord in Hebrew. The obscurity which hangs over the question of gospel authorship will be intelligible enough when we consider that at least three out of the four gospels can have had no real authors at all in the proper sense of that word. They are the work of editors; they are compilations, mosaics, their material comprising real utterances of Jesus and real events of his life, together with more or less of legendary elements, and deviations from historic facts occasioned by the lapse of years and the necessary imperfection of the human memory. Our first two gospels show on their faces the marks of more than one revision; but the third, whose writer says, in his preface, that many had undertaken to put together a narrative before him appears to proceed from a single collecting and arranging hand. But whether that hand was the hand of Luke, or whether the ultimate revisers of the first and second gospels were Matthew and Mark, our data are really inadequate for the formation of a decisive judgment. As to the date and authorship of the fourth gospel, scholarship can hardly be said to hav reached anything as yet that approximates agreement, although there is a growing tendency toward the conviction that, at all events, the same person cannot hav penned the Gospel of John and the Apocalypse.

Of the Book of Acts, we know that it is almost certainly a compilation, but the compiler's name is in dispute. There is hardly any doubt that both this narrative and all of the four gospels in their present forms were composed at a considerably later period than the genuine Pauline epistles. Of the fourteen letters usually ascribed to Paul, we cannot be sure that he wrote more than four, among which the Epistle to the Hebrews is almost certainly not included. As for the authorship of the second Peter, second and third John, James, Jude, and the book of Revelations this has long been considered doubtful by great numbers of critics. Of the anonymous writers to whom most of these works must probably be referred, it may be said that we know nothing except so far as we can ascertain from the text itself their very different degrees of culture, ability, moral worth, and spiritual insight.

Especially interesting is the attempt made in this volume to gauge the relative genuineness and authority of the writings now included in our scriptural canon and of those discarded as apocryphal. Not only are the books bound together in our existing Bible of very unequal value, but it is a nice problem to determine what amount of credence or sanctity should attach to a multitude of other writings, which on one or another ground hav been invested with a sacred character in Jewish or early Christian times. No reader of the scriptures can be held competent to judge the authenticity of their contents without knowing something of the evidence upon which other material was rejected. It seems, moreover, that there are no less than sixteen books missing from the Old Testament which clearly ought to be there—which are, at all events, referred to in one place or another in the Bible as if they were component parts of the veritable Hebrew Scripture. Such are the prophecy of Enoch, the books of Nathan, Jehu, and Seraiah, and two volumes known to hav been penned by Isaiah and Jeremiah, but which hav disappeared. On the other hand, there are fourteen books extant which the Roman Catholic Church claims belong properly to the Old Testament, and which it accordingly prints. These are the writings known as apocryphal which Protestants hav taken the responsibility of casting out, but as to the sufficiency of the grounds upon which this action has been taken—at least in certain instances—modern critical opinion, as well as that of the Christian world, is quite evenly divided. When we come to the New Testament we find no fewer than forty-one apocryphal books now in existence which at various epochs hav challenged, with more or less success, the authority of sacred writings. Thus in Arabic and Latin we hav the so-called Gospel of the Infancy of the Savior, a three-fold version in Ethiopic, Coptic, and Greek of the narrative of Joseph of Arimathea, the Epistles of Clement and Barnabas in Greek, and the Acts of Pilate, written both in Greek and Latin. Beside this list of forty-one works now extant must be placed another catalogue of apocryphal or pseudepigraphal Christian scriptures which hav perished, but which are quoted by writers of the first four centuries after Christ. Among these we find such titles as the Epistle of Christ to Peter and Paul, the Gospel according to the twelve Apostles and the Gospel of Bartholomew, the Acts of John and the Acts of Andrew, and the Gospel according to the Hebrews. In a word, the books collected under the name of the New Testament and accepted by Protestant churches as the exclusive repository of truth touching their subject matter, constitute but a small part of the writings which hav purported to interpret the history and doctrines of Christ, and to which more or less of credit has been accorded by patristic writers.

Of course the question arises, How do we know that the books which we hav in our Bible are just those that ought to be there? We do not know. When we look into the matter we are astounded to find that a question of import apparently so momentous cannot be answered at all. Mr. Sunderland points out that when, by whom, or in what manner the canon of the Old Testament was settled no one can tell. Perhaps it is more proper to say that it never was settled. The first step toward the formation of a definite, exclusive compilation seems to hav been taken by Ezra in the fifth century before Christ, after which various obscure influences conspired to carry the process forward, until by the time of Jesus the Hebrew Scriptures had assumed something like their present shape. Yet it appears that there never was a time, previous to the establishment of Christianity, when the Jews were perfectly agreed as to which books were canonical, nor has the Christian Church since that period been at all unanimous upon the subject. At the present day, indeed, one-half of the Christian world contends that fourteen extant apocryphal books esteemed spurious by Protestants ought to be held true parts of the Old Testament, and as such actually publishes them in its Bible. On the other hand, the settlement of the New Testament canon, if settlement it can be called, seems to hav been reached in a most haphazard and unsatisfactory way. We must bear in mind that for a long period after the gospels and various epistles came into existence they were much less esteemed than the old Hebrew Scriptures. Indeed, up to the middle of the second century—and this is a point whose bearing on a fundamental tenet of the Roman Catholic Church is obvious enough—they were far from being so highly valued as the oral traditions of those churches in which any of the apostles had preached. For ages afterward the several congregations continued to use side by side with the scriptures which make up our New Testament to-day various books which we repudiate. Hardly one of the great writers and Fathers of the early Church draws the line of canonicity just where we draw it. Thus, Irenæus, one of the earliest and most authoritative, rejects five books which we hav now, viz., Hebrews, Jude, James II., Peter III., while he sets great store by our discarded "Shepherd of Hermas," and calls it "scripture." Again, Clement classes three apocryphal works, to wit, the "Apocalypse of Peter," the "Epistle of Barnabas," and the book just mentioned, as of equal value and authority with Hebrews, John II., and Jude. The celebrated Tertullian cast out all the books of the New Testament except the four gospels, Acts, thirteen Epistles of Paul, the Revelations, and John I. Even Athanasius quotes a number of the apocryphal writings as of equivalent worth and inspiration with those comprised in our present Bible. It is sometimes claimed that the Council of Laodicea (363 A. D.) settled the canon finally; but if this were so, then we are wrong in excluding Baruch from our Old Testament and in admitting Revelations to our New. Nor can it be maintained that the work was done at the Council of Carthage some thirty years later, since in that case we should hav no right to debar Ecclesiasticus, Wisdom, Tobit, Judith, and first and second Maccabees from our present Bible. As a matter of fact, Catholic theologians concede that the canon was not settled until the Council of Trent, but as they hold their Church infallible in its decisions, they may claim, since the Trentine decree, to hav an authentic Scripture collection. But there can be no foundation for such claim on the part of Protestants. For let us glance very briefly at some conflicting opinions of our great Protestant reformers. Luther thought the book of Esther did not belong in the Old Testament, but he pronounced I. Maccabees not unworthy to be admitted, and Siriach he pronounced a "right good book proceeding from a wise man," and accordingly he allowed a place to both of these so-called apocryphal works among the canonical writings. He affirmed decidedly that the Epistle to the Hebrews came neither from Paul nor any of the apostles, and was not to be put in a category with letters penned by apostles themselves. He called James's Epistle an "Epistle of Straw," and he considered the Apocalypse neither apostolic nor prophetic, and of little or no worth. The great Swiss teacher Zwingli concurred in maintaining the Revelations not to be properly a biblical work. Even Calvin did not think that Paul was the author of Hebrews, or Peter of the book entitled Peter II., while as to Revelations, he denounced it as unintelligible, and prohibited the pastors of Geneva from all attempts at expounding it.

In the face of the foregoing facts, it is plainly impossible to contend that our present biblical canon comprehends all of the literature produced by the Jewish people that is valuable and truly inspired. And thus we reach a second answer to the question prefacing this volume—What is the Bible? We must concede it to be an arbitrary compilation, uncommended by any authentic sanction, from which, moreover, works are missing superior to some of those admitted, and in which books hav been included inferior in various ways to many of those left out. Few well-informed persons, we imagine, would dispute Mr. Sunderland's assertion that if to-morrow a commission of the ablest and least biased biblical scholars of the world, including a fair proportion of Catholic as well as Protestant theologians, could be called to settle anew the canon, the list would stand materially different from that which we now find invested with the special and exclusive sacredness of Holy Writ.

We would draw attention to one other chapter of this interesting volume, in which the author examines the bearing of the preceding facts upon the degree of authority attaching to our Christian scriptures. At the same time, he considers the additional difficulties interposed with the growth of science and scholarship in the way of the Protestant theory of biblical infallibility. He points out that, although our present scriptural canon should be proved to be absolutely perfect, yet infallible transmission would be as essential as infallible origin to the hypothesis for which modern Calvinists contend. But the fact is that the written Hebrew in which the larger part of our Bible was originally recorded, was a most imperfect and indefinite instrument of transcription, a loose framework of mere consonant outlines, no vowel points having been introduced into the text until long after Christ—probably not until the seventh century. If we pass from copyists to translators, from Hebrew into Greek and Latin, and from one or another of those tongues into English, we cannot but concede a large amount of divergence from the original sense when we learn that the commission of English scholars now engaged in making a new version has already detected in the common translation known as "King James's" upward of a hundred thousand errors. Nor must we forget that even if we could prove the substantial infallibility of one or even a score of the books of the Bible, that would not establish the claim of the remaining works of the collection. There is no way of demonstrating the infallibility of the Scriptures as a whole except by proving the absolute trustworthiness of each component, sustained without the fracture of a single link in all the two-thousand-years-long chain of preservation and transmission. Moreover, it is noteworthy that there is not a single book of the Bible which distinctly claims to be infallible. One passage, indeed, from our popular version is continually cited, namely, "All scripture is given by inspiration from God, and is profitable for doctrine." But the original Greek is capable of a very different translation, to wit: "Every writing which is divinely inspired is also profitable for doctrine." What is more to the purpose, the Syriac, the Vulgate, nearly if not all the ancient versions, Clement of Alexandria, Theodoret, Origen six or seven times over, and most of the Christian Fathers thus interpreted the passage; and not only does the present Roman Catholic Bible thus render it, but so did Wickliff, Tindal, and the English Bible of 1551. The truth is, that the doctrine of biblical infallibility, so far as regards the rigid sense in which it is still widely held in Protestant countriess, was unknown to the early Christian Church. It did not come into existence until the sixteenth century, and even then was not sanctioned by the earliest and greatest of the reformers, nor has the Catholic Church ever adopted it.

In connection with this theme reference is made to the testimony offered by the Bible itself that it is not an infallible record, and the author contrives in a few pages to condense the pith of Bishop Colenso's arguments. He does not dwell on the alleged contradictions and irreconcilable difficulties, not only in the Old Testament, but in the narrative of Jesus' life and ministry, except to make the obvious remark that these objections do not impeach the general historical credibility of the documents, but only the relatively modern claim of infallibility. The same thing may be said of the remarkable exaggerations contained in the Hebrew chronicles, as when a little country no larger than Wales is said to send forth to battle 1,200,000 chosen mighty men of valor, and of the historical mistakes noted in the Gospel narrative. As to the scientific errors which are naturally detected in increasing numbers with the progress of research, Mr. Sunderland thinks it is obvious that disingenuous subtleties, distortions of language, and special pleading would not be resorted to on the part of the so-called "harmonizers" of science and scripture, but for the supposed necessity of upholding the doctrine of verbal infallibility in the interest, he says, of Protestant theology. When we consider the self-stultification at which Luther would hav revolted, but which is continually practiced in English and American pulpits, we cannot but esteem it fortunate for the Roman Catholic Church that it has never planted itself on the perfect and invariable accuracy of the Bible record. To the question, What is the Bible? the author holds himself justified, from this third point of view, in answering, with Dean Stanley, that it is, at all events, not an infallible book.

Mr. Sunderland does not confine himself to exhibing the fruits of what may be called aggressive scholarship and negative criticism. His book is useful and wholesome, because it sets forth with equal honesty and energy both sides of a great question. After defining the precise amount of weight and authority assigned by competent opinion to the several parts of the Christian Scriptures, he goes on to mark with singular earnestness its veritable scope and inestimable value. He does not deny for a moment the inspiration of many passages in both the Old and the New Testament, although he is disposed to recognize the same divine influence, differing vastly in degree, however, in those yearnings after the unseen which found utterance in Rig-Veda and Zend-Avesta, in the Bibles of Buddhism, of China, and of Islam. As regards the criterion of inspiration, we are reminded that the great spiritual teachings of our Bible carry their credentials in themselves. They are verities which answer Novalis's definition of truth, as that which we cannot help believing. But aside from its superlative ethical worth, the writer dwells upon the manifold claims of the Hebrew and Christian scriptures upon our attention, appreciation, and reverence. From an æsthetic point of view, it is not questioned that certain books of both the Old Testament and the New take rank with the consummate literary productions of mankind. There is no lack of authority for placing some of the Psalms with the lyrics of Pinder, for comparing the book of Job to the loftiest tragedies of Sophocles and Shakspere, for rating the prophecy of Isaiah and the Epistle to the Romans above any other religious or ethical disquisition in the world. On the whole, the Christian Bible, as it exists in the hands of the people to-day in King James's translation, must be held our noblest English classic, if indeed our vernacular does not owe in large measure its specific mould and character to the existence of that version. It would be superfluous to indicate how indissolubly the Bible is interwoven with every phase and department of our Western civilization, or how exclusively it determined the development of European art up to the late introduction of a pagan element at the Renaissance. Even to the student of sociology it is a precious reservoir of knowledge, for nowhere in literature can he find displayed a picture so vivid and impressive of what may be termed the evolution of religion and of morals. If a profound tendency of human nature can be conceived as rooted in any volume, the Bible must be pronounced the parent of monotheism throughout the world. The three monotheistic religions whose supreme simplicity and majesty are contrasted with such insight and felicity in Lessing's Nathan der Weise hav all drawn their sap directly or indirectly from a common trunk, namely, the writings collected in the Christian Scriptures. This fact alone may justly giv our Bible a preëminence over all the other sacred writings of mankind. Yet after all it is not so much for any of these things, but rather as a guide of human conduct, a supreme helper to right living, that this Scripture of ours is invested with imperishable dignity and usefulness. For even Matthew Arnold has said: "As well imagine a man with a sense for sculpture not cultivating it by the help of the remains of Greek art, or a man with a sense for poetry not cultivating it by the help of Homer and Shakspere, as a man with a sense for conduct (that is, righteousness or virtue) not cultivating it by the help of the Bible."

Communications.

The Fourth New York Liberal League.

To The Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I would like to call the attention of your readers in this city to the fact of the existence of this, the livest league in the city. And by giving a brief account of our methods of work perhaps some other persons in some other city or village may be induced to coax a few people together as a nucleus around which many may gather.

Our league was formed about six or eight weeks ago with eleven members. We now hav over twenty. The officers are: Daniel E. Ryan, President; Henry J. Thomas, Vice-President; Eugene M. Macdonald, Secretary; George E. Macdonald, Treasurer. Our committees consist of a Finance Committee and a Committee on Discussion. Our Constitution is short and our By-Laws are shorter. Any one of good moral character (which excludes ministers) can join by paying one dollar annually into the treasury, provided they believe in the total separation of church and state. New members are wanted.

The league has been run thus far without any expense beyond that for a charter. Our plan is to hold our meetings at the house of some one of the members. The exercises are determined by the Committee on Discussion. Sometimes it is all discussion and sometimes an essay followed by such criticisms as the members may feel impelled to make. None but members allowed the privileges of the floor, although friends are most cordially invited to attend, and if they feel like it join our ranks. Whoever the Committee may pitch upon is expected to contribute to the entertainment by an essay or speech. The officers and most of the members are young men, full of life and energy, and it is contemplated making this the banner league of the banner city of the banner country. We want old age for wisdom and counsel and the energy of youth for work. A dollar a year is little enough for membership in a society which meets every two weeks and at whose sessions something can always be learned and a good social time enjoyed. Our next meeting will be Sunday evening, Dec. 1st, and we would like to initiate a host of new members. Any one wishing to join can do so by placing themselves in communication with any of the present members, or with the President, 231 West 37th street, or the Secretary, 101 East 25th street. Will not the friends of secularization in this city help us to make it the largest league in the land?

Eugene M. Macdonald, Sec.

The Rochester League.

Law Office of Maxson & Hebard,
No. 23 First Floor, Powers' Block,
Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1878.

Prof. A. L. Rawson, Secretary of National Liberal League, Dear Sir: I take this opportunity to inform you that the Jefferson Liberal League of Rochester will continue as an auxiliary to your League. A few members of our Rochester association met on Sunday last in the absence of the majority and adopted a resolution to take out a new charter under Abbot. You can rest assured this is not binding. This question has been contested considerably, and though a few members will secede to Abbot and Comstock, yet the majority and better and most intelligent portion will sustain the Hon. Elizur Wright and all other officers of the original League organization. You, no doubt, hav received word ere this of the action above referred to; but in order to make the matter squarely known, and head off any attempt of the seceders to sell us out, I address you as above. We will be compelled to elect new officers, but our organization will be patriotic to charter, platform, and principles of the National Liberal League.

We believe that it is the duty of the League movement to assist and protect every persecuted Liberal in America; that if it cannot do this it defeats itself, has no life, and is a corpse.

We believe that the Comstock laws are a blot on our civilization, and should be repealed.

We are opposed to what we call obscenity, and in favor of what the Church and its hired agents call obscene; that the Church, as a power, has no more right than the Liberals, as a power, to impose their conflicting standards upon the other through the law, because either one or the other has the superior power. To illustrate: The Church believes all morality proceeds from the Bible; the Liberals, that all immorality proceeds from the Bible. The Church is in favor of its circulation; the Liberals opposed. Now, the Church is opposed to the circulation of radical publications on the ground that all immorality proceeds therefrom. The Liberals and Radicals are in favor of the circulation of the same on the ground that all morality proceeds therefrom; that in every instance these publications are the forerunners of the coming civilization of man and of the world.

Now we claim not the right to impose our standard on those opposed, and claim that those opposed hav not the right to impose their standard on us. On these grounds we claim the Comstock laws under the Constitution, guaranteeing free speech and press, hav no standing; that they should be repealed, and it is the duty of the Liberals who are persecuted under them to agitate their repeal; and as the League movement is the only national organization of Liberals in America, it comes directly within their province, scope, and purpose to affect this agitation. On these grounds, sir, we oppose the Abbot movement and support Elizur Wright. You may publish this letter, as indicating the Liberal pulse of Rochester, in The Truth Seeker and other such papers as in your judgment seem most proper. And believe me, sir, the ball of progress will keep rolling, the efforts of Comstock Liberals to the contrary notwithstanding.

Your very obedient servant,
Frederick Hebard.

To the Auxiliary Liberal Leagues.

Several of the auxiliary Liberal Leagues hav already taken action on the question of remaining in the old League under the leadership of the Hon. Elizur Wright, or seceding and joining the new League led by Mr. Abbot. It is desirable that all the Leagues should take such action as soon as it may be convenient to hav a meeting for that purpose. By so doing and reporting to the Secretaries of both National Leagues, the directors of each will be the better able to lay out their work for the coming year.

There never was more need of just the kind of work that the National Liberal League proposes to do, and if the letters received here indicate the spirit of the people in the different sections of the country, the workers in the new field will be strong in numbers and resolute of purpose. Let us aim to organize a thousand auxiliary Leagues during the coming year, that we may hav a thousand centers from which to advocate the demands of Liberalism in the matter of equal taxation for all persons or societies; equal respect and protection for the religious opinions of all persons or societies; the use of public money for Governmental purposes only; protection of all citizens of the United States at home or abroad; and the national supervision of a secular, elemental education.

This work will be effectually done under the leadership of our time-honored President, Elizur Wright, who has all his life been a zealous champion of human rights. It will be well done also under the lead of Mr. Francis E. Abbot, for the work is one of principle more than of men. If both Leagues would show a list of a thousand auxiliaries during 1879, the cause would become of national importance at once. However rapid or slow our progress may be, let us be always right in principle and action, trusting to time to correct any errors that may happen through ignorance or prejudice. Education, information, and knowledge are the great factors of true progress.

Once more, may I repeat, please be prompt in calling the auxiliary Leagues together, deciding the future connection, and in sending the report to the Secretaries,

A. L. Rawson, Sec. N. L. L.,
34 Bond street, New York.

The Liberal League Movement.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LOCAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Nearly every day I receive one or more letters making inquiries as to the best course to take to form a Local Liberal League, and requesting a blank form of constitution. I hope the Board of Directors, at their first meeting, will cause a tract to be published that will giv all the necessary information on this subject, but until then allow me to propose the following instructions.

Let any person inspired with the desire to organize a Liberal League immediately copy the following call:

CALL.

We, the undersigned citizens of the town of ——, desiring to organize ourselves into a Local Liberal League, agree to meet for that purpose at the house of —— on —— evening next; and we hereby agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names to procure from the N. L. L. the necessary charter.

Names.	Residence.	Amount.

As soon as ten names or more are procured, and five dollars subscribed, you are prepared to organize.

FORM OF CONSTITUTION.

At your first meeting you can adopt the following form of constitution. Afterwards you can add to it or amend it as you desire.

CONSTITUTION.

Article I.—The name of this association shall be "The Liberal League of ——, ——;" and we hereby declare ourselves to be a "local auxiliary Liberal League," in full sympathy, fellowship, and affiliation with the National Liberal League.

Article II.—The objects of this association shall be, first, to co-operate with the National Liberal League in furtherance of the public objects, both general and specific enumerated in its Constitution; and, secondly, to promote the welfare of our own members as a local Liberal society, as provided in this Constitution.

Article III.—Any person who shall sign this Constitution, and pay —— dollars annually into the treasury, shall be a member of this League.

Article IV.—The officers of this League shall be a President, Secretary, Treasurer, and four Councillors. All these shall constitute the Board of Directors, which shall hav general management of the affairs of the League, subject only to instruction by the League itself.

Article V.—The duties of the President, Secretary, and Treasurer shall be those usually pertaining to these offices. It shall be a special duty of the Secretary to furnish the Secretary of the National Liberal League with a complete list of all the members with their post-office addresses in full, and a list of the officers; and also to furnish him promptly with information of all important action by this League.

Article VI.—Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any regular meeting of the League by a three-fourths vote of all the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made unless the proposed amendment shall hav been announced as part of the required notice of the meeting which is to act upon it.

Article VII.—Such committees shall be appointed as this League may decide upon by vote.

ORDERING CHARTER.

So soon as the above or some similar Constitution is adopted, and the officers are elected, the Secretary should order a charter of A. L. Rawson, Sec. N. L. L., 34 Bond st., New York, sending to him by N. Y. draft or post-office order $5 and a receipt for $5 for forming League, with names of officers, etc., as required in Article V. of the above Constitution.

TO THE READER.

Reader, will you at once go to work and form a League in your town? By following the above directions you can accomplish such a desirable result in a few days.

Salamanca, N. Y., Nov, 22, 1878. H. L. Green,
Chair, Ex. Com. N. L. L.

P. S. The constitutional charter fee is $10 but by a vote of the N. L. L., the person or persons organizing the Local League are authorized to retain five dollars for the expense and trouble of organizing.

Death of John Grable.

Died, at his residence near Wathena, Kansas, Nov. 11, 1878, John Grable, aged 68 years. He was born in Washington county, Pa., and twenty-four years ago emigrated to Kansas to assist in making it a free state. He was one of the most uncompromising Infidels in this section of country—a gentleman of extensive reading, a good, moral citizen, and an honest man. He originated a system of national finance and currency which he fondly hoped to liv to see brought into public favor and adopted by the government. Its main feature was a real estate instead of specie basis for the greenback.

He gave his body to the St. Joseph Hospital Medical College for dissection in the interest of science, directing that his skeleton be prepared for the use of students and placed on exhibition in the College Museum. On his death-bed he requested the undersigned to take his body after death and convey it to the College. The request was complied with.

He contemplated death with the utmost composure. No Christian ever walked down into the dark valley with a firmer step. Not the slightest alarm or anxiety was betrayed, for he was conscious that he had never wronged a human being either in person, purse, or character; and whether there was another existence or not, he had nothing to fear. He was anxious to know what, if anything, was behind the veil.

Of late years he had dropped all Freethought journals except The Truth Seeker, regarding that as approaching nearest to his ideal of what a Liberal paper ought to be.

Troy, Kansas. S. R. Shepherd.

Dr. Sara B. Chase at Chickering Hall.

MARRIAGE AND ANTHONY COMSTOCK.

Dr. Chase delivered a lecture at the above hall, in this city, on the 22d, of which the World speaks as follows:

The lecturer began: "The subject upon which I hav been advertised to speak is 'Marriage—Its Past, Present, and Future.' If I had been advertised to speak on 'Evolution in Marriage' there would hav been an empty house, but now that I hav captured a full one, I may say frankly that evolution is the subject that I hav in mind." She told how for 120,000 years savagery and barbarism had prevailed, and related the history of marriage during the past 5,000 years.

"I hav received two letters," Mrs. Dr. Chase said at the close of the lecture, "which perhaps I hav time to answer now. The first asks for my opinion of Anthony Comstock and his methods; the second asks how my suit against him is progressing. He has no moral culture. But he must earn his salary and must make good reports. Hence he is energetic and is always alert to see what he may catch by a technicality of the law. He needs a victim constantly. If we physicians are to obey the law as he interprets it and if we do our duty there is reason for every one of us to be in fear and to close our offices. Again, he doesn't know the difference between an immoral picture and a work of art. An ex-judge of the Supreme Court has truly said of him that he is too cunning to be innocent and too sharp to be honest. So far as I am concerned Mr. Anthony Comstock will be obliged to answer before the Supreme Court for his illegal arrest and imprisonment of me, and I trust justice will be meted out to him."

In an editorial of the same date the Evening Express has these satirical remarks upon Anthony:

That bright and snappy little woman, Mrs. Sara B. Chase, paid her respects—if so they can be called—to Anthony Comstock last night. It is quite apparent that Sara does not look upon Anthony in the light of a success as a work of art. She said, to begin with, that he had no moral culture, but to earn his salary and make good reports he is always alert to see what he may catch by a technicality of the law. This is really too hard on so pure and guileless a person as Anthony, who would not harm a fly, unless it were a hot day and the fly was peculiarly aggravating. The trouble is, people, somehow, cannot be brought to a realization of how truly good Comstock is. Like in the case of always partridge, one is apt to tire of a man who is forever good, and so it is that this guileless agent of the Society for the Prevention of Crime, who lets his light shine before men that they may see his good works, has somewhat palled upon the public taste. But, just as the partridge is a good enough bird in its way, so is Anthony Comstock a faultless reformer in his. Perhaps his way may not be one that is without its flaws, but it is downright cruel to prick and prod his bubble of godliness, as Mrs. Chase did last night.

The most withering of all her remarks, though, was summed up in the statement that he, Comstock, does not know the difference between an immoral picture and a work of art. This is cruel. Comstock, the artistic expert, to be thus rated! Comstock, whose æsthetic taste rose superior to the judgment of Europe and supressed Hans Makart's Charles V. because it turned the insidious lollypop to venom and eke the toothsome bolivar filled with vile suggestions! Comstock who invested in photographs he himself had ordered from a poor lawyer who was striving to earn a living, and then had the unfortunate fellow sent to state prison! Comstock, the incarnation of all that is æsthetic, pure, and high-minded, to be spoken about out in meeting as not knowing the difference between an immoral picture and a work of art! It is difficult to imagine human misrepresentation going further, and it is painful to reflect how the sensitive and artistic nature of Comstock must hav been wounded when he read this criticism in the papers. If this kind of thing goes on, the next that is known somebody will be coming along and want to suppress Comstock as an immoral picture. And then what an amount of sport would be stopped—for Comstock, as an agent of morality and a judge of pictures, is one of the funniest jokes extant. Suppress Comstock! O misrecordia!

Dr. Chase announces a new course of lectures at her parlors, 102 West 38th st., viz: every Tuesday, at 3:30 P.M., to ladies, and every Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock, to gentlemen. Admission 50 cents. Programmes and circulars sent upon application, and specimen copies of the Physiologist mailed upon receipt of 15 cents. Address

SARA B. CHASE, A.M., M.D.,
102 West 38th street, New York.

Bennett versus Comstock.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I will endeavor to giv your readers a few views in regard to our political, religious, and educational institutions. Now we are humbugged into the notion or idea that we are living under the freest institutions and government in the world. Now the question is, What are we free in? Are the arrests of such men as you, Mr. Editor, Mr. Heywood, Mr. Lant, and Dr. Foote (some of the most intelligent men of our age), proof of our free institutions and government? If so, away with it, for I think it is a disgrace to any nation or people. A free and enlightened nation of people would never sanction or permit religious priests and their savage institutions to vitiate and corrupt the human mind just as soon as it is able to receive an idea. I hav no hope for the human race so long as we hav religious schools joined or attached to all the churches and a priest at the elbow of the rising generation with their articles of faith and the old Jew book instilled into their minds as soon as they are able to receive an idea. Is it any wonder such men as Comstock and religious and superstitious judges are raised to become inquisitor-generals to hunt down and persecute all sensible and honest men like yourself? It is said by some that there is such a thing as a "true and pure religion." What an absurdity! Will those people never understand that there are as many true religions in the world as days in the year, or saints in the calendar? There is but one science, one truth in philosophy. Churches are divided into high and low. So here we hav a high church truth, and a low church truth. In philosophy we hav a standard by which all opinions are measured, and all men of science joyfully submit their opinions, their discoveries, to the test of experience, but there is no standard in religion. Every crack-brained numbskull sets up his own, and is his own measurer, or is measured by some cunning rogue who knows how to cut his own and other religious coats according to the cloth. Without the belief in a God or superior powers, all religions would be destroyed. It is because men hav been trained in a dread of, or hope for something beyond the grave, that they set up religionizing vulgar selfishness and ignorance as the divinity that stirs within them. And the religious animal in direct ratio of his religiousness is ignorantly selfish, generally the most cruel, and always cowardly. If we would hav a people radically vicious, strengthen the religious feeling and multiply mad faiths, stud the country with churches and monasteries, open gospel shops in every street, and make gospel grinding the most lucrative of all professions.

Wherever fools erect a house of prayer,
Ignoramuses are most sure to be there,

I am not alone in my detestation of the religious principle. The accumulated errors it has produced no tongue can speak, no pen describe. No kind of teaching shows all the mischief of priestcraft. If I write boldly, you, Mr. Editor, and others, hav shown the way, and I am happy to be arrayed in deadly opposition to every kind and form of religion. A modern writer says, "All religion is an edifice in the air; theology being nothing more than human ignorance of natural causes reduced to system." To learn the true principles of morality, the people hav no need of theology, of revelations or gods; they hav need only of reason; they hav only to enter into themselves, to reflect on their own natures and sensible interests; consider the object of society and the individuals who compose it, and they will easily perceive that truth and virtue is their interest, vice and religion a curse and unhappiness of their kind.

"But such is the Christian yahoo's holy treasure,
Which yields knaves profit and give idlots pleasure,"

But to the more particular object of this article: Does it prove intelligence in a majority of a people with the ballot in their hands voting for religious and bigoted fanatics—or some more rascal than fanatic—to our legislature to enact and pass rotten laws and put in power such a cantakerous inquisitor as Comstock to plunder the mails of the most intelligent and instructive matter that passes through them? I think not, but the reverse! Look at our public schools, that we are heavily taxed to support! The best institutions we hav are not free from bigotry and superstition. Hav not the bigots been trying to hoist in the old Jew Book as a reading-book and a book of instruction? Whenever the people are sensible and wise they will clean out all the Bible-publishing houses of their indecent and obscene matter that passes out of them and through the mails, and instead thereof turn them into publishing houses for medical, scientific, and philosophical works which will instruct and enlighten the race and convert the churches into halls of science; then will commence the true millennium and reform. Now, what is the state and condition of a large majority of the people of this country at the present time, under what is called a republican form of government? Is there not misery and poverty the same as under other governments? Are they any more enlightened than under a monarchical government? I believe not. Is not this country full of gospel-shops and schools to teach gospel-grindery? Hav we not grog-shops in every street, wholesaling and retailing destruction? Hav we not houses of prostitution that follow the leading characters of the Bible?

Hav we not law and lawyers to take advantage of the ignorant and unwary? Then we hav Wall street brokers and swindlers, banks and bank speculations and swindles, railroad speculations and many other such swindles, smoking and chewing of tobacco, a loathsome and disgusting nuisance; the press as corrupt as corruption can make it (do not be offended, Mr. Editor); men raised and educated under a republican form of government elected to office, their steals, swindles, and plundering. See, for instance, the corruptions of the Credit Mobilier plundering, the Congressional bribery, the Jayne piracy, the Sanborn blackmailing, the District of Columbia plundering, the Indian swindling, the Freedman's Bureau swindling, the mail contract swindling, the steamship subsidy swindling, the gigantic schemes of peculation, theft, and plunder, so numerous that no man can memorize the list. We hav doctors to administer poisons, religious schools and colleges to instruct fools and hypocrites how to preach, etc., etc. And then at last come the parson and priest, with their gospel to instruct us how to live and die, and how to go to an imaginary heaven, and then sends more than half of us to hell at last. Now, Mr. Editor, this is what I should call a brief biographical sketch of the human animal.

I am, Mr. Editor, with all due respect, your well-wisher,
La Crosse, Wis. J. PETTY.

Letter from New Haven.

WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS CO.,
NEW HAVEN, CONN., Nov. 22, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, 141 8th Street, New York, Sir: We protest against your using our name on the bundle of papers sent here weekly. We never gave you permission or authority to use our address and desire it discontinued hereafter.

If you hav subscribers in our employ you must find a way to reach them, but not through us.

W. W. WINCHESTER, Vice-President
Winchester Rep. Arms Co.

REMARKS.—The above earnest protest takes us somewhat by surprise. For four or five years a number of persons employed in the Winchester Arms Company of New Haven hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER and according to instructions we sent the bundle of papers for them to the care of the company and no harm was intended and but little trouble could thereby be caused. The package could easily be sent to the part of the establishment where the men are employed and nobody seriously injured. In view of the fact that this practice has been followed for more than four years this sudden protest is a little startling and seems a trifle pitiable. We are at a loss to determine whether Mr. Winchester is a sympathizer with the Liberal League of America or one of the ardent advocates of the use of the Jewish Bible in the common schools of which New Haven has so many.

There can be little doubt but that there is something in our views, or the tone of the paper, that is distasteful to W. W. Winchester, Esq., Vice-President, etc., and probably he don't approve of our blunt, positive way of stating things. Our heresy and unbelief are doubtless shocking to him. If we advocated the bankrupt plan of salvation, by going to heaven upon the merits of another person, and believed in the marvelous efficacy of being washed in blood and of partaking of the body and blood of an individual who died nearly two thousand years ago, probably our paper could be sent to his establishment without protest. But we believe in honesty and professing just what we believe whether it is popular and respectable or not.

We hope the persons working for the Winchester Arms Company who take THE TRUTH SEEKER will giv us some other address to which the papers can be sent without giving annoyance to Messrs. Winchester & Co. We also hope that the fact that they read THE TRUTH SEEKER will not operate against their retaining their situations and we hope that they perform their duties as faithfully as those who read sectarian papers. We hav a curiosity to know if the publishers of Christian papers are requested not to send them to the pious establishment that manufactures hundreds of thousands of rifles for shooting down human beings. Does Mr. Winchester believe that the individual by whose merits he is to be saved would hav engaged in such a murderous business and hav furnished the weapons for taking the lives of God's creatures because he could make money by it? Do they think he approves now of the killing business? If they really believe in him can they pursue the business which he could not approve? Consistency is a jewel.

Liberalism—Obscenity.

These two words, of which we hear a great deal in certain quarters, will hav to be re-defined so as to prevent mistakes. We hav an idea that we of the Investigator are rather Liberal, but we hope we are not obscene, though it appears that we are in the estimation of the Milwaukee (Wis.) Christian Statesman, because we are in favor of repealing the Comstock laws. That very pious journal says:

"The sympathies of all decent people must be with Abbot and his party, against whom a fierce opposition has been excited simply because he was not willing to countenance the free circulation of obscene literature through the mails. . . . We honor him for the stand he has taken against the lawless clique who think that 'Freethought' requires them to become the champions of indecency and vice; and we hope that his secession may hav the effect of causing them to appear before the world in their true light, so that all decent persons may be warned away from them."

It is not strange that a Christian paper should publish this slang and abuse, but we could hardly believe our eyes when we read it in the columns of that excellent, refined, and high-toned LIBERAL journal, the Boston Index, which published the calumny without one single word of disapprobation! We could hardly hav believed it though one arose from the dead and said he read it in The Index, if we hadn't read it there too, for it is the oddest kind of Liberalism that we ever met with—always excepting, of course, what we hav seen in the Religio-Philosophical Journal of Chicago which is about on the same exalted level. But here is another "gem of purest ray serene," which we copy from The Index.

"Miss Jane P. Titcomb energetically refuses to be a Vice-President of the 'repeal' League as follows: 'In your reported list of the new "repeal" Board, so disgracefully thrust upon the sturdy old League, I note with dismay my own name figuring as one of the Vice Presidents in the renegade crew. My immediate friends are wholly aware it could not hav stood there long enough to get into print had I been present at the Congress; but lest more remote acquaintances should thus receive the impression of any sympathy on my part with that noxious body of fevered pulse and flaccid vertebræ, I beg you to giv me the benefit of this public denial.'"

Miss Titcomb is energetic, that is certain—quite as much so as she is refined, courteous, and polite—and, we may add, original in the idea that gentlemen such as Elizur Wright, James Parton, O. B. Frothingham, T. B. Wakeman, H. L. Green, Messrs. Palmer, Rawson, Bennett, Brown, Verity, Rivers, Leland, Butts, Searing, Damon, Spinney, and fifty others, besides such women as Lucy N. Colman and Augusta Cooper Bristol, belong to "the renegade crew," and are a "noxious body of fevered pulse and flaccid vertebræ.' Heavens! What are we Liberals coming to if we hav got to this condition already? The "demands of Liberalism" must be re-defined as soon as possible, for if we are to go on at this rate, there will soon be no difference between a high-toned Liberal and an orthodox of the very bluest kind. —Boston Investigator.

Important Meeting.

The Infidels, Spiritualists, and Liberals of every shade are invited to come to Science Hall, 141 Eighth street on next Sunday, December 1st at 10:30 A. M., and help discuss the present plan of saving to the cause of Liberalism the Paine Memorial Building in Boston.

Many speakers hav been invited and hav promised to favor the meeting with their presence and influence. Among them are Josiah P. Mendum, Andrew Jackson Davis, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Moses Hull, Mattie Sawyer, and others.

Let the friends of Liberalism rally on this occasion and make one strong effort to save to the cause of Freethought the one monument yet erected to one of the world's greatest heroes.

New Feature for 1879.

We propose to print in THE TRUTH SEEKER during the next year, 1879, a newly written Bible Dictionary, which will be issued also in book form, when completed, of about 800 to 1,000 pages, 8 mo, uniform with the former volumes of the "Truth Seeker Library."

The peculiar feature of this work will be in its treatment of the various subjects in a Liberal spirit, as free as possible from bias or prejudice; presenting the simple truth as near as may be—as far as it has been ascertained. There is no such work now extant, all former books on this topic having been more or less directly in the interest of orthodoxy, and the theoretical plan of salvation, in support of which it has been deemed necessary to assume as true a peculiar history of the Jews, including many items and incidents that are objectionable to reason and common sense.

The Liberal Bible Dictionary will include, among many other topics usual in works of the kind, short articles on the history of the Bible, the geology and topography of Egypt, Palestine, and all Bible lands; the chronology of the Bible; the occupation of Palestine by the people who are called Hebrews; an outline of biography, including the leading characters mentioned in the Bible, whether mythical or real; natural history of animals, trees, and flowers; descriptions of peculiar costumes, such as illustrate important texts; a complete description of the money mentioned in the Bible, and of antiquities, including recent discoveries.

Many of the articles will be from the pens of leading thinkers of Europe and this country.

Edited by Albert Leighton Rawson, D. D., L. L. D.

The Radical Pulpit.

Have We Still a Religion?

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

There are deaths beyond deaths in the human heart. There are abysses in thy soul, O lordly man, which even the barrenest brain grows giddy to behold. There is an overhanging destiny which few men dare stand face to face with. The life of the multitude is cheap; their aims are mean. When we regard them, a bitter question often comes to our lips, Why should these claim distinction above the lower animals? are they greatly raised above the brute? This one spends the thirty or forty years of his earthly existence merely in the cupidity of inordinate gain; that one plots and schemes and strives for office; a third hunts after the bauble fame; while the great herd pursue their paths without any aim or ambition. To obtain the wretched pittance which will support life, that is their aim; to keep body and soul together, that is their ambition; to bring others into the world to share the same miseries with themselves, that is their curse.

But underneath all this so hollow show, tremendous meanings lie concealed, and the pendulum of life, as it swings between the terminal points of the cradle and the grave, marks in passing over each individual life the lapse of an eternity within an eternity.

The life of man—we cannot rid ourselves of the thought—is a tragedy. Even the multitude know that it is so, and they are so light-headed and so trivial only because they fear to go near to those earnest, solemn questions of life of whose existence they are well aware. They pass them by, looking upon them as a mar-plot at their festivals; they pass them by as a child passes by the churchyard, singing songs in order to animate its boldness.

But the teacher of religion must say to men, Do away with this cowardice; penetrate, if it must be, into the deepest hidden principles of the world; think, reason, weigh results, and found your codes of conduct upon definite convictions, and upon definite convictions alone, and then your moral life rests securely.

Now, it is not an easy matter to obtain definite convictions in religion at the present day. So many opinions which were once deemed certain have been exploded; so many seeming sanctities have turned out to be mere deceit; so many eternal verities, as they were named, have passed away like the morning mist.

And so, when men are asked to-day, Have we still a religion? they shrug their shoulders, and, for the most part, they know not whether to answer Yea or Nay, for the whole matter is confused with doubt.

Now, this question, Have we still a religion? I propose to discuss to-day, and shall attempt to point out the method by which alone we can arrive at a satisfactory conclusion. And, in the first place, if we desire to know whether we have still a religion, it is necessary to settle the question, What, then, is religion? If we consult the popular misuse of the term, religion is a superstition. There is a miraculous sacredness inherent in certain things and places and persons. The stones of a church are holier than any other stones; the person of a priest is a little nearer God than any other man; the parchment on which the Bible is written possesses virtues to which no other parchment can lay any claim. Moreover, there is a certain frivolousness in the conception of the deity current among the people which grates upon every finer mind. When the multitude say Personal God, they mean personal in the grossest sense of the term. It is not sufficient for them that they have a God whom they can venerate; they must needs have a God whom they can photograph, or at least look at as from afar through the eye of a telescope. When we were children we thought of the deity as of a venerable old man with gray locks, and an awful eye, terrible to behold. Not much more spiritual is the conception of God which passes current among the vulgar. It is true no man in his senses to-day ascribes a corporeal form to his God, but the attributes which they ascribe to him are thoroughly human and thoroughly gross. An intelligence is his like their own narrow intelligence; a will like their own vacillating will; he loves and hates as they love and hate; but he is distinguished above all else by his overweening vanity, greater than any human vanity. If an earthly king be a good man, he desires chiefly that his subjects shall obey the laws which he has given them, and that they shall each one labor to secure the general well-being; and if such a sovereign hears that there are men going about through the streets of his capital who spend their days singing songs to him and saying, "Our king is a very excellent king," and inciting the people to expend their time and means in raising statues and other monuments to his honor, such a king would sharply rebuke these men as idle mischief-makers and say he likes not at all such service, and he tells them they shall go about their tasks and labor for the state and its welfare, and he lays his command upon them that henceforth they shall hold their peace. But the heavenly sovereign is not as great as the earthly sovereign. He delights in nothing so much as in hearing his own fulsome praise; he favors those who erect monuments in his honor; and if there be in his domain a man whose mind is hard and who says, "I don't see the goodness of our King at all; nay, I have never seen the King: why does he not show himself to me; I know not yet whether he exists," straightway the King takes that man as if he had stolen his treasure, and, like the fiends of the Inquisition, he tortures him by fire, and gloats over his torment through all eternity of time.

Such a religion is a superstition, and because it is a superstition it is also a fear. Men that have such thoughts ingrained in their minds do not go freely to worship a divine, friendly, fatherly power; but they go and cast themselves on their knees and prostrate themselves in the dust, and bring as an offering their abject humiliation before that tyrannic lord who need only to raise his foot and stamp out their miserable existence if he so will. And this is not only a superstition and a fear; it is also a compromise.

A hundred and fifty years age there lived in the city of Paris a shrewd merchant who offered the deity to take him as a silent partner into his business, and he arranged that he would devote annually a certain large portion of his income to his partner if the latter, in return, would undertake to favor and cause to prosper their common affairs. Year after year he faithfully fulfilled his part of the contract, and at last, upon his death, a considerable sum was found noted down on the books to the credit of God Almighty. But the heirs of the man refused to recognize that contract, holding that such contracts in which a deity is the gainer are to be considered null and void.

But other contracts of a similar kind are constantly made with the deity to-day. The savage, when he goes out to warfare, promises his God to share the spoils with him if he will lend him victory. In the literature of nations already far advanced in civilization we read—as, for instance, in the poems of Homer—that the soldiers offered sacrifices in honor of the deity, and mentioned their sacrifices as a reason why a special favor should be granted to the worshipers; and even in modern times the conception is, among the North American Indians, that God is a hungry God, and requires to be fed; that he is a poor God, and requires the gifts of his votaries. This principle of give and take is still maintained in the religious principles of the world, and exerts its debasing influence. The rich man dies, the rich man who has drawn in around himself and his family the means that might have made ten thousand families happy—and here I speak literally—that might have made ten thousand families happy, and has not thought of giving anything from his absolute abundance to those who live in absolute need—not even a paltry sum out of mere deference to public opinion or out of regard to public conscience; for what cares he for the public conscience? Has he not done better, has he not built a church unto the Lord and endowed a seminary for his ministers? Another does like unto him, and builds a cathedral over his dead bones, and thus pays his obligations to the good Lord.

If these be manifestations of a religious spirit, as they are often represented to be, then the question, Have we still a religion? is easily answered. No, no; if this be religion, we have it not, nor will have it!

The popular conception of religion is too gross, and the philosophic conception of religion is too abstract to be satisfactory. If we consult the current philosophy, we find that it speaks of the origin of all things, of an uncondition that precedes all conditions, of a substance in which resides the possibilities of all existences. They take this ontological or cosmical argument as a basis for their ethical argument, and thus they build a sort of imaginary scaffold whereon to erect their scheme of religion. But the conception of God at which they arrive is a pale, bloodless shadow of the mind; a being without motion, a being incapable of change, a being absolutely at rest, a being incapable of any action. It offers us a cold and passive First Cause to which no heart can appeal, which no arms outstretched can reach. They tell us every effect must have its cause, and this cause must have another cause, and this third cause a higher cause, and so we are led up through a long chain of causes and effects, on and on, backwards and backwards, and the mind seeks to get a resting-place. So what do they do? Why, they fasten a nail, as it were, into the blue heavens, and say, this is the Frst Cause, and therefrom shall the whole chain depend. But the question irresistibly arises, To what have we fastened our nail? To the blue air! And the question irresistibly returns, What then, if this be the First Cause, is the cause of this First Cause? And so the whole dizzy search begins anew, and goes on, and on, and ends nowhere. Thus is the mind divided against itself; thus does philosophy puzzle and perplex us, and the soul ache over the process of reasoning. But we will be perfectly honest with ourselves as to this; pure reason is incapable of penetrating these things; our human law of cause and effect is too small a key to unlock the problem of the universe. What, then, would you do? We have known this danger; let us be wise, therefore, and confess that in the ultimate problem no man is wise. So the popular conception gives us a gross religion, a superstition; and the philosophic conception gives us a failure.

Now let us turn to the ethical religion, and consider whether that will satisfy our demands. If you wish to know what a tree is, turn to the different orders of trees and note what is common to all, and separate the essential from the non-essential. There are tall trees, like the royal palm; there are light and graceful trees, like the pine; there are trees laden with golden fruit, sending abroad their incense and fragrance, like the orange; and there are trees that exhale a deadly poison. All these we embrace under the same generic name and call them trees. If you wish to know what a religion is, go consult the religion. And here, at first, you will be startled. The contrast is too great between the lower and the higher forms, between the poisonous tree in religion, and the fair palm and the orange in religion.

Transplant yourselves for a moment to the coast of Africa. What is that burden which yonder naked, dark-skinned savages are bearing down to the sea shore? They have slain a victim, a man, and now they heave it, throw it far out into the surf, and the cry from within is drowned by the gurgling of the waves. And that is an offering to the spirit of the waters, that he shall protect their fisheries.

Then go to Hindostan, and visit the land of the Brahmin, and you come upon a scene such as this: In the center of a vast concourse a human victim is pinioned; a priest stands over him holding an unsheathed knife. For three days this man has been worshiped, according to their custom, as a god, and now the god must die. A merciful blow ends his life, and then those who, to see it, have come from afar, rush up, and each one tears a piece of the still palpitating flesh and runs to his fields and squeezes the blood into the new-made furrow. And this is an offering to the spirit of the earth, that it may give them abundant harvests. This is spirit-worship.

Then of a higher sphere comes the worship of those nations or tribes who see their supreme ideal in the sun and stars. Then, again, in a higher sphere still, we see the beauty-loving Greeks giving to the world a new form of religion; in whose Delphian temples we have the dream of beauty made real; in whose gods and goddesses are the most perfect types of manhood and the most voluptuous loveliness of woman represented.

Then, again, we have the religion of the Jews; a stern monotheism, whose prophets proclaimed it an inward religion which governs through the decalogue or the law of God.

Now, what is the common bond that unites all these? The essence of religion is the going out of the soul of man toward the infinite; a search after the infinite—that is religion. There are various forms of the infinite, and hence it was possible that various religions could arise. There is the infinite of Mystery, which finds its expression in spirit-worship; there is the infinite of Power, which finds its expression in paganism—in the personal and powerful gods of the Greek and Roman pantheons. Then there is, last of all and transcending all, the infinite of the Good, which finds its first expression in the language of the Hebrew seers. That is the loftiest phase in which the sentiment of religion has ever found expression. Now, Judaism and its daughter religions clothed the idea of all goodness with the personality of an all-good being, and whether we adopt this personification or not, whether we clothe the ideal in the garb of a person or not, the qualities that make it up remain the same: justice, infinite justice; purity, infinite purity; love, infinite love. It is a search after the infinite on its highest plane. Religion, therefore, is a search after this triple ideal; an aspiration after the just, the pure, and the good. And if this be so, if this be the substance of religion, if the question, Have we still a religion? be interpreted in this sense, why, then, my friends, I think we can answer, without undue boldness, our question, we have still a religion, aye, more than ever have we a religion.

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

[From The Index.]

The Meriden League.

WEST MERIDEN, CT., Nov. 15, 1878.

Dear Mr. Abbot: At our League meeting last evening, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That while we appreciate the earnest and efficient services of Francis E. Abbot in the National Liberal League, and desired his continuance in the presidency of that League, we believe that in the election of Hon. Elizur Wright, so long and favorably known as a defender of human rights, we have a pledge that the League will continue to aim at justice for all, and that fellowship in the League, being based on this principle, 'will be as broad as that we aim to establish in the State.'"

Cordially yours, EMILY J. LEONARD.

Miscellaneous.

The Paine Memorial.

To The Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The most of your readers are acquainted with the fact that we hav, in Boston, a splendid edifice erected in honor of the memory of that steadfast Infidel and author hero—Thomas Paine. It is also pretty generally known that, like much of the church property in this country, this building is sadly in debt. A misunderstanding, which it is not necessary here to discuss, has done its share in preventing Liberals from taking hold, as they otherwise might hav done, and paying off this indebtedness.

Many plans for the payment of this indebtedness hav been suggested, and each has in its turn been abandoned. Until within a few days past it has looked as though this great monument was to pass into the hands of the Y. M. C. A. or the Catholic Church, and Liberals were not only to lose the hundred thousand dollars they hav invested in the only sensible kind of a monument ever built, but were to hav the humiliation of a failure. Lately a few of us hav awakened up and determined that this shall not be; this building, with its four halls, shall be handed down to posterity consecrated to the cause of freedom.

The total indebtedness on the hall and the ground on which it stands is sixty-five thousand dollars; one man agrees to pay, if desired, fifteen thousand of that and take it in stock; within the last four days I got nearly one thousand more signed, and the promise of still another thousand. If permitted to go on I shall in less than twelve months hav stock enough taken to pay off the entire indebtedness. Of course in this I need the co-operation of all the Liberals of the different schools. If, however, some refuse, the work will still go on, it will only be harder.

My plan is this: We are to form a joint stock company, who are to pay for the building and own it. I have writings from Messrs. Mendum and Seaver, to this effect. The stock is to be taken in shares of twenty dollars each; each share to have a vote in every business transaction of the stockholders. The four halls in the building to be rented, and the rents after the debts are paid, to go to the stockholders in dividends; or to be by them voted to some such work as helping the "Defense Fund," publishing and circulating documents, or hiring lecturers:

Already the preliminary work of becoming an incorporated body is being done. The Paine Memorial Joint Stock Company will be organized and elect its officers on the 28th of January, 1879, and that day will hereafter be the day of the annual meeting of the stockholders. On the day following, the 29th, we will hav a grand jubilee—a celebration of the birthday of the man in whose honor the building is erected. The readers of The Truth Seeker are hereby invited to be present at that meeting.

The thing now wanted is to get as much stock as possible taken before the time of the first meeting. Subscriptions can be sent in to J. P. Mendum, of the Boston Investigator, to D. M. Bennett, of The Truth Seeker, or to the writer of this, at 468 Tremont street, Boston.

There is no absolute necessity of sending money along with the subscriptions, as very little will be needed before the first meeting. At that time and after, one-fourth of all the subscriptions of twenty dollars, or some multiple thereof, to be paid down, the remainder to be paid in three quarter-yearly installments. Certificates of stock, with the company's seal on it, will be issued for all full-paid shares.

The above is only a brief outline of my plan of operation; it is, of course, subject to amendments and alterations, and will be perfected by the wisdom of the stockholders.

As the principal management of this matter is, for the present, in my hands, let me hear from all interested, and, above all, let subscriptions to the capital stock come in.

With determination, I am, as ever, Moses Hull.

468 Tremont St., Boston, Nov. 21, 1878.

Free Speech.

The Boston Investigator, in reply to a correspondent signing himself "F. H.," proceeds as follows:

The idea that we are not to be allowed to speak and print what we please, because it may not suit Anthony Comstock and his law, is a kind of doctrine that we might expect from an orthodox bigot, but not from a professed Liberal. We hav been in the habit of thinking that free speech and a free press meant exactly what the words imply, and in this belief we hav spoken and published what we pleased and when we pleased, not caring to inquire whether orthodoxy and Comstock agreed or disagreed with us.

They are not our masterr. We are not in leading-strings to any of that tribe; and so, as we owe them no allegiance, we are sorry to see any Liberals currying favor in any way with the Comstock law instead of using their efforts to repeal it. As we hav said before, it is a mere orthodox trap to catch and persecute honest men and women for teaching and publishing unpopular doctrines, just as is the blasphemy law under which Abner Kneeland was imprisoned for uttering heretical religious sentiments. Neither of these laws favor free speech and a free press, and therefore both laws should be unconditionally repealed.

But in taking this ground we are not advocating actual obscenity or desiring that it should be allowed unrestricted indulgence. No! we are opposed to it, but as it can be suppressed by state and municipal law, there is no necessity for a Government officer, like Comstock, to annoy honest people in their business, to act the censor or spy over the press, and to tamper with the mails. We hope to hear no more of "reforming" this absurd and unjust law, for in point of justice, reason, and equity, it has no right to exist in any shape.

[From The Boston Investigator.]

A Letter from E. H. Heywood.

Cell 52, The Jail, Dedham, Mass., Nov. 9, 1878, Y. L. 6.

Mr. Editor: Inclosed herewith I send you a letter from our mutual friend, Parker Pillsbury, which I wish you would print, for it states very clearly the relation of the "obscenity" statutes to Freethought, and forecasts what is coming if Mr. Abbot and others do not get their eyes open soon.

Please allow me to call the attention of your readers to Mr. Pillsbury's pamphlet "Letter," published by Albert Kendrick, and addressed to me, contrasting the alleged-to-be obscene words and sentences from "Cupid's Yokes" with the really obscene passages of Holy Scripture, of which there are many and filthy. It is the heaviest blow yet struck at Comstockism. An old Abolitionist writes of it saying, "It is a sockdologer—it hits below the belt and between the eyes; it will make the Comstock hypocrites HOWL!"

The more people reflect upon the ominous issue which Mr. Pillsbury presents, the more its magnitude will develop. It sternly and firmly challenges the basis of the Christian faith, and will compel it to show cause for its continued existence. To condemn morals is to destroy faith. The Bible must go. This pregnant pamphlet means the repeal of the Comstock statutes, the expulsion of the Bible from the public schools, and the subversion of Christianity itself! No better service to Freethought could be done than to spread this pamphlet broadcast over Christendom. It can be had, by mail or otherwise, for ten cents per copy, of Albert Kendrick, publisher, Hotel Lafayette, suite 2, corner of Columbus avenue and Isabella steeet, Boston, Mass. [Sold also at The Truth Seeker office.] Regards to all friends.

In love, truth, and reason, yours ever,

Ezra H. Heywood.

P. S.—I hav been here 137 days and nights, to-day.

E. H. H.

A LETTER FROM PARKER PILLSBURY.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 7, 1878.

My Dear Heywood: A thousand thanks for your kind remembrance. My memory will hav fulfilled its mortal mission when you are no longer its constant occupant by day and night.

It is no virtue, certainly it is no cross, to remember them that are in bonds as bound with them, when they are my nearest, dearest friends—brothers, and more than brothers.

I cannot understand Mr. Abbot of The Index. And his last week's issue is most enigmatical of all. Surely he should keep to the truth in matters of fact about the Syracuse Convention. Probably he so intends, but his vision or his standpoint differs widely from mine.

And then as to the main issue, it is wondrous indeed that he does not see how much greater is the purpose of the priesthood to arrest Freethought, even "cultured Freethought," than to peer into the mails after a little bad smelling literature.

Surely, they who read and teach the Bible, who force it into all secular as well as Sunday-schools where they can; who translate it into all human languages, and claim it as their highest, most meritorious Christian duty to send it to the heathen world more than a thousand millions strong, after almost two thousand years of Christian teaching, preaching, and practice of it—surely, I insist, they cannot be offended in their material or spiritual palates, or olfactories, at any word or sentence in "Cupid's Yokes."

No, indeed! They could "rinse" their mouths on any page in "Cupid's Yokes" after reading many a passage in their Holy Scriptures—"appointed to be read in churches!" taught in families and schools, and sent to the heathen, as the only book under heaven given among men whereby they or anybody else can be saved!

Cannot Mr. Abbot see that he, and the like of him, Freethinkers (and the more cultured the more obnoxious) are the main object of clerical dread, hate, and spite?

I think in the dim light of your cell he would see it, if nowhere else. Let the God-in-the-Constitution Society grow a little longer and stronger, let the Young Men's Christian Association become only a little more audacious, and your writings on Marriage and Parentage will be a small offense compared with the heresies and blasphemies of The Index, or the Atheism of the Investigator.

Mr. Abbot has done magnificent service in the grand enterprise of overthrowing the towers and turrets, the battlements and bulwarks, of religious bigotry, intolerance, and priestly mendacity and domination. But Mr. Abbot neither knows the real spirit nor half the resources of those "powers of darkness" with whom he is waging most unequal war.

Elizur Wright might teach him, for he has been within their terrible citadel. I went once and looked in myself, as you hav heard me say. The miracle is that I escaped. But the "holy hands of ordination" were never laid on head of mine. . . .

I would like to help sever the red tape which holds you where you are. For I am sure the whole Government, state and Federal, would be glad could you be shaken from its grasp. What earthly object could be subserved by keeping you two years in a felon's cell, only for opinion's sake, away down here, almost at the bottom of the nineteenth Christian century? But where you now are, or wherever you may be,

I am your friend and and elder brother,

Parker Pillsbury.

B. F. Underwood lectured at Moberly, Mo., Nov. 17th and 18th; at Bushnell, Ill., 19th, 20th, and 21st; at Peru, Ill., 23d, 23d, and 24th; Nora Springs, Iowa, 26th, 27th, and 28th.

Gen. Cesnola's Lecture on Ancient Cyprus.

Gen. di Cesnola, in the initial lecture of his course in Chickering Hall, had a large audience. The Rev. Drs. Adams and Bellows, Judge Daly, and other influential New-Yorkers, appeared with him on the platform. The lecturer was introduced by Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock, who declared that the muse of history should now be provided with a spade in addition to the scroll which she ordinarily bears, as setting forth the fact that by digging we hav cut our way back through the centuries. Gen. Cesnola, he said, had done for Cyprus what George Smith did for Assyria, and what Mariette did for Egypt. The Cyprus of history, before Cesnola went there, was a cloud in the horizon; the Cyprus of to-day is solid enough to bear the weight of British cannon, its treasures of art made their exodus in good time, and New York saluted the hero of the achievement, Gen. Cesnola, Italian and American.

The lecturer, bowing to the applause which greeted him, said that he hoped, in the course of his lectures, to awaken an intelligent interest in the unique collection which certain New Yorkers, filled with a love for all that pertained to art and science, had been the means of securing to the city—a monument in all time of their wise foresight and splendid liberality. He proposed, he said, to show the different influences of Egyptian, Assyrian, Phœnician, and early Greek arts, as exhibited in the ancient monuments discovered in Cyprus, and now exhibited in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It was in Cyprus that Hellenic and Semitic settlements first came in contact. When the Greeks went to Cyprus they did not take with them any developed art of their own, and their religious forms of worship were crude. It is necessary, therefore, to become acquainted with the ancient history of Cyprus, in order to understand much of the early Greek history yet obscure; for Cyprus is now acknowledged to hav been the meeting point of races. It was to Cyprus that the Phœnicians first took their wares for sale, and it was there that they displayed their arts, their gods, and their fashions, and those of Egypt and Assyria. For evidence of the early influx of Egyptian, Assyrian, and Phœnician influences upon the Greek mind there is no place like Cyprus. The French and German Governments sent some of their best scholars to explore and make excavations in Cyprus as early as 1846, but it was only lately that the result so anxiously looked for was obtained through private enterprise. New York now possesses the best clue to those primitive forms in which, as Calvin rightly says, Semitic and Egyptian ideas and arts and types of worship, as modified by the Phœnicians, penetrated the receptive faculties of the Greeks. Greek art germinated in Cyprus, and the historical scholar must study the ancient arts and history of Cyprus if he wishes thoroughly to understand the art of Greece. A hundred years ago we had very little accurate knowledge of the ancient Egyptians, Assyrians, and Phœnicians, and it is to the arduous and patient labors of such men as Belzoni, Layard, Botta, Champollion, and Rawlinson that we owe our power to-day of contemplating and understanding the civilizations of those first two great nations of antiquity, Egypt and Assyria, whose history, fortunately, was recorded on more durable material than parchment. Men disappear, but their art and literature remain; and we must not wonder that the departure of all the Cypriote antiquities is regarded by German, French, and English scholars as a European misfortune.

The antiquities which he discovered in Cyprus represented, Gen. Cesnola said, many Phœnician works of art, some of which were more than 4,000 years old; and their great value is that they form the link which connects Asiatic and Egyptian art with that of Greece. It had been believed that the Greeks were the inventors of many useful things that had been transmitted to us, but the discoveries in Cyprus hav shown that the Greeks derived them from an older civilization; and when systematic excavations shall be made among the ruins of Tyre and Sidon, and we hav more Phœnician remains in our possession, we shall cease to burn incense exclusively before the shrine of Greek genius, and eventually we shall hav to rewrite the history of ancient art.

Cyprus yielded the greatest variety of natural products; but its chief source of wealth lay in its copper mines. Even to-day, with its mines for centuries unworked, with its thirty harbors filled with sand, its forests destroyed, and its population reduced to beggary by Turkish misrule, we hav seen the greatest maritime power of Europe coveting Cyprus, and finally led into a ruinous bargain with the crafty Turks in order to possess it. The Phœnicians of Cyprus were not only miners, but were familiar with alloys by which they produced bronze of different qualities suitable for armor or for articles of household service, and at a period so remote that we cannot determine it with anything like certainty.—N. Y. Sun.

Chestnut trees are known to hav lived nine hundred years; lime trees hav attained six hundred years in France; and birches are supposed to be equally durable.

Milliner.—Do you know how a person who makes bonnets and such articles of dress came to be called by the name milliner? It was originally "Milaner," meaning a resident of Milan in Italy, and it arose from the fact that at one time the fashions all came from Italy.

In New York city there are, "beneath the shadow of the cross," 20,532 grown-up men and women who can neither read nor write.

If a man should count at the rate of one hundred dollars a minute, and work sixteen hours a day, it would take him over thirty years to count a billion one-dollar bills; and sewed together end to end they would reach nearly four and a half times around the globe.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOV. 30, 1878.

Opinions of Prominent Liberals.

50 WEST 36TH ST.,
NEW YORK, Nov. 18, 1878.

MY DEAR SIR: Your note of the 10th inst. admonishes me of a duty that should hav been discharged before—the duty of telling you that your argument on the "Comstock Postal Law" has made me an advocate of repeal vs. modification. The discussion of this autumn has brought me to the conclusion that this is the simple, logical, sensible, and only satisfactory method of dealing with the obnoxious piece of legislation. The Liberals of the other opinion call for repeal of as much of the law as threatens freedom of thought and discussion. The insolent association of Freethought with obscenity so stirs my indignation that for honor's sake, if for no other reason, I should feel compelled to demand that the whole be swept away. The friends of decency must look for safeguards elsewhere.

Yours cordially, O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

T. B. Wakeman.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., Sept. 29, 1878.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I think those Comstock laws, as they are very properly called, ought to be totally repealed, and for these reasons:

1. Because they are Comstock laws, and not the deliberate judgment of Congress.

2. Because they are useless. The forbidden articles can still be sent everywhere by express.

3. Because it is not possible to put into human language a definition of the word obscene which shall let the Song of Solomon, Rabelais, Juvenal, and Tom Jones pass, and keep out works intended and calculated to corrupt.

4. Because the control of the Government over the mails is obviously limited to what you well style "postal reasons." Dynamite may be excluded; sealing wax may be excluded; liquids may be excluded—because they endanger the fulfillment of the contract with all the other senders of mail matter. But the Government is not called upon to sit in judgment upon the moral character or intellectual quality of the parcels entrusted to it.

5. Because the laws in question are so liable to abuse by a narrow-minded or provincial officer. They enable the prim and prudish village to judge and condemn the metropolis.

6. Because the state laws and municipal laws, previously and now existing, are sufficient for the detection and punishment of all real offenders against decency and good morals.

With regard to the constitutional argument, so ably and powerfully presented by yourself, I can only say, being no lawyer, that it seems to be unanswerable. It came upon my mind with convincing power, and I hav never had a doubt since. These laws are wrong every way, and pernicious in many ways. You know how I hate and loathe the books and papers that circulate among boys, which can have no other than a corrupting effect. I could join, heart and hand, in hanging a wretch who, for a little money, would either write, or publish, or sell such works. And yet it seems to me that the espionage of the mails by an illiterate person is even a worse evil than that. It menaces the very citadel of liberty.

Yes, I go for immediate and unconditional repeal; and this has been my feeling ever since reading your masterly speech delivered in Faneuil Hall last summer.

Very truly yours, JAMES PARTON.

T. B. Wakeman.

WELLESLEY, MASS, Nov. 22, 1878.

Hav just read your reply to Mr. Cuyler, and am much pleased with its manly tone. The Comstock movement is only a skirmish-line moving on the outer works of Liberalism. The intention is evidently to imprison every leading man who dares to utter heretical thought. I am with you for repeal.

WM. DENTON.

D. M. Bennett.

A Correction by B. F. Underwood.

MR. EDITOR: Your representations to your readers substantially (I hav no copies of the T. S. to refer to) that I advised the minority to withdraw from the National Liberal League, and that I left to organize another League, are untrue. I never advised anything of the kind. My advice was exactly the contrary. All my remarks and efforts had in view the harmony and unity of the League. I was opposed to the introduction of the "obscenity question" into the Congress; but when it had been introduced I was in favor of free and fair discussion. When Mr. Wakeman was interrupted by an impatient adherent of "reform," I protested against any attempt to prevent his remarks. But I asked the majority not to press "repeal" by adopting a resolution in favor of it, as it would be very likely to lead to the withdrawal of the minority that did not wish to be pledged to the policy of "repeal." I based the statement, as I said, on what I knew of human nature and what I had heard at Syracuse. I did not wish to see the organization divided, and made an appeal for moderation and judicious action to avert this danger. I did not ask that the organization should pledge itself to "reform." I did not, at any time, publicly or privately, advise or favor the withdrawal of the minority. When approached on the subject, after Mr. Wright's election, I advised against it.

As I was to giv an address that evening, I retired to my room at the hotel, not thinking there would be any formal withdrawal of the friends of "reform." An hour afterwards I received an invitation to attend a meeting of the seceders at the parlors of the hotel. There I joined in the protest which has been published, and which I believe proper and just. But I signed it with no intention of helping form a new League.

In the evening I returned to the Congress and gave an address as announced. Meantime a majority of the friends of "reform" had organized a new League, the first intimation of which I received after I had finished my address. I returned to the Syracuse House just in time to decline the honor of being made Vice-President of the new League, which was holding its meeting in the hotel parlors. Although in sympathy with them in their position regarding the authority of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscenity through the mails, I was not, I told them, prepared to leave the old League or to join the new one.

Finding myself not in harmony with those who would control the National Liberal League the coming year on a subject which had been most unwisely introduced, but which had received the entire attention of the Congress, I had resigned my position as Vice-President, but hoped nevertheless to help restore good feeling, and to see, ultimately the two bodies reunited. Mr. Wakeman in conversation with me the next morning said that he thought the course taken by me judicious and highly honorable. Mr. Courtlandt Palmer expressed himself to me in similar terms. I submit this statement not in defense or justification of my course at Syracuse—I do not deem that necessary—but in correction of misstatements regarding me which hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER. You complain, not without reason, of the unfairness of some of the reports published in the Syracuse papers. I hav equal, if not greater, reason to complain of your unfairness in referring to my course at Syracuse. Yours truly, B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Bushnell, Ill., Nov. 20, 1878.

REMARKS.—We are very sorry if we hav done Mr. Underwood any injustice. Most assuredly we hav not intended to do so. We are inclined to think he has been misinformed. Had he had copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER by him and read just what our remarks of him hav been, we cannot think he would hav much grounds to charge us with unfairness towards him. We think we hav not said that he advised the minority to withdraw from the League, or that he left to organize another League. Neither can we think that he has the same kind of reason for complaining of our misrepresenting him that we had for complaining of the falsehoods of the Syracuse papers. If he will point out the passage where we hav accused him of advising the minority to withdraw and break up the League, we will "acknowledge the corn" and humbly ask his pardon. We think we hav not made one false statement respecting our friend Underwood, and we are sorry that he should think we hav, for we hav for years entertained the highest regard for his ability and integrity.

We hav looked over our issues since the meeting of the Congress at Syracuse, and we find nothing to justify our friend's complaint. In the report we gave of the proceedings of the Congress, we used this language in reference to the Saturday evening meeting: "Mr. B. F. Underwood did not believe in being 'choked down,' and was not so narrow-minded as not to allow a full and free discussion. The most reprehensible part of his remarks was where he showed impatience toward those who occupied the anti-Abbot position, and said if the vote on repeal was pressed that those who opposed it would be justified in withdrawing from the organization. This position caused pain to many of Mr. Underwood's friends, and they regretted to see him unwilling to accord the same rights to those who differed with him that he claimed for his own party." Our report of the Sunday afternoon meeting contains these remarks only of Mr. Underwood: "B. F. Underwood also resigned his position as Vice-President and expressed dissatisfaction with the vote that had been given. Some of Mr. Underwood's friends regretted to see him take this course, simply because the members of the Congress had exercised their legitimate, natural rights and had expressed their choice in the election of its presiding officer."

These two quotations contain about all we hav said of Mr. Underwood in connection with the Congress, except of a complimentary character, and we cannot now see that they contain anything false or unfair towards him. He says himself that he "asked the majority not to press 'repeal' by adopting a resolution in favor of it, as it would be very likely to lead to the withdrawal of the minority, and that he did not wish to be pledged to the policy of 'repeal.'" This does not conflict with our report. He did make an earnest protest against pressing the vote on repeal, and there is little doubt but that his remarks had the effect to cause the postponement of the vote. The majority, or the repeal party, did not wish a rupture of the League; and though there seemed a little of bitterness in Mr. Underwood's remarks, they were duly considered in the conciliatory resolution offered by the majority on Sunday morning.

Mr. Underwood says he "did not wish to see the organization divided;" but he evidently wished to see it united by the majority yielding in all respects to the minority. As to the matter of not pressing a vote on repeal, though the majority acceded to his wishes and voted not to press it for a year, it was not enough for him; he demanded also that the majority should vote for Mr. Abbot; or, in other words, because they voted for Mr. Wright he showed displeasure, and resigned the position of Vice-President and withdrew from the League with the others who went out to "defend themselves," and did so so nearly at the same time that it looked like a preconcerted arrangement, which some of the Abbot party hav since acknowledged previously existed. If Mr. Underwood was strongly opposed to a division of the League, it would seem to many minds that the election of so good, so blameless, and so able a man as Elizur Wright should not hav forced him to withdraw. And if he retired to his room to prepare for the evening lecture, it would hardly seem necessary to resign his position as Vice-President of the League, or to afterwards sign the seceders' protest because Mr. Wright had been elected. That was really the ground of offense—Mr. Abbot had not been elected and Mr. Wright had been.

There is no question but that Mr. Underwood was in sympathy with the Abbot party in thinking that Congress has the authority to "prohibit the circulation of obscenity through the mails." We hav all along believed him sincere in this; but how a man of his clear, logical mind, his thorough love of Liberalism and devotion to liberty, can find any authority for Congress to order a censorship or examination of the mails to judge of its opinions or grade of morality, or how he can be in favor of any such system of espionage being established, which is sure to act with far greater severity and partiality against Freethinkers than other classes, has long been a marvel to us. It has seemed a wonder that any real Liberal could be in favor of anything of the kind.

As to "the introduction of the obscenity question into the Congress," or, to state it less offensively, the question of repeal or reform, Mr. Underwood must well know that the majority could not escape it if they wished to. Mr. Abbot had called for it, and for discussion, and a vote upon the question; and he had done this in the capacity of President of the National Liberal League, and also as a candidate for re-election. The question had to be met, and the majority should not be censured for its introduction. We hav occasion to feel that those who differ from us take more pains to use and pleasure in using the word obscenity as a term of opprobrium in reference to their opponents than there is any necessity for. The defense of obscenity and vileness has been charged upon us again and again. It is utterly false. We are not in favor of obscenity, nor do we wish to defend it. We are in favor of the liberty guaranteed to us by the Constitution, and this we will defend to our latest breath. We want liberty without obscenity, and we believe we can hav it; but if we cannot hav liberty without obscenity, let us hav both, for liberty we cannot dispense with under any circumstances.

We are glad that Mr. Underwood hoped for "the restoration of good feeling," and to "see, ultimately, the two bodies reunited." We indulge the same hope. We still fondly regard him as a member of the original National Liberal League, and hope all the seceders who withdrew without sufficient reason, will see fit to return, not excepting Mr. Abbot.

We repeat, we cannot think we hav misrepresented Mr. Underwood, for we assuredly hav no desire to do so. We hope to maintain the most friendly relations with him, and that we may work harmoniously together in dispelling superstition and disseminating the light of reason and truth.

THE DARWINS.—This very pleasing and instructive story, by Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, the favorite of the Liberal public, was completed in a late number, and will soon be brought out in book form. It will contain over 250 pages, and will be sent by mail at 50 cents, in paper covers, and 75 cents in cloth, bound. Every admirer of the writings of Mrs. Slenker will, of course, wish a copy of "The Darwins," and should send in their orders early. It will be a good book to read and to lend out to those whose eyes are not yet opened to see the truth as it is in nature.

Letter from Mr. Ellis.

8 PORTLAND ST., BOSTON, MASS., NOV. 22, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: On page 755 of your paper of Nov. 23d, you say that I, whom you slur and stigmatize as an "ex-Rev." (as though it were derogatory to a person that he has ceased to be a child), made myself "conspicuous" and "more or less offensive" in the Convention at Syracuse.

I can hardly believe that you wrote it; but it is editorial matter, and of course goes for your opinion. That it is an utterly baseless and false assertion, you know, and I hope you will see the justice of correcting it in your next issue.

Yours only so far as I think you are right,

CHARLES ELLIS.

REPLY.—Possibly we did wrong in making the remarks of which Mr. Ellis complains—for it was ourselves who wrote the article—but we were not sensible of it at the time, if we did do wrong. Our intent was not to "slur," nor "stigmatize." We reckoned Mr. Ellis among the ex-clergymen, and, if we hav been correctly informed, we did him no injustice by so doing. He was once a clergyman. We did not say nor intimate that it was a crime to hav been a clergyman. We mentioned Mr. Ellis among the clergymen and ex-clergymen who had made themselves conspicuous and more or less offensive in Syracuse. Now, Mr. Ellis was one of the less, not the more. All who disapproved of the election of Elizur Wright as President for the coming year, divided the League, and signed a protest against the action of the majority for that reason, made themselves conspicuous and more or less offensive. Mr. Ellis was one of the number, so our statement was not "an utter baseless and false assertion." What he said in a public capacity was not particularly offensive, but the same cannot be said of what he uttered in an undertone while in his seat. He spoke derogatorily of members of the "repeal" party and of the remarks they made and eulogistically of what the Abbot party said. In this way he did make himself more or less offensive. It was not, however, of sufficient magnitude to demand attention. His name was added to the list to make up the count. But we told no falsehood.

The clergyman who made himself more offensive was the Rev. G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee. He openly traduced the majority and accused them of immorality, vileness, and obscenity. "Here," he said, "the ways divide; morality and purity on the one side and indecency and immorality on the other," and more to the same effect, claiming all the virtue for his side and imputing all the vice to ours. He also made this offensive remark, among many others: "I would rather my daughter should be raped in body than raped in mind;" and that was the only indecent remark made by any member of the Congress.

On the same floor, and just before the opening of the meeting on Sunday morning, the Rev. Mr. Gordon expressed himself emphatically in favor of Anthony Comstock, approved of his work and his style of doing it, and maintained that he was a worthy, useful man. He also said that Mr. Heywood had published an obscene pamphlet ("Cupid's Yokes"), and that he deserved to be imprisoned for doing so. We took the occasion to remark to him that the statement he made the night before in the Congress that the Liberals of the West were unanimously opposed to the repeal of the Comstock laws, was untrue, and that we had received numerous letters from many parts of the West in which the writers expressed themselves in the strongest terms as opposed to the Comstock laws and in favor of their repeal. He said in the Northwest it was not so; he had the best opportunities to know the Liberal sentiment, and those who signed the petition did it without knowing its character; and they were opposed to repeal. We dissented from this statement, and told him that in his own city of Milwaukee were men who signed the petition and had induced others to do the same, and that they neither regretted having done so nor were opposed to repeal. He said there were none such among the Liberals there. We asked him if he knew Almond Owen, who had signed it and induced others to. He replied that he did, and that Mr. Owen had acknowledged to him that he regretted having signed the petition, and that he was opposed to the repeal of the Comstock Postal laws. We replied that we did not believe him, and should take the trouble to write to Mr. Owen and ascertain whether what he (Mr. Gordon) had said was true or false. After returning home we wrote to Mr. Owen, inquiring as to the facts, and in due time received the following:

125 BAYVIEW ST., MILWAUKEE, WIS., NOV. 1, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., Dear Sir: Your note of October 28th is before me. In reply I hav to say that I hav never expressed and never felt any regret for having signed the petition for the repeal of the postal law of 1873 or any other year; nor hav I ever heard an expression of regret from anybody on account of having done so.

Mr. Gordon is a gentleman who has done good service in the Liberal cause in this state, and I think he is mistaken in his man; he has doubtless heard such expressions, though I hav not. Those Liberals who are opposed to repeal, I think, are influenced by the fear that repeal will be construed into license. They must all know that the law as it now stands is capable of great abuse and has been used for mean and inquisitorial purposes. In all matters reserved expressly by the Constitution "to the states respectively and to the people" it is better to rely on state law and the power of public opinion.

I inclose a slip from the Milwaukee Sentinel of Tuesday morning, October 29th. It seems you were all very factious at Syracuse; you had a majority faction and a minority faction! Well, you were as bad as the eleven obstinate jurors who would not agree with the twelfth.

Success to Brother Abbot, and all honor to him for the good he has done in the past. May his usefulness be redoubled in the new departure, and the success of the old League show that the progress of truth and right does not depend upon any one man, however eminent his ability.

I shall be content to act with the less "respectable" faction, and ask no better company than Elizur Wright and H. L. Green, to say nothing of others.

Yours respectfully, ALMOND OWEN.

We frankly acknowledge to Mr. Ellis that the reverend gentleman from Milwaukee made himself far more offensive, and a more active lieutenant of Mr. Abbot, than did he (Mr. Ellis), and perhaps we ought to ask pardon of the latter for invoicing the two together; but we shall hav to insist that they co-operated in the same ill-advised work, and that with the others who took the same course they made themselves conspicuous and more or less offensive. We do not intend to back down from the truth.

Shall Slander Triumph?

The editor of The Index after giving what religious papers say in favor of the seceding faction of the Liberal League takes evident pleasure in quoting what the Seymour Times says derogatory of the old League, which is anything but fair and truthful. It charges the League, at the head of which stands that excellent man, Elizur Wright, with having all the vices and indecencies easy to be conceived. It intimates that the members of that body "go about, vandal like, tearing down the bulwarks and safeguards that society has upreared to restrain the vicious and immoral," with being the "champions of vice," "doing away with the marriage relation," making "the commingling of the sexes promiscuous and indiscriminate, abandoning the off-pring to chance," etc., etc. Nothing more false and unjust than these insinuations against the National League could be uttered, and the editor of the Seymour Times ought to know it, and the editor of The Index certainly does know it. He knows there is not a word of truth in it. He knows that the National League is composed of men as pure, as upright as himself, and who would no quicker stoop to do a mean, ignoble action than he would. How wrong then, how base and mean to continually utter these false charges, and quote those who do utter them in the most offensive manner. Were the members of the Liberal League charged with robbery, burglary, arson, and murder, it could be no more false, and no man knows this better than the editor of The Index. Then in the name of all that is honorable, manly, and high-minded why does he continue to write so falsely? Can he hope to promote the interests of the National League of America by so doing?

So far from the National League, vandal like, "tearing down the bulwarks and safeguards that society has upreared," they took the opposite ground, and opposed the tearing down the bulwarks and safeguards of liberty in the Constitution which the people upreared. If any party are in favor of tearing down such bulwarks and safeguards, it is the Comstock-Abbot party of America who seem determined to accomplish that very work.

The editor of The Index knows perfectly well that not a word was said in the National League or has been at any time in advocacy of "promiscuity of the sexes," "breaking down the marriage relation," or any of the rest of it. Then why does he continue to throw out these contemptible insinuations and quote others who hav just truthfulness and honor enough to make them? It is about time that this injustice were stopped. Let them cease to indulge in slander and falsehood, and cultivate truth, fraternity, and honor.

Letter from a Roman Catholic.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav read your paper pretty often, and I like some of your ideas in regard to liberty of thought, etc., but I must warn you that you are doing an immense wrong to humanity by warring as you do with the Christian Church. Now, Mr. Bennett, I would like to ask you a few questions in regard to the Christian Church, particularly the Roman Catholic part, and if you will publicly answer them in your paper you will very much oblige me and many others. First, are you not aware that attached to every Roman Catholic church in this city are a number of practical, not theoretical, charitable organizations, whose members visit the sick, comfort and minister to their wants, console the prisoner, lift the fallen woman from the streets, provide comfortable homes and instruction for hundreds, I may say thousands, of orphans, and in hundreds of cases (as far as they can afford to) giv meals to the starving and the hungry, regardless of creed or country? There are thousands of other good deeds these Christians, both Catholic and Protestant, do, which of course I hav not space or time here to enumerate. Now, Mr. Bennett, you are continually showing up the wrongs which the Christian Church is doing and has done, but you forget to mention the immense and mighty good which it performs. You may answer and say they are paid well for doing these charitable things, etc., but I ask you, Would you or your fellow Infidels do the same amount of good to your fellow-men, or a proportionate amount according to your numbers and people, as the Christian Church has done, either for love or money? My answer is that you would not. As a general rule you will find it to be true that all who scoff at the Christian Church are selfish in themselves and exclusive, looking only to ends of their own, and, in fact, they are loath to assist humanity at large, even if they were well paid for doing so; they hav not got the heart to do it. You Infidels sometimes help one another, but where is the instance where you all combined to help humanity at large, in the hour of dark distress, regardless of creed or color, as the Christian Church has done thousands and thousands of times over again? In conclusion, Mr. Bennett, I would ask you, Would you like to see all those charitable organizations of the Christian Church that do practical good broken up? One would think you would, from the way you talk. But, Mr. Bennett, think before you talk; and I would advise you to attend the services of the Catholic Church often, and your eyes will be opened.

A FRIEND.

REPLY.—We are pleased with the amiable spirit in which our friend writes and propounds his questions. We will try and reply in the same spirit.

1. We cannot agree with our friend that we are doing an immense harm to humanity. Our labors or their effects are not immense in any direction, but so far as they go we think they are a benefit to humanity. We regard all the creeds and religions in the world as man-made and erroneous, and, including the myriads of priests they require, that they hav proved a heavy burden and delusion to the race. Christianity is no exception to this rule, and is made up in toto from the older systems which preceded it, therefore to show this to mankind is a benefit, not a damage.

2. We are aware there are many charitable institutions connected with church organizations, especially the Catholic branch. Many of these are praiseworthy so far as they are conducted from a love of humanity and not to build up a sect or creed or to appease an angry God.

3. We will not deny that Christians hav done much good and are doing much good to-day. The same is true of all existing religions in the world. No religion has been so bad but what it still contained much that was also good. If, however, all the acts of the Christian Church are taken into account, the bad will be found to greatly overbalance the good. The lives it has taken in its wars hav amounted in round numbers to one hundred millions of human beings. Human blood enough was shed by these wars to float all the navies of the world. The persecutions of the Church continued for many centuries, and its victims amounted to many millions, with such an amount of human suffering and torture as never can be estimated. The dungeon, the torture-chamber, the pully, the rack, the scaffold, the stake, and all of their hundreds of appliances and accessories tell the bloody story of what Christianity has been, and is still, far more than orphan asylums, nunneries, and sisters of mercy. These institutions were not original with Christianity, but were borrowed from the Oriental nations which peopled Asia thousands of years before Christianity had an existence, while its inventions of torture and life-taking for opinion's sake were mainly original. Sympathy and kindness are the natural impulses of human nature, and hav always been found where man was improved by civilization and even in his barbarous state; but torturing and killing because the victims do not entertain acceptable theological notions comes from creeds. Christianity has been far more prolific in these than all other systems of religion put together. Perhaps it is not strange. A religion which teaches that God created countless millions of human beings, ninety-nine hundredths of whom are to suffer the never-ending torments of hell for simply acting out the nature which they obtained from their creator, is not calculated to giv birth to sympathy, kindness, and benevolent deeds. These are a spontaneous outgrowth of cultivated human nature, while the torturing and killing for opinion's sake are begotten, nurtured, and intensified by a creed acknowledging a tyrant above the clouds.

4. In the institutions alluded to by our friend, are persistently used the appliances for making proselytes and leading the young minds into the superstitions of the Church. This is always seen in the orphan asylums, homes, hospitals, schools, and Sunday-schools. A constant effort is made to train the child, the youth, and the adult to acknowledge a creed and support the priesthood which inculcates it. One of the inspiring motives in getting up these juvenile institutions is to add to the strength, the wealth, and the power of the Church; and these are increasing with such rapidity as to awaken the liveliest apprehensions from thinking minds. Where it is all to end is the great unsolved problem.

5. We cannot admit that Christians or believers are any more benevolent or kind-hearted than unbelievers, except upon the same principle that white sheep afford more wool than black ones, because there are so many more of them. All other conditions being equal, belief in this creed or that makes little difference with the springs of sympathy and kindness which arise in the human heart.

Unbelievers cannot be truthfully charged with a lack of sympathy and generosity, considering the great disproportion of their numbers. Stephen Girard, the notorious unbeliever, gave munificently for founding a college for poor young men where they could be taught the truths of science without the bias of sectarianism. It must be admitted, however, that the provisions of his will hav been grossly disregarded. Smithson, the wealthy founder of the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, of which the whole nation may be proud, was not a Christian. Cornell, the founder of the university at Ithaca, was a man of Liberal views and acknowledged no creed. The professors in the institution are free from sectarianism. Peter Cooper, still living among us, who made the magnificent bequest to the people—the institute bearing his name, within a stone's throw of where we write, on which is inscribed on the brown stone of which it is constructed, for the passer-by to read, "To SCIENCE AND ART"—is not a believer in creeds, and has been called an Infidel. He has made ample provisions for a free library, a free reading-room, free schools for teaching science and art, but not one room or department for teaching creeds or sectarian doctrines. James Lick, the noted California Infidel gave hundreds of thousands of dollars for the use of science and the promulgation of the truths of nature.

Instances are not wanting where unbelievers hav been munificent in their bequests for charitable purposes according to their means. Marked cases of this kind hav come to our own knowledge in this city and elsewhere. In the donations to the yellow fever sufferers in the South, unbelievers hav not been backward, but hav given freely according to their means. Information of such instances hav come to our knowledge from many localities. The same may be said of those who hav performed the work of mercy in the afflicted cities of New Orleans and Memphis. Unbelievers hav made themselves prominent in devoting their time and strength in succoring the suffering sick. We hav a personal friend in the city of New Orleans—an unbeliever—who, for months, toiled for the comfort of suffering sick by dispensing comforts and attentions to unhappy sufferers. But it is not necessary to enlarge; sympathy, kindness, and love are the products of humanity, while bigotry, intolerance, and persecution are the outgrowth of rival creeds.

6. Civilization develops the noblest qualities of the human heart, and science is the great educator. If we will follow where science leads, gathering up all the truths she imparts, we can well dispense with the narrow bigotry and intolerance which are the plants of superstition and narrow creeds. Liberalism does not dwarf the kindly impulses of the human heart, but cultivates and encourages them.

We would gladly see the good qualities of humanity strengthened and increased, but the dwarfing fetters of creeds we would see destroyed. Humanity works for the good of men and women here on the earth, the creeds struggle for the good of a God above the clouds. The former is far to be preferred.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Fourteenth Letter.

VISIT TO MONMOUTH COUNTY.

ZION HIL, N. J., Nov. 25, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: It bekums my plezant duty to giv yu sum akkount ov our vizit over to Monmouth to se our dawter Sally and her huzband Steven. Wife haz ben anxyus to go over for a good while, and my biznes waz so wel along that I kood spare a week just az wel az not. So, on Tuesday morning, the 12th, Suzan got up at 4 o'klok and prepared brekfast, and before the sun was up wife and I wer whirling awa in the direkshun ov Hard Skrabel, in Monmouth kounty. The wether was fine, and my bays had not dun much for a week, and tha just made that plezure karrej ov ours hum agen. Sally sed we wood not hav gone much faster if we had ben on the kars. I think thare iz more plezure in a man's driving a good teem ov hiz own than eny other riding in the world, espeshally if he haz good rodes. Perhaps yu wood hardly beleev it, but before 4 o'klok in the afternoon we drove up before Steven's store at Hard Skrabel Kros Rodes, and the bays had swet but littel, tho we had driven 50 miles. I don't want to brag, but I do think I hav got the finest teem in this kounty, and I don't wunder that so meny wood like to own it; but I kan't sel my bays unles I need munny much worse than I do now.

Steven and Sally wer expekting us, for Suzan rote a letter 3 days before, saying when we wood start, and Steven sed he kood tel within 2 ours ov the time we wood arrive, and Sally had got a good dinner pritty wel under wa, noing we wood be hungry. We had eeten the littel bite that Suzan put up for us, but the long ride and the kleer, kool air gave us a fine appetite, and the chicken pot pie which Sally had prepared for us in her best stile waz dispatched with littel seremony. My wife, yu must no, iz wun ov the finest kooks in New Jersey, and she taut all her girls the same art, and thare iz not wun ov them but what kan get up a meal in excellent stile. And this I konsider wun ov the finest akkomplishments that a yung woman kan akwire. When the farmer haz razed good grane and vegetabels, and grown good kattel, sheep, and hogs, hiz wife aut to be able to serve it up in an akseptable, healthy, palateabel manner. It seems like a sin to me to se good vittels spoilt by bad kooking, and I offen sa that girls should all lern to be good kooks in preferense to all other akkomplishments. I don't no ov enything that makes home plezanter and life happier than to hav a suitabel supply ov helthy eatabels on hand, and then to hav them well kooked. To set dewn to a tabel with soggy bred, haf baked, the meet haf kooked, or burnt to a krisp, the koffee thick and muddy, the pi raw, and doey on the bottom, with uther things in proporshun, iz a cheerless sort ov life, and it wood be hard for me to sa grase over such a meal with a good konshunse. I hav sumtimes, when I hav had okkashun to eat at sum ov our nabers and friends, ben struck with the grate differense thare iz in wimmen in getting up vittels, and I hav more than wunse blest my Sally with all my hart for her kooking abilitys when I hav had the misfortune to eat ov ether wimmen's kooking. In my inner sole I hav ejakulated mentally, "O, Sally, yu ma be hasty sumtimes in yure remarks; yu ma hav an ungovernd tung; yu ma giv me down the banks for sum ov my fansyd defekts; yu ma not hav all the grases and perfektshuns that a man mite dreem of, but bless yure deer hart, yu do not spoil God's blessings and turn them into kurses by bad kooking. Tho yu ma hav a few faults, I prize yu for yure good kwalitys, and for none more than by dispensing joy in yure own household by palateable, first-klass kooking." I don't want to be understood that I think more ov my belly than anything else, but I do think it iz a grate rong to spoil good food by mizerabel kooking, az thouzands are konstantly doing, and never lern eny better. Sum wimmen are in the habit ov kounting themselves gook wives and good Kristyans, but I onestly think them mistaken in both partiklars; if tha are poor kooks, I don't beleev tha are eether good wives nor good members ov sosiety. In my opinyun a woman iz not properly fitted to pla her part in the affares ov life hoo duz not no how to get up the food we eat in a proper, presentabel, helthful style. A botch ov a kook iz the wurst ov all botches.

Our dawter waz pleezed kleer up to her eyes to se us, and it seemd a perfekt plezure to her to get the best for us that she had in the house. It waz the first time I had seen her since her littel son Steven, Jr. waz born. He iz now a littel over 3 munths old, and I must sa he iz a brite, pretty baby. I think the father iz the proudest man over that littel bit ov humanity that I ever saw. Yu wood think, to se him go on, that he thawt he had performd the gratest wunder that waz ever herd ov. If yu kood se him take that baby and toss it and karess it, and heer him tawk baby tawk to it yo wood think he thawt it the only baby in the wurld. The muther thinks just az much ov the littel thing as Steven duz. Yu kan see it in evry word and akshun, and with evry look ov her eyes; but she iz so kwiet and speeks so lo that the kontrast between her and Steven iz vary grate.

I tell yu we had a reel good vizit with our dawter and son-in-law. We stayd a week, and the time passd off very plezantly. We made the time a day or two longer than we intended, and when I got home I thawt it waz too late to rite yu my kustomary weekly letter for THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I new wel enuf that yure reeders wood exkuze it and perhaps be glad ov the chanse.

Wun da the 2 Sallys and myself—mother and dawter—rode out to se the kuntry round about Hard Skrabel, and I found I didn't like Monmouth as wel as old Huntingdon, and I feel satisfied to remain whare we are. I probably shal not emigrate to any other part ov the kuntry, but lay my bones awa in the church yard at Zion Hil. I hav got so wonted to theze hils and holers that I don't want to leev them for meny daze at a time until I leev them for good and all, and go to okkupy the manshun which I hope iz prepard for me in the New Jerusalem abov the klouds. I truly hope that after all my efforts to leed a good life and do my duty so far az I no it, that it wil not be my fate to hav to take the uther rode to the rejuns ov darkness and terror. I don't like to think abowt that dark rode, and wish with all my hart that it had never been devized. I hav more than wunse thawt if I had been God Almighty I wood not hav had eny devil or eny hel to trubel myself or eny of my kreetyures. It haz alwaze seemd to me that that part ov kreashun waz redundant and had far better ben omitted. Sumtimes I hav thawt it hard to beleev, but the preechers and the good book say it iz so, and all we hav to do iz to beleev it and do our best to gard aganst it, and be vary kareful not to take that downward rode.

Steven and I went wun da round the naborhood whare he livs, kalling on several ov the farmers, looking at thare stock, and so forth. I didn't see enything that suited me kwite az wel az I kan sho about Zion Hil. I saw sum vary good horses, but not a teem that I wood begin to trade my bays for. In kows and sheep we also kan beet them. But I am afrade yu wil set me down for a big brag if I am not kareful. I stade considerabel ov the time with Steven in the store, and tho his trade is not extensiv, I had an opportunity to see his nabers az tha kum in to buy goods and get thare letters and nusepapers, and when more than wun wanted attenshun, I helped him on sum things. Yu aut to hav seen me mesuring off kaliko, waing salt, and mezuring molases and kerosene. Perhaps yu wood think I had ben a merchant all my life. I kood see that Steven and hiz wife too wer a littel proud of me, and wer pretty fond ov introdusing me to thare akwantanses, and I notisd, too, that tha took sum panes to giv my titel of deeken, tho Steven did not seem to valu it so much az Sally did. I ges the grase of Kriste duz more for a beleever than wun hoo has no hope in that excellent charakter.

We all went to church on Sunday morning with the Methodists, hoo hav a meeting-house about a mile and a haf from Steven's store. It iz about six miles to whare the Baptists hav a church, and we thawt we wood take the wun neerest by and make it do, if it waz not just the wun we wood prefer. We herd a pretty good sermon on the subjekt ov the sekond birth. The minister showd kleer enuff that unles we are born again we kannot be saved. I thawt ov yu, Mr. Editor, when I waz listening to that diskorse, and wishd yu kood heer it, too, and beleev it. I do wish yu kood feel the importanse ov being born again, and wood try and hav a part in that sekond birth. It iz a terribel thawt that yu must take that downwurd rode for the want ov it.

The minister we herd waz Mr. Parmaly, and he iz a new man that haz just kommensed thare, and tha hardly no whether tha shall keep him or not. The man that tha had thare before him waz Mr. Turner, and he turned most too meny wayz to suit them. He had a nice wife and 3 yung children, but she did not seem to be enuf for hiz tastes. He waz too fond ov wandering in by and forbidden paths. Thare waz a prominent sister in the church by the name ov Mrs. Bowditch, who iz a gras widow, and livd in a littel kottej by herself. She iz very pius when full ov grase, and exhorts like a preecher, but when grase iz out, the Evil Wun takes advantej ov her. She iz sed to be kwite blooming and entising in her way, and more than wun good Kristyan haz ben led astra by her allurements. Preecher Turner waz her last konkwest, and tha sa he got badly struk after her. He waz offen at her house after dark when he aut to hav ben home with his own family, and several times tha wer seen riding out together, and a munth ago tha made a trip to yure city and wer gone 4 days. A man from the naborhood hoo new them, watchd them without being seen, and found that tha put up at the St. Charles Hotel, and passd themselvs off az man and wife. Tha registered thare names az D. D. Hunter and wife, but he did not hav to hunt very long.

This was a little too much even for the Methodists, and tha husled him off in a hurry. Sum ov the leeding men ov the church told him he must get out at wunse, or tha wood prosekute him at the kommon law. So he went, and the gras wido, to. The poor wife waz neglekted, and the church had to make up a purse to send her to her father's in Pensilvania. Mr. Turner turned hiz fase westward, with the gras widow with him, and it iz thawt he wil find work in sum other part of the vinyard, where it iz to be hoped he wil exersize more self-denial. Sinse he left, tha hav found out that he waz also pritty thik with 3 other sisters ov hiz church, 2 ov them marred and wun a yung girl. Tha hav proof pozitiv that he kommitted adultery with all ov them. But, Mr. Editur, I don't like to tawk about theze things. I am sorry human nacher iz so week, and that that protekshun which the relijun ov Jezus aut to afford so often falls short ov what it shood do for poor week mortals. I stil pra, with Paul, that the grase ov God ma more abound, and that we ma all lern to praktis more self-denial and pra more fervently.

I wil not detane yure reeders longer this time, but I wil rekur to this subjekt or sum other in my next.

I am fathefully yours, JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Communications.

A Review of the Situation by one of the Seceders.

MY DEAR BENNETT: From the tone of your last editorial (Nov. 16), and from the spirit exhibited by many of your correspondents since the unfortunate split in our Convention at Syracuse, it becomes painfully evident to my mind that both factions do not understand each other, or else we are all a silly lot of childish people, hardly fit to attend any convention. At present I am not willing to accept the latter charge, hence this attempted review of the situation.

From a personal acquaintance with a large number of the delegates attending said Convention, I can fearlessly testify that a great many honest, noble, moral men and women may be found in both branches of the split, and if there were any very bad or immoral people present, their numbers were too insignificant to constitute a faction. The idea that one party has all the moral principles of the Convention upon their side while the other faction has all the immorality is simply ridiculous. No one believes it, and no one should claim it except for political purposes. The construction of "a man of straw" is an old game played by politicians the world over, the imaginary man can be so easily destroyed, you know. Political writers and speakers often tell us a great many strange things, but the good sense of the people will not accept that which appears to them unreasonable, neither will they ever believe that morality is confined to any particular party, faction, or creed.

First, let us be honest enough to admit that both branches of the League are sincere, both are honest, and both parties claim to build or base their belief upon the solid foundation rock of moral principle. To say that "two-fifths of the Convention withdrew and organized a counter movement solely because that grand, good man Elizur Wright was elected President," it seems to me is about as unjust as it would be to claim that Mr. Abbot was thrown overboard solely because he favored morality; both statements are too strong, and neither of them will hav a tendency to heal up existing difficulties. The election of Hon. Elizur Wright was, in my opinion, the result of the split and not the cause of it. The Convention was divided just about as effectually long before it assembled as it was after two days' session; had there not been two irreconcilable factions the choice of a president would not hav divided the League.

Unfortunately the war—which seems to me useless—began a long time ago between two leading editors of two Freethought newspapers, The Index and THE TRUTH SEEKER. Who knocked off the first chip, or which editor was the most in fault we will not discuss at the present writing, suffice it to say they disagreed, and by so doing naturally drew into their troubles a large number of Liberals who in the beginning had no heart in the controversy, and who ought to have had the good sense to keep out of it altogether.

A great many of our best people who take The Index naturally coincided with the editor's views upon the Comstock laws, while perhaps a decided majority of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER deeply sympathized with Bennett in his persecution and affliction.

Among those who were fortunate enough to see both papers and to read both sides of the question were many who found themselves in sympathy with both editors, deeply deploring, however, the incessant and apparently useless warfare, which it was plain would eventually create a split in the Liberal ranks from one end of the Union to the other.

At the Watkins Convention it was painfully evident to any keen observer that an effort was already on foot to change the administration or capture, as it is termed, the National Liberal League at the next convention. The friends of the League soon began to organize clubs in order to send delegates so as to protect it (as the writer understands) from the introduction or adoption of any new measures tending to weaken it or divert it from its original object. The friends of the repeal movement, if I am correctly informed, organized a large number of new clubs with the avowed intention of commiting the National Liberal League to the repeal movement and to get rid of Abbot.

A large number of conservative Liberals confidently believed until the Convention had assembled that the question upon which we were divided might be kept out entirely. Mr. H. L. Green of Salamanca wrote me quite a number of letters to that effect, saying, among other good things, "that we could not afford to divide our strength upon this question." In my replies I fully agreed with him, saying that these two editors were too valuable to the cause to be at loggerheads, and that the Convention should take no unwarranted action which would give one a triumph over the other. I said further to Mr. Green, and I still say, I think Bennett has been unjustly arrested, and, in my opinion, there is a motive back of the apparent one in Comstock's conduct. I do not say that he has any share in the lawyers' fees, but I do know that little lawyers may be found in almost every town who are willing to "whack" their costs with a client. If I were to express a private opinion on Comstock and that particular law which sustains him, I assure you it would not be very complimentary to either. Still, I doubt the propriety of committing the National Liberal League to any such outside matter. I have not a word of fault to find personally with those who are suffering from the effect of the odious Comstock laws for desiring the repeal of the same, but I did think, and I still think it very impolitic to try and commit the National Liberal League to so unpopular a subject, particularly when so large a number of the Liberals are bitterly opposed to the movement.

No one denies Mr. Bennett's right to petition Congress for the repeal of the Comstock laws. He has already 70,000 good, honest names to said petition, which may be increased to 700,000, and no truly liberal person will complain. If I were the editor of a Liberal newspaper I would turn my attention towards the repeal of other odious laws.

The Civil Damage act, a state law, in my opinion, is infinitely more dangerous to our liberties than any United States law ever passed. I would sustain the Resumption act with all the power of my pen, believing as I do that the welfare of the whole people demands it. Yet it would be very unwise to force a hard money plank upon the National Liberal League at the present time, thereby driving away at least one half its members.

At a meeting of the State Freethinkers' Association held at the parlors of the Syracuse House on the evening preceding the Convention, almost the unanimous expression was in favor of smothering the obscene question at once. In fact no one opposed such action until a lady from this place, who publicly boasts that she fears nothing so much as respectability, threw a fire brand into the magazine, declaring open war against the cowards who opposed the repeal. If all people who prefer walking around filth to wading through it are to be branded as cowards, then we may call by that name at least hundreds of the most intelligent Liberal citizens of Syracuse who would hav crowded the galleries of Wieting Opera House to overflowing had any other subject been under discussion than the obscene question.

It was the intemperate action of just such people as the lady referred to on both sides who made a compromise between the two factions impossible.

The first few votes upon the order of business as arranged by the President developed the fact that there were two distinct factions and that those who had fancied they could remain "on the fence" would soon be obliged to abandon such position. Persons favoring repeal were freely charged by the opposite party with favoring the circulation of obscene literature, while those who differed with the repealers in opinion regarding the Comstock laws, as well as all those who doubted the propriety of bringing this subject into the Conven ion, were again and again charged with being Comstock's allies, and with approving all of his devilish acts.

At last after all the evil that could be done had been accomplished those finding themselves in the majority decided to lay the obscene question over for one year. It was freely charged by quite a number of influential delegates that this course was adopted for the purpose of holding the Convention together long enough to decapitate the President, thereby preparing the way to commit the whole League to the repeal movement at the next annual Convention. How true these charges were I will not attempt to say, but subsequent events certainly pointed in that direction.

The obscene question which had so far kept the galleries of the Opera House nearly empty, had not been disposed of, but was simply covered up, leaving its stain upon the Convention about as indelibly stamped as to have passed a resolution favoring repeal. Up to this time I for one was in no way committed to Mr. Abbot for the next Presidency, on the contrary I had said to Mr. Green and others that I would not object to a new President, if it was thought advisable, provided the original aim and objects of the League would not be diverted by such action.

When, however, it was claimed in the committee room that Mr. Abbot should be dropped because he was on the wrong side of the obscene question, I thought it high time to inquire before throwing overboard a man who had organized the League and served it faithfully for three years, if there were no other charges. To the surprise of many of us no serious charges were made against Mr. Abbot. We stood in the committee room twelve to twelve, with Mr. H. P. Stark, one of Abbot's friends absent. The question was carried back to the Convention, when by a strict party vote the repealers who had a majority all through voted Mr. Abbot out of office. The Convention which had been split from the beginning of the session, now began to separate just as hundreds of thinking people who had watched the quarrel for months predicted it would separate the moment a new subject was introduced which did not properly belong to the Convention.

It was the culmination of an unfortunate, bitter, personal controversy between two good men who simply differed in opinion. Had the Liberals all through the land taken the early advice of such peacemakers as Mr. H. L Green, who advised every Freethinker to strictly adhere to the original principles of the League, we should all of us have been together to-day—the Spiritualist and the Materialist, the hard money men and the greenback advocates, the Jew and the Infidel, all working in harmony side by side for the complete secularization of this Government.

Syracuse, Nov. 20, 1878. JOHN W. TRUESDELL.

REMARKS.—We must accord to friend Truesdell a far larger share of fairness than has been evinced by many with whom he is associated in the disruption of the Liberal League. He admits in a manly way, which it would be well for others to pattern after, that there was no more immorality in one division of the League than the other; that one branch is no more in favor of obscenity than the other. Had this truthful course been pursued by his brethren and sisters who considered themselves more moral, virtuous, and pure than their opponents, their attitude would be much better than it is to-day. Too much censure can hardly be directed to those who hav persistently used detraction and slander and falsely charged those who did not accept their views with immorality, vileness, and indecency. There are few greater wrongs than to falsely impute improper motives and conduct to others. A person's reputation can hardly be estimated by dollars and cents. Detraction and misrepresentation hav seemed to be the principal arguments of the Abbot side, and these they hav applied with a zeal worthy a better cause. To us it seems that the repealers hav not been as culpable in making accusations against the modifiers as vice versa. Very little was said by the majority in the Congress of an uncomplimentary character of the minority. No dishonorable motives or conduct were imputed to them. Their prejudices were duly considered, and much was yielded to them in not pressing the vote on the question of repeal. It was felt that the question would be better understood on all hands in another year, with the consequent ability to vote intelligently. This certainly was a concession to the minority that was not duly appreciated. The majority was fully aware that they had the numbers to pass the repeal resolution, but to avoid a rupture they forbore to press it to a vote. This should hav produced more conciliation than it did. But from statements that hav been made by prominent persons in the minority that it was decided, before the Congress even assembled, that the split should take place under certain circumstances, and when Mr. Wright was elected in place of Mr. Abbot, they seemed to think the cause to bolt quite sufficient, and they immediately acted upon it. If it was not because Mr. Wright was elected that they seceded and that the bolt was made, it is difficult to tell what it was. It is not worth while to impute it to anything but the true cause. No sooner was the election of Mr. Wright announced than the movement towards secession began to show itself. This was all the provocation that was necessary to carry out the course that had been decided upon.

The purposes of the two factions differed widely. The majority repeatedly asserted that they would abide by the decision of the Congress, let it be what it might, and that they had no desire for a rupture, while the minority made the threat that they would bolt if the repeal resolution was passed, and when that was dropped they only required the election of Mr. Wright, instead of Mr. Abbot, to determine them to carry out their purpose. The vital question in this matter is, Was the election of Mr. Wright or the non-election of Mr. Abbot sufficient to justify the disruption of the League? Had not the majority a full and perfect right to vote for the man they preferred? Is not their selection a most excellent one? Is there a man in the entire country abler, truer, or more deserving of the honor? Was it such a sin to prefer this man to one who had shown himself narrow, unfair, untruthful, lacking in moral courage, and dictatorial, that the League should be rent in twain for exercising that preference? Was it ever one of the written or unwritten laws of the League that Mr. Abbot must be its permanent President, and that every member must vote for him under all circumstances? Is the League of America established on that basis? If in two years more one-half of its members should become justly dissatisfied with Mr. Abbot as a President, and should have the temerity to vote for some other good man, would it be sufficient grounds for another division of its members and the establishment of a third National League for Mr. Abbot's benefit? If that course is the quintessence of Liberalism, many persons hav a long lesson to learn.

The facts in the case are about these: Many of the seceders at Syracuse acted as they did, not because they thought Mr. Abbot the only man in the country who could properly fill the office of President, nor because they regarded the position of the majority essentially wrong, but because a stigma had been unjustly cast upon the portion who were totally against the Comstock laws, and they felt that on account of their position in society and the necessity of maintaining the appearance of respectability, and because some of them had not the moral courage to stand with those only defending the principles of American liberty, something needs be done to advertise themselves as advocates of morality and respectability.

So far as regards the insinuation that the majority were responsible for the introduction of the question of repeal or modification into the League, and the consequent thin condition of the galleries, it is unjust. The majority were not responsible for it. Mr. Abbot, in his call of the Congress made it imperative that the questions should be discussed, and it was hardly possible to avoid it. He having called for the discussion, it hardly becomes his friends to denounce their opponents for it. The difference had a positive existence and it had to appear.

So far as the organization of new Leagues is concerned, and the sending of new delegates, it was pretty actively worked upon both sides. Each got up new Leagues for the express purpose of increasing their representation in the Congress. This was done in Syracuse as well as elsewhere. The first League organized in Syracuse, of which Mr. Truesdell is President and Mrs. Truesdell is Secretary, is distinctively an Abbot League, and it was organized on that basis. Every member was for Abbot and every delegate stuck to him, remaining while he remained, and bolting when he bolted. Later an anti-Abbot League was organized in Syracuse, but no one can deny it equal rights with the Abbot League. The same elsewhere; Abbot Leagues were organized, and also anti-Abbot. If one side excelled the other, it proves that the public sentiment was most in their favor, or that they worked the hardest. Both sides exercised their legitimate rights only.

As regards the origin of the contention in the National League, it was not wholly of a personal character, but a deep principle of liberty was involved, which, though sufficiently discussed already, may be alluded to again. The editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER sought no personal quarrel with The Index, but uniformly treated him courteously until bitterly and unjustly attacked.

The Comstock Postal Law of 1873 is one of the most designing, dangerous, and unwarranted attacks upon the very principles of American liberty, as guaranteed by the Constitution, that was ever made in this country. It was devised by the Young Men's Christian Association of this city; its passage was procured by the personal efforts made by its agent; its object was to increase the facility with which independent and unorthodox minds in the domain of theology, medicine, and physiology could be crushed, sent to prison, and their work destroyed. It was the intent of this law to crush Liberalism and Freethought, and it was no part of the duty of Liberals to shout for it or sustain it. Some of the cases prosecuted by the author of this law and under it are still remembered. Mrs. Woodhull and her sister were arrested and thrown into prison, their paper stopped, and their business ruined because they published the Brooklyn scandal, but with far less minuteness and particularity than all the daily papers of this city and hundreds over the country afterwards gave. Geo. Francis Train was imprisoned six months for publishing passages from the Bible. John A. Lant was arrested for publishing his Toledo Sun, and for sending it through the mails he was sentenced to prison at hard labor for eighteen months, and a heavy fine. His paper was suppressed and his business entirely broken up. This was not because his paper was immoral or calculated to do any person harm, but because it was radical and offensively opposed to the prevailing system of religion.

It will be remembered that Dr. E. C. Abbey of Buffalo, a gentleman and medical graduate of ability, was arrested and subjected to an expensive prosecution, was found guilty and fined for publishing and mailing his scientific medical work, which has been pronounced by competent judges in every way a valuable and unexceptionable work. But it was not accepted by the regular school, and its author was a tabooed man, much as though he had been a dissenter from the presented faith of orthodoxy. The law bears as heavily upon the independent writers in medicine as in theology. We hav huge monopolies in medical colleges, and rings in theological colleges, and they are determined to break down innovation and opposition. The Comstock laws were devised and enacted to aid in this oppressive work. It is no part of the duty of Liberals to shout themselves hoarse to sustain such laws.

The case of Dr. E. B. Foote is still fresh in the memory. His "Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense" is in hundreds of thousands of families, by whom he is fondly regarded as a warm friend to the human race. His writings impart valuable and perfectly legitimate information to the people; but the colleges and schools did not like him. He gave too much information to the people. He did not work by their direction and approval. He must be suppressed. Comstock "went" for him, secured his arrest, had him subjected to an expensive trial, which cost over $5,000, including a fine, and he escaped prison by the great exertions of his warm personal friends. His business has suffered in consequence to the extent of more than $25,000, and for this Comstock and his laws are to be thanked.

A large share of Comstock's victims must be passed unmentioned. There are hundreds of them, in all, where persons hav been sent to prison, to ruin, destruction, and death, by the intrigue, subterfuge, and cruel duplicity of the author and executor of the postal laws of 1873. It is no part of the duty of Liberals to defend them.

Mr. Heywood's case is a cruel one. For publishing and mailing his little work on marriage and the social question, in which he said nothing but what he had a right to say as an American citizen, and nothing but what he honestly believed, he has been confined in company with criminals of the meanest character. If his book is in some respects different from what the tastes of some people would indicate, it was not written with a bad motive, and contains nothing to injure any one. But he is now serving out his term of two years' imprisonment at hard labor, and his wife and children are left to get along in their want the best way they can. In this instance the vital principles of American liberty are grossly outraged. It is not the duty of Liberals to uphold such persecutions.

When the editor of this paper, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the National Liberal League, a few days after the assembling of the Congress in Rochester, was arrested on a charge of obscenity, it was not because he had said aught opposed to morality or decency, but because he made vigorous and persistent attacks upon the prevailing system of theology, which he regards as false. The object in arresting him was to throw him out of business, to crush his paper, stop his publications, and destroy his business. With the precedents staring him in the face, with the statement on the part of Comstock that the arrest was made upon the suggestion and advice of the legal counsel of his society, the prospect of a term in prison was, to say the least, promising; and had not Col. R. G. Ingersoll interested himself in the case and called upon influential men in the Government, who advised that the case be withdrawn, there is little doubt that a conviction would hav been obtained, and a term in prison the result. The U. S. District Attorney informed the accused that the Grand Jury had found an indictment against him, and that he entertained no doubt that a conviction could easily be secured if the trial went on. The conviction would hav been under the charge of obscenity, when the offense was really heresy or blasphemy, and not obscenity at all. When all this loomed up before the vision of the editor and many lovers of true liberty, they felt appalled at the situation, and deemed it wise and necessary that something should be done to stay the tide of Christian intolerance and injustice which was bearing down upon them.

If THE TRUTH SEEKER was suppressed, the old Investigator would perhaps come next, after which the cultured Index, for its opposition to God in the Constitution, might be the next victim. The Comstock laws were regarded as a great wrong, which crushed out the liberties our fathers fought for, and which are guaranteed to us by the Constitution, and it was felt that if they were allowed to become the rule, free thought, free speech, and a free press would be unknown in our country. The situation was alarming to the watchful sentinels of liberty, and the necessity was realized of doing something to stay the aggressor. It was deemed proper to get up a petition to Congress asking for the repeal or modification of the objectionable laws, and blanks were sent out to all parts of the country for signatures. It is estimated that 70,000 honest, earnest men and women signed them, and in good faith.

What was the duty of every true Liberal in the country? It was to co-operate in this earnest movement and to unitedly do all that could be done to oppose the effort that was made by their Christian opponents to crush free speech and a free press. It was no time for tories or traitors to interpose their hands to hold back this Liberal movement. What was the course of the President of the National Liberal League and the editor of The Index on this occasion? He published a long article praising and defending Anthony Comstock and his modes of working. He denounced the petition and the man he thought was the author of it; he accused his brother editor and his brother National Leaguer with forgery, and went to considerable trouble to obtain damaging charges to publish against the brother editor who was in the toils of the enemy; he denounced the signers of the petition as dupes and ignoramuses who were being decoyed into a trap, and said all were defenders of obscenity and immorality. It has been said that jealousy had something to do in this action of the President of the League; but whether that is so or not, it certainly was not the spirit of fraternity or Liberalism. Hardly another man in the whole country would hav taken the same course under the circumstances. It is very sure Elizur Wright would not hav acquitted himself in that way. Had this good man at that time been at the head of the Liberal League, that organization would not hav been placed in antagonism to the effort of the 70,000 petitioners. The object of that petition would hardly hav been defeated. The Liberals would hav stood shoulder to shoulder in opposing the power that oppressed them, and we would to-day hav a united League, and would present a united front to our common enemies.

It is very certain Mr. Wright would not, for twelve months, hav denounced a brother in the cause as being a defender of impurity and vice when it was not true, and it is not strange that a majority of the Leagues should prefer him as their leader and standard bearer. He has for a long term of years proved himself faithful to the highest principles of national and personal liberty. He is no moral coward, and will, under no circumstances, truckle to the forces of bigotry and intolerance. He is not afraid to announce himself in favor of what is true and right, though it may be unpopular. He is no time-server nor trimmer; he does not value respectability higher than liberty or manly duty. It surely seems that a body of men and women should not be aspersed for voting for such a noble man. Mr. Abbot was not turned out of the office; his second term had expired, and a majority of the delegates, in comparing the records and characteristics of the two men, preferred to cast their suffrages for Mr. Wright. It was not a proper ground for offense, and should not hav broken up the League.

A wrong has been perpetrated all along in calling the opponents of the Comstock unconstitutional law obscenists, and insisting that the question is one of the free circulation of obscenity. It is not a question of obscenity, but one of liberty. It is not whether we shall be allowed to disseminate obscenity, but shall our liberties be suppressed? We must insist that the true issue is not in always being misrepresented. We are not for obscenity, but for LIBERTY. But we will not sacrifice the most vital principles of human rights from the fear that somebody may say we are in favor of obscenity. That term does not alarm us so much that because it is hurled at us we will surrender our dearest rights and sneak over to the camp of the enemy.

Letters from Friends.

BOSTON, MASS., July 20, 1878.

To the Editor of The Index: Since the arrest and imprisonment of Ezra H. Heywood, there has been a quiver among the quills as to what shall be tolerated and what suppressed by law. The proposition to suppress is made not only as to the mails, but also as to public gatherings. As one of the plebians, allow me to assert that, in the lewd, lascivious, and indecent society from Beacon to North streets, from Commonwealth Avenue to the South Cove, it seems a cruel waste of time to argue as to what may or may not be said in public meetings and gatherings. As the home, so is the state. It is the intent of the spirit that leaves an imprint for good or for evil; and as no reform ever looks to the "learned" as its only agents of progress, so need not the "cultivated" demand that the "vulgar" shall hav no hearing, and fortify its assertions by municipal and legislative acts.

The Free Religionists may gather their skirts about them, the "cultured" walk upon stilts, and only know the poor and oppressed as the "vulgar" and the "rabble," but we will be heard. Nature, by some consummate act, may giv us a master tongue; she will also giv from the cradle of suffering and gaunt despair untutored tongues; and if you do not catch the spirit of the soul in bonds (which knows no double meaning), you, sir, are the "indecent" fellow of the crowd.

As Luther (with a face of not virgin purity) made it possible for you, editor of The Index, to impeach Christianity, so may these unlettered agents plow so deep as to turn into the sunlight the flimsy morality that is covered by smooth sayings and gracious movements, and make it possible for some pen, inspired, to impeach the morality of society.

They shall be heard—the unlettered, untutored, crude, vulgar! All that has made us what we are will be brought to the front, openly, to the bar of reason, into the court of conscience; and there, on that altar of one common interest—the sovereignty and purity of the individual—we lay the burden of our experiences. The cove and the college will meet, and the grievances of the one will be the humiliation of the other.

Will you bring fagots to the already kindling fires for the martyrs, whose crime is the happiness of a common people which they freely love to serve? JOSEPHINE S. TILTON.

D. M. BENNETT: The inclosed letter may interest the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER as an incident that will be repeated as the struggle betwcen science and the Church, waxes warm. J. S. T.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y,, Oct. 16, 1878.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I hav been away visiting in the regions round about, so hav not found time nor opportunity to write you sooner. I do not remember what I did write about father's action as trustee of school, exactly, but will giv a statement and you can then take your choice of communications, if this does not come too late. At least one-half of our school district, No. 5, Kirkwood, N. Y. (if locality is desired), are opposed to furnishing house, fuel, etc., for religious meetings held in the schoolhouse.

Last autumn Calvin Randall was elected trustee after stating publicly (in the school meeting) that if he were elected trustee he should close the doors to all forms of religious meetings, and devote the house strictly to education. He was elected regardless of this, locked the house as he had said, which was broken open on a following Sunday by one E. O. Everts, a leading Methodist of the district. The year preceeding these incidents, this man—E. O. Everts—had killed and sold the flesh for food of two sick hogs, (knowing them to be sick, and believing they would die as he said), to which said C. Randall strongly objected to the Board of Health, but took no legal action in the matter, and it was hushed up. This is to explain the animus of the man E. O. Everts in his subsequent action, and why he felt himself aggrieved by said C. Randall. Before the time of the locking of the door of said schoolhouse and its being broke open, papers were served upon the trustee to compel him to open its doors to their religious meetings, which did not hav the desired effect, said trustee bringing action against three parties for breaking the door, but which suit being brought before a county magistrate, did not result according to law, but sustained the cause of religion (?) Directly after the close of the school term, March, 1878, one night the schoolhouse burned to the ground, and the next week said C. Randall, trustee, was arrested as instigator of the deed, a nephew as the incendiary, simply because he had happened to pass the house the evening before the fire.

They were taken before a prejudiced country magistrate, who held them to bail for appearance at court, upon no point of law, as he admitted. The name of this magistrate—Ruff Finch—should hav had its natural termination, Ruff-ian. The case came before the Grand Jury Sept. 9, '78, in the city of Binghamton. No bill was found, the evidence of E. O. Everts (first complainant) showing to the jury that he himself was the guilty party. Added to this, the statement (made to nearly a dozen individuals) of one Fred Mayhew, a boy of about seventeen years, goes to show the same to hav been true. The end is not yet. "The race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong."

I hav given you this, I fear, disjointed and ill-written statement, which I hav written in haste, to use according to your judgment. It is literally true in every particular, and you can affix my name in full, if you wish to, to all of it. We hope now that good will grow out of all this; that we shall hav a free school building, not united to any religious organization.

Hoping Comstock has not and will not trouble you further, and asking to hear from you soon, I sign myself,

Your true friend, L. R. CHASE.

PRAIRIE CITY, OR., Oct. 29, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: You are well aware the people of eastern Oregon the past summer hav been reaping the bitter fruits resulting from an Indian policy wrong in theory and dishonestly executed. No description that I could giv would more than faintly portray the intense excitement and anxiety that prevailed among the citizens of this portion of the state when they were in an almost defenseless condition and momentarily expecting an attack from the infuriated demons. The danger is past for the present, and you will doubtless be gratified to learn that instead of dangling as a trophy of valor at the belt of some noble (?) Pinte or Bannock, our scalps yet remain in our possession. We are not greatly indebted, however, to "Lo's" kindness of heart for the privilege of wearing them yet a little longer, but rather to the failure of their plans in getting other tribes to join them, and the early death of some of their leaders.

At the commencement of his march, Gen. Howard, who is armed both with the sword and cross, offered a fervent prayer, imploring the great "I Am" to soften the heart of these children of the forest, and turn them from the evil of their ways. But "Jah" was at that time canvassing the Atlantic states, with the view of having his name and authority recognized in the Constitution, or he might hav been with St. Anthony in Greene street in assisting him in searching for naked obscenity. At any rate, for reasons best known to himself, there was no response, and the "noble red men" continued their work of death and destruction until a sufficient number of troops arrived on the scene to render the game they were playing extremely hazardous; they then, after secreting the principal portion of their breech-loading guns (for future reference) came to the conclusion "discretion was the better part of valor," and submitted to return to their reservation, to be supplied by the government with rations until such times as they were again prepared to go on the war path.

If this state of affairs continues, the time is not far distant when the people of eastern Oregon will conclude that "forbearance ceases to be a virtue," and when that conclusion prevails these periodical Indian outbreaks will only be known as matters of past history.

I was surprised to hear of your arrest at Watkins. It is certainly one of the most shameful outrages ever perpetrated in our country. My surprise was even greater to learn you had a subscriber on your list who would wound the feelings of a worthy brother (already overburdened with cares) by cruelly threatening to withdraw his support merely because you had the misfortune to off nd the minions of bigotry while exercising a privilege guaranteed to every American freeman. That threat surely must hav been hasty and inconsiderate, for certainly no one who has read THE TRUTH SEEKER since its first advent could censure its editor for "getting into scrapes" while pursuing an honest and upright course. However, should Mr. Van B. "haul off" without any more just cause than getting into that "scrape" at Watkins, I hope ten will see the necessity of coming to the rescue. I, for one, will take an extra copy whenever he "hauls off" for such reasons.

If the good and pious conservatives of morals (Judge Hurd, Rev. Waldo, and the jury who indicted you at Watkins) hav not been "vitiated" and "corrupted" by a perusal of that "obscene pamphlet" called "Cupid's Yokes," you can send two copies to this office, one to E. L. Sandford and the other to myself.

I send you money order to-morrow from Oregon City for $10.10, to be applied as directed on next page.

Yours truly, A. L. THOMPSON.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Nov. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav to-day written a note to Mr. Abbot of The Index casting my fortunes with the "repeal" party. From the birth of the controversy I hav been in sympathy with absolute, unconditional repeal of the odious Comstock laws, and the total abolition of Comstock himself as a meddling, disagreeable, Paul Pry who peeks into people's back windows to discover whether they hold family prayers or not, and when he discovers them playing a social game of whist relegates them to the hell of our fathers.

My time and your space are too valuable for me to go at length into my reasons for favoring "repeal." Suffice it to say, I am opposed to that portentious shadow—paternal government. Whatever form it has taken, when once the malignant idea has been embodied in law it has cursed the race and retarded its growth. We hav but to read Buckle, and Lecky, and Draper understandingly to learn to curse this curse upon humanity, and strive to defeat its enslaving aims.

I love and respect Mr. Abbot, Mr. Underwood, and the string of reverends who think with them. But American Rationalists are not seeking for a new priesthood, gentlemen. If I understand the drift of modern thought, we are seeking to make each individual pour the consecrating oil upon his own head—to make every man a priest and every woman a priestess of true virtue and manly and womanly morality.

In taking my seat at the table of "repeal" I would bring something more to the repast than vinegar, however. I feel very deeply aggrieved at the action of the minority at Syracuse, and hav been prompted to say some unkind things. But the breach is sufficiently wide already. Let us "Do as adversaries do in law—strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends." The schism will do good by advertising our cause, and compelling both factions to renewed work.

Please place me on your books as a regular subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Very truly yours,

FRANK J. MEAD.

CLEARFIELD, PA., NOV. 18, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Recently some person who is apparently interested in my moral and spiritual welfare, sent me an extra copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 19, containing an article by A. R C, which I presume is regarded by its author as unanswerable.

I read the production over three times in order to find the points, for from the flourish of trumpets at its opening I expected to find it bristling with them. To my surprise however, I found it really unanswerable because it contained nothing to answer. It does not even rise to the dignity of a re-hash of his former orthodox twaddle, but it serves to indicate that he belongs to the class of Bourbons who forget nothing and never learn anything. I tried in my last article to awaken thought in his Rip Van Winkle brain by asking him a few questions pertinent to the issue between us, but his present effusion demonstrates the utter futility of attempting to draw a tortoise out of his shell without first boiling him shell and all. A. R. C. is so firmly intrenched in his ideas of morality and propriety (derived from his orthodox grandmother), that he can only stick his head out and hiss at those who hav explored fields of thought, to him a veritable terra incognita, and whose souls hav felt the genial and expanding influence of nature's teaching untrammeled by theological prejudice and ecclesiastical tyranny.

Signally failing to get anything out of him, I will try the experiment of shooting an idea or two into him.

1. Right and wrong are not absolute entities or conditions but are simply terms employed to express a relation, the standard of comparison being man himself. Hence any act or thing is right or good as it affects him agreeably, and wrong or evil as it affects him otherwise.

That is right or moral which conduces in the highest degree to the happiness of the individual and the race, and wr ng or immoral in proportion as it detracts therefrom.

Being himself a part of nature and constantly surrounded by all the other objects, conditions, and relations of nature man views them from his own standpoint and judges them as they affect his own present comfort or future happiness; and these he finds conserved in the greatest degree by a strict observance of the laws that govern his physical constitution. An ignorant man may pervert nature to his own injury or a designing king or priest may deceive him to serve his base ends, but he that follows the light of nature guided by the voice of reason cannot go far astray.

2. Man's nature is not "totally depraved," nor are any of the organs of his body essentially vile, and when you hear a man asserting that such is the case, you spot him as either a hypocritical priest or one of said priest's silly dupes.

3. Man's highest happiness is secured by the legitimate exercise of every organ of the body and every faculty of the mind, and nature made no mistake in furnishing the same.

4. The "chief end of man" is not to glorify God by "crucifying the flesh," but it is to make the best use of the gifts of nature in order to make himself and his fellow creatures happy, all the priests in Christendom and A. R. C. to the cont ary notwithstanding.

5. The idea that man's mind is totally depraved and his body partially depraved is an antiquated superstition—a relic of monkish asceticism unworthy of the enlightened ethics of the nineteenth century, and when clothed in the garb of authoritative language and persisted in becomes an audacious lie, and an insult to all intelligent Liberals.

6. Had Christianity under Constantine never triumphed over nature, science, reason, and common sense, the Liberals of to-day would never hav heard of A—nthony R. C—omstock.

A. R. C. reminds me of an old lady I once met in the mountain fastnesses of northern Arkansas. After marching nearly all day through the wilds of the Boston mountains we passed a hut by the wayside, and standing on the top of a low log fence was an old woman looking alternately up and down the road in a sort of dazed, irresolute way. I rode up and addressed her, when she looked at me about a minute and then drawled out, "Who is you uns all?" I replied, "We are 'Feds.'" (three companies of Union cavalry). "O laws a marcy! I didn't think that thar was so many people in the world;" then after a pause, "Now I 'spose we uns all (the people of the South) will hev to giv up."

Like that old woman, A. R. C. mounts the log fence that bounds the jungle of orthodox superstition in which he has spent his life, and pipes out to the grand army of progress, "Who is you uns all?" But unlike her he fails to take in the significance of the scene before him, and instead of quietly "giving it up," he assures us that he is a Union man, is perfectly familiar with the country, that we will never get out of the woods going in that direction, and that prompted by pure patriotism he will consent to take command and act as guide. A man who draws his inspiration from Moses, and goes back to the fabled Garden of Eden for his ideas of morality, is hardly competent to lay down the law of propriety to the students of nature, or command a division in the Liberal army. He would figure to much better advantage in a united Presbyterian Sabbath-school. A. R. C. is a fraud. Yours for science and sense vs. superstition. H.

HASTINGS, MICH., Nov. 6, 1878.

BRO. BENNETT: I just received a copy of the Seymour Times (as sample), and although it is a professed "Liberal" sheet, I could wish it a little more so, at least enough to be consistent.

Dr. Monroe evidently considers the "Comstock" law the only barrier against obscenity and indecency. His opinion, however, should be respected by "Liberals," as he also should show a like respect for the opinions of those who differ from him. But does he? He openly denounces all who call for the repeal of that law, as wishing to throw down all restraint against obscenity, etc., etc.

Now, as our method for the cure of the same evil differs from his insomuch as we regard the present law ineffectual and unsafe, and call for its repeal and the enactment of an effectual and safe law in its stead, how is it, I ask, are we to be called obscene and indecent, and he pure and "holy?" May we not also with the same propriety charge him and the "reform" party as being in favor of the suppression of Freethought, and willing to help orthodoxy by unconstitutional means, to abridge freedom of press and speech?

If Mr. Abbot and Dr. Monroe were to share the fate of E. H. Heywood (and it is possible they may under that elastic law), they would, I think, soon hav a better opinion of Mr. T. B. Wakeman's great speech, and not claim that our intention is solely to deal in nastiness. It is to be hoped that we can "agree to disagree" upon this subject without slandering each other. I inclose $1.00 for the Defense Fund, and also my name to be added to the "Declaration of Rights. Yours, GEORGE WOOD.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Nov. 14, 1878.

DEAR MR. BENNETT: We hav survived the National Liberal League Congress, and in spite of all assertions to the contrary, I think the "repealers" hav good reason to feel quite triumphant. We certainly were largely in the majority, and hav no reason to be ashamed of either our cause or our company. I hope we shall not spend much time telling people we are not this and we are that. Our lives are before the world, and the rule laid down eighteen hundred years ago, "By their fruits ye shall know them" still holds good.

This blackening the character, or trying to do so, of persons not thinking as we do upon scientific or moral subjects is following too much in the wake of the politician, and we better not give much attention to it. It is the law that takes away the right of expressing our opinion on subjects moral and immoral that requires our attention. Mr. Heywood still is a prisoner, though never having wronged anybody by word or deed. How soon some of the rest of us may be judged criminals because of some printed word, who can tell? December is not far in the distance. I was told the other day that some person in this goodly state of Massachusetts was arrested for having a nude statue in his window. Artists take warning. Are there not some lovers of art among those of our friends who left us and formed a new League who hav in their parlors something of that sort, prohibited by the "Comstock law?" I think I remember to hav seen some statues unclothed in my own city.

The morning's papers chronicle the arrest of a doctor in Boston for some pictures hanging in his consulting-room. I hope the doctors will see to it that the law be so defined that people shall know what is lawful for the eyes as well as the ears, so that no person shall hereafter be entrapped through ignorance of established law.

I hoped to find people in this city of Springfield who had become awake to the danger of the hour, but as yet I find no one who feels any conscience in the matter. How true it is that we must be ourselves oppressed before we realize the need of work. I would like to find material for a League in this city. Perhaps I shall by and by. We are a strange people, never believing in the old adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." We keep quiet until the evil is fairly fixed upon us, and then we rebel. Of course we shall abolish the obnoxious laws, but how many innocent people shall suffer first, who can tell? I trust the National League will do its whole duty. I send you a few names, obtained before I left home, which were overlooked, for the "Declaration of Rights."

Faithfully yours. LUCY N. COLMAN.

MARENGO, N. Y., Aug. 18, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Sunday August 18th was a white letter day in the annals of the small and peaceful hamlet of Marengo, Wayne Co., N. Y. For the first time in its history, so far as we know, a lecture on Infidelity was delivered there. The weather was all that could be desired. The bright sunshiny day, the agreeable and invigorating breeze from the northwest, and the balmy air, brought a large assemblage of earnest men and women from a wide extent of country, to Mr. J. S. Beadle's grove to listen to an able and instructive address by Mr. W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Mass., in answer to the question, "What has Freethought to offer in the place of the Christian Religion?" Mr. Bell discussed at some length the foundations of morality, and showed that there is no foundation in the Bible for a definite and permanent code of morality. He also pointed out the true grounds of morality as resting upon the humanity of man and his acquisitions of science. He spoke for an hour and three-quarters to an interested and interesting audience. It was predicted that Mr. Bell would probably be struck by lightning during the course of the lecture, but as the weather was unusually fine and the surroundings delightful the speaker alluded to the matter, and said he doubted much whether the prayers and prophecies about the lightning would be fulfilled. A pious Christian in the audience muttered, "It is not too late yet." This same man but a few months before had stolen a young girl's pocketbook, and was discovered in the act and forced to deliver it up. After the lecture of Mr. Bell, Mr. Ellis, of Huron, who had preached the gospel for twenty years, gave a very interesting account of the manner in which he was converted from the superstitions of religion to the common-sense views of Freethought.

The meeting lasted over three hours, and was in every respect a great success. JAMES MAC TURK.

OTTUMWA, Nov. 10th, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am surprised at the turn taken at the Liberal Congress; the course certainly shows a great lack of Liberalism, and looks so narrow and bigoted in men that are showing up the narrow, bigoted superstition of Christians. I am disappointed in Underwood, for I hav always tied to him, having heard him lecture, and read many of his discourses. It looks too much like boys at play—just because their man was not elected. Why, that is just what the South did in 1860 when Lincoln was elected; they said they would not play and so elected their own President and set up for themselves. I think Liberals might work together when their cause is so just and so much to be done.

I am reading your grand book the "Champions of the Church" and am much pleased with it and edified by it.

Yours, WM. LINDSEY.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 6th, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, ESQ., My Good Friend: Your note was a pleasant surprise to me. For two months I hav not passed two uninterrupted minutes. I made myself the slave of the public, and thank God, amid all private sorrow I was enabled to do my duty faithfully. The time has taught me many lessons, some sweet, some bitter, all useful. You may well say I could write a history. One thing I hav had impressed more forcibly on my mind than all else, is the power and force that education givs the human character. I buried (you may not know it,) my little girl, a child of eleven; I had one of nine years ill, a boy. For twelve hours no hope was entertained for him. In all my life of forty-six years, witnessing many deaths, I hav never stood in such reverent admiration beside one as those two children. The little girl was sweetness itself, she entered the other life as fearlessly as a child would spring to the arms of its mother; left her little playthings to friends, and comforted me with her sweet persuasive tongue. The boy, like a man of forty, made all his arrangements as soon as the doctor said his disease was fever, gave away his toys and pets, told me all he intended to do. I cried, "Oh my love you're scared because Lizzie died." "Oh hush," he said, "I am not a bit scared, I want to tell you because I may get too sick to do it after to-day." I hav an exalted respect for humanity, a deeper hate for superstition and folly, and man-made gods.

I hav proved that stern and unflinching integrity does win in this world, let others say what they will.

Some day we will meet and I can tell you many things. My arm is I fear about to give me trouble again.

I see you publish a poem now and then, I send you one right from my heart. I will renew my own and send you other subscriptions when the "storm and stress" are over.

Yours ever, MRS. E. L. S.

TREMONT, PA., Nov. 9, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find ($11.) eleven dollars, and an order for what pamphlets and books I want. Part is to pay my subscription for the current year, part for what the order calls, and the remainder is for the National Defense Fund. The percentage you offer to deduct on order for tracts, you are to use in your own defense.

A little over two years ago I came to this town, which is located in the anthracite coal regions, among the mountains, to take the principal place among the teachers in the public schools. I found two Freethinkers who did not make any secret of their views. But as both men were artisans and did not make any pretensions to scholarly attainments, they suffered somewhat from the snubs and indignities of an arrogant, ignorant Church-duped people. Though I was but a public servant I was compelled by my honest convictions to take only such grounds as was consistent with my views. I found much to contend with in my vocation and association here. The fanatical religionists didn't try very hard to meet me in discussion and much less did some snub me, as they soon found that that wouldn't pay them. Before the year rolled round, though, a minister and I held a debate in his church upon the subject of doubt. While this worked to my detriment among one class, I was, nevertheless, elected to the same position a second time unanimously. This last summer I was again elected, there being but one dissenting voice. There had been a petition before the Directors against me which was signed by all the Protestant ministers and seventy-nine adults, out of a population of two thousand, but it availed nothing. Since I hav been here I hav made warm friends among the people irrespective of religious views and hav plenty of enemies among that class of people that are neither trusted or respected by even the members of their own cliques or organizations.

I wish you wouldn't even notice Abbot in your editorials; if he was reasonable and fair then there would be some good accomplished, but as he persistently misrepresents you and those who do not play satellite to him, there can be no more effective way of dealing with him than to treat him with silent contempt. Count on me when you get in trouble.

Yours fraternally, WM. WILHELM.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

ST. JOHNS, MICH., Nov. 18, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I believe that I hav had the biggest fight over the Bible in-the-schools question of any man living. I hav taken the bull square by the horns, and hav shown up church bigotry in a manner that makes the old tyrant bellow. I hav issued and sown broadcast twenty-five thousand circulars showing up the "beauties" of the Bible. I gave a lecture, as you will see by the inclosed card of thanks, on the 8th inst., and I am proud to say that I drew a bigger house than any St. Johns minister can draw. Every saloon (there are six of them) closed its doors in honor of the occasion. The band, unexpectedly to me, volunteered their services, and if for two hours I did not make that old "sacred volume" appear ridiculous, then I did not know my business. Our clergy are recommending more family altars. They say that when Infidelity goes stalking through our streets in broad daylight, something must be done. I hav been invited from abroad to repeat the lecture, "Superstition and its Offspring Examined." Christians, with prayer, for ten years hav been trying, with God's help, to close the saloons, but without success. But I, without even asking God's help, closed them all, which is enough to make Christians hang their heads in shame. M. BABCOCK.

P. S—Please publish card of thanks, as evidence of what an Infidel may do in the way of triumphing over church bigots when he comes out square and insists on his rights.

M. B.

"CARD OF THANKS.

"Mr. Editor: Allow me through your columns to thank the members of the Cornet Band for the surprise given me by their voluntarily blowing a blast of sweet music in honor of free thought and free speech on the evening of my recent lecture upon the subject of 'Superstition.' When we reflect that, in spite of church bigots who did their best to keep people away, the hall was not only filled, but completely packed, long before the arrival of the speaker, with our very best and most intelligent citizens, I asked myself, What does it mean? Many were kept out, for the reason that they were unable to get in. Several ladies were one hour or more ahead of time as a means of making sure of a seat. In fact, the speaker had not to wait for the audience, but the audience had to wait for the speaker, who, however, was prompt on time. There never was better order or closer attention given to so long a speech—of two hours' duration. There was, however, one old man who left, murmuring as he went out. He disliked, as I understand, the allusion to Elisha's bald head, thinking that it was designed to reflect upon the bare spot upon his own head. He was mistaken. I thank the musicians for their kindness, also the audience for their liberal attendance and good attention, and I do hope that I hav not been the means of doing them harm, but, on the contrary, much good. M. BABCOCK.

"November 11, 1878.

"Mr. M. Babcock has the thanks of each and every member of the St. Johns Cornet Band who attended the last rehearsal, for a box of fine cigars.

"W. C. BEACH, Leader."

MILAN, OHIO, Nov. 18, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed please find $13.95, for which you will check off the amount of ten dollars for the Defense Fund, which stands against E. Wilcox, and send one copy of "The Bible of Bibles," by K. Graves, "The Proceedings of the Watkins Convention," and your paper for three months to John Root, Milan, Erie County, Ohio, and the "New American Pocket Dictionary" to R. N. Willcox.

"Cupid's Yokes" has been read by many intelligent people in this section, and though but few indorse the principles in full, there are but very few who can see any obscenity in it, and nearly all think he should hav a right to send his honest convictions through the mail; for if an orthodox or bigoted judge or court shall hav the power to say what is obscene or blasphemous, how long can we think aloud? In less than five years every Liberal paper in the land would be suppressed, and church anarchy, in its worst form, would reign over all. I find in my intercourse with the orthodox that there is a strong desire on the part of the Church to rule; and, to use the words of an orthodox friend, if they could not persuade or scare, they would drive if they had the power. Now, taking that for a standard, which you will find that nine-tenths of the Church entertain, you can see what we are arriving at as fast as old Father Time and bigots can bring us. It stands us all in hand, whether Infidels, Freethinkers, Spiritualists, or Freelovers, to come up to the work on the Liberal League platform. What harm can it do me or my principles if my neighbor—who is to work in harmony with me for some great and good end—believes there is or there is not a future existence? or believes it would be better to do away with the ceremony of marriage as long as he livs as good, moral, upright lives and labors for the good of humanity? How is it to make me less respectable if E. H. Heywood works with me for the good of all, if he does believe in Freelovism? The doings of the National Liberal League at Syracuse, or I should say that part of the Convention composed of the seceders, seem to hav been in very bad taste just at the time when we should hav kept a bold front and marshalled into our lines all who would lend a hand, to hav discord and strife get into our ranks. And all, as if I should work in a forty-acre field with a man that believed in Freelovism, it will take away my respectability. R. N. WILLCOX.

ANGOLA, IND., Nov. 18, 1878.

BROTHER BENNETT: Please find inclosed post-office order for one dollar; twenty-five cents to pay balance on Watkins report. For the seventy-five cents send me "The Trinity" and "Cupid's Yokes," as per advertisement of Sept. 14th, also "New American Pocket Dictionary." I received the "Watkins Report" all right, and am much pleased with the speeches. They hav, with very few exceptions, the right ring, and should be read by all Liberalists; indeed, all persons might be benefited by reading and practicing the principles therein taught. Myself and wife wish to be placed on record with those indorsing the bold position of Elizur Wright.

Brother Bennett, you are doing a grand work in exposing those old superstitious dogmas that hav stood in the way of human progress for ages. Fight on in the same manner you hav since you started THE TRUTH SEEKER—the boldest paper in America—and I feel you will be sustained. Yours for truth, Dr. J. H. MOORE.

Gods and Creeds.

WRITTEN FOR THE TRUTH SEEKER, AND READ AT A MEETING OF THE JUNCTION CITY N. S. L. S.

BY ROBERT CUMMING.

Awake, vain dreamer, from thy dull repose;
The glorious dawn of Time's bright morning glows;
Awake, and in the light thy views ex'end.
And let thy vision with thy judgment blend.
Such dreams to sages in the night are born
As fools might laugh at in the conscious morn;
The phantoms of thy dreams—gods of thy creed—
As day advances, with the night recede;
While gods, receding with the night, foretell
The last of heaven and the gates of hell;
The l'ght, fast spreading, piercing sky and sod,
Proclaims the rise of Man and fall of God;
Investigations mysteries explain,
The gods depart, but principles remain.

Was all that is made by a God unknown?
That king of kings sat on a throneless throne,
And dwelt in darkness ere he called forth light.
But in what beyond, ere he created night?
And when, or where, ere time and space he planned?
And how, ere reason was at his command?
To nightless night, and into spaceless space.
A godless God to timeless time we trace.

The "grand old universe," embracing all,
Guards every atom from destruction's call,
Whatever is eternally hath been,
And, changing, will eternally remain;
Nor atom more nor atom less will be
Through endless ages of eternity.
Nothing to nothing, add them as you will,
Result as constantly in nothing still.
Fire may rage, the breath of Time decay—
Change, only change, marks their destroying sway.

In matter principles inherent lie,
Which giv to Reason birth and majesty.

The universe we banish from our sight
To view a God in omnipresent light.
If God thou'lt hav, then this is God; the ALL—
The stars that twinkle and the worms that crawl;
And all vain man or nature wide can boast
Are in the omnipresent being lost.

By lig t divine we've viewed this world and said:
'Tis the great All for which the stars were spread;
To which the sun and moon as tribute pay
Their gold and silver beams by night and day.
Even earth, alb it in empty pride, doth deem
That that is real which doth only seem,
The sun may shine, or the moon look bright,
She greets them coldly each fair morn and night;
Nor seems to think the more than abject slaves,
Who glass her waters o'er and light her caves,
Like them who rule in night, she little dreams
Of her own darkness but for others' beams.
With bigot priests and tyrant kings, the same—
The brave advance and knaves the honor claim;
Dragged on and up, at every step they take
Memorials rise—rack, gibbet, block, or stake.

Progression's path is dark with many a stain,
Each ray of light is bought with blood or pain.

Now, space's boundless, limitless expanse
We view by simple art. A single glance
Vast and innumerable worlds proclaim,
Held in i's wide embrace as earth the same;
Changing with the eternal breath of time
Like bubbles on a boundless sea sublime.
Then what is man, who kneels and prays and pleads,
And wastes his breath and builds his hope on creeds?
And what is yonder worm in saintly clay,
That glows at night and leads mankind astray?
His brain perverting useless hands to save,
A bloated leech we find the learned knave.

Man, view thy creeds with light around them shed,
And lo! what are they? Resurrected dead,
Forms but evolved from fabled forms' decay,
Doomed in the future years to pass away.

Calm reason views them, and, like morning's light,
Advances, blushing, from the shades of night.
The powers of darkness pass with night away;
Priests lose control, and kings tyrannic sway.
No more acknowledge we a tyrant's nod,
Why longer reverence a vengeful God?
Why think to alter what the fates decree,
Or hope to change a foreknown destiny?

If blind credulity is virtue great,
View thy superiors in savage state;
And if 'tis wisdom, cease to reverence lore,
Condemn all thought, and ignorance adore.

Let truth for error in exchange be given,
Perfect this world before we people heaven.
Let Wisdom lead, and seek kind comfort's gates,
For kinder scenes are blest with kinder fates.

Kans., October 20, 1878.

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

PAL MAM QUI MERUIT FERAT
SUI GENERIS

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,

WINNERS OF THE

ONLY GOLD MEDAL

AWARDED TO AMERICAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AT

Paris Exposition, 1878;

the highest distinction in the power of the Judges to confer.

PARIS, 1878 Two Highest Medals.
SWEDEN, 1878
PHILADA, 1876
SANTIAGO, '75
VIENNA, 1873
PARIS, 1867.

AT EVERY WORLD'S EXPOSITION FOR 12 YEARS They have been awarded the HIGHEST HONORS

At the Paris Exposition, 1878, they are awarded the GOLD MEDAL, the highest recompense at the disposal of the jury; also the BRONZE MEDAL, the highest distinction for excellent workmanship. They have also received the GRAND GOLD MEDAL OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY, 1878. No other American Organs ever attained highest award at ANY World's Exposition. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES, with newest styles, prices, etc., free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., BOSTON, NEW YORK, or CHICAGO.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Monfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella, Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation.

Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

I will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words, Postage paid on all.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containg the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the
Missionary and Bible Societies,
Sunday-schools,
The Young Men's Christian Association,
Societies for the Suppression of Vice,
American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally,
and especially to
ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 60 cts.

CHEAPEST FREETHOUGHT AND SCIENCE.

Those who can read the signs of the times read in them that the kingdom of MAN is at hand.—PROF. CLIFFORD.

MAN,

A Weekly Journal of Progress and Reform,

Is published every Saturday at

19 DEY STREET, New York.

BY

ASA K. BUTTS,

Editor and Publisher of the Evolution, Radical Books, Pamphlets, etc., etc.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, $1.00 PER YEAR,
(Including Supplement until further notice.)

In clubs of Four, without Supplement, each 50 cents per year. Clubs of Ten to one address, $4.00. Club Rates for Supplement alone, same as for Man alone. All club rates may be withdrawn by two weeks' notice in the paper.

N. B.—As we publish this paper at the lowest cost price, we can afford no "deadheads." We shall stop each paper on expiration of time paid for, and sample copies will not be sent in reply to postal cards. Inclose two stamps for sample copy.

NOTABLE OPINIONS.

I like your Man. He is bright, crisp, frank, genial, gay, jolly, profound—in fact, "every inch a Man." Accept congratulations on your success in making so good a man first time trying. He is a splendid fellow. Bless you, how the ladies will love him! A more charming Man I never met. Indeed, I do not see how you can improve him.—W. F. Jamieson.

I rejoice in your paper because of its all-sidedness. It is not for temperance especially, nor for Greenbacks, nor for Communism, but for Man.—Mary Dana Shindler.

The title and contents I am much pleased with, and equally creditable to your heart and head as a progressive thinker, appreciated by Chas. E. Townsend.

No. 1 Man received, and I am delighted with it. The title, its mottoes, and its general "make up" are all that could be desired.—Dyer D. Lum.

That very noble feature of your enterprise, the re-publication, in your supplement, of the Manchester Lectures, etc., a feature so worthy of all praise that it ought alone to ensure the success of your undertaking, and stamp you as a public benefactor.—C. N. Bovee.

It is well gotten up in a mechanical point of view, and contains good articles from many familiar pens.—THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Its first number is well filled and looks handsome, and as our friend Butts is active, enterprising, and writes well, we hope he will succeed in his new venture. The more Liberal journals the better, and, besides, the motto of the New York candidate suits us exactly.—Boston Investigator.

The undaunted and irrepressible Asa K. Butts has the ability and business experience to make a first-class paper in the interest of progress and reform.—Religio-Philosophical Journal.

SEND $1.00 for six of Mrs. Besant's best Essays including "The Law of Population," (with fine steel portrait by Ritchie, the best artist in America), "The Fruits of Christianity, etc." and three other Radical Essays by different authors, and specimen copy each of The Evolution, Man, and The Scientific Supplement. Address, ASA K. BUTTS, Publisher,
19 Dey Street, New York.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. 1o1

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief.

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete, 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $2.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

Proceedings of the Indignation Meeting,

Held in Faneuil Hall,

Thursday evening, Aug. 1, 1878, to protest against the injury done to the Freedom of the Press by the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood.

A handsome octavo pamphlet of 88 pages, containing speeches of Hon. Elizur Wright, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Thaddeus B. Wakeman, Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, Laura Kendrick, Prof. A. L. Rawson, and Moses Hull, and letters from Alfred E. Giles, Theron C. Leland, Parker Pillsbury, A. J. Grover, and D. M. Bennett.

Price, 25 cents. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price, by the publisher, tf25 BENJ. R. TUCKER, Cambridge, Mass.

A GREAT OFFER

Proceedings and Addresses
AT THE
FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION
HELD AT
Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland. Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

Will be ready by Oct. 20th. It is a volume of rare value, containing much of the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

THE
Creed of Christendom.
Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.
BY W. R. GREG,
Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

MRS. BESANT'S
Law of Population.
SECOND TEN THOUSAND
of the author's American Edition, with
FINE STEEL PORTRAIT

(By Ritchie, the best artist in America) on extra tinted paper and binding. Cloth, 75c.; paper 50c.

AGENTS are informed that the best thing to sell to make money on, and also to benefit mankind, is this book. It explains and advocates the only harmless and practical means of avoiding the evils of celibacy, on the one hand, and of overburdened parentage on the other. It advocates more and earlier marriages, and increase of family only when health and pecuniary means will permit, but it most efficiently opposes abortion, prostitution, and all undesired and inconsiderate procreation. It contains the latest medical researches and results of science. The medical directions are easy, plain, explicit, though chaste and delicate. No married couple should be without it.

ASA K. BUTTS, 19 Dey st., N. Y.

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

I will deliver, boxed, at any Freight or Express Office in New York, one of the Genuine Grover & Baker Sewing Machines, with Latest Improvements, for $15.00 EACH.

This is a double thread Machine is guaranteed perfect, and will not rip, completely finished, of which the cut is a perfect representation, except that the machine I will send has a box cover fitting over the works on the table. The following attachments are supplied free with the Machine:

Three Hemmers, Braider, Friller, Quilting-Guage, Embroidery Plate, dozen assorted Needles, Screw-Driver, Oil Can, and Book of Instructions. All inquiries cheerfully answered and samples of work sent on application.

This Machine will be sent on receipt of price, or will be sent C. O. D. on receipt of $5 in advance. This offer is limited as to time, and it is a chance to secure a guaranteed, first-class Machine at a saving of $55. The regular price is $70. Refer, by permission, to the editor of this paper. Address W. V. R. POWIS,
45 4t Box 255, New York City.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo. 548 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN. A novel. By Fredrika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc. 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp, 12 mo, 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. By Henry G. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus 1, 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404pp. Postpaid, $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Professor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
His Career of Cruelty and Crime.

A CHAPTER FROM

"THE CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,"

Giving the base means employed by this Matthew Hopkins of the nineteenth century to persecute and annoy his unfortunate victims.

120 pages. Price, 25 cents.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co. Portland, Maine. 1y7

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted. 6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige.

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

BIBLE OF BIBLES:

OR

TWENTY-SEVEN

"DIVINE REVELATIONS:"

CONTAINING

A Description of Twenty-Seven Bibles, and an Exposition of Two Thousand Biblical Errors in Science, History, Morals, Religion, and General Events;

ALSO A DELINEATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE

Principal Personages of the CHRISTIAN BIBLE,

AND AN

Examination of Their Doctrines.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Biography of Satan."

As will be remarked on perusal of the table of contents, the ground gone over by Mr. Graves in the course of this new work is simply astounding, and the literary labor performed is worthy of receiving the approximate reward of an extensive reading at the hands of the public. In the sixty-six chapters into which the book is divided, almost every question of interest which arises in the mind at the mention of the word BIBLE is considered in that straightforward style which has made the volumes of Mr. Graves so extensively sought after.

LIST OF CONTENTS:

The Leading Positions of this Work.
CHAP. 1.—The Signs of the Times; The Coming Revolution; Reason will soon Triumph.
CHAP. 2.—Apology and Explanation; Jehovah not our God; Relationship of the Old and New Testaments.
CHAP. 3.—Why this Work was Written; The Moral Truths of the Bible; Why Resort to Ridicule; The Principal Design of this Work; Don't Read Pernicious Books; Two Thousand Bible Errors Exposed; All Bibles Useful in their Place.
CHAP. 4.—Beauties and Benefits of Bibles; A Higher Plane of Development has been Attained; Bible Writers Honest; General Claims of Bibles.

TWENTY-SEVEN BIBLES DESCRIBED.

CHAP. 5.—The Hindoo Bibles; The Vedas; The Code of Menu; Ramayana; Mahabarat; The Purans; Analogies of the Hindoo and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of India.
CHAP. 6.—The Egyptian Bible, "The Hermas"; Analogies of the Egyptian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Egypt.
CHAP. 7.—The Persian Bibles; The Zend Avesta; The Sadder; Analogies of the Persian and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of Persia.
CHAP. 8.—The Chinese Bibles; Ta-Heo (Great Learning); The Chun Yung, or Doctrine of the Mean; The Book of Mang, or Mencius; Snoo King, or "Book of History"; Shee King or "Book of Poetry"; Chun Tsen, "Spring and Summer"; Tao-te King, or Doctrine of Reason; Analogies of the Chinese and Jewish Religions; Antiquity of China.
CHAP. 9.—Seven other Oriental Bibles; The Soffees' Bible, The "Musnavi"; The Parsees' Bible, The "Bour Desch" The Tamaiese Bible, The "Kaliwakam"; The Scandinavian Bible, The "Saga," or Divine Wisdom; The Kalmucs' Bible, The "Kalio Cuam"; The Athenians' Bible, "The Testament"; The Cabalists' Bible, The "Yohar," or Book of Light.
CHAP. 10.—The Mahometan's Bible, The "Koran"; The Mormons' Bible, "The Book of Mormon"; Revelations of Joseph Smith; The Shakers' Bible, "The Divine Roll."
CHAP. 11.—The Jews' Bible, The Old Testament and the Mishna.
CHAP. 12.—The Christians' Bible, Its Character.
CHAP. 13.—General Analogies of Bibles; Superior Features of the Heathen Bibles.
CHAP. 14.—The Infidels' Bible.

TWO THOUSAND BIBLE ERRORS—OLD-TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 15.—A Hundred and Twenty-three Errors in the Jewish Cosmogony; The Scientists' Story of Creation.
CHAP. 16.—Numerous Absurdities in the Story of the Deluge.
CHAP. 17.—The Ten Commandments. Moral Defects of.
CHAP. 18.—The Foolish Bible Stories. A Talking Serpent and a Talking Ass; The Story of Cain; The Ark of the Covenant; Korah, Dathan, and Abiram; Daniel and Nebuchadnezzar; Sodom and Gomorrah; The Tower of Babel; Stopping the Sun and Moon; Story of Samson; Story of Jonah.
CHAP. 19.—Bible Prophecies not Fulfilled.
CHAP. 20.—Bible Miracles, Erroneous Belief in.
CHAP. 21.—Bible Errors in Facts and Figures.
CHAP. 22.—Bible Contradictions (232).
CHAP. 23.—Obscene Language of the Bible (200 cases).
CHAP. 24.—Circumcision a Heathenish Custom; Fasting and Feasting in Various Nations.
CHAP. 25.—Holy Mountains, Lands, Cities, and Rivers.

BIBLE CHARACTERS.

CHAP. 26.—Jehovah, Character of.
CHAP. 27.—The Jews, Character of.
CHAP. 28.—Moses, Character of.
CHAP. 29.—The Patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Character of.
CHAP. 30.—David, His Numerous Crimes; Solomon, Character of; Lot and his Daughters.
CHAP. 31.—The Prophets, their Moral Defects; Special Notice of Elijah and Elisha.
CHAP. 32.—Idolatry, Its Nature, Harmlessness, and Origin; All Christians either Atheists or Idolaters.

BIBLE ERRORS—NEW TESTAMENT DEPARTMENT.

CHAP. 33.—Divine Revelation Impossible and Unnecessary.
CHAP. 34.—Primeval Innocency of Man Not True.
CHAP. 35.—Original Sin and Fall of Man Not True.
CHAP 36.—Moral Depravity of Man a Delusion.
CHAP. 37.—Free Agency and Moral Accountability Erroneous.
CHAP. 38.—Repentance, The Doctrine Erroneous.
CHAP. 39.—Forgiveness for Sin an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 40.—An Angry God, Evils of the Belief in.
CHAP. 41.—Atonement for Sin an Immoral Doctrine.
CHAP. 42.—Special Providences an Erroneous Doctrine.
CHAP. 43.—Faith and Belief, Bible Errors respecting.
CHAP. 44.—A Personal God Impossible.
NOTE.—In the twelve preceding chapters it is shown that the cardinal doctrines of Christianity are all wrong.
CHAP. 45.—Evil, Natural and Moral, Explained.
CHAP. 46.—A Rational View of Sin and its Consequences.
CHAP 47.—The Bible Sanctions every Species of Crime.
CHAP. 48.—The Immoral Influence of the Bible.
CHAP. 49.—The Bible at War with Eighteen Sciences.
CHAP. 50.—The Bible as a Moral Necessity.
CHAP. 51.—Send no more Bibles to the Heathen.
CHAP. 52.—What Shall We Do to be Saved?
CHAP. 53.—The Three Christian Plans of Salvation.
CHAP 54.—The True Religion Defined.
CHAP. 55.—"All Scripture given by Inspiration of God."
CHAP. 56.—Infidelity in Oriental Nations—India, Rome, Greece, China, Persia, and Arabia.
CHAP. 57.—Sects, Schisms, and Skeptics in Christian Countries.
CHAP. 58.—Modern Christianity one-half Infidelity.
CHAP. 59.—The Christians' God, Character of.
CHAP. 60.—The One Hundred and Fifty Errors of Jesus Christ.
CHAP. 61.—Character and Erroneous Doctrines of the Apostles.
CHAP. 62.—Erroneous Doctrines and Moral Defects of Paul and Peter.
CHAP. 63.—Idolatrous Veneration for Bibles—Its Evils.
CHAP. 64.—Spiritual or Implied Sense of Bibles—Its Objects.
CHAP. 65.—What shall we Substitute for the Bible?
CHAP. 66.—Religious Reconstruction, or the Moral Necessity for a Religious Reform.
Conclusion.

Cloth, large 12mo., 440 pp. Price, $2.00, postage free.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 8 th S ., New York.

Ingersoll's Second Volume.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures,

CONTAINING

The Ghosts, Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child; The Declaration of Independence; About Farming in Illinois; Speech at Cincinnati; "The Past Rises before me like a Dream."

A 12mo volume of 232 pages. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

NOTICE.—I have hitherto published some of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lectures in cheap form, believing that by so doing I was aiding in the diffusion of valuable Liberal reading matter and doing a favor to the general public. At the request, however, of Col. Ingersoll, I shall publish no more of them, but will keep for sale all his lectures so far as published under his own auspices. D. M. BENNETT.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6 00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 43 7b

AURICULAR CONFESSION
AND
Popish Nunneries.
BY WM. HOGAN,

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

Gems of Thought.

STRONG reasons make strong actions.—Shakspere.

THE idle always hav a mind to do something. Vauvenarques.

KNOW how sublime a thing it is to suffer and be strong.—Longfellow.

MEN giv away nothing so liberally as their advice.—Rochefoucauld.

DISTANCE sometimes endears friendship, and absence sweeteneth it.—Howell.

I WILL listen to any one's convictions, but pray keep your doubts to yourself. I hav plenty of my own.—Goethe.

THAT good sense which nature affords us is preferable to most of the knowledge that we can acquire.—Comines.

LIFE is a short day; but it is a working day. Activity may lead to evil, but inactivity cannot be led to good.—Hannah More.

ALL our actions take their lines from the complexion of the heart, as landscapes their variety from light.—W. T. Bacon.

IDLERS cannot even find time to be idle, or the industrious to be at leisure. We must be always doing and suffering.—Zimmerman.

THE temperate are the most truly luxurious. By abstaining from most things it is surprising how many things we enjoy.—Simms.

NOTHING is beneath you if it is in the direction of your life; nothing is great or desirable if it is off and away from that.—Emerson.

THE brightest crowns that are worn in heaven hav been tried, and smelted, and polished, and gloried through the furnace of tribulation.—Chapin.

THE presence of those whom we love is as a double life; absence, in its anxious longing and sense of vacancy, is as a foretaste of death. Mrs. Jameson.

NO MAN'S abilities are so remarkably shining as not to stand in need of a proper opportunity, a patron, to recommend them to the notice of the world.—Pliny.

A RICH man cannot enjoy a sound mind nor a sound body without exercise and abstinence; and yet these are truly the worst ingredients of poverty.—Henry Hume.

THAT which we acquire with most difficulty we retain the longest; as those who hav earned a fortune are usually more careful of it than those who hav inherited one.—Colton.

HIS life is ever paralleled even with the stroke and line of his great justice; he doth with holy abstinence subdue that in himself which he spures on his power to qualify in others.—Shakspere.

DISTANCE of time and place do generally cure what they seem to aggravate; and taking leave of the world, concerning which it hath been often said that it is not death, but dying, which is terrible.—Fielding.

THE love of admiration leads to fraud much more than the love of commendation; but on the other hand, the latter is much more likely to spoil our good actions by the substitution of an inferior motive.—Bishop Whately.

ACTION hangs, as it were, "dissolved" in speech, in thoughts whereof speech is the shadow; and precipitates itself therefrom. The kind of speech in a man betokens the kind of actions you will get from him.—Carlyle.

IF thou desire to make the best advantage of the muses, either by reading to benefit thyself or by writing for others, keep a peaceful soul in a temperate body; a full belly makes a dull brain, and a turbulent spirit a distracted judgment; The muses starve in a cook's shop and a lawyer's study.—Quarles.

IT is very easy to pick holes in other people's work, but it is far more profitable to do better yourself. Is there a fool in the world that cannot criticise? Those who can themselves do good service are but as one to a thousand compared with those who can see faults in the labor of others.—Anon.

ALAS, it is not till time with reckless hand has torn out half of the leaves from the book of human life that man begins to see that the leaves which remain are few in number, and to remember, faintly at first and then more clearly, that upon the early pages of that book was written a story which he would fain read over again.—Longfellow.

THE only things in which we can be said to hav any property are our actions. Our thoughts may be bad, yet produce no poison; they may be good, yet produce no fruit. Our riches may be taken away by misfortune, our reputation by malice, our spirits by calamity, our health by disease, our friends by death; but our actions must follow us beyond the grave; with respect to them alone we cannot say that we shall carry nothing with us when we die, nei her shall we go naked out of the world.—Colton.

YES, we Infidels are iconoclastic. We strive with all our powers to tear down the old, the effete, and the worn-out, and to build up the new, the useful, and the appropriate. We wish to destroy every one of the religions of the day from off the face of the earth, because we hav evoluted beyond them, outgrown them, and they are no longer (if they ever were) a benefit to our race; we destroy myths and replace them with realities. We destroy creeds to replace them with morals; we kill off gods and replace them with true and good men and women; we brush away the mirage of heaven and show the glories and beauties of earth. And is not such iconoclasm a virtue of which we may well be proud?—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

THE coming age—sausage.

THE last language spoken on earth will probably be the Finnish.

DO NOT love your neighbor as yourself. Her husband might object.

ALTHOUGH a woman's age is undeniably her own, she never owns it.

"THIS must be looked into," as the young lady said to the mirror.

THE hog, we believe, does not plight his trough. He nose better.

A MULE'S hind leg has only one season. It is always a beautiful spring.

THE cunning crab at the sea shore always comes after the under-tow.

SONG of the watering-place mosquito: "Oh! giv me a hum by the sea."

ONE codfish yields 1,000,000 eggs. This is what keeps up the aristocracy.

YOU may talk of your punctuation marks, but surely a mountain swamp must be a high fen.

ABEL, in Hebrew, means vanity; and a belle in English has much the same significance.

"IS THIS the Adams House?" asked a stranger of a Bostonian. "Yes, till you get to the roof, then its eaves."

"IS THAT a funeral?" "Yes, sir." "Who was it that died?" "The gentleman in the coffin, sir."

WHY should it be easy to break into an old man's house? Because his gait is broken and his locks are few.

CAMP-MEETING people are "canvas-backed Christians" in the vocabulary of the Chicago Times' head-line artist.

A FRENCH writer has described a young lady as a creature that ceases to kiss gentlemen at twelve and begins again at twenty.

OLIVE LOGAN has discovered that man existed 600,000 years ago, and is mad because she wasn't on hand.

WILL the bewitching young lady in white grenadine send her address?—Personal. Will you send her a dress of more serviceable material?

LITTLE speculations,
Little grabs at cash,
Lead a corporation
To an awful smash.

A FARMER, speaking of the thinness of his hay crop, said, "The grasshoppers hav all gone lame trying to jump from one blade of grass to another."

YOUNG ladies are opposed to the telephones. They say they do not care to hav a young fellow whispering in their ears with his mouth twenty miles away.

A CAUTIOUS lover: "When I courted her," said Spreadwater, "I took a lawyer's advice, and signed every letter to my love, Yours without prejudice."

"OH, see that my grave is kept green, darling." She did. She bought seven pounds of Paris green and planted it three inches thick.

A MAN never really knows the exact "power of the press" till he sticks his fingers in the thing and leaves the ends of them there to remember him by.

PRIEST—"Well, Pat, and what did the landlord do to ye about the farm?" Pat—"Shure, yer riverence, he tould me I could hav immediate possession in six months' time.

"I WISH you had been Eve," said an urchin to a stingy aunt, proverbial for her meanness. "Why so?" "Because," said he, "you would hav eaten all the apple instead of dividing it."

WHEN the nurse brought twins to a fond husband in Paris recently he threw up his hands, shrugged his shoulders, and exclaimed, "Everything has doubled during the Exhibition."

"COME, do not be timid," said a couple of snobs to two mechanics; "sit down and make yourselves our equals." "We'd hav to blow out our brains to do that," was the sudden remark.

AN indulgent father urged an indolent son to rise. "Remember," said he, "that the early bird catches the worm." "What do I care for worms!" growled the youth; "mother won't let me go a fishing."

WHEN a woman stubs her toe, she looks serene, tries to smile, and whispers to herself, "Gosh." But when a man stubs his, he simply says, "D——the thing," out loud, and passes on.

THE Major—"Would you advise me to hav these few hairs in front cut off?" Hairdresser—"U-m-m. Well, sir, I should 'esitate afore hi sacrificed my honly hornament."

A MAN who can stand a great grief and conceal it and hug it to his bosom, and go smiling about the world, can't conceal his emotion when a fly lights on his nose while the barber is scraping his throat. This is what makes it so difficult to get correct statistics of those who really fall from grace.

X., A BOHEMIAN, who is always on the lookout for a chance to borrow fifty cents till next Tuesday, presents himself at the door of a rich acquaintance. "My master doesn't receive today,' says the servant. "That's all right. I don't want him to receive. I want him to giv. Tell him the Shah of Persia wants to see him."

"PA," said a youthful rustic, rising from picking up apples and softly rubbing his back against the tree, "I ken do them sleight-hand performences; wen I grow up I'm a goin' to be a prestidigitater." "H'm!" replied the paternal, with vehement contempt; "you keep to work, 'Bout next month you'll be pressed to dig a tator up in the corner lot!"

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner.	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett,	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses.	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	8
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	3
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2
114.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
115.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
117.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
118.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
119.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. 5
2. Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 3
3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 3
4. Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. 5
5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. 3
6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 5
8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. 5
9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 2
10. The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures. 5
11. Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. 5

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollar worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth.	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jea Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. B. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion.	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus.	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records,	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell,	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah,	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	25
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	25
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	3 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire,	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	50 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	15
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	3 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	5
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. F. B. Foote, M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the Only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	30
Syntagma. Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus. 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.	3 50
Sexual Physiology. Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4
The Champions of the Church. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 00
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	80
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	80
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS,

FREE THOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 49. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, December 7, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year

Notes and Clippings.

We learn from Rochester that the arrest of Dr. Soule by Comstock was for selling medicines, and circulating advertisements respecting them, for the prevention of conception.

The Government has a tobacco monopoly in eight European States—France, Austro-Hungary, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Roumania, Lichtenstein, and the little republic of San Marino.

At a meeting at Cooper Institute on Saturday night, the Hon. Abram S. Hewitt is reported to hav remarked, amid great applause, that "we are on the dawn of an era of prosperity such as the world never saw."

The Rev. Dr. Wilson, who presided at one of the sessions of the recent English Missionary Conference, said that of every three persons walking on the earth, two hav never heard the name of Jesus Christ. A slim chance indeed for the whole earth to be saved in his name.

A Michigan gentleman whose education was considered fair wrote to a bookseller as follows: "Dere sur; if yew hev gut a book called Danel Webster on a brige pleas send me a copy by Pyser's Express c. o. d.—I want to git it termorrer if i kin, caus myspelin techer says i oughter hev it."

The Chinese in San Francisco hav brought over an expert priest for the express purpose of propitiating Ah Toa, their devil or spirit of evil. They think that Ah Toa is incensed by the little attention that has been paid to him in this country, and they hav resolved to make amends.

The revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament hav just got to the end of the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians on their second revision. It is hoped by many of the pious that when done it will be a great improvement over the old version that has been worshiped for two hundred years.

John Bright has written a letter to a Scotch clergyman, in which he says that if all the Scotch clergy were to banish whiskey from their houses, and the consumption of it from their social habits, they would do much to withdraw a leading source of the poverty and suffering which curse Scotland.

A man in Denver believes that the world will come to an end on next Christmas. He has prepared white robes for the occasion, and will stay on the housetop that day, ready to be caught up to heaven. He has made no ascension robes for his wife, however, thinking that she is to remain and be destroyed.

The Jersey City Presbytery has dissolved the pastoral relations between the Rev. Mr. Bidwell and the Westminster Church on the Heights. The congregation complained that Mr. Bidwell was not sufficiently eloquent, and that he failed to attract the wealthy and cultured classes. The pulpit of this church was formerly occupied by the notorious Rev. Mr. Glendenning.

A queer prophet of a new dispensation has appeared in Rye, England. He is about thirty years old, and dresses himself in sheepskins, trimmed with red flannel. He bears a large blackboard, inscribed, "I am the prophet Elias," and journeys from town to town with a view of saving the human race. Had this person lived some eighteen hundred years ago and in some distant part of the world many might hav thought him a god.

"Mr. Frothingham is a leader in thought, a profound and industrious writer on vast questions in morals and progress and religion; one of the comparatively few widely cultured gentlemen that one meets in his daily walks, with a keen sense of the beautiful and sublime among the fine arts, full of the grand thoughts which close communion with grand natures has bred within him."—Evening Telegram.

In Dr. Post's Congregational church, St. Louis, a committee has been appointed to try to induce everybody in the church to take a religious paper or magazine. Some of the brethren there are zealous about it, and suggest the appointment of similar committees in all the churches. The publishers could afford to be generous with chromos to these committees. What a fine thing it would be if some active Liberal in every neighborhood would show the same amount of zeal.

Come to add the figures, it is ascertained that more grain has been transported through the Erie Canal this year than any preceding year. The aggregate, 58,735,504 bushels, is double that carried in the season of 1876. The number of boats clearing from Buffalo is a third more than in 1877, and the receipts for tolls are correspondingly larger. Something like 18,000,000 bushels hav gone east from Buffalo by rail, also a very marked increase. There is joy in Buffalo, and it reaches all along the canal.

Comstock Again to the Front.—This tireless individual, who like the cloven-footed gentleman said to preside over the sulphurous regions, does not like to be idle, has recently made a raid on the lottery shops of this city. With the help of his first lieutenant, Joseph A. Britton, a United States marshal, and a policeman or two, he arrested several dealers who are engaged in selling tickets for the Kentucky and Louisana lotteries. The arrest is made for sending tickets or advertisements by mail.

The Presbytery of Champlain were in session at Plattsburg on Tuesday, to consider charges of immorality preferred by the elders of his late congregation against the Rev. Dr. E. A. Bulkley of Rutherford Park, N. J., formerly pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Plattsburg. Every effort was made to keep it a secret. The charges and subjects relating thereto were referred to a committee of arbitration, consisting of five members, who succeeded in making what they termed a "fair, honorable, and just settlement," the opposing parties interchanging papers.

The example of New York clergymen who protested against the disposing of articles in the Cathedral fair by the ticket or lottery system is followed by Bridgeport (Ct.) pastors, who hav sent a protest to the managers of an entertainment there in which chances are to be sold for the winning of prizes. What better, say the shepherds of the Bridgeport flocks, than buying tickets in any public lottery is this raffling for watches and United States bonds? But the managers, with an eye to the profits, pay no attention to the protest, and the lotteries are to be run.

In his "True Law of Population," Doubleday points out that "Populations are universally found thin in pastoral countries where the food is chiefly animal; denser where it is mixed; still denser where vegetable but plenteous; densest of all where it is vegetable and scarce." The natural inference is that in the plethoric the state of productiveness is arrested, while in the deplethoric it is reinvigorated. In the poorest times Irish families, subsisting on potatoes and meal, averaged seven, against five in England, and three in France. In rice-eating countries the population is dense.

This is a shocking story that comes from Ohio: A middle-aged clergyman, a presiding elder, famed for his exemplary life, his eloquence in the pulpit, and his zeal in the temperance movement, is found reeling about the streets, stupidly drunk, rolls in the gutter with the policeman who attempts to arrest him, and when taken to the station house is in such a condition that men hav to look twice and closely before they recognize in the mud-covered sot the presiding elder. His clerical brethren think that it is a case of sudden insanity. Perhaps so; but some men and clergymen hav fallen as suddenly and as low. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall," said the apostle; and the warning is as much needed in our day as in his, and by clergymen as much as by any other men.

A prominent church in Philadelphia is just now without a pastor, but not without candidates for the vacant pulpit, there being over fifty brethren pressing their claims. Among the applicants is one who writes from the West to the effect that he is the most successful pastor in the presbytery to which he belongs, and that he has larger congregations and more conversions than any other of the brethren in his vicinity. Anticipating the natural question from the church authorities as to his reasons for wanting to leave a field of labor in which his efforts hav been crowned with such signal success, he says that he wants a larger field for the exercise of his gifts, and feels assured that the vacant church in question would afford him that field. The effect of this useful man's letter was to persuade the Philadelphians that he had better keep on cultivating his present field.

Prof. Lockyer is of the opinion that human life on the planet Mars may be very much like human life on the earth—the light cannot be so bright, but the organs of sight may be so much more susceptible as to make the vision quite as good; the heat is probably less, as the polar snows certainly extend further, but by no means less in proportion to the lessened power of the solar rays. He agrees with others, that several very remarkable seas, some of them connected and some not connected with straits with still larger seas—are now definable in the southern hemisphere, in which, as is the case also with the earth, water seems to be much more widely spread than in the northern hemisphere.

Is it an Advertising Trick?—We observe that our preachers, as a rule, do not seem to relish either the manner or the matter of Brother Talmage's discourses on the vice of New York. But inasmuch as he is not delivering them for their benefit, and he has no hope of having them among his audience, he may not care what they think. He draws a crowd and gets a large salary for doing it, and he is not going to stop working a placer which yields such handsome profit. If by that means he could keep his place of performance full on Sunday, we doubt not he would willingly, even gladly, spend every other night for a year in some place of metropolitan iniquity. The surprising thing is that the detectives, to whom the dirt on the under side of society is an old story, are willing to go about with him so assiduously. Probably, however, he pays them handsomely for the disagreeable work, as he can well afford to do with his $12,000 salary, all dependent on the noise he makes. It therefore seems obvious enough why Talmage keeps on in the search after vicious things. He is simply pursuing his line of business to the best of his ability and to remarkable and profitable acceptance. It is a line, too, which can be followed indefinitely, or, at least, until the curious get tired of it, for the sorts of iniquity in all great cities are various, and it takes little art to make their description startling or suggestive.

The great fair at the new cathedral is over, and priests, bishops, and Cardinal hav retired to their kennels to gloat and chuckle over their ill-gotten gains One hundred and fifty thousand dollars begged, swindled, and bartered for in three or four weeks. One species of iniquity alone by which money might be procured was left unwrought. By some oversight a brothel was not provided in the Cathedral for the use of visitors, who were thereby compelled to patronize those so eloquently advertised from the pulpit by the Rev. Talmage; but, as much was thereby lost that might hav been expended for the benefit of the Lord, there is no doubt the crafty Cardinal will make better arrangements next time. If newspaper reports are true some of the ladies in attendance went so far as to sell what even the reviled Freelovers deem too sacred to barter for gold—their kisses. What wives for virtuous men, whose kisses may be bought like meat in the market! What sweethearts for our young men, whose charms may be enjoyed by a stranger for a time only limited by the length of his purse or his willingness to purchase. And the difference between peddled kisses and bartered virtue is only one of degree and not of kind. Many an innocent girl is put on the pathway to prostitution at church fairs. Gambling in its most alluring guise was carried on openly at this fair under the direct supervision of the priests without fear of the law, for 'twas done in the house of God; and many a boy took his first lesson in gambling from the fat priest who cajoled him into risking his pennies on the Cardinal's roulette table. But this was all for the glory of God and the profit of the priests. A few honest men meet in Syracuse and canvass measures for the protection of their pockets from pious robbers, and to devise ways and means to guard their children from the pollution of such a debasing and infamous religion, and they are denounced from one end of the land to the other as vile, depraved, and obscene; but men, women, and children; priests, prelates, and virgins, may gamble, beg, and approach taintingly near to peddling their virtue, and they are lauded to the skies as generous, self-sacrificing, and praiseworthy. It makes all the difference in the world whether the "pretty waiter girls" sell their kisses in a church or in a beer-saloon.

Events of the Week.

Middletown, N. Y., has had a $25,000 fire.

Ex-President Pardo of Peru has been assassinated.

The Greenback party is holding a conference in Washington.

Gen. Sheridan is in this city defendant in a suit for $400,000.

A Rochester girl of eleven has just married a boy of eighteen.

Tennessee was slightly shaken up by an earthquake a few days ago.

Three deaths hav taken place already directly traceable to the great Glasgow failure.

An extensive fire in Tallmage, O., on the 28th, did damage to the amount of $80,000.

George Henry Lewes, the celebrated philosopher and positivistic writer, died on the 1st.

Mrs. Vosburgh is foolishly and vainly trying to find her runaway husband, the notorious parson.

An express train was wrecked on the New Haven railroad near Hartford on the 30th ult. One man injured.

The German Government has expelled all the Socialists from Berlin. Among the number were two Deputies.

The Wyoming Thread Company's factory, in Fall River, Mass., has been burned to the ground. Loss, $100,000.

By the collision of two steamers on the Mississippi, opposite Donaldsonville, a few days ago, twenty lives were lost.

The Afghan war appears to be a one sided affair. Thus far very little resistence has been offered to the British army of invasion.

An attempt has been made to assassinate the Prime Minister of Austria. A bomb was exploded near him, but he escaped unhurt.

Robert Heller, well known as one of the most accomplished magicians of modern times, died suddenly in Philadelphia a few days ago.

Two Maine men recently took rooms in a Boston hotel, blew out the gas, and went to bed. The next morning they were found suffocated by the gas.

O'Leary the champion and Campana the phenomenal pedestrian are to walk a match in this city for a purse of money and the championship of the world.

The Hamburg steamship Pomerania was run into and sunk in the English Channel on the night of the 25th ult. Upwards of fifty people were drowned.

The steamship Zealand returned to this port a few days ago with her cargo afire. By zeal and vigor the flames were subdued, but not until a great portion of the cargo was destroyed.

A negro was burned at the stake at Mount Vernon, Ind., not long since. Of course all the parties to the outrage were Christians. They were merely forestalling their God in the burning business.

A series of riots in Breadhitt county, Ky. has resulted thus far in the shooting and killing of County Judge Burnett and three other men and the wounding of several others. The fighting still goes on, nearly half the inhabitants of the county being engaged in it; and the Governor has been called on to quell the disturbance.

Mr. Talmage, having investigated the houses of prostitution of this city and reported thereon to his congregation, has now commenced on the clubs. He will probably keep on in his downward course of investigation until he reaches the churches and parsons, then look out for filthy revelations, for he appears determined to tell all he knows.

Congress assembled on the 2d. The President's Message was received and read by both Houses. Mr. Hayes congratulates, rather ironically, the country on its prosperity, mentions the divine blessing of the yellow fever, recommends a national sanitary law to check such special providences, asks for money to enforce election laws, and suggests that the Indians be educated instead of killed.

Communications.

The Comstock Laws, and the Necessity for their Repeal.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE A CONFERENCE OF LIBERALS AND FREETHINKERS IN ROCHESTER AT ODD FELLOWS' TEMPLE, ON SUNDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 17th, BY MR. FREDERICK HEBARD.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: Many may wonder what this question has to do with the interests of Liberals. In fact, there are numerous pure and excellent people who hav shaken the dust and mold of superstition from their shoes, and hav almost, if not entirely, escaped the clutches of the Bible God and Devil, who say that Liberals hav better work to do than meddling with laws already upon the statute books. If you oppose certain laws and demand their repeal, they say, you will be frowned upon and jeered at as lawless.

The Liberal party in America comprises and embraces two great branches. The members of one branch, the conservatives—the more numerous, but, believe me, not the more powerful—hav but recently broken loose from Church dogmas. Nature is just beginning to draw from their understanding the veil that bigotry has woven. Science has been battering away upon their assumptions of faith until that faith has crumbled. They begin to see the light. Their fathers were pastors, were deacons, said grace at meals, offered prayers to an unknown God at early morn and nightfall, thanking him for blessings they were toiling their life away to obtain and keep for generations countless. These customs and habits prevailed in their families. But the present generation of men and women, in the light of modern science, reading a skeptical and critical press, full of the meat and kernel of developed fact and established truth, are undergoing a process of transformation. They are awakening from a protracted slumber. When children and prattling babes they were bound in their habits of life, of action, of speech, of thought, to rigorous doctrines of the saving power of Jesus, of salvation through his blood. Men painted horrible pictures of hell with imps of darkness frying naughty children on forks and spits. They pictured it as a fiery flood, boiling hot, at the foot of a steep and slippery mountain whose top reached to the elysian dales of Paradise, and up whose sides myriads of desperate souls attempted to climb from danger, while thousands fell back with screams and shrieks. Very few reached the heavenly kingdom. Men painted heaven in opposite colors, with crystal streams and silver brooks and pearly gates in floods of glory, amid most ravishing strains of sweetest music, and ten thousand voices raised in one grand anthem. With this at their soul's center, established in their heart's core through years of training and generations of blood, can it be wondered at that they are conservative and hav sympathy with creed and ritual? Any wonder they plead expediency and propriety as an apology for opposing truth? Any wonder they rise up aghast and shriek, What! tear down law? sanction license? You cannot force a truth. You must wait until the world is ready. You must not shock the human heart if you would release it!

This is the attitude of the conservative. The other great Liberal power in America is the radical branch whose fathers in their day were known as Liberals; who from the cradle have breathed an atmosphere free from taint of dogma or scent of creed; whose early instructions and culture were in strict accord with nature and with nature's laws; who hav been reared as men and women to obey their highest injunctions and conceptions of right and duty, and adopt their reason as their guide, their understanding and conscience as their instructor in virtue and safeguard against vice; who hav learned to hate hypocrisy and to speak their honest thought as they feel it and know it, fearlessly and without terror; who cannot or will not repress an honest thought or discovered fact though a thousand gods commanded; who say that truth shall be spoken when that truth is known. They are fewer than the others, but they are the heroes, the martyrs, who are constituted by nature to battle for freedom, for liberty, for knowledge, and for truth; and on their graves will be shed, by generations yet to come, the tears of pity, of sympathy, and of love. They will be mourned as we mourn to-day for those whose lives in the past hav been devoted to science and truth, and who hav been sacrificed by a bloody Church to a monster God. Expediency to them, when the innocent suffer, is inexcusable.

The great League movement of Liberals is composed to-day of these two elements. Organization has long been deemed necessary on the part of Liberals in order that their rights might not be assailed with impunity, in order to establish some ready safeguard for the equal protection of all before the law. Agitation for organization commenced and continued until it culminated in the organization of the League movement two years ago in Philadelphia. The object specified in the platform to accomplish by the movement was the complete secularization of the government, and total separation of Church and State.

At the recent Congress of Liberal Leagues in Syracuse it was argued on the part of the majority that most decidedly was it within the province and purpose of the League movement to take a position either in favor of or against the notorious Comstock law of 1873; but also that it was important to the interests of Liberals that it should be repealed, and the League should agitate the matter. On the other hand it was contended that the entire question was a side issue, was foreign to the objects of the League movement and foreign to the spirit of the organization, and should be kept out entirely from the deliberations of the Congress. As Liberals are all aware, no doubt, ere this, the matter was, by resolution, postponed for settlement a year hence, and thus disposed of. But no, there was no peace; for on announcement of the ballot for election of officers, the defeated ticket, with its friends, organized anew. They are called the moral party, disfavoring nastiness and filth; the old organization, the immoral party, favoring nastiness and filth. This construction was made of the issue by the seceders in order that some possible pretext might be had for their action.

It so happened that I was a delegate to the Syracuse Congress. I was but a listener—a learner. After listening with wrapt attention to the opinions of Mrs. Neyman, to the able argument of T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of Asa K. Butts, Prof. A. L. Rawson, of New York city, of Dr. Brown, Frank Rivers, of Prof. Toohey, and many others of equal eminence and ability, each in his turn pronouncing in favor of repeal, it would seem that one could not long hesitate in choosing, but still a doubt lingered in my mind. I returned home, deliberated carefully, and studied the laws of 1873 with earnestness and zeal to satisfy myself fully in the matter; but the more I studied and reflected over those laws and the terrible persecutions and outrages perpetrated under them, the deeper grew the conviction in my heart and mind that they were unconstitutional, tyrannous, and despotic, and should be repealed.

Not hastily formed, still less hastily expressed, has been my opinion in this matter. I will not quote the laws in these pages as by this time all are no doubt familiar with them. One section relates to American publishers, editors, and venders, another relates to the right of foreign publishers to send their publications to this country. Under these two phases of the Comstock laws of 1873, the postmasters on the one hand and the Custom House officials on the other are vested and clothed with the supreme authority of judge and censor of your and my publications, and empowered not only to repress and destroy the publications containing our honest thoughts, but to place us in the custody of the law as criminals, to be tried, and, if found guilty, to be senenced to ten years at hard labor in state prison, or fined $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The pretence of those who secured the passage and enforcement of this terribly unjust law was that filthy, obscene, and dirty publications were circulated through the mails to the young and unwary, that their effect was pernicious and wicked; therefore the necessity of regulating the circulation of matter through the postoffice, etc., etc.

Now, friends, the old maxim that the "proof of the pudding is the eating thereof" is very pertinent and material in its application here. When we hav before us the sad, horrible, and inquisitorial record of nearly one hundred Liberal publishers, editors, and physicians, besides many poor and unprotected citizens who hav been arrested and convicted under this law—yet every one innocent under the Constitution, innocent in the light of a broad and Liberal conscience, in the light of science, of truth and justice, and guilty of nothing save attacking the errors of a popular church, the hypocrisy of priest and pastor—I say, when we hav this record, are we not eating the pudding to prove its quality? When we hav the threats of this hyena of the Church, Comstock, that "he will yet wipe out the free press," are we not proving the merit of his law. We are. Yes, testing it in the blood of the martyr.

Let the mothers and wives of this nation pass judgment on this law, and would it long remain? They love their children; sacrifice all for them, and would die for them. They want their morals protected and their purity assured and guaranteed; but, sir, with all this personal sacrifice for their darlings, they would blot out with their tearful ballots any law empowering man to force upon them maternity, and making it a crime to guard and protect their persons. I believe most sincerely, that if woman was placed upon an equal footing with man in the political field for a single year, this notorious law would so quickly be erased that the effort of man in the matter would be no longer needed. Who is there here who has not read the Bradlaugh-Besant books? Is the philosophy there set forth a myth, a lie? It is the truth. A fact of science long since acknowledged that in great communities and aggregations of humanity preventive checks ot too rapid multiplication must be applied. The laws of reproduction must be controlled as those of maddened nature, the heat, the frost, the wind, the rain, of attraction, gravitation. All laws of nature man is called upon to control so far as to promote his interests and the interests of humanity. As true is it that the laws of reproduction must be controlled rightfully and legally as that the Comstock laws will be repealed. I demand the repeal of these laws because modification, in my opinion, is impossible; they can neither be reformed so as to guarantee to Liberal publishers their right to print and circulate their opinions and philosophy, and place them above and beyond the possibility of suppression and conviction for their honest thought and opinion, nor in any manner or form that would not directly violate the Constitution of the United States.

In a recent opinion delivered by Chief-Justice Field, in the celebrated Jackson lottery suit, he declared the Comstock laws constitutional, and the right of Mr. Postmaster to break sealed packages under warrant of the marshal upon competent evidence.

This opinion is in direct conflict with opinions of Webster, Clay, and Benton, delivered on the occasion of the debate upon the Calhoun interference bill in the Senate. Webster declared that the Federal power had no right to examine into the mails, and that any law giving deputy-postmasters power to suppress publications founded on the sentiments of the paper, was expressly unconstitutional. Clay argued that if the postoffice power gave the right to say what should and what should not go into the mails a precedent for dangerous legislation would be established; that Congress could at once determine what class or party or power should hav exclusive control and benefit of the mails; that the landmarks to the Constitution would be destroyed, and the entire postal system undermined. Benton, on the same occasion said that though he was opposed to abolitionism, he would not vote in favor of vesting ten thousand postmasters with such dangerous powers.

This is the only occasion of any debate or discussion of the right of the Federal government to interfere with the free circulation of matter through the postoffice. The only occasion of any real action on the subject, and the decision then as it always will be when fully discussed, debated, and investigated in Congress or Senate, was emphatically non-interference; that the postoffice is a common property, as the parks in our city, or streets in our country. Imagine the inquiry when you step into the highway or park:

"What do you believe?"

"I am a Christian."

"You can't pass here; the Bible is obscene; your thoughts are obscene, and you can't pass."

"Don't I help keep up these roads and adorn these parks?"

"Of course you do; but you are filthy, and we must preserve the public morality."

"What do you believe?" (to another traveler).

"So and so."

"You can pass; but keep back, there (to a third.) You are a Spiritualist, in league with the devil, and are bad."

"Don't I pay taxes?"

"Yes; but this is a moral road, and you can't pass."

I ask, would this practice long endure? And yet the same attitude is taken in the matter of the Comstock laws. These laws, as all are aware, were passed through Congress without a single expression of opinion concerning them—rushed through with numerous other bills. The President's salary bill, against which there has been so much remonstrance, was passed the same session. It was almost the hour of final adjournment when bills were brought up, read, passed, and signed hurredly one after another in manner nowise commensurate with their importance. And it is said, upon what I learn to be good authority, that most of the members at this juncture were stupidly drunk.

Thus were these laws (apparently so dearly treasured by some) stealthily, covertly, and by the meanest subterfuge enacted. It is a fact that ere long will be fully realized, that these laws had their conception in the minds of those who hate Freethought as Calvin hated Servetus; that through their influence they were enacted, and by their authority they are so rigidly enforced that none suffer under them save publishers, editors, and physicians who plead and advocate reforms, and who dare to think, speak, and write unbiased by priest or creed. Behind the breastwork of this word obscenity the monster Church is hidden. Adroitly as it is worded and drawn, and still more adroitly administered, this last vestige of the Inquisition, this engine of oppression, this gag-law, has been exposed. Having within the short space of a few years driven men to their graves, plunged men into prison dungeons on the slightest pretext, for opinion's sake, and refused them the trial demanded; having given position and power to spies and sneaks, to lie, deceive, and commit crime, to betray honest men holding honest thoughts, this law has exposed itself. With this record staring us in the face, in addition to the threat of Anthony Comstock that he will yet entirely blot the free press out of life, this law has exposed its naked deformity and monstrosity, and we, as Liberals, as radical Liberals, know our duty. And, sir, what is that duty? To continue in the heat of the conflict, with the hot shot of truth, the cannonade of fact, the batteries of science, hurling them into the crumbling walls of the decaying church, the dying creeds, and the already shrouded priestcraft. The conflict between science and religion, between Freethought and priest-ridden dogma, has ever been active, and we cannot expect it to cease entirely in our own day. Faith is opposed to knowledge as ignorance to wisdom, as darkness to light; the very presence of the one forbids the other.

The efforts of Eusebius and Lactantius to deaden scientific thought, the efforts of Augustine to combat it, the efforts of Cosmas to stop it by dogmatism, the efforts of Boniface and Zachary to stop it by force; Copernicus escaping persecution only by death, Giordano Bruno burned alive as a monster of impiety, Galileo imprisoned and humiliated as the worst of unbelievers, Kepler hunted alive by Protestant and Catholic. Why did Ricetto, and Bruno, and Vanini, when the holy crucifix was presented to them to kiss in their hours of martyrdom, when the torch was about to be applied to the fagots piled about their naked bodies, pinioned with ropes as beasts to a block—why did they turn from the crucifix with looks of contempt and scorn? Simply because Christianity had been made to them symbolical and identical with the most horrible oppression of the mind. For fourteen years Roger Bacon was imprisoned as a martyr to science. He was released from prison, at the age of eighty, only to die. This persecuted martyr to truth and science was one of the earth's choicest men. Thousands of lives would hav been saved and much poverty and suffering prevented had Roger Bacon been permitted to develop his methods and plans, unmolested by the Church. Vesalius, the world's first and greatest anatomist, was hunted to death by men who supposed he was injuring religion. The invention of telegraphy was denounced as the heraldry of Antichrist and sin. How much more, indeed, of this same sad, sad history might be enumerated! Science has at last gained a foothold against her ancient enemy, the Church. This cannot be gainsaid; but this foothold has not been secured by the gentle, persuasive gibble-gabble of the conservative Liberals, but, by the outerying demands, the earnest, united efforts of Radicals. The word radical means thorough, means complete. The word radical means plow up and subsoil a field overgrown with thistles and briars; means tear down a structure that is falling to decay from its own rottenness, and, when the rubbish is cleared away, to commence anew, with foundations and walls based upon a rock, upon granite that centuries will not disturb, that ages cannot destroy. The word conservative means to preserve from radical change; means to preserve and maintain an institution intact, no matter what that institution is. The Church is in error because her doctrines are faulty. The conservative says, Maintain it; the radical says, Destroy it and giv us science, which is truth, and not error. The radical in every age has been a reformer, and, in the same degree as the conservative has had power, that radical has filled a martyr's grave. The quasi Liberal of to-day is conservative; he pleads expediency; he argues for policy. His desire for popularity, for a good name, for temporary fame, his determination to secure the approval of his fellow-men and to retain it when secured, unfit him for perceiving the truth, or his error. And if, indeed, he knows his error and comprehends the truth, his weak, vacillating, and cowardly nature prevents him from promulgating it.

The long list of martyrs above enumerated, who sacrificed every comfort and pleasure for truth and science, were extremely radical in their own day—were called heretics, were charged with attempting to destroy society. Radicals of to-day labor and struggle under the same false charge; but, friends, they will not falter Twenty-five hundred years ago, in the city of Athens, Socrates was convicted on a charge that he was attempting to demoralize the youth with his doctrines, and seeking to destroy society, because, when he perceived error, he fought it with ungloved hands, whether in the heart of monarch or home of peasant. He looked the inquisition square in the face, and the authorities which made it and fed it with fresh victims he proved to be cowards and knaves. The very court which condemned him to die he argued with, and proved its error, and refused, like Galileo, to surrender his convictions without proof. He says, "My body is yours, and you can take it, because it is subject to those laws which you control; but my mind, my thoughts, are my own, and those you cannot take, because they are governed by the laws of the Infinite."

I ask, friends, was Socrates a conservative, or was he a radical? We do not attack all law, or any law, except as it proves subversive of justice. On this ground we attack the Comstock law; and because of it the conservative declares we are in favor of obscenity. When the publications of our honest thoughts are declared by law to be publications of obsenity, hav we not a right to say, under the Constitution guaranteeing free speech and press, that we are in favor of our thoughts, and the publication and circulation thereof, obscene or otherwise? We hav, friends, most emphatically; and that right we shall exercise as long as brain does pulsate, or heart does throb. If the Constitution is interpreted to recognize the right of mental servitude as it has been interpreted to recognize the right of physical servitude, then in the words of Garrison, let us declare one and all, "That the Constitution is a league of the devil and a covenant with hell." The principle so long recognized and invoked in our criminal courts, that better a score of guilty men escape than a single innocent one suffer, is notoriously ignored by our holy Christian courts, if perchance the innocent are infidels to Christianity; and it will long continue so if the Liberals cannot secure a respect for their infidelity. But this work is the work of bold and defiant radicals to whose lot it has fallen to clear the way for others to reap the benefit. As in the broad fields of the West yet untouched by hand of man, so in new fields of reform, social, political, and religious, the work of clearing away, breaking up, and tearing down, falls on the shoulders of the sturdy few. The pioneer of the forest sacrifices all comfort and endures every privation, surrounded by naked savages and roaring beasts, receiving consolasion only in the bosom of his family, liability existing each night that in the morning the sun would thine on a heap of ashes, a few glistening bones, and trails of blood, but he is happy and satisfied. It is in this work, this martyrdom, this heroic self-sacrifice, that western civilization had its origin, its animus and its life. Ah, friends, need I apply this lesson, written in letters of bright, red blood, to the sweet growth of freedom and liberty in nearly every department of thought? We hav grown, but grown through the blood of the martyr. We hav grown, but only through pioneer and patriot, whose very lives were dedicated to their work. There still remain forests of reform yet untouched by hand of man. The work is for the pioneer, the radical.

The Comstock laws and the agitation for their repeal is our work. They are a blot on the fair escutcheon of our nation, and we say repeal them or any other law that empowers a court to decree that our thoughts are obscene and immoral and as such should be surpressed. Do away with any law that makes a postmaster, custom official, or any individual or community of individuals a judge and court over our thoughts and opinions. We shall succeed; only patience and labor is needed to accomplished our purpose. We are opposed by our seeming friends, but their opposition availeth little. We care not for applause, they seek it. In the words of Franklin: "Applause waits on success. The fickle multitude, like the light straw that floats along the stream, glide with the current still, and follow fortune."

We believe, with the poet, that "he is a freeman whom the truth makes free, and all are slaves beside. Oh giv me liberty, for even Paradise my prison, still I should long to leap the crystal walls."

Deity Defined by a Spirit.

FRIEND BENNETT: There is no paper for whose delivery I watch with more impatience than your TRUTH SEEKER. I admire the fearlessness with which you handle all subjects conducive to a better and more harmonious understanding of ourselves and the proper relation each member of the human family bears to his fellows, piercing hypocritical and venerable assumptions with the probe of fairness until you strike the solid bed-rock of truth.

It is no secret to you that I am a Spiritualist, and doubtless you hav hundreds of readers of this same strata of knowledge, but feeling as I sincerely do for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and for the prosperity of your public repertory for the sale of Liberal works,— Spiritualist as I am, I feel impressed to warn you of the impending peril of opening your columns to the discussion of Spiritualism. Not that I fear Spiritualism would suffer in the conflict, but it is a topic which cannot be settled by the pen. The bulk of your subscribers are doubtless skeptics of the "finality" or "obliviate" order, to whom this subject must be highly repugnant. It will not do to hav the usefulness of THE TRUTH SEEKER impaired by the wrangling of unwise disputants on either side. In fact, so repulsive is this subject to some skeptics that they might, in their antipathy—in spite of its championship for truth—repudiate your valuable paper.

What I would caution you more particularly against is not to allow your paper to be made the battle-ground for either Spiritual enthusiasts or bullet headed skeptics. A battle-field is a desolate and ragged looking place after a heavy-fought battle. And yet I am not such an advocate for moral cowardice as to suppose that any Liberal mind could be offended at the statements of singular and out-of-the way facts, but would leave their solution to their plain common sense. For myself, it is a sufficient triumph to observe the increasing number of searchers after truth and witness the rapid demolition of the myths of superstition and the tyrannies of priestcraft.

It is not strange when one comes seriously to reflect upon it, that sensible people should revolt at the idea of looking at the subject of Spiritualism. There is something on the face of it so funny and ridiculous in grave people, yes, professors of divinity, sitting around, in daylight or lamplight, a common pine kitchen table waiting for the mysterious rappings or for the tipping movements! For myself, I can freely excuse skeptics, and can afford to bear all their jeers and merriment. The venerated name of Franklin stands deservedly high in the calendar of worthies as a philosopher and a fearless thinker; and yet, be it remembered, he denounced the immortal Mesmer, while in Paris, as a fraud and impostor. Of Galvanni, the discoverer of metallic electricity, Franklin when told of his embryotic discovery through the nervous twitching of a frog's leg, treated the statement as a subject for merriment. And yet the twitching of a frog's leg, simple as it was, has twitched the world into an onward condition which has astonished even Tyndall.

Just emerging as the thinking world is from the cruel and pretentious claims of the priesthood, and its authority of, "God spake unto Moses these words, saying," etc., etc., is it to be wondered at that all thoughtful minds should at first look at the whole subject with repellant disgust? I hav great respect for the feelings of a good, hard-headed, honest skeptic. He is a man to be commiserated. He is a come-outer from the rascalities, hypocrisies, and sanctimonious rottenness of the fashionable priesthood. He can well be pardoned as he casts his eyes suspiciously and captiously around and suspects every new and wonderful unfoldment in nature as only another monkish trick got up to prey upon the credulity of man. I hav great respect for and admire such minds, for, to tell the truth, I belong to that class myself.

I was highly pleased with the last package I received from you through friend Mason. Your Truth Seeker Leaflets are just the thing for distribution; they prompt inquiry after truth. But I find even in this matter I must use tact and judgment. Consideration must be used in regard to your recipient's power of mental digestion; for I bear in mind the remark made by Jesus (or by one of his biographers) to his companions: "There are many things I could tell you, but ye cannot bear them now." He seemed fearful of over-straining their credulity. I am satisfied that some of our "materializing" mediums are not acting upon his suggestion. They are a little ahead of time. No wonder our extreme "obliviates" scoff. Their stomachs are too weak, and unprepared for such strong diet.

I commenced my examination of Spiritualism in 1851, and I think I was the first who held private circles in his own dwelling in Williamsburg, now Brooklyn, E. D. Of the various well-attested phenomena which my friends and self witnessed at that time, I shall avoid taxing credulity in mentioning, as I think it would be more interesting to some of your readers to know what kind of philosophy (without comment) they sometimes teach, of which the following is a copy.

It purported to come from the spirit of an esteemed sister, who had been dead over thirty years. The medium, a young girl, a stranger to myself and in the place—was what was known as a "rapping" or detonating medium. In education and mind she was far from being a philosopher:

"Dear brother D——d: Attract a high and holy order of spirits around you by pondering and placing your spirit mind upon Deity. I hav before requested you to do this. By Deity I mean to take him as he is, all in all. All light, all matter, all living matter, and that which seems to you inanimate; all matter which moves and acts from the will and influence of individual spirit. I would hav you study and question on these points; for all things that hav motion—and there is naught without—move in Deity and form a part of Deity; and you cannot be made in the image of Deity or God, for individual spirit forms a mite in the great mass of omnipotent matter or spirit, which is God. Thence let your watchword be Onward, and remember me, as ever, to be your affectionate sister, ANN."

Friend Bennett, it is a very remarkable circumstance that in all my intercourse with spirits (and my communications are voluminous and cover a great number of years) I hav never found one who said he or she had seen or ever expected to see Jesus, or any of that holy class. Is it possible I am too wicked to be approached? An old orthodox saint assures me that by dealing with spirits I am sinning away my day of grace; that I am actually flying in the face of God!

Since reading your "Champions of the Church," wherein you faithfully record the cruelties and butcheries which these Christian heroes inflicted upon each other, all in the name of the Prince of Peace, God's favorite deputy, a new and startling idea has burst upon me—whether there is not danger of being too good! The fact is, the world has very unsettled ideas of goodness; so much so that many good-meaning men in all ages hav been poisoned, crucified, hung, and roasted because they hav not come up to the theological standard. When I observe things from a humanitarian standpoint I am afraid that you, myself, yes, and many of your readers, are really too good to be Christians!

Now, friend Bennett, if it should so happen that the orthodox quidnuncs should succeed in their God-in-the-Constitution scheme, I think it would be best for us Infidels to keep shady. With Ingersoll, Elmina, yourself, and hundreds I know of I think it will go hard. At my advanced time of life, with me it will hardly make much matter. I thought best to throw out this suggestion, and don't forget that pious Anthony is sneaking around with the measuring end of theological purity. Yours for truth,

DAVID BRUCE.

THE greatest cataract in the world is the Falls of Niagara where the water from the great upper lakes forms a river three-fourths of a mile in width, and then, being suddenly contracted, plunges over the rocks in two columns to the depth of 165 feet.

Communications.

Profanity and Obscenity.

Perhaps I can throw a little light upon the question what obscenity really is by giving two parallel definitions:

Profanity: want of due regard for the sacredness of religion.

Obscenity: want of due regard for the sacredness of sex.

There is always a tendency on the part of low-minded persons to treat the most sacred things with contempt, or at least without reverence. Profane language and obscene language both assume that there is a sacredness which the speaker wilfully violates. The ancient Hebrews had a name for God which was too sacred to be spoken at all; but we do not learn that it made them regard him with any more real reverence. And if we hav words or expressions relating to sex which cannot be printed, it is no indication of real reverence for true sexual relations. A religious man does not fear that his reverent use of the sacred words of religion will lead to profanity; nor should any pure-minded man fear that the reverent use of words and expressions relating to sex will lead to obscenity.

Blasphemous representations or acts come within my definition of profanity. The man who represents by a picture or indicates by an act, a disregard for the sacredness of the religion of his country, attempting to stimulate unholy feelings, is profane as well as blasphemous. The man who, by a picture or by an act, manifests a disregard for the sacredness of sex, attempting to stimulate unchaste feelings, is obscene.

It is not, then, the words that are profane or obscene, if they indicate proper ideas. Representations of the sexual organs are not obscene, for it is necessary that they should be represented in anatomical books. But it is the intent or the purpose of the language, or the representation or the act which determines whether or not it is obscene.

The intent of the writer of "Cupid's Yokes," which is to be judged of by his language, is the criterion by which we are to determine whether or not it is obscene. It is evident that if the author is right in his views, there is no disregard for the sacredness of sex. On the contrary, he believes that he is ennobling sexual relations. But I may mention two respects in which his views differ from those generally entertained. He believes that a woman exposed to undesired maternity has a right to prevent conception; and he believes that a man and a woman, not married to each other, may sleep together in innocence, by which I understand him to mean in continence and without unchaste desires. But if this makes his book obscene, because the public sentiment still sanctions enforced maternity, and regards sleeping together as necessarily a temptation to unchastity, then a missionary preaching to the heathen is necessarily profane; for his ideas of religion, however sincere or reverent he may be, differ from those of the country in which he preaches. Any principle upon which the author of "Cupid's Yokes" can be imprisoned for writing or publishing it, or upon which others can be imprisoned for selling it, would demand more severe punishment for those who teach views of religion different from those generally accepted, since the relations of man to his Maker must necessarily be higher than those of man to woman.

JUSTITIA.

Letter from Horace Seaver.

INVESTIGATOR OFFICE, BOSTON, Nov. 30, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed please find five dollars, the sum which I promised you at Watkins last summer, to help a little in your forthcoming trial. I am sorry the amount is not ten times more, for I hav the disposition to giv it, but unfortunately for you I am not rich. I hope, however, that even this sum which I send may not be needed by reason of your case being dropped by the Court, or passed over in default. If so, please accept the inclosed as a New Year's present.

I also send you my kind regards, and with them the sincere wish that yourself, our mutual friend W. S. Bell, and Miss Tilton may hav a speedy deliverance at your approaching trial, and never again fall into "the hands of the Philistines." HORACE SEAVER.

[Many thanks to Friend Seaver for his donation, and for his kindly words and friendly sympathy. When our enemies show the disposition to annoy us and persecute us for opinion's sake, it is very pleasant to feel that friends stand by us ready to sustain us by their sympathy and material aid. May we ever prove worthy of the confidence thus evinced—ED. T. S.]

Letter from Henry Damon.

27 BERWICK PARK, BOSTON, MASS., NOV. 24, 1878.

Prof. A. L. Rawson, Secretary of N. L. L., Dear Sir: Yours of Nov. 21st, informing me of my appointment as Chairman of the Executive Committee for the state of Massachusetts, is duly received. Profoundly grateful for the great honor you hav done me, and sensible of my incapacity to fill so responsible a position as it truly deserves, I shall endeavor, to the best of my ability, to work for the interests of the National Liberal League throughout my native state. I hav associated with me Messrs. Verity and Rivers of Boston, whose active labors for the cause and executive capacities are well known, and shall fill the balance of the Committee with gentlemen from other sections of the state as soon as possible, and you may look to old Massachusetts with a reasonable expectation that a goodly number of new leagues will be organized, and our principles set forth to the people during the coming winter. I most sincerely echo the sentiments of Mr. Green, that we may "now all go to work," and forget past differences, uniting in spirit to carry out the great objects of the League, even if we are obliged to move on the enemy in two separate batallions, under two separate leaders; and when the victory is won, if happily it may be done in our day and generation, then will the two National Liberal Leagues merge into one grand celebration of united brethren, and clasp hands in jubilee that the work our fathers begun for liberty is accomplished, and the state secularized for the equal rights of all. Then each party will applaud the deeds done for the cause by the other, and the only strife will be to render due justice to the honest motives of all. Work is the great panacea for all ailments and irritating differences of the two National Liberal Leagues, and therefore let each section stop firing at the other, and right about face to the common enemy of both, who now are rejoicing at our family feud. May their gladness be soon turned to mourning, and all Liberal Leagues of both factions cease to give them any comfort or encouragement, is the earnest wish of Yours truly, HENRY DAMON.

Action of the Fourth N. Y. League.

At a meeting of the Fourth New York Liberal League, held Sunday evening, Dec. 1, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the Fourth New York Liberal League unanimously demand the repeal of the Comstock laws, for the reason that they are unconstitutional and are capable of being, and hav been, so construed as to interfere with Liberty of opinion regarding religious, medical, and social questions.

Resolved, That while we are in favor of any and all Constitutional laws looking to the suppression of crime and the punishment of criminals, we demand that no laws shall be passed by the General Government which in any way give a Government officer any power as censor of the opinions of the people.

Resolved, That we regard the action of the minority at Syracuse as hasty and ill-advised, without sufficient justification, and tending to create ill-feeling where there should be harmony, and that we hope the Local Leagues of the country will not giv the leaders of the new League aid and comfort by owning allegiance to the newly formed League.

Resolved, That we condemn, and pronounce false, the statements made by some of the members of the new League, the Boston Index, and other papers, to the effect that the majority of the Congress are in sympathy with the venders of impurity.

Resolved, That we hope the Leagues of the country, both national and local, will devote themselves to the righteous work in which we are engaged, ignoring all differences of opinion in minor matters, giving the hand of friendship and fellowship to all reformers who are really striving to make pleasanter the home of the universal family, and ever remember that in unity there is strength, but that with mutiny in our camp we shall be an easy prey to the vigilant enemy ever watching and praying for our defeat. Let us join forces, that we may be, through the omnipotent justice of our cause, as impregnable as the serried ranks of the old-time English archers.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Liberal papers. DANIEL E. RYAN, President.

EUGENE M. MACDONALD, Secretary.

Action of the Palmyra Liberal League.

At the meeting of the Palmyra Liberal League, on Sunday, Nov. 24, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Resolved, That we indorse the action of the Congress of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves for the unconditional repeal of the so-called Comstock postal law, believing it to be unconstitutional and dangerous to personal liberty.

Resolved, That denouncing priestly intolerance, we pledge ourselves anew to the earnest support of the National Liberal League, and to the principles for which we are united.

H. M. NORTH, L. B. KEELER, } Committee.

To the Auxiliary Liberal Leagues.

Several of the auxiliary Liberal Leagues hav already taken action on the question of remaining in the old League under the leadership of the Hon. Elizur Wright, or seceding and joining the new League led by Mr. Abbot. It is desirable that all the Leagues should take such action as soon as it may be convenient to hav a meeting for that purpose. By so doing and reporting to the Secretaries of both National Leagues, the directors of each will be the better able to lay out their work for the coming year.

There never was more need of just the kind of work that the National Liberal League proposes to do, and if the letters received here indicate the spirit of the people in the different sections of the country, the workers in the new field will be strong in numbers and resolute of purpose. Let us aim to organize a thousand auxiliary Leagues during the coming year, that we may hav a thousand centers from which to advocate the demands of Liberalism in the matter of equal taxation for all persons or societies; equal respect and protection for the religious opinions of all persons or societies; the use of public money for Governmental purposes only; protection of all citizens of the United States at home or abroad; and the national supervision of a secular, elemental education.

This work will be effectually done under the leadership of our time-honored President, Elizur Wright, who has all his life been a zealous champion of human rights. It will be well done also under the lead of Mr. Francis E. Abbot, for the work is one of principle more than of men. If both Leagues would show a list of a thousand auxiliaries during 1879, the cause would become of national importance at once. However rapid or slow our progress may be, let us be always right in principle and action, trusting to time to correct any errors that may happen through ignorance or prejudice. Education, information, and knowledge are the great factors of true progress.

Once more, may I repeat, please be prompt in calling the auxiliary Leagues together, deciding the future connection, and in sending the report to the Secretaries.

A. L. RAWSON, Sec. N. L. L.,
34 Bond street, New York.

An Apology for the Ex-Clergy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A correspondent (T. C. L.) in your paper of the 21st of September, in a criticism on the "Rev." Mr. Abbot and the "Rev." Clark, quotes as a motto, "Once a priest, always a priest," and then adds, "The clerical virus once struck in can never be struck out. It is as ineradicable as witch-grass or Canada thistle. Liberalism cannot so inoculate the old stock, but it will relish of it."

It cannot be denied that dogmatism, self-conceit, arrogance, and a strong disposition to dominate are, and always hav been, striking features in the character of the clergy. They spring forth and grow in them as naturally as grass grows in May on rich soil after a three days' gentle and warm rain. They are the legitimate growth from the root doctrine of all the creeds of Christendom that a priest or minister of the gospel is an ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from the court of heaven to that province of the monarch's dominions called the earth, which long has been, and still is, in revolt against his authority, and that his function is to offer the rebels, and persuade them to accept, terms of salvation from eternal hell-fire. Not only so, but in the commission itself which the Almighty King givs this functionary, through his accredited agency, he so defers to the ambassador that he pledges himself to ratify all his official acts, saying, in these express terms, "Whatsoever ye bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; whosoever's sins ye remit they are remitted; and whosoever's sins ye retain they are retained." Therefore the priest in the Church of England says, in his form of absolution, "I absolve thee from all thy sins," etc.

Now, is it strange that a man who believes this theory, and who is invested with this divine authority, and feels it in the marrow of his bones, should dictate and domineer as the clergy do? especially when the people composing the church humbly and devoutly acknowledge the claim, and fear, and tremble at the solemn thought that the remission or retention of their sins by the clergy is ratified in heaven? I hav known a clodhopper, of the feeblest texture of brain, so intoxicated with this ambassadorship idea, when he saw his preacher exercising his functions in "fencing the tables" on a sacramental occasion, that he would leave his father's plow, get a smattering of education at a church college and theological seminary, be ordained, and then come out a full-fledged—no, I was not going to say goose, as I know you would suggest, but—ambassador of the true Jesus Christ, his robes of office fluttering in the wind, and the simple rustics dazed with astonishment and fear at his ambassadorial importance.

As the Spanish Envoy left Saratoga last summer declining to pay his livery-stable bill, because, by the law of nations, he was exempted from such vulgar necessities, so the ambassadors from the court of heaven are shielded from annoyance by the divine injunction, "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm." Is it any wonder that the esprit du corps should strike its roots deeply into his character? Only think of the almost sovereign power a priest or clergyman has—to absolve a man from his sins and send him to heaven a redeemed sinner, or fasten his sins upon him and send him down to eternal burnings!

I am simply explaining how it comes to pass that the "clerical virus," like the poison of a rattlesnake in the blood, permeates the whole man from crown to sole and makes him what he is. Your correspondent dislikes even the dregs of this pretentiousness in an ex-Rev. who is a Radical. And the venerable Mr. Hazard, the distinguished advocate of Spiritualism in Providence, Rhode Island, complains that in the ranks of the Spiritualists, who call no man rabbi, the ex-clergy show similar signs that the old lesson of dogmatism still exists in them and evinces itself in their priestly demeanor.

I hav no language sufficiently strong to express my scorn and abhorrence of this ambassadorship idea. I hav taken the most peaceful medicine of a drastic nature to purge it out of myself, and, till I saw Father Hazard's and T. C. L.'s criticisms, felt that the work was completely done. But although I hav never pushed myself forward in the Radical ranks, considering it sufficient honor to do yeoman's service as a private soldier, since the eye cannot see itself, I fear that all those of us who are so unfortunate as to hav been clergymen must take, henceforth, back seats in the chariot of reform, and not presume to touch the reins, for fear the horses run off.

But I deny the truth of the motto, "Once a priest, always a priest." The charge is too sweeping. While I admit that it is generally true, it is false in particular cases. I once knew of a boy who was bitten by a copperhead in the field, and the poison was eliminated from his system and his life saved by his drinking a tin cup full of rye whiskey. In like manner, clergymen who hav outgrown their creeds and demitted their office hav rendered valuable service to the cause of humanity without giving any offense to their coworkers by their ex cathedra spirit. A considerable number of clergymen joined the anti-slavery cause during the thirty years of the struggle, but they all dropped their official robes when they stepped upon the anti-slavery platform. Parker Pillsbury, Henry C. Wright, Waring R. Robinson, Dr. Brisbane, Samuel May, and many others who were either complete or inchoate clergymen, were distinguished leaders in the cause; but no one ever heard it charged that they evinced any spirit of dogmatism. If there were any dregs of this kind in their characters, they were overwhelmed and eclipsed entirely by a patriotic and humanitarian devotion to the cause of the slave. And in the still more humane work of liberating the souls of our countrymen from the galling chains of superstition, I do not see why the same class of men may not render acceptable service without incurring the reproach of their fellow-laborers as being presuming and dogmatic.

Now, if I were as thin in the skin as some persons I know, I would take mortal offense at the sweeping reproach of T. C. L. and his implied invitation that all who were once clergymen should retire into the obscurest corner of the field of action. But in the holy war now waging against superstition, none of my fellow-soldiers can wound my feelings unless he designs to do so. The sparks that fly from the collision of mind with mind among honest and sincere men, should fall on water, and not nitro-glycerine.

AN EX-CLERGYMAN.

Enon Valley, Penn., September 29, 1878.

Extract from a Lecture on Health

BEFORE THE JOHN STUART MILL LIBERAL LEAGUE (NO. 2), SYRACUSE, N. Y., NOV. 17, 1878, BY ONE OF THE MEMBERS.

I define health as the harmony of all the life forces with each other and with the surroundings. It is wholeness, soundness of body and mind—the Creator's best gift. Without it, life is only a burden; with it, everything is a delight. For it, when once it is impaired, men will giv years of patient endeavor and everything which they possess. Yet there is no gift of life which is so wantonly wasted. People liv as if they knew its sources to be infinite and inexhaustible, and when, by their ignorance or folly, it is impaired, they run to the doctor with a faith that is fairly pathetic, expecting that he will turn to his bottle and pour them out a dose which shall more than supply their lavish waste. But I want you to know, young men, that this faith is supremely baseless. I want you to know, now, in the days of your youth, that the fountains of life and health are not exhaustless, and that, once emptied, they can never be refilled. I think it must be evident to every one, as soon as he thinks about it, that one's life and health can be only a given quantity. Hence if it is once wasted it cannot be replaced. For this reason the function of the real physician is not so much to restore health as to teach people how to preserve it. This greatest of goods is to be preserved, not wasted; for, once it is lost or impaired, it can never be so restored that the man shall be what he was, or would hav been, if it had not been impaired. This is a point which, it seems to me, is almost universally overlooked; and everybody supposes if they get well after being sick, they are just as well as if they had never been ill. But a moment's reflection will, I think, show any one that such supposition is false. Sickness is always a great tax on the life forces, and it is a philosophic principle that forces once used cannot be returned to the same use. Hence the importance that people should be taught the inestimable value of health and the best way to preserve it.

If all this is true, and I can get you to see it, you cannot fail to put a new estimate on health, and hav an increasing care not to impair it. If when we hav impaired it we hav only to go to the doctor and he will make us as good as new again, as a watchmaker would replace a broken spring in a watch, then health has one value; but if, as I hav attempted to show, the once used force can never be replaced, that the health can never be what it was or would hav been, then it has quite another and higher value. Perfect health is perfect life—physical, mental, and moral—and, like all other perfection, is unattainable by finite creatures. Yet the mass of the people who hav attained to adult age hav what is termed good health; that is, the life forces are in such harmony with each other and the surroundings that the people are comfortable and enjoy life. But, for all this, fully one-half the human race are born into conditions so out of harmony that they cannot sustain life, and they die before they are five years old. They hav no soundness or wholeness, and human wisdom has not yet discovered the methods by which their life forces can be brought into accord with each other and the conditions so as to make it possible for them to continue. Men hav learned to do better than this with their horses and cattle. Their young almost entirely come to maturity, because we are careful that only the superior ones shall hav progeny. The chief, I had almost said the only, reason why one-half of the human race die in infancy is, that they are not well born, to begin with. Will the time ever come when the man in feeble health, whose physical or moral forces are weakened, will perceive that, since like begets like, he has no right to bring offspring into this world, because it is certain as natural law that he will bequeath to them his own infirmities and sufferings? No more has the robust man any right to beget children of a sickly woman, and for the same reason.

Just here, young men, is a point I want you to think of. Ponder it well, and see that you gain such control of yourselves that you do not bring into this world children who shall hav a right forever to curse you for their infirmities. It has happened to me several times to hear such curses, and they are deep and bitter. Right here is a point where people need instruction. This is the particular in which every consideration of public and individual well-being requires that men should hav self-control. I say men, for they are the begetters of children. Upon them rests the whole responsibility, and they ought to be so educated and hav such control of themselves that offspring should never be the result of accident. They ought to hav such knowledge that, marrying, they would hav supreme regard to the health, both physical and moral, of the woman to be made a wife. Just see how much care a man giv's to the pedigree of his stock! How infinitely more important that he should regard the pedigree of the woman he would make his wife, or that a woman should consider the ancestry of the man she would marry! He has a right to know this thoroughly, and she has a right to the same knowledge of him. The law of heredity applies alike to men and animals. It is a wickedness which nature punishes without mercy to beget children of impure stock. If there are any here tormented with the ills of hereditary disease, let them hear me, and determine now that they will so master themselves that they will never bequeath their infirmities to another. So doing, if they hav none to bless them, they will hav none who may rightfully curse them, and that always.

Here we come down to the basis of all human depravity, which is so great that many theologians hav believed and taught that it was total. Most people are here as the result of men's gross and uncontrolled passions. Multitudes of children come not because they are wanted, but wholly because men's worse than brutish passions must be gratified. I say worse than brutish, and I say it deliberately; for, so far as I know, man is the only animal who will ever enforce maternity on the female without her solicitation. There is no brute so mean as that. How can children be healthy and harmonious with themselves and the conditions, who are thus brought here by a lust whose only wish is that they would not come? Uninvited guests in this world, how can they be at their ease? The only wonder is that there are so few devils as there are. This is the department of human life where there is the least self control, yet self control here is, it seems to me, the foundation of all morality.

[From The Boston Commonwealth.]

Pyrotechnic Rhetoric.

Rev. Joseph Cook, a week ago, in the prelude to his Monday lecture, went off in one of his worst spasms of lurid objurgation, the occasion being the late Liberal League Session at Syracuse, N. Y., when that body divided on the question of demanding the repeal of the Congressional law pertaining to the use of the mail for the dissemination of improper literature. Every intelligent reader knows that the mission of the Liberal League is to bring about an entire separation of Church and State—in other words, to allow religion or theology to stand on its own merits, while government concerns itself solely with the political or secular affairs of the people. It is almost as well known that gross abuses to individuals and property hav come through Mr. Anthony Comstock's interpretation of what is improper literature—in the suppression of such as he has deemed obnoxious, he being aided by the provisions of the law in question. It is not surprising, therefore, that many persons hav thought the better way of getting rid of Comstock—who, we must confess, sometimes seems hardly to know the difference between a work of art and an obscene figure—to repeal the law under which he gets his authority to supervise the methods and morals of his fellow-citizens who hav no purpose nor desire to minister to prurient gratification. The Liberal League, naturally, in the pursuit of its mission, would hav its attention directed to this effort of Comstock to giv his operations under the civil law the bias of his denominational prejudices. The question of the circulation of obscenity is a wholly different one, as we understand it, from that of the privilege of a single individual to pronounce upon the turpitude of a publisher or author. While Comstock is not powerful enough to convict and punish, he is, unfortunately, powerful enough to cause to be arrested and annoyed, as in the case of a lady physiologist in New York, some very worthy people.

Joseph Cook, knowing these things as well as anybody of equal intelligence, in his "prelude" last week, arraigns the Free Religionists as the sympathizers with obscenity and lewdness! He knows that the Free Religious Association has no more connection with the Liberal League than the American Missionary Association has with the Republican party, though, as is most probable, members of one belong to the other. In their corporate capacity and particular work they are as dissimilar as any two independent organizations. He knows, too, as well as anybody, that the Free Religious movement has for its primal object the discovery and acceptance of moral truths in whatever system of religion and from whatever people. It is the welcoming of all lofty thought and high endeavor, in whatever age and from whatever faith, as the correlative and adjunct of Christianity. And he knows that men like Rev. Messrs. Bartol, Dudley, Savage, Bisbee, and Hinckley, in our community, Rev. Messrs. Frothingham, Chadwick, Longfellow, and Johnson, in other localities, are sympathetic with the Free Religious movement—men who hav been as pronounced against all vileness and social degradation as any men in the land—who hav preached and spoken against Freelove and all its abominations more often and more effectively than any other similar number of clergymen of any name. And yet, for the purpose of casting reproach upon these excellent teachers, this pretentious high moral lecturer does not hesitate to bear false witness against them by throwing out the impression, repeated over and over again, that they are in sympathy with the opponents of Comstock, in favor of the repeal of the obscenity law, and part and parcel with all that is lewd and loose in our social state! We giv his intelligent hearers the credit of knowing that Mr. Cook was slandering his betters, and that they will soon come to the conclusion that such attacks as this will not advance the cause for which the "Monday lectureship" was instituted.

[From The Boston Commonwealth.]

Rev. Joseph Cook and the Use of Hard Names.

Editor Commonwealth: Rev. Joseph Cook is reported as saying, in his lecture of the 14th inst.: "A Free-Religious Infidel lecturer has lately been arrested in Boston and sent to Dedham Jail for making an immoral use of the mail. A meeting in sympathy with this public criminal was held by Free-Religious Infidels in Boston, in Faneuil Hall." About twelve years ago a clergyman in Dorchester, in an evening address delivered to his people in the church, saw fit to make an allusion to a young man in a neighboring town, and said: "He is either a fool or a knave." The gentleman of whom the clergyman thus spoke was then a resident of a town in which he had been brought up from his youth, and by those who best knew him was regarded as an honest, upright business man and citizen, of more than ordinary intelligence. The only reason known why the above-mentioned minister should hav spoken of him in so severe a manner was because the gentleman, in a lecture delivered not long before, had seen fit to express an opinion entirely different from the reverend gentleman's about the benefit or utility of Sunday-schools. "This fool or knave," as the clergyman called him, removed, some years ago, to another town in Massachusetts, and opened a school for young men, giving instruction in business, and some other branches of knowledge not fully attended to in common schools. And, though not abating one jot or tittle of his former private radical views, he has so far had the confidence of the community as a competent teacher and a conscientious, upright, honest man, that parents of widely different religious views send their sons to his school. We mention the above to show how easily clergymen may be mistaken in their views of men with whom they hav no personal acquaintance. Mr. Cook speaks of Mr. Heywood as an "Infidel," afterwards as "a public criminal." The writer of this has not read Mr. Heywood's book, and is unable to say whether he is unjustly incarcerated or not; but gentlemen of intelligence and high standing in the community think that his imprisonment is not just. We remember the time when that good man, Sylvester Graham, came near being mobbed in Boston because he advertised to giv a lecture on physiology to women only—on subjects of vital importance to the human family.

The epithet "Infidel" seems to hav lost much of its force since it was applied so freely to Abolitionists and come-outers from the pro-slavery churches forty years ago. We remember hearing Wendell Phillips once say, in presence of a large audience in Boston: "If I had children I would wish to leave them no richer legacy than this inscription on my tombstone: When the ministers in Boston preached in favor of negro slavery, men called him an Infidel." Slavery, it is well known, fostered and encouraged licentiousness, and marriage was of no great account when it stood in the way of the interest or whims of the master. A Southern lady of high character and intelligence has said that "the female slave, however fair she may hav become by the various commingling of her progenitors, or whatever her mental or moral acquirements, knows that she is a slave, and, as such, powerless beneath the whims or fancies of her master. If he casts on her a desiring eye she knows she must submit. There is no way of escape; and her only thought is that the more gracefully she yields the stronger and longer hold she may, perchance, retain upon the brutal appetite of her master. Still, she feels her degradation, and so do others with whom she is connected. She has parents, brothers and sisters, a lover, perhaps, all of whom suffer through and with her, and in whose hearts spring up roots of bitterness which are destined to grow into trees whose branches will sooner or later overshadow the whole land."

Many years ago, when Mr. Cook's associates in the ministry were in full fellowship with the pro-slavery ministers whose influence was in favor of negro slavery, Mr. Heywood, just from college, joined in with the despised abolitionists for the overthrow of that system of iniquity. In view of these things, and of the fact that Mr. Cook was addressing an audience in this city where congregational pulpits had been used in favor of slavery and the fugitive-slave law, it would hav been more appropriate and consistent for him if he had tempered his language toward Mr. Heywood with mercy and charity. H. W. B.

Neponset, Nov. 25th, 1878.

To the Liberals in Towns within 100 Miles of La Harpe, Ill.

S. Palmer, La Harpe, Ill., paid $50 cash out of his own pocket, besides what Mr. Underwood, myself, and a few others hav paid, toward defraying expenses of Freethought meeting there. Mr. Palmer has sickness in his family. Will Liberals remit him what they can afford—$5, $3, $2, $1, or 50 cents? We cannot be Liberal if not just.

W. F. JAMIESON.

HOW TO READ, and Hints in Choosing the Best Books, with a classified list of works of Biography, History, Criticism, Fine Arts, Fiction, Poetry, Religion, Science, Language, etc. By Amelie V. Petit. Pp. 220. 12mo, cloth. Price $1 00. S. R. WELLS & Co., Publishers, 737 Broadway, N. Y.

This new work is the result of a conscientious effort to meet a public demand for a compact manual or treatise supplying information with regard to books and authors. People who hav not read much, people who are desirous of obtaining trustworthy advice with regard to the selection of books suitable for their children's reading, people who are interested in the collection of books for personal or public purposes, societies that are forming libraries, and, in fact, all who are interested in books, will find in "How to Read" very important aid. Not only does it contain the titles of thousands of volumes on about all the subjects currently discussed in the English tongue, but also carefully prepared criticisms of many authors of eminence, dead and living, and useful hints on the books suitable for self-improvement. Though the author may err in his estimate of the value of bilbical literature, his aim has been to meet fully the common inquiries of reading people with regard to books and authors, and we doubt not that publishers generally will welcome the volume as a help in what is often a matter of much perplexity—to send a correspondent just what he wants.

A BRITISH farmer has collected and planted 600 varieties of potatoes. The crop will furnish an opportunity to correct the existing potato nomenclature.

The Radical Pulpit.

Have We Still a Religion?—Concluded.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

It has been believed by some that when we said, Deed, and not creed, we sought to abandon the religious issues; that we sought to confine ourselves to the practical good. Ah, but in this practical age good is the very substance of religion. Good is an infinite quantity. To aspire after the good, therefore, is to aspire after the infinite; and if the definition of religion be, the relations of finite man to the infinite, then, indeed, have we achieved the highest, loftiest, and fullest type of religion in our impersonal worship of absolute justice, absolute purity, and absolute love.

The meaning of this statement will become clearer when I call your attention to an answer which has been given to the same question by one of the most eminent men of our time—by David Frederick Strauss. About six years ago Strauss published a work entitled "The Old Faith and the New." He had already earned distinction of another field. He was that gigantic miner and sapper in Christianity who delved under its foundations until the ruin came down amid disaster. He had looked with pain upon the idolatrous worship of the Bible; and in his "Life of Jesus" he strove to show how it was made up of ancient traditions, mingled with some new superstitions, and how little of the New Testament could be attributed to the authorship of Jesus himself. So when this man who had so fearlessly arrayed himself against the religious prejudices of the day—when this man came once more before the public and claimed to tell them not only concerning the old faith which he had so terribly assaulted, but also to tell them of the new faith which he would erect upon the ruins of the old, it is not strange that the world listened in anxious, breathless expectancy to hear what his message of the new faith might be. I believe that Strauss has failed, and in pointing out his error I hope to force into all the greater prominence, and into bolder relief, that which I am convinced is the only real and lasting basis of religious innovation. He begins his work, "The Old Faith and the New," by asking the question, Are we still Christians? to which he gives the negative answer, as was to be expected. No, we are not. Then comes the weightier question, Have we still a religion? And this question he subdivides, and asks, First, Do you believe in a personal God? He says, No. The tendency of all philosophy is opposed to the assumption of a personal God; philosophy requires the illimitable; personality is limited. Secondly, modern astronomy is opposed to the assumption of a personal God; modern astronomy makes it very difficult to conceive of a personal God, for modern astronomy has shown us that this firmament which we had supposed to be a vault of crystalline blue, containing only that heaven where God sits on his throne, surrounded by his angels, is really resolved into an infinitude of worlds, and that the idea of the firmament we have called heaven is a mere poetical illusion; and so, as Strauss puts it, the personal God has lost his house; and, what is more, the angels have also vanished, and the personal God has lost his servants. If he has no longer a home from which to thunder his missiles of war, nor vassals to cringe before him, what element of personality is left in your personal God? He reasons thus, conforming to the popular prejudice. But he goes more deeply into the subject. He says that man arrives at the limits beyond which he is incapable of examining clearly, and he looks down into the mists of the unfathomable abyss, and in this abyss he sees a gigantic image float, and it is like himself, and he worships it, and says it is his God. But after a time he considers, and he discovers that this gigantic image is only the image of himself reflected upon the mists.

Strauss then discusses prayer. He says no man can pray any longer in the hope that his prayer will be answered. Some men, he says, will continue to pray, not in hopes that their prayers will be answered, but merely for the sake of the reflex action upon themselves. But if prayer be only a means to an end, then it must be left to every individual to select those means which he finds best adapted to himself; and the modern man will not select prayer.

Then he discusses immortality, and he takes up the arguments in favor of immortality one after the other. That the soul is simply a substance and cannot, therefore, die, is simply an aspiration that remains to be proven. That virtue unrequited here requires compensation in the hereafter, and that vice here must receive punishment in the other life, is a supposition contrary to the nature of virtue, which says every virtue carries with it its own reward, and every vice involves its own retribution.

He says men should be more modest. He claims that the generality of those who reach old age hav really lived out all the powers that were in them; and that men should be content to lay down their lives when life's journey is ended and take their repose. He does not believe in a personal God; he does not believe in prayer; he does not believe in the immortality of the soul; yet he has a new faith. What, then, does he believe? Simply this: We are a part of an infinite whole. There is a power greater than we in the universe; what it is we do not understand. The tendency of the universe is reasonable; that we trust. We ourselves shall bring our lives into harmony with the universe; that is our duty. We are dependent upon this vast world in which we live, but we are also superior to the world in our conscience and our nature, which is one with the infinite nature.

A fair, philosophic creed this. Various statements in it, indeed, might be questioned and challenged, yet let that pass; that don't now attract our interest. We wish to know what is the practical application of this. Our expectations have been disappointed. The man who set out to construct a new faith has missed an essential point. The builder of a new religion, as the builder of a house, cannot erect his superstructure without first preparing some foundation on which it may rest.

Three things are offered to the modern world instead of the Church. First, the modern world wishes to study natural science; secondly, they wish to engage in political affairs; and thirdly, they wish to cultivate their tastes in the delightful recreations of art, poetry, music, and more especially the drama. These things are very well, are excellent in their way, but they do not stand instead of religion. Natural science informs us what are the relations between the different parts of the external world, but religion asks what is the relation of man to the universe, and what is the purpose of his being. To engage in political affairs will not, as Strauss says, give us religious satisfaction. I ask you, yourselves, do you experience a religious satisfaction when you go to the polls and see some staggering idiot going before you to deposit his vote—a vote of equal weight with your own in swaying the affairs of the nation? Is it with religious satisfaction that you behold that tottering, staggering fool? Is it with religious satisfaction that you con your morning journal, knowing that it is crammed with falsehoods, knowing that the very facts which are presented to you are fabricated in the interest of party, knowing that even the great issues of the nation, proclaimed by the different parties, are mere cloaks behind which political schemers hide their game? Then if our power were great in moulding the affairs of men, if we could make men wiser and more virtuous, and make justice predominate in the affairs of our people, then there might be some satisfaction in the exercise of the franchise; but when we find that we have only a choice between men who are about equally selfish, weak, and incapable, profuse in promises, but on the first occasion found lamentably wanting, then all question of religious satisfaction in the exercise of our political judgment and of our political prerogatives is quickly dismissed. Strauss wrote at a time when the new empire was founded, in the days after our civil war, and these times always leave behind them long reaches of barren years.

And he requires, lastly, that we shall cultivate the arts, poetry, music, and the drama. These are well, but they are not a substitute for religion. We see the unhappy Lady Macbeth seeking to wash away the stain of blood from her hand—the little hand which not all the perfumes of Arabia will ever more sweeten. We hear her husband's terrible cry, "Sleep no more! Macbeth does murder sleep!" If we have an inward abhorrence of crime, it will stand us in good stead amid the temptations of life. When we see the hero march into the battle at the call of duty, then our souls kindle, and we feel what a priceless treasure honor is, and what a slight sacrifice it would be to yield up life in its behalf. All these are good—that we do not dispute; but they are not enough; we want more. We are not content with the ideal merely; we don't content ourselves with the shadows of a magic lantern, but we ask that the ideal shall be developed into the real. To convert the ideal of morality into practice, that is the substance of all religion. Emerson says:

> "The sower scatters broad his seed,
> The wheat thou strewest be souls."

Wide is our field whereon we shall sow, and the laws, institutions, and manners of mankind are the material wherewith we work. We are all artists of the good in ourselves and in society around us, and the things we mold are hearts.

Strauss sought to construct a religion from the head. He forgot that religion is of the heart, he forgot that the foundation of religion is conscience, and he failed. To construct a religion from the head has been attempted at various times. Old Catholicism attempted it. The men of that new creed sat down in council and said, "How now, let us make Catholicism reasonable;" and so, as some of the North American savages shape the heads of their infants to please their æsthetic tastes, these fathers of the faith pressed its head into the form that suited them, and then they presented this deformed pappoose, this baby of old Rome, to the people for their acceptance; but the irreverent people made mouths at that baby and would have none of it. And the Liberals have attempted in our day to construct a religion from the head without regard to the heart, and it is not surprising that their religion does not succeed. They have endeavored to make religion reasonable, and that is a thankful task to those who are amenable to reason, but the majority of men are not amenable to reason. The majority of men hold a doctrine not because it is reasonable, but because it is mysterious and incomprehensible and they have inherited it. The majority of men require that their heads should be influenced through the heart, and not conversely, that the heart should be touched through the head; and it is because they did not see this that many of the leaders of Liberalism have failed and have been disappointed men to the end of their days.

It was also Strauss' error that he did not see that religion must be for the people; he did not see that religion has a mission for the whole world, and must be something that not only the higher ranks, but the humblest son of man may understand. He failed because he was an aristocrat. He was an aristocrat, and this leader of Liberalism who made his bold attack upon the Church sings his pæans to kingship; he does not understand the sufferings of the people; for them he has only hard words and gibes and cruel thoughts. He advises his king, when the people come to him and say, "Our backs are sore with our burdens, we are so heavily weighed down with our cares, O our king, and we ask that thou relieve us of our burdens," that he shall answer, "If my fathers made your yoke heavy, I will add to your burdens; if my fathers chastised you with whips, I will chastise you with scorpions." He would have us believe that the liberty of the people endangers the state. He is satisfied so long as he is undisturbed in his study; so long as art and culture deck their tables for his delectation he is satisfied. The people shall be kept down with iron force, they shall be chained down in their workshops; so long as he can live his life of ease he has no thought of the life the poor lead. He asks for a gag-law on the liberty of speech. If that is the meaning of the new faith, may we be preserved from such a faith, may we be defended from such a religion. Religion is of the heart; religion strives for an ideal, for the individual good, and this ideal constantly grows larger and larger and ever larger. Religion is the poetry of morality, the essence of morality. It directs the ideal vision toward the law accomplished, and this ideal beckons us on toward the larger good, and leads us slowly but surely in closer proximity to these shining aims.

We set out to-day to show that when we confine ourselves to the good, we have not abandoned religion, but we claim, on the contrary, to have touched the very central reality of religion, which is the good. We claim, as far as mortals may, as far as human hearts can, to have peered into the mystery of the world and beheld at least the reflex action of that hidden life which no mortal eyes shall shall ever see. Our religion is expressed in three terms: absolute justice, absolute purity, absolute love. To arms! to arms! the new ideal calls, against the passions and indolence in you that prevents you from becoming better than you are. To arms! to arms! against the selfishness and injustice which permits law and might to trample down the right. You who live in the light know that justice requires you shall be just; you know that purity demands that you shall be pure, and that love calls you to lift up the stricken and helpless poor. By its fruit a tree is known, and by its works shall Liberalism be known. Let us strive to live this higher life that is expressed in our triple ideal of justice, purity, and love. That is what we have to offer to the Church, which is now dying, and which no God can ever again save. It is an ancient glory to which our soul aspires, of which the olden prophets sang the story, it is a golden glory our heart that fires, and may we see afar, afar at least, its undying flame.

DRIED fish-worms form the chief substitute for bread among the inhabitants of the northern parts of Siberia and America, as no bread plants will grow there.

SEVEN WONDERS.—The seven wonders of the world were the pyramids of Egypt, the pharos of Alexandria, the walls and hanging gardens of Babylon, the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, the statue of the Olympian Jupiter, the mausoleum of Artemisia, and the colossus of Rhodes.

THE Virginia People says: "A few days ago a farmer rode up to the postoffice in Madison and gave the postmaster a letter to be stamped, then handing him two sweet potatoes, rode off, leaving the postmaster standing in blank astonishment, wondering whether Congress had remonetized sweet potatoes."

EAST LIVERPOOL, Ohio, is warmed and lighted by its natural gas wells, one of which has been running for twenty years, and sends out as strong a stream as ever. The gas gives a flame that almost rivals the electric light in brilliancy, and it costs so little that the lamps in the city streets are kept burning day and night. It is used in private houses and factories alike, and cooks a steak or heats a furnace with equal satisfaction.

Communications.

Jamieson and Hull.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I not long since saw, in some of the Liberal papers, what I had long expected to see, that W. F. Jamieson had renounced Spiritualism. From my long and intimate acquaintance with him, I believed him to be as thoroughly capable of defending his positions as any one of my acquaintance. I also fully believed him to be honest in any position he might take. This, together with a knowledge that he takes to discussion as naturally as a duck takes to water, caused me to write to him, inviting him, in public discussion, to giv the world his reasons for turning from a "knowledge of eternal life" to the "weak and beggarly elements" of this world.

I hav no copy of my letter to him, but as he has given me the privilege of using his reply as I choose, I hand it to you, together with my reply to him, for publication.

Moses Hull.

JAMIESON TO HULL.

White Hall, Ill , Nov. 22, 103 (1878).

Moses Hull, My Dear Old Friend: So you want to debate with me, do you? Did I not thrash thee severely enough when we were "boys?" You want me to bloody your nose again. Well, if I hav to, I 'spect I must. As I see it, you are pretty well along toward Infidelity now. There is where you will finally land. If it falls to my lot to bring you "up higher," I will do what I can to make you a full-fledged Infidel, for I believe you to be that noble thing, an honest man. When I was seventeen years of age I left Methodism (although I was never a member of that or any other church, I believed that doctrine), and resolved then to follow the truth if it damned me to an orthodox hell. I hav ever kept that resolution, and received curses, even, from some friends, because I did keep it. Spiritualism was all I could wish from my acceptance of it in 1858 to 1864–5, when I commenced to hav alarming doubts. A Christian refers his doubts to the devil. I had no such convenient scapegoat. I looked them squarely in the face. For nearly fourteen years I gave up one so-called evidence after another, as fast as the truth compelled me, until nine-tenths of what is termed Spiritual phenomena were swept away and the other tenth staggering. Within a few months I hav concluded that I did not know the nature of the remaining tenth not referable to trickery or fraud. Then came the question, to my own mind, "Hav you positive proof of spirit existence? of future life? Do you know it as you know your own existence? Do you know it as you may be said to know the sun will rise to-morrow morning? as the astronomer knows, to the fraction of a second, when an eclipse, far in the future, will take place?" You will perceive these queries are substantially the same questions in protean form. I concluded I could not put my finger on a single phenomenon and say, That proves beyond the possibility of doubt that a spirit, unencased with flesh, was the cause of it. Then what? Could I then say, I am a Spiritualist? No. A Spiritualist according to his own definition must know that people called dead, liv. He must be sure of it, as certain as he is that human beings liv on earth. I opine there are tens of thousands of Spiritualists, who, if they would put the same questions to themselves, would discover themselves without a demonstration of future spiritual existence.

Some will say, How about your own spiritual experiences several years ago? I answer. They are placed in the same category with my Methodistic spiritual experiences. I felt and believed them; but was mistaken in attributing them, in both cases, to a spiritual source. Mediums themselves are among the most skeptical class of people on earth, even as to the source of their own "influences."

There is a great deal of Liberalism in Spiritualism. That I retain. Its theory of a future life, a summer-land, is transcendently beautiful; but it is only theory. It may be true, it may not. My Freethought, truth-searching position does not debar me from studying Spiritualism or any other subject. If there are inhabitants in any spiritual clime, they ought to be able, in my opinion, to giv ocular proofs to everybody on earth. Spiritualists themselves feel the force of the fact that they do not. Various, ingenious, plausible are their explanations of failure; but to my mind they are all unsatisfactory. Spiritualism, with many of its adherents, has become the song of a sect. They care more for the "cause" than for the truth. They fit the truth to the theory instead of the theory to the truth. But, as a body, I consider Spiritualists as truth-loving, progressive and humanitarian people. I count many friends among them, who will not hav less respect for me because I can no longer advocate Spiritualism as it is; but prefer to follow my own conviction of right. It is not, my friend, without a mental struggle that I hav reached my present conclusions. I clung to Spiritualism as long as I could. My increasing skepticism and my Atheism, and Anti-Christianism, hav been a sore trial to many Spiritualists. On the other hand, there are hosts of them who are not afraid of any man's thoughts. All honor to them I feel better and freer to be in my present position—the world my country, my brethren all mankind.

In 1862 you and I debated in Paw Paw, Mich. I lifted you out of Adventism into Spiritualism. I think Spiritualism robbed us both of the fear of death. As a form of Liberalism it destroyed all fear of orthodox dogmas. It cured me of a belief in hell and damnation, a monster God, and enterprising devil, a slim heaven—in a word, of all confidence in a slobbering, slimy theology which is yet winking its bat-eyes in the glare of the rising sun of Science.

As to your challenge for debate: I am always ready to meet any man in debate. You are my eldest godson. Perhaps, my dear boy, I can take you by the hand and lead you on to the higher ground of Atheism and scientific Materialism. I hav not one word, however, to say against Spiritualism. Its failure to demonstrate to me a future life is not a crime. I look upon it as a form of Liberalism midway between the churches of all religions and complete mental freedom. That Spiritualism does not afford demonstrative proof of a communication between the two worlds I am fully convinced. I want the case clearly and strongly stated, or there is no issue between us. I will affirm Atheism for four sessions:

1. Atheism is more rational than Deism, Theism, or Pantheism.

Will you affirm for the following four sessions this:

2. Modern Spiritual phenomena furnish absolute proof, to all who investigate, of the existence of spirits, after the death of their bodies, and of their communication on earth?

There is not a Spiritualist in the whole country who dare debate that second proposition with me. Unless that is debated, there is, as the lawyers say, "no cause of action." If Spiritualism cannot fill the measure of that proposition, it is a failure, as I say.

I meant to write a short account of my present attitude, in response to your fraternal epistle, but my letter has lengthened. Will you do me the favor to preserve this letter? You are at liberty to publish it, if you wish, in which case I request that it appear entire, as I will not be responsible for extracts printed out of their connection, unless it be the propositions; and the reasons accompanying them ought to appear.

I rejoice in your success, and that you and Mattie are so happy. I remain, as ever, your true friend,

W. F. Jamieson.

HULL TO JAMIESON.

New York, Nov. 27, 1878.

W. F. Jamieson, My Dear Friend: As I think it well to accept the privilege you giv me of publishing our correspondence, so that Infidels and Spiritualists may know exactly the terms on which we debate, if we do, and very well paid should our negotiations prove abortive. You will allow me to use brevity—"the soul of wit"—in my letters to you.

I fully reciprocate the kindly feelings you express, and hope that our continued acquaintance may increase our mutual respect and esteem. I was fully acquainted with your "alarming doubts" and their causes in 1864–5. I think your greatest trouble, pardon me if I say it, grew out of an inability to sever the "chaff from the wheat." I hav watched your course from that time to the present, and I think I hav seen, all the time, that your critical mind has been engaged more in picking flaws than in hunting for the real evidence of a post-mortem spiritual existence.

Among other questions you asked yourself was, "Do you know it [spiritual existence] as you know your own existence?" I must confess I do not. If the proof were as clear as of our present material existence, I would, probably, find few who would deny it. There is room to doubt, if not, there is no room to debate. Wherever there are two opinions on any subject, there is an error; and wherever there is a possibility of an error, it is possible I may be in error.

You must excuse me from replying to many of your statements and arguments, as it would not only make our correspondence too lengthy, but would anticipate the discussion itself. When we meet in the open field, you to "bloody my nose," and I, poor fellow, to bleed it, will be the proper time to discuss many of the points raised in your letter.

I agree with you that the case should be "clearly and strongly stated;" but as I am not a Deist, a Theist, a Pantheist, or an Atheist, I cannot discuss that question. In my search I hav never found God, or the evidence that he does not exist. Those who know God, and those who know that he is not, each know too much on that subject for me.

Your second proposition I could not affirm, for two reasons. First, it confines me to "modern spiritual phenomena;" that is too small—too limited. Put the two words "ancient and" before "modern spiritual phenomena," and that part of this proposition will be all right. Second, you desire me to affirm that the proof is "absolute to all who investigate." Oh, no. You will find many who will claim to hav investigated, who will say they are not convinced. Now I move to amend. Let us make it read as follows:

"Ancient and modern spiritual phenomena furnish proof of the continued existence of spirits after the death of the body, and of their ability, under favorable conditions, to communicate with the inhabitants of earth."

Did you think, dear brother, that you could "bulldoze" me into a discussion of that unfair proposition by saying: "There is not a Spiritualist in the whole country who dare debate that second proposition with me." You are right, for the reason that "there is not a Spiritualist in the whole country" who believes it.

Hoping that we may come to a speedy agreement on questions, time, place or places, and all the etceteras of debate, I remain as ever, your friend, Moses Hull.

Radical Movements by Women.

To The Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: After rejoicing that our Liberal men hav made a Declaration of Rights, a Defense Fund, and organized in the state of New York for the promotion of Freethought and action, and human rights generally, my first strong thought is on the demand for Liberal women's organizations, that they may aid each other in progressive ways, learn their strength in numbers and ideas, assist in all present efforts for reform, develop an elevated womanhood, and exemplify something like character. It is late in the stage of agitation on woman's deeds and duties to see no wide, permanent measure in operation to invite the withdrawal of her influence from conservative wrongs and utilize it for her own high use and a world's advancement in truth. But as this lack is what all may see, let me here make a call for preparatory correspondence on the topic, expressions of opinion as to best advance steps, etc., in the hope that a basis of action may be laid by which we may reach more consistent and prosperous lives, and be mutually auxiliary in every humane and noble endeavor of good, equity-loving men.

The Woman's Congress and Boston Club accomplish little because they resolve to remain popular by the church standard, and are without use or interest to the masses.

I must hope there are women risen above that vapid applause, and craving work worthy of what woman should be, and of this stirring age in which all must act well, as well as think freely, or hav their slaveries multiplied. Among those desirous of aiding men in their resistance of vicious persecution and in their good and manly growth, I trust there are enough in every town so large as to own a considerable village, to form a society, state principles, and kindly exact, agreeing to disagree on unimportant points. Thus we would improve abnormal habits and costumes, health and happiness, and assume self-poising power in all relations, which, ere long, would act on public sentiments and doings.

The abundance of material (both numbers and talents) in New York city make that a good starting point. Will not many women there speak to all through The Truth Seeker, by the good editor's permission, and kindly brothers chime in, encouraging them to move and persevere.

The name which occurs to me as a good one to characterize the work is, School of Use—use being the larger term, including beauty and all good attainments. This is suggested by "School of Beauty," the name used by the English women in their present efforts to mend their condition. Here is a clipping from a late American paper, noticing their effort and commenting. Many will be glad to see it:

"A London medical journal of high authority says that efforts are making by a number of women of prominence to form a 'School of Beauty' in England, the members pledging themselves to do everything in their power to render themselves comely by natural means. Prizes are to be given to those who can move with ease and grace, and so furnish evidence of good health and physical unconstrainment. Something of this kind is needed here. Although American women hav, to a great extent, seen the folly and the ugliness of lacing and going thinly clad in cold weather, there are still many who think an absurdly-small waist attractive, and any number that so pinch their feet that they cannot walk comfortably or becomingly. They do these ridiculous things generally because they imagine that men admire them. If men hav done so, they do so no longer. They prefer healthy and graceful women to invalid and awkward ones, as all women must be who cramp their waists, wear shoes too small, or dress in any way to interfere with their freedom and satisfaction. Nature and beauty are one. No woman can be beautiful who fetters or hinders nature. The more nearly she approaches the natural, the closer she comes to loveliness. Women hav heard this a thousand times, and accept it mentally. Yet, in their blind worship of false gods, they sacrifice themselves to infirmity and deformity. It is entirely incomprehensible to men that so many women will endure pain and incur disease from a mistaken notion of beauty."

Mary E. Tillotson.

Judge Hurlburt and Thomas Paine.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: A few years ago I received as a present a book entitled "E-says on Human Rights and their Political Guarantees," from a friend who told me that the writer stood and wept as the bones of Thomas Paine were removed from the grave at New Rochelle in 1819. The book bears date 1845, and its author is "E. P. Hurlburt, counselor at law in the city of New York." In the opening paragraph he speaks of the Declaration of 1776, and says that since the period of the Revolution scarcely an attempt has been made by any of our citizens to show the origin or define the extent of human rights. The next paragraph begins thus:

"A celebrated political writer of that period discussed at some length the rights of man in opposition to the principles of the British Constitution; but he rather combated error than asserted truth; and while he demolished, by his arguments, the structure of European governments, his Essay fell short of establishing the rights which he defended upon the sure foundation of natural truth. He was not armed with the true philosophy of mind."

Having read through the second paragraph, I stopped right there; and the book remains to this day unread by me. A man who can weep over the grave of the most powerful writer on the "Rights of Man," and afterwards himself publish an essay on the same subject, in which he not only forbears to name the "celebrated political writer," but meanly disguises the title of his great political work, "Rights of Man," in small Roman letters, or without quotation marks, such a man's essays on human rights I scorn to read.

I did not know that the author was still living. Is he the Judge Hurlbut who has joined the Abbot-Comstock party and written a legal argument in defense of an espionage of the mails?

Wm. Henry Burr.

Washington, D. C, Nov. 26, 1878.

[The author of the "Essays on Human Rights" and Hon. E P. Hurlbut of Albany are identical.—Ed. T. S.]

The clergy are not in a position to hold up a gilt-edged Bible before the Sunday-school, and simply say, "Children, this is a book of ancient legends, myths, and poetry, most venerable and most precious unless you take it as law and fact. In this case it becomes pernicious—it becomes mental bondage." Even Beecher could not say it, although he knows it, simple and obvious as it is.—James Parton.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 7, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

"Pot Calling Kettle Black."

In last week's Index is given a long list of untruths uttered by the Rev. Joseph Cook in Boston, Nov. 18th, on Free Religionists and the Syracuse Congress of the National Liberal League. The reverend gentleman did surely utter many slanderous falsehoods about Free Religionists and Liberals, and some of them bore upon Mr. Abbot and his clique with about the same severity and injustice as upon the real Liberals, and for this the editor of The Index arraigns him and calls him the "Devil's Advocate." It is almost amusing to see how the editor pitches into the Rev. Joseph when he lies about Mr. Abbot and his friends, denouncing him as a gross falsifier," a reckless religious demagogue," etc., then to see him pat the same reverend falsifier on the back and credit him with telling the truth when he said bad things about the editor's opponents, the Repealers, calling them the party of lawlessness. According to the editor's notion, the reverend slanderer is a very fine fellow when he talks against those who call for a repeal of the vile Comstock postal laws, but thinks he is all sorts of a scoundrel when he misrepresents those "respectable" gentlemen who like the Comstock laws so well that they wish to retain them and fix them up a little.

The Index quotes this passage from the lying Joseph's slanders with special pleasure: "It is with men of the type of this assassin that the majority of the National League . . . hav now publicly struck hands in demanding the total repeal of the laws which repress in the United States the most abominable traffic known to the leprous outlawry of the ghouls and ogres of the city slums." The Index claims to think the reverend gentleman is correct; that the National League has publicly struck hands with criminals of the worst sort, and willingly publishes what the reverend slanderer says against the Free Religionists and the seceders for the sake of the falsehoods he utters against those opposed to the Comstock laws. It seems to do the moral and cultured editor great good to repeat and reproduce the hard and untrue things said of those favoring repeal.

The Rev. Cook introduced this terrible charge, which The Index indorses, in this way, "As the agent of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice was engaged in the performance of his duties at Newark, not many years ago, he was stabbed twice by a criminal who had been making an infamous use of the mails under eighteen different aliases and through fifteen post-offices. The second blow of the dagger laid open a great flesh wound in the face, severed several arteries, and came very near being fatal. It is with those of the type of this assassin that the majority of the National League hav publicly struck hands," etc. In these few lines the slanderer uttered no less than six falsehoods, which The Index gladly repeats. What are the facts? The agent of the New York society who received the blow was Anthony Comstock; the man who inflicted it was Charles Conroy, who had the misfortune to be born with one hand only, but who had a wife and children whom he was struggling to support in a legitimate way, and, as he believed, not by crime. Comstock was not in the performance of his duty when he arrested Conroy, and Conroy was not a criminal. Comstock was not acting as agent of the New York society at the time of making the arrest, but as agent and detective for the postal department. He had no more legal right to arrest Conroy than he had to arrest the Governor of New Jersey. He had tried to obtain a warrant from the U. S. Commissioner of Newark and failed because that official did not consider Conroy had committed a crime, and so Comstock took the responsibility of forcibly arresting him without the slightest authority, and he got just about what he deserved. Conroy did not hav eighteen aliases, nor operate through fifteen post-offices; but, if he had, he committed no crime. The law does not forbid a man to use an alias, nor does it forbid him using fifteen post-offices, nor fifteen hundred if he wishes to. Conroy was engaged in selling certain goods not illegal or criminal, and by no means obscene, for which he obtained orders by mail, and because he used an alias, Comstock determined to arrest him. Thousands of persons hav used aliases, and they had a perfect right to do so. As we hav said, there is no law making it a penal offense.

When Conroy found himself in the power of his enemy, whom he knew to be acting without the least semblance of authority, and being whirled away in a closed carriage, knowing that his wife and children would suffer from his absence, knowing in his heart that he was being cruelly wronged by this meddlesome, persecuting man, clothed with a little temporary power; thinking of his wife and children, and seeing through the window of the carriage the walls of the prison he was nearing, in which he was to be immured for no crime, in a moment of desperation, he drew, not a dagger, but a small pocketknife, and gave his enemy, not two blows, but a single one in the cheek; and had it been across the jugular vein it would hav been well for the world, or at least this part of it, for that was prior to his procuring the passage of his infamous postal laws, which hav caused so much trouble and must continue to cause it so long as they are enforced. The charge against Conroy was changed to that of a malicious attack on an officer, with intent to kill. Comstock prosecuted the case with his usual vigor and the assistance of the Y. M. C. A., and secured a sentence for the unfortunate Conroy of one year and a half in the state prison at Trenton. On the day the man was sentenced, nearly a score of the members of the Y. M. C. A. of this city went over with Comstock to enjoy the pleasure of listening to the sentence; and after the unfortunate man was immured in the prison of the state, his enemy, Anthony Comstock, did not leave him, but made a journey to Trenton and held an interview with the warden, to whom he represented that Conroy was a very dangerous man and should be treated with severity, which caused the prisoner to be confined in a close cell, in extremely hot weather, when there was not the least necessity for it. The blow in Anthony's cheek doubtless caused him some inconvenience, but it did not take his life, but really was one of the luckiest blows he ever received, for his friends and admirers of the Y. M. C. A. made him a present of several thousand dollars for his brave sufferings in the cause of morality. These are the facts of the case. We obtained them from Mr. Conroy himself, with whom we hav become somewhat acquainted, and we doubtless know more about him than the Revs. Cook and Abbot both. The National Liberal League, however, knows not Conroy, and has in no manner allied itself with him or struck hands with him any more than with the man in the moon.

This instance exhibits just about how much truth there is in the Rev. Cook's representations, and how much comfort The Index can truthfully draw from them.

A prominent slander of the Rev. Cook is that the language of the National League Congress was infamous and unfit to be reported or published, and to prove this he quotes from The Index, p. 536: "But one question arose for consideration, and that related exclusively to infamous literature. By persistent as well as quiet effort a majority of the League was composed of Freelovers and infamous literature defenders, and from first to last they were determined on making a point in favor of its free circulation. Their remarks sometimes polluted the atmosphere of the Opera House." Thus it will be seen that The Index furnished the reverend slanderer with his grossest falsehoods, and afterwards took pleasure in reproducing the falsehoods of Christian journals and the falsehoods of two Western journals, which it calls "liberal" respecting the National League. It is known by every person who attended the Congress how base that slander was, and that not an indecent word was uttered by a member of the anti-Comstock party. The nearest approach to indecency of language made during the entire Congress was by two prominent members of the "moral," "cultured" "reform" party—one in open Congress and one in committee.

It is curious to see how The Index tries to worm out of giving currency to the slander by first charging Mrs. Colman with language she did not use, and imputing to her a meaning wholly unintended, saying: "The meaning beneath her language is the advocacy of infamous and shameless immorality." This imputation is cruel and ungentlemanly. Mrs. Colman is as moral a person as the editor who traduces her.

She made no apology for wrong doing but simply wished to say to Mr. Green that there was no real disgrace in being the object of such slanders as appeared in the Syracuse papers. She felt as Jesus was supposed to feel when in his first sermon he said, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and speak all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." As justly could the editor of The Index charge Jesus with "infamous and shameless immorality" as Mrs. C., for encouraging a brother to not care for slander and abuse. The Index makes a characteristic effort to stigmatize its opponents, though it is compelled to ackowledge that they used no improper language, their remarks being "sufficiently vile to justify every syllable" that the slandering Standard had used. There is a hair-splitting, nice distinction for you! The language was all right but the remarks were vile and reprehensible. Probably none but a man of fine culture could perceive such delicate distinctions. It seems to be a favorite pastime with the party of all the respectability to throw mud and filth against this estimable lady. The Syracuse Standard improved its powers in that direction. The very fastidious C. D. B. Mills has done the same, the President of the National Liberal League of America has tried his hand at it, and last week another of the same party in these columns, we believe imputed to her a meaning which she never intended, and we fail to see that any of the four hav added to the brilliancy of their glory by these attacks, "but on the contrary, quite the reverse." The facts are these, The Standard, Mr. Mills, Joseph Cook, and the editor of The Index are all slanderers and defamers. Neither the language nor the "remarks" of the majority were in the slightest degree improper or immoral; not a word was said by one of them in favor of the circulation of indecent literature; not one of them advocated anything wrong; not one wanted anything of the kind. Their great crime was to oppose the crushing of the highest principle of American liberty and in voting for Elizur Wright as President instead of F. Ellingwood Abbot. For this they hav been unsparingly denounced by the defeated candidate and his satellites as defenders and venders of obscene literature and the friends of vice, immorality, and indecency. And in his agony of soul or hypocrisy of soul, as the case may be, he cries out, "Who can measure the disaster that will inevitably befall the Liberal cause, when from our hands the taunt is thrown in the face of every inquirer by the churches that the Liberals hav struck hands with the venders of vile literature in demanding the total repeal of the most effective law against its circulation? The only possible way to prevent the disaster is to refuse the alliance to which they are now invited and to take the ground of 'reform.'"

What weak logic! What cowardice! What untruth! How he dreads what the churches may say of him if he opposes the most infamous laws ever placed on the nation's statute! Who cares what they may say, so long as we know we are right? How does he know that the churches will be any better pleased to hav the Comstock laws doctored up, "modified," or "reformed," than to hav them repealed and an unobjectionable law put in their place if found necessary? The Comstock laws are not the most effective laws we hav on the statute books against the circulation of obscene literature. Few or no cases of real obscenity hav been prosecuted under them, while a large lot of positively obscene books and prints were suppressed and destroyed by laws that existed before these were passed; and at best the postal laws can arrest but a fractional part of the obscene books that may be sent. All the other avenues of circulation are still left open and not affected by them. Why will that high priest of morality continue to make such barefaced misrepresentations?

The editor propounds several ponderous conundrums, which he evidently thinks perfectly stunning. We will try to answer them.

1. "Is it not true that the venders of really obscene literature desire the repeal of the postal law of 1873?" Ans.—Cannot say positively; don't know a person engaged in that business. In fact, there are no such persons; they are men of straw, or "bugaboos," gotten up by Comstock, Joseph Cook, and F. E. Abbot to frighten simple, credulous people into sustaining one of the worst laws America has ever been cursed with. Will either of the three gentlemen giv the public the name of one or two such venders, that we all may know who they are? Will they not do this, or cease their imputations? We are willing to admit, to accommodate, that if there are such venders they are opposed to the laws referred to.

2. "Is it not true that the majority of the Syracuse Congress unmistakably announced to the public by the election of a new Board of Directors unanimously in favor of repeal of that law that they desire the same thing?" Ans.—No, nor nothing of the kind. Neither the directors nor the electors are in favor of obscenity. They are in favor of liberty and opposed to the General Government interfering to crush it, or to allow pretexts to bigoted persecutors to crush it.

3. "Is it not true that the National Liberal League has thus put itself at the head of the vilest class of criminals in the community and made itself the public mouthpiece of their heart's desire?" Ans.—No; it is infernally false; and it is meaner than any obscenity we ever heard to impute or insinuate anything of the kind. A truthful person would never be guilty of so base a falsehood.

4. "Is it not true that in working for the repeal of that law the members of the League, however opposed they may wish and think themselves to be to the circulation of obscene literature, are yet practically engaged in breaking down the law which the circulators of that literature know to be the most formidable obstacle of their trade?" Ans.—No; it is not true, but infamously false and slanderous. No man who has truth and the interest of Liberalism at heart will be guilty of such continued aspersions. The class referred to are in favor of sustaining the guarantees of the charter of American liberty which were held sacred nearly one hundred years, and are now set aside for the first time by one of the most dangerous and persecuting bigots that any age has produced. As above shown, it is most false to say that these infamous laws are the most formidable obstacle to the trade in obscene books. They were purged from the market before the laws had an existence, but under these laws numerous honorable and worthy men hav been grossly persecuted for expressing their convictions.

How puerile and false it is in this pretentious apostle of morality and culture to say, "Whoever givs aid or sympathy to the movement of 'repeal' is a willing or unwilling abettor of obscenity and free-love." A more contemptible falsehood was never uttered by Joseph Cook, and aside from the Rev. G. E. Gordon, hardly one of Mr. Abbot's coadjutors will make so false an assertion. Mr. Underwood talks directly to the contrary, and insists that the Repealers are equally as much opposed to obscenity as the Reformers. Which utters the falsehood, Mr. Underwood or Mr. Abbot? Mr. Truesdell agrees with Mr. Underwood. Is he also a falsifier? He is if Mr. Abbot speaks the truth. But in this Mr. Truesdell speaks truth well. O that Mr. Abbot would do the same! It is a pity that a man who is such a stickler for high-toned morality and all the decencies should so persistently indulge in slander and falsehood. He might hav thought, in the first place, that he told the truth, but now he knows better. There is no excuse for him.

Who are they who giv aid and sympathy to the repeal movement? Elizur Wright, O. B. Frothingham, James Parton, A. B. Bradford, Wm. Denton, Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, T. B. Wakeman, Courtlandt Palmer, H. L. Green, A. L. Rawson, Amy Post, Augusta Cooper Bristol, J. S. Verity, and seventy thousand more. Are these all "willing or unwilling abettors of obscenity and free-love," while F. E. Abbot, G. E. Gordon, C. D. B. Mills, H. P. Stark, and a few more are the only champions of virtue and morality which the country can boast of? No! no! a thousand times no! and shame be to the man who is false enough to assert it and reiterate it. If he a thousand times asserts it, it is a thousand times false! O! man of culture, you have played this dolorous tune long enough ; please giv us something else, or in popular slang, "giv us a rest."

The closing paragraph of the editorial, replete with misrepresentation to which we hav called attention, is characteristic, and somewhat deserving of notice. The writer calls attention to the great work he has performed, and assures the Liberals of America that he is their one true friend. He almost threatens them, however, that if his warnings are not better heeded he will retire to private life, when, of course, the Liberals aforesaid will be left to go to the "demnition bow wows." O saddening thought! what if the only apostle of all the virtue and decency and respectability that is worthy of the name should cruelly retire to shades of quietude! How could we possibly get along without his warning notes to Liberals to beware of the obscenists and the Freelovers? Who would be left to help Joe Cook to belie, slander, and defame the Liberals of America? Let us pause and wipe our eyes.

The Editor of The Index.

It is freely accorded to Mr. Francis E. Abbot of The Index the good work he has done in the Liberal ranks, as well as the independence he exhibited and the personal sacrifice he made in leaving the Church. Credit must also be given him for the high tone, the respectability, the culture which he has labored to impart to the Liberal cause. These should all be remembered in the gentleman's favor, for he toiled for several years earnestly in this direction; but for the last twelve months he has nullified or neutralized, much of the good he had done by pursuing the ill-advised course of sustaining the Comstock laws and decrying those who could not accept his narrow views.

It was a serious mistake on his part to frustrate the honest effort made to get those laws removed, and to throw obloquy on the seventy thousand who sincerely and intelligently signed petitions for the repeal or change of those laws. It is most unfortunate for the Liberal cause that he has continued to charge large numbers of earnest, conscientious Liberals, equally as moral and virtuous as himself, with being defenders of obscenity, Freelovers, ghouls, ogres, vile and immoral. Though he may hav been as moral and pure as he would hav the world believe, this course of defamation and slander has almost sunken him below public respect. He may possibly hav been sincere and honest, at first, in making these charges, but his continuing, month after month, at throwing mud and slime upon the characters of many good people and imputing to them motives which they were never actuated by, has been false and culpable beyond expression. Morality, purity, and virtue cannot successfully be promoted by falsehood and defamation.

It cannot be denied that this unfortunate, mistaken course—this thinking that the dearest principles of liberty and human rights must be sacrificed to secure the good opinion and respect of the Church, and to continually denounce as the vilest of the vile those who are opposed to his lead in this ill-advised policy, and to impute to them the worst possible motives—has produced a schism in the Liberal ranks most seriously to be regretted. This is a truth that cannot be denied nor ignored.

The question that now arises, is, Shall this course of falsehood and slander be indefinitely continued? Shall those who cannot approve of the Comstock laws, and cannot believe that Congress, or postmasters, or post-office clerks hav any right to examine and pry into the moral opinions of those who use the mails, forever be characterized as the vilest criminals and persons of the lowest morals and most depraved motives? We are utterly tired of this course, and sincerely wish a change. We hav other work we are anxious to perform in place of contending with those in our own ranks. Cannot the editor of The Index be induced to utterly discontinue his foul aspersions and vile imputations? Cannot he admit that those who fail to see through the same lenses that he does may nevertheless be pure, moral, and well-intending people?

If he will discontinue the offensive imputations referred to, and no longer try to befoul and blacken the characters of those above reproach, we will do all we can to end this family quarrel. But we cannot sit quietly and be aspersed with charges of the worst crimes in the calendar, nor see those we know to be honorable, well-disposed, good people, cruelly traduced and denounced as the vilest of the vile. If they continue to be so aspersed, we shall continue to defend them.

Paine Hall Meeting.

On Sunday morning last a meeting was held in Science Hall, addressed by Moses Hull, S. P. Andrews, and J. P. Mendum, for the purpose of having stock taken in Paine Hall to save it and keep it from passing into the hands of the Catholics or the Y. M. C. A. The meeting was moderately attended, and several shares were taken. It is to be hoped that enough interest will be felt in the enterprise to keep this our only hall from passing into the hands of our enemies.

An Explanation.

A few words seem necessary by way of explanation in reference to a quotation we recently made from the Investigator, accompanied by a letter from James Parton, relative to the translation of the writings of Jean Meslier, a French priest of the last century. We had published a part of the work, entitled "The Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," translated for us by Miss Ellen Carroll. We supposed, as the Investigator evidently did, that the letter of Mr. Parton's referred to that translation; but it seems, instead, that it was to the fuller translation from the same author by Miss Anna Knoop, entitled "Superstition in all Ages." The fact is, the first mentioned is the best part of the latter work, and was brought out by us when we had doubts about the fuller work being published. They are both most excellent and fully worthy the high praise given by Mr. Parton. We hav both for sale; "The Last Will and Testament," a pamphlet, at 25 cents; the "Superstition in all Ages," a bound volume at $1.50, postage included. No Infidel's library will be complete without a copy.

Ho for Watkins.

The time for our trial at Watkins upon the terrible charge of selling a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," as well as that of W. S. Bell, Miss Josephine S. Tilton, and Mr. George Mosher upon the same charge, draws nigh. Our attorney writes us that our case is set for the 17th inst, when we must put in an appearance and be prepared to receive the penalty which a Christian Court and a Christian jury in a bitterly Christian community see fit to deal out to us.

Let us here remark that considerable funds will be needed, and the pledges that hav not been sent in are requested to be forwarded. If others who hav not pledged feel like helping to bear the burdens of a defense against this sample of Christian persecution, their aid will be gratefully received, and will be duly acknowledged. Enough has not yet been received to meet the needs of the case. How long we shall hav to dance attendance at the Court, or what the results of the trials will be, cannot now be told.

What I Don't Believe.—No. 39.

400. It will be seen there are many parts of the Bible which fail to harmonize, and that there are also many other parts which fail to present that idea of purity of thought and expression which it would be supposed a volume handed down from heaven ought to possess.

401. I don't believe that the narrative of the crime of incest committed by drunken Lot with his two daughters is very suitable reading for young people.

402. I do not think the detailed account of the connections which took place between Jacob and his two wives and his two handmaids, together with the effects produced, are of any value to Sunday-school children.

403. It can hardly be claimed that the story of the adulterous connection between Schechem and Dinah is the best kind of narrative for young people.

404. It does not seem that such details as the lying of Reuben with Bilhah, his father's concubine, within the hearing of his father, is highly calculated to improve the morals of youth.

405. The account of the offense committed by Onan would not seem to be the best kind of reading for a school of both sexes or either sex.

406. The coarse account of the illicit connection between Judah and his daughter-in-law, Tamar, is not the best mental pabulum for the rising generation.

407. The account of Mrs. Potiphar trying to seduce the virtuous Joseph can hardly be called a good lesson for young ladies, either married or unmarried.

408. The laws in Leviticus, against uncleanness, incest, and adultery, as well as how to judge of the tokens of virginity, are not the most select lessons for general use.

409. The adultery of Zimri and Cozbi in the sight of all the congregation of Israel was, perhaps, sufficient to exasperate the ire of Phinehas, the son of Eleazar the priest, to take a javelin and run the pair through the body, but the account of it is not the most choice reading for a mixed company of ladies and gentlemen.

410. The details of the slaughter of thousands of women who had known man, the saving of all the virgins and girls for the use of the soldiers, the dividing of the thirty-two thousand of them out among the twelve tribes, the retaining of thirty-two for the use of the Lord, or rather the priests, as given in the thirty-first chapter of Numbers, together with the slaughter of the men and children in cold blood, are the most shocking crimes of anything ever placed on record.

411. The story of sodomy and lust, as given in the 19th chapter of Judges, is not the most delicate or chaste reading for juveniles.

412. The story of the ravishment which the Benjamites committed upon the four hundred young virgins who gathered to dance at Shiloh, does not constitute the book the most fit one for public schools.

413. The pious story of David watching Bathsheba from his house-top while she was taking a bath; of his lustful desires towards her; of his sending for her and committing adultery with her and then putting her husband to death that he might take the woman entirely to himself, although he was a man after God's own heart, does not seem an example worthy of practice to the people of the present time.

414. The account of the rape committed by Amnon the son of David, upon his sister Tamar, and the duplicity he practised upon her, pretending to be sick, does not inculcate the purest kind of morals.

415. The details of Absalom, another son of David, who took his father's concubines and cohabited with them in the sight of all Israel, do not recommend themselves as being a specially spiritual Sunday-school story.

416. The moanings of David when he had the "bad disorder," as given in Psalms xxxviii, is not calculated to increase our respect for the lecherous old sinner or to make his confessions the most delectable kind of matter with which to fill young minds.

417. The story of Solomon and his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines is not calculated to make people regard him as a very heavenly-minded individual, or to excite the most chaste thoughts in school children.

418. I don't believe that the highly amorous composition called "Solomon's Song," in which the lecherous king discusses the most attractive parts of a young female with whom he was in love, such as her breasts, her thighs, and her belly, is the most fitting lesson for Sunday-schools or for young men and women to study at home.

419. I do not believe that the account of the enamored damsel, who sought all night through the city for her lover, is precisely the best model for young ladies of the present time.

420. I don't believe that that amorous and almost sickening love-song had any more connection with Christ and the Church—which the translators, without the slightest authority, placed at the beginning of the chapters—than it had with the man in the moon or the king of Timbuctoo. It is simply a crude, indecent love-song, unfit for the young to read.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Heywood's Pardon.

At the present writing no intelligence has been received of the pardon of Mr. E. H. Heywood, though fond hopes are still indulged by his friends. We hav learned that the man who laid the trap for him, caused his arrest and conviction—Anthony Comstock—has been using his evil influence in Washington to prevent the pardon, but how much influence he has there now is not known. Here is a letter we hav just received from Mr. Heywood, which, saving the rather extravagant praise he bestows upon us, will be interesting to our readers:

DEDHAM, MASS., Dec. 2, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: News from Washington is favorable, but no definite decision yet. I may be free in two or three days, and may not till a year from next June! I am stretched between hope and fear. One hundred and sixty days to-day since I was caged here. I earnestly hope all will go well at Watkins. I should be sorry indeed to hav you and the other three all imprisoned. I cannot think it will come out that way. I look upon you as the General Butler of Freethought, whose headquarters should be in the saddle rather than in jail. Still your prison cell would become an executive mansion to "sway the future." No man living has done more for human redemption from Christian sin than you since Comstock laid his unclean hand on your person one year ago this last November.

Fraternally yours, E. H. HEYWOOD.

NEXT week we shall begin the publication of a remarkable little work by Voltaire, entitled "Pocket Theology," consisting of short, pungent, scathing articles from the only pen that could write as he did. It was never before translated into English and is extremely rare in French. It is said that there is but one copy known of it in existence, and that is in the Bibliothique at Paris, from which this was copied by a great admirer of Voltaire's terse and sarcastic style. It will doubtless be appreciated by our readers. "Voltaire in Exile" will be discontinued for the present to giv place to this, and in due time to be issued in book form, when we hope every reader of these pages will wish a copy.

THERE are few characters more distasteful than an individual holding himself up as a model of purity, respectability, and virtue. We hav always good reasons for regarding with suspicion those who would palm themselves off as being better than their fellow-men. There is, however, one character more detestable, and it is he who falsely imputes bad motives to others and charges them with vile crimes and offenses they never thought of committing. Beware of the self-righteous, the self-adulator, but still more of the slanderer. Shun him as the poison cobra or boa-constrictor of society.

A. BRIGGS DAVIS, editor of The Battle-Axe which has been published at Worcester, Mass., writes us that he has removed to 296 Ellicott st., Buffalo, N. Y., from which place his Batle-Axe will be vigorously swung after a season, and he will also issue the publications of the Independent Tract Society. We hope the change may prove advantageous to Mr. Davis, who for some time has been in ill health.

All of us hav heard of the old hen with one solitary chicken, and what a fuss she made clucking over it, etc. Let no one suppose that the President of the Liberal League of America is reduced to any such strait as that. He is by no means limited to one little chicken. He has not less than three—auxiliary leaugues who wish to be respectable—but sufficient for him to cluck vigorously over, and he does it.

IT was intended, at the beginning of 1879, to bring out a Monthly Truth Seeker, but owing to hard times and the unpromising financial outlook, it is deemed prudent to defer it for a season and to giv our energies to making the weekly an assured success. As soon as the time seems favorable and appropriate for carrying out the proposed enterprise it will be done.

IT IS the lot of all members of the human family to hav more or less of imperfections and shortcomings; but how cruel and unjust it is to charge any individuals with offenses against morality which they hav not committed, and to impute to them motives they never harbored for a moment!

LET friends remember that we are still sending THE TRUTH SEEKER to trial subscribers for three months with a Pocket Dictionary, or a copy of Paine's "Age of Reason," or of the "Bible Abridged"—choice of them—for 60 cents. Let the number of readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER largely increase.

GERMAN and Austrian law forbids the sale of dead fish. They are brought from the sea and rivers in tanks, and are killed after being sold.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Fifteenth Letter.

MORE ABOUT THE VISIT.

ZION HIL, N. J., Dec. 2, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: I didn't hav room enuf in my last to tel yu all I wanted to sa about evrything. I didn't menshun about my son-in-law's subskribing for yure paper. Ov korse I had to tell him about my taking THE TRUTH SEEKER, writing letters to it, and having a church trial in konsekwense, and he got vary much interested in it, and sed he must take the paper that had razed such a breeze in Zion Hil. So he sat down and rote a letter to yu and put in a doller and a haf for 6 munths. Don't yu remember he put in the letter that he waz son-in-law to Deeken Joel Skidmore, and that he had married the likeliest girl the old Deeken had and that he wanted to reed all the deeken's letters and asked yu to send all bak numbers kontaining them? I had sent him a few ov mine before, but he wanted them all.

So, Mr. Editur, yu se my letters hav dun yu sum good, if I hav not sukseeded in konverting yu to hav fathe in Jezus. Yu ar sending 7 papers to this postoffis that yu wood not hav had had it not ben for me, and Steven's makes 8, and I am going to send yu more. Thare ar 2 or 3 tawking about taking it, and wil as soon as tha hav made a payment and are a littel eezier in munny matters. That's what keeps a good meny from partronizing yu, the times are so hard. I shood think it wood pinch up yure bizness vary much. Yu must feel it severely. Since my trial I hav to be a littel kareful and not sa too much to fokes about taking THE TRUTH SEEKER. Sum of my church frends ar wating to get another whak at me for heresy, and I don't kare about having too much sport ov that kind. It iz not the most plezunt thing in the wurld to hav yure own nabers and the sisters in yure own church trying to do all tha kan to blaken yure karakter and make yu out 20 degrees worse than yu ar.

I se by yure paper that yu ar having sum experiense ov that kind about theze days. I se sum ov yure brethren hav tryd to make out that yu ar a bad man; that yu defend whot iz vile and indesent, and that thoze hoo akt with yu ar ov the same grade. Whot ales that Boston man, hoo pretends to be so respektable and so extra-virtuous? Iz he trubled with the green-eyed monster, or haz he an extra amount ov vindiktivnes? If I am eny juj ov the situashun, tha hav not made much by the enterprize. Thare ar 2 or 3 ov the men hoo hav pitched into yu hoo, I think, wood hav made munny by obzerving silense. I kall it the poorest biznes in the wurld to try to slander and tare down another's reputashun. I don't kare how respektable and kultured a man ma pretend to be, if he kannot tel the fare truth about hiz nabers, hiz frends, and hiz brethren, I woodn't giv a sent for all hiz respektability and hi tone. I set down a slanderer and defamer az just az meen az the man hoo steels. The latter only takes awa yure munny or property, while the other takes yure good name, yure reputashun, which iz the wurst ov the two.

But cheer up, my frend. I don't beleev yu wil be much injured by such vile attaks. And yure frends, with hoom yu ko-operate in defending the prinsipels ov freedom and ekwal rites, beleev yu ar korrekt evry time. I hope yu wil go rite on in the path ov yure duty, regardles ov the slanders ov enemys or the barking ov dogs. I feel shure tha kannot ultimately do yu eny real harm. So, az I hav notisd it, thoze hoo undertake to injure thare fello-beings by slander and false reprezentations invariably get the wurst ov it and do themselves more harm than thoze tha try so hard to injure.

So I think it iz with Mrs. Jones and those hoo with her tryd to damage me in the estimashun ov thoze hoo hav nown me theze 20 yeers. I kan se now just how it iz. Hawling me up before the church haz not dun me much harm. A few think a littel less, perhaps, ov my stedfastnes in the fathe and dout my orthodoxy sumwhat, but I kan se that the generality ov the peepel think more ov me and show me more respekt than they did before it took plase, while it iz a sure thing that Mrs. Jones and her krowd are not thawt az wel ov az tha uzed to be. Tha ar lookt upon az meddlesum, undermining karakters, hoo had better be shund than otherwise. I hav herd more than 20 peepel sa that Mrs. Jones wood hav made munny by attending to her own biznes and letting Deeken Skidmore attend to hiz. Thare ar 3 rules in life that ar pretty good to be governd by: 1st. Attend to your own biznes az wel az yu no how; 2nd. Let other peepel's biznes prinsipelly alone; 3d. Don't li about any person, yung or old—never damage thare reputashun.

I waz going to tel yu about sum tawk I had with Steven when I waz over tu Hard Skrabel. I take a great deel ov interest in relijus matters and ov kourse had to enkwire sum how the church fokes in his naberhood got along. I think it wood most hav made yu laf to heer Steven go on in hiz deskripshun ov the pius peepel in that porshun ov the moral vineyard. He said he took a good deel ov pleznre in keeping trak ov the good peepel hoo run the churches over whare he livs. Within 5 miles ov him he sez thare ar about enuf kristyans to git up wun pretty fare sizd church, but insted ov that tha ar trying to run 3 churches—a Methodist, a Presbyterian and a Baptist. The Methodists are the most numerous, and by hard wurk and hard begging tha make out to keep thare minister steddily at work and to pa the moderate salary which tha agree to pay, tho' it iz dun with the hardest kind ov work and tha are often 6 munths behind with thare minister and when tha discharged thare minister Turner for repeted adultery, hoom I rote yu about in my last, tha ware oblijd to shin around at a grate rate, stir up the delinkwents and even borra 100 dollars to pay him off.

The Presbyterians are the next in numbers and tha hav bilt within the last 4 yeers a small church 2 miles from the Methodists, but tha hav the hardest work in the world to keep thare institushun running. Tha ar in debt 1,200 dollars on thare church, fur which the karpenter haz brawt sute and will forekloze the moge] which he holds if tha don't pa him off, which tha kan hardly do without a mirakel bein performed for thare speshal benefit. Tha hav got a yungish man for minister with a wife and wun child and he preches for 800 dollars a yeer, but tha are awa behind in thare pa with him and thay ow him yet 250 dollars on last yeer's salary, and nothing payd on this. Hiz wife haz had but wun new dress in two yeers, and the parson himself looks a littel seedy. Tha got up a fare last winter to try to raze munny to pay off thare dets. Tha had all sorts ov jim-kraks for sale, and playd all sorts ov games to get the fellers' munny, and even the prettiest girls sold kisses at 25 sents eech to help out the good kause, az that big Katholik church iz now doing in yure sity, but, after all, tha only kleerd 47 dollars and 50 sents, with 3 boxes ov fansy goods left over for this winter.

After that tha tryd to get up a revival or 11 days' meeting to try and inkreese thare numbers. Two uther ministers from off toards Trenton kame on and helpd Mr. Jonson, thare minister, and tha kept the thing pritty hot for the 11 days, and when all waz over and tha kounted up thare game, tha had only wun 3 littel girls, wun old made, and wun haf-witted old man hoo haz sinse bakslid and left the naberhood.

The Methodists did wun better than that; tha got 5 new konverts at thare 2 weeks' revival, but it waz sed that it wood take all 5 ov them to make wun good member. 3 ov them wer children, wun waz a yunggish widdo about hoom a good meny singular remarks wer made, and which hav by no meens entirely stopd sinse she joind the church, and the uther waz an old sinner hoo had ben konverted 3 times before, and wil rekwire to be konverted at leest az meny az 3 times more before he gets to be a desent man. He got drunk this fall and whipd hiz wife so she had to la abed 3 days, and tha turnd the old fello out ov church. Hiz time ov probashun had only ben out a munth or 2. Steven sez he wil be all rite to be konverted agen this winter. Sum ov the boys sed the Methodists made more addishuns to thare numbers by the unmarred girls getting into the unfortunate kondishun ov bekuming muthers without having huzbands. Tha kounted up 6 or 7 addishuns ov that kind to thare numbers—the result ov last winter's revival. I hope that estimate iz sumwhot overdrawn, but from the experiense ov Pius Holler, which, yu wil remember, iz klose to Zion Hil, I kannot sa but it iz tru, for, taking the last 5 yeers together, I think tha hav averajed haf a duzen illejitimate children eech yeer in Pius Holler church, and wun third ov them hav ben deklard to be the preecher's children. That ma be an overestimate, but thare iz a good substratum ov truth for the report. I hav told yu allredy sumthing about our Methodist nabers, and if yu kontinu to print my letters I wil hav sumthing more to sa. I beleev in letting the truth be nown. I don't think the wurks ov eny peeple aut to be kept in the dark. It iz good for all to kum to the light.

The Baptists over thare at Hard Skrabel are the smallest denomination ov all, and I am sorry to sa tha hav to levy on kwite a skope ov country to make a desent kongregashun. I waz sorry to heer how few thare wer ov them, and that the largest share ov them wer old folks fast passing awa. If it wer not for wun rich old man in the sosiety, hoo givs very jenerusly, I feer tha would not be able to keep up the meetings every other Sunday, which iz all tha try to do. Thare minister, Elder Boardman, haz 2 churches, 15 miles apart, and preeches to them eech every other Sunday for 400 dollars a yeer apeese, and I am also sorry to sa the brethren are a good wayz in arreers. May tha be able to do better soon.

Steven sez the mischef ov it iz the Kristyans over thare are trying to run too meny konserns, and tha are too much split up and divided and tha kwarrel almost like katz and dogz. The Methodists and Presbyterians are at swords points, and tha both hate the Baptists, or, at best, hav very littel luv for them, and Steven sez every church haz a ring to manage it. 3 or 4 in eech church put thare heds together and run the institushun az tha think best, and the uther members hav but littel to say. I am afrade thare iz sum truth in that, for the tendensy iz too much that way ever in Zion Hil, which haz, I fansy, wun ov the best kondukted churches in New Jersey.

Steven sed to me in hiz lafing sort of wa: "Now, Deeken, what nonsense it iz to try to run so menny churches, and for the sisters and sum ov the brethren to worry themselvs haf to deth to keep up church appearanses, when after all it amounts to vary littel. If tha wood take the same munny that all theze churches kost all over the kuntry and all the preecher's salarys and spend it on thare skools, having better skoolhouses, better teechers, better librarys, and all that belongs to the bizness, it wood be better for the kuntry. The peepel could take THE TRUTH SEEKER and reed yure letters and the other good matter it kontanes, and other papers and books which tha kood kwietly reed at home and save a grate deel ov ware and tare and worry, and tha wood finally fetch up at heaven just az wel az tha wil by the kourse tha take now." The remark struk me with konsiderabel forse, and I hav ben thinking it over sinse. Steven may be haf rite.

How I do run on, to be shure. I hav ritten over 3 sheets of paper, and I must stop. Suzan sez I hav not sed hardly a word about her lately, and she feels most slited. She wants I shood remember her kindly to the Editur, and sa to him that she iz wel and reeds THE TRUTH SEEKER every week and likes it az wel az ever. She sez I ma also sa that she and Sam are getting along wel, but that no da iz set yet for the wedding. I am sinserely yures,

JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Communications.

Metal versus Paper.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your issue of Sept. 28th appeared an article in which the writer, Mr. Truesdell, invites fair, free, and full discussion on the question of so-called finance now before the American people, and which I hold to be a question of great importance, and one on which the people should post themselves, as they will be called on to decide this question at a day not far distant.

My remarks must of necessity be limited for want of space. I shall confine myself for the present to the article which appeared as above. Mr. Truesdell takes strong grounds in favor of our present financial policy and deplores the many misstatements made by "inflation writers," and "greenback orators." Mr. Truesdell certainly is right in discouraging wrong statements, but when he undertakes to criticise the statements of others, and their conclusions drawn from them, he should be careful not to commit the same error.

He criticises Mr. Kersey Graves for assuming that no commercial nation can do a prosperous business with a circulation of thirteen dollars per capita. To show that this can be done he refers to our own prosperity before the war, when he claims we had even less than the above amount. The entire amount in circulation of gold, silver, and paper, in 1859 was 468,000,000. Taking the population to hav been 30,000,000 would make a circulation of a trifle over 15 dollars per capita. (See "Money is power," by Jones; page 178.)

But even admitting, for the sake of the argument, that the actual circulation was below 13 or even below 10 dollars, unless we take into consideration the financial condition of the country as compared with the past, per capita circulation proves nothing. In discussing this question, it is a grand error to lose sight of conditions.

The population of this country has increased since 1860 from 31 millions to 47 millions in 1878, while the business actually transacted has increased from 32 billions of dollars in 1859 to 104 billions in 1877, as shown by clearing-house reports of New York, and by taking New York to hav transacted one-fifth of the entire amount, which, from observation, is considered to be about correct. By this it will be seen that the business has increased in proportion far more than the population, while the facilities for transacting business without money hav not kept pace with the increase of internal commerce, as any one can prove. By investigating the increase of banking business since 1859 he will find that the ratio of commercial increase is far greater than is the increase of facilities for transacting our business with bank paper. What does this prove? It proves that we either hav to hav a greater per capita circulation or an increase of the purchasing power of money, and to increase the purchasing power of money always is detrimental to a country just in process of development.

But this is not the only condition to be considered. Our public debt is 30 times greater than it was in 1859, bearing a gold interest; the rate of taxes, both direct and indirect, is much higher; our state, municipal, incorporate, and private indebtedness, on which interest must be paid, is simply enormous, and all this must be paid by labor of some kind. To compel the people of this country to pay all their obligations in gold or its equivalent by increasing the purchasing power of money by limitation is equivalent to destroying their property to the extent of the appreciation of money, for the reason that their debts and taxes remain the same while their means for obtaining money, the article with which they are required to pay, are lessened day by day; and what is still worse, it forces thousands of laborers into idleness, and creates an army of paupers and tramps, which will hav to be fed and clothed by the same men who are paying already more than they ought to be required to pay, and which will be certain to bankrupt this country or lead to repudiation if the present policy is adhered to.

I will briefly consider the statements made on contraction by Mr. Truesdell. He criticises Hon. Peter Cooper, and claims that Mr. Cooper made gross misstatements about the contraction of our circulating medium. Mr. Truesdell claims the greatest circulation to hav been $983,318,686 in June 1865. If he would hav added to this a trifle over 50 millions postal currency and 830 millions 7-30 Treasury notes he would hav been nearer the whole truth. But he denies these 7-30 Treasury notes as having been part of our circulating medium.

To satisfy him on this point—or any one doubting the functions of these notes—I refer them to the following testimony:

Traphagen, Hunter & Co., Bowery, N. Y.; First National Bank, Elizabeth, N. J.; F. E. Spinner, Treasurer of the United States; and last but not least, to the Revised Statutes of the United States, Sec. 3590, which declares these notes to be a legal tender. Also see act of March 3, 1863, act of June 30, 1864, and act of March 3, 1865, authorizing these notes. I come in contact with men daily who were paid with these notes when discharged from the service. The fact that these notes were interest-bearing does not disprove their circulation. The law declared them to be a legal tender, and the condition of the country was such that money invested in any enterprise would return more than seven and three-tenths per cent interest; hence it is obvious that their circulation was natural. If Mr. Truesdell wishes to impeach the statements of Mr. Cooper, he will first hav to show that these acts and laws do not exist. Until he does this Mr. Cooper's statements stand unimpaired.

Notwithstanding the array of figures presented by Mr. Truesdell, figures in questions like this one prove nothing without taking into account existing conditions. The contraction Mr. Truesdell givs in figures, even if correct, would be unfair in discussing this question, from the fact that he ignores the amount of money required to carry on the business in the South of which money they certainly did not hav much in June 1865. Here we hav an addition of 11,000,000 people who were left practically without a medium, and which was supplied from the North, a people too who were almost ruined financially by a disastrous war, to say nothing about our own condition and development since the war. If to increase the circulation in keeping with the business demands of a country is inflation, then I am an inflationist. But, it seems to me, Mr. Truesdell might as well say that the adult inflates his blood circulation as compared with childhood.

Now a few words in conclusion. I hope every man who reads THE TRUTH SEEKER will take pains to investigate the real condition of his neighborhood, then extend it to the country, then to the state by comparison, and in a few words giv us through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER the actual state of financial affairs of his county or state. I will here giv the actual indebtedness of Tama Co., in the central part of the state of Iowa, this being an average county of the state, which is as follows:

Unsatisfied mortgages against farms, ...	$2,500,000
Chattel mortgages	350,000
Judgments	500,000
Total,	3,350,000
Paying annual interest at the rate of ten per cent of	$335,000
Taxes last year	123,125
Total to be realized from crops, ...	$458,125
Valuation of County, about	$6,000,000

Now this will hav to be paid regardless of the fact that the purchasing power of money has increased to the extent that a bushel of wheat can be bought for 50 cents here, and thus reducing the price of wheat does not benefit the day laborer in the East since his wages hav been reduced accordingly, and what is still worse it leaves him in many circumstances without employment which is his only means of obtaining money. By applying these figures to the entire state of Iowa we have an indebtedness of $350,000,000 with a valuation of $600,000,000 from which we hav to pay annual interest and taxes $45,812,500. This is the prosperity hard money men talk of.

Now, if there are only a few who will favor us with approximate statements of the conditions of their respective states we can arrive at the truth without wasting any of the valuable space of the good old TRUTH SEEKER; and which will become a truth finder as well as seeker. This is a question which interests us all, and we cannot successfully meet it by groping in the dark. Giv us light! Let us learn the cause and extent of our troubles, and then apply the proper remedy. Respectfully,

Toledo, Iowa, Oct. 12, 1878. J. E. FRICK.

51 versus 76.

If we, the 51, cannot hav our ideas carried out, we will not work with the 76. Our habit of rule or run compels us, like a flock of sheep, to follow the bell-wether. Ignoring the interests of organization and the mature arguments of the 76, we dare not wholly oppose the Christian influences. We must favor the "modification" of the Comstock laws or Christians will call us obscene. We will flatter the Christians, to the injury of our former Liberal friends, whom we so publicly deserted at Syracuse. For which Christian act Comstock will let us alone, while we help him. He now knows we will not work with those of our organization who can outvote us. LEADER.

Injustice the Chief Cornerstone of Christianity.

Man is necessarily a limited being, both physically and mentally. His five senses are so many inlets of intelligence to his understanding. The primary organs or faculties of the understanding are consciousness, sense, and reason.

Says Professor Mahon, in his "Intellectual Philosophy," "Reason is the organ, a priori, of universal truth." Hence it follows that all truth is reasonable; if not, some truths, at least, are unreasonable, and hence hav the properties of falsehood. If all truth is reasonable, it follows conclusively that whatever is unreasonable is untrue; for what is unreasonable conflicts with what we know to be true; and as "we cannot reason but from what we know," reason is our square by which to measure all propositions. All propositions to man, whether relating to this world or another, must be tested by his faculties, or he must be required to believe without knowing why. What virtue can there be in a faith not based upon evidence. That is the kind of faith that accepts of Juggernaut, and Mother Ann Lee as the second coming of Christ. There is no absurdity too great for such a faith to accept.

Faith is the consent of the judgment to the truthfulness of a proposition, and is of value only in proportion to the intelligence of the understanding. "In understanding be men."

According to the above principles, I shall now undertake the analysis of the Christian religion.

Christianity, or Christianism, consists of such doctrines as are peculiar to Christians; for what is common to all religions is not the ism of either. Every religion has something that constitutes the difference between it and other religions, and is therefore its ism; and the ism of Christianity consists, first, in the doctrine of the fall of Adam and consequent depravity of his race; secondly, in the redemption of that race by Jesus Christ. This is neither Judaism, Mohammedanism, Paganism, nor Buddhism, but Christianism.

Everybody is familiar with the story that Adam's offense consisted in eating a forbidden fruit; the consequences—whatever they were—must hav been either a natural result or a judicial infliction. Eating fruit, per se, could not hav been wrong, as Adam was allowed to eat of all the fruits of the garden but that one sort. Nor was it intimated that that sort would hurt him; and unless it did hurt him by being poison, his physical and mental powers remained unimpaired; so in that sense he did not fall. But suppose the fruit to hav been poison, and hence weakened his physical and mental, and depraved his moral, constitution, so that he entailed these qualities upon his offspring; can it be thought for a moment that his offspring could justly be held morally responsible for his constitution. As well hold a man guilty and punish him for having an existence.

But, again, suppose the effects to hav resulted naturally from the violation of moral law; has nature become any better since that day? And if one offense produced total depravity, what must be our moral temperature resulting from all the offenses from Adam's day to this! Ten thousand degrees below zero. There would be nothing left to save.

But the consequences of Adam's offense are not considered by divines and formulators of creeds to be the result of natural law, but a penal infliction. The orthodox creed of Christendom says, "Orignal sin standeth not in the following of Adam [doing as he did], but it is the fault of corruption of the nature of every man, . . . which deserves God's wrath and damnation" (Episcopal Creed).

That of the M. E. Church is substantially the same. The Presbyterian creed says, "Our first parents, being seduced by the subtlety of temptation of Satan, sinned in eating the forbidden fruit. By this sin they fell, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body. The guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature were conveyed to all their posterity. For this original sin every person is bound over to the wrath of God and curse of the law, and so made subject to death with all miseries, spiritual, temporal, and eternal."

From the above it appears that the sin of Adam was imputed, and the miseries of this life, with death, temporal, physical, and spiritual, were conveyed to every child of Adam's race.

Didn't God know, don't every minister know, that no child of Adam ever tasted of that forbidden fruit? And yet it is held that God charged them with the crime when he knew they were not guilty, and inflicted the dread penalties upon those he knew were innocent. If this is justice, pray what is injustice? And yet know all whom it may concern, that this is the first rock, the chief cornerstone, in the Christian edifice. How strange that bishops and D.D.'s can pay their devotions at the shrine of a being who, they say, inflicts sickness, suffering, and the bitter pangs of second death upon a helpless infant for an offense committed by another six thousand years before it drew its breath. And yet this is Christianity.

What could be more unjust than knowingly to charge guilt upon the innocent for an excuse to punish them? "Thou shalt not bear false witness." As well punish a child for offenses committed five thousand years after its death as for those committed six thousand years before it was born. One man can no more sin for another than he can repent for another. As well punish a man for all the sins of all his ancestors as for the sins of Adam and Eve.

Everybody knows that no one ate of the forbidden fruit but Adam and Eve; to impute it to any one else is to accuse him falsely. To convey to persons the penalties due to crimes they never committed is the acme of injustice; and yet upon this rock is the Christian superstructure built.

Redemption, the second ism, depends upon the first for its validity. Redemption implies deliverance from some catastrophe to which the redeemed were justly liable. It is certainly not impertinent to inquire what that catastrophe was; by knowing which we shall be able the better to appreciate the redeemer.

Paul says: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." All the churches say, "The curse of the law included all the pains and aches and sorrow and death of this world, and the burnings of hell forever in another."

Of what transpires in another world we are totally ignorant, and hence can make no argument from it.

Redemption must be a deliverance from the curse of the law in both worlds or only in one. What transpires in this world we know something of; and if we can see that redemption from the curse of the law in this world is available, we shall hav an earnest of redemption in another.

It is said that the blessings of redemption are secured to infants, dying in infancy, by imputation. Well, they were made sinners by imputation, and it is no more than right that they should be made righteous by imputation; the latter cancels the former. But is there not a little balance in their favor? What about the suffering they endured, conveyed to them in consequence of imputed sin? Should there not be some compensation (in some other world, if they liv to get there)?

What proof hav we that infants ever experience any blessing from redemption? If sickness and death are the curse of the law, and Christ has redeemed them from the curse, why should they suffer the curse when the law's demands on them for imputed sin hav been paid? Can the law collect the same debt twice?

But the blessings of redemption, it is said, are obtained by adults by faith. By faith they are regenerated and born again; old things are passed away, and all things hav become new. They are created anew in Christ Jesus, and, having been born of God, sin no more; for he that is born of God does not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God, and joint heir with Jesus Christ. These have the promise of anything they shall ask for.

Jesus said unto them: "If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it. If any two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything ye shall ask, it shall be done. Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Ye shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover. In my name shall ye cast out devils, and if ye shall drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt you."

If the above was given by inspiration, then God said it, and phenomena will justify it.

But do we know of any such men on earth? Are there any that cannot sin? Are there any that recover the sick by laying hands upon them? But this is not all they are promised, for Jesus said unto them, "Verily, verily I say unto you, if ye hav faith and doubt not, ye shall not only do this to the fig-tree, but also if ye shall say to this mountain, 'Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea,' it shall be done. And all things whatsoever ye shall ask, believing, ye shall receive." Again, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do. And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do."

Christ does not seem to speak these words for the use of some particular persons present, but speaks in a general sense, as if he had said, He that believeth on me, in this or any age of the world, the works that I do shall he do, and greater. If these words were designed to be prophetical, then it follows that either they are not true or there are no believers in the world; for where are any such works performed?

But if such as hav been regenerated, born again, sanctified, and made children of God and joint heirs with Christ, suffer the curse of the law—all the miseries and death of this world—what advantage from redemption. If Christ suffered in our stead—certainly he did not suffer eternal damnation—if he paid the demand of justice, and if God acknowledged payment, should not the judgment be discharged? Why continue to collect it to the end of life?

The sick minister sends for a doctor because he has more confidence in him than he has in the words of Jesus Christ.

The Presbyterian Confession of Faith says: "This corruption of the nature, during this life, doth remain in those that are regenerated; what a blessing to be a child of God—yet both itself and all the motions thereof are truly and properly sin."

What advantage, then, hav the regenerated, or children of God, over the children of the devil? Simply this: the children of God can sin all their lives without fear of hell. Christ has gone their security against hell, but they catch it in this world just as much as the children of the devil. But it is great comfort to know that their names are unerasibly written in the Lamb's Book of Life. It is a life insurance policy for heaven. It don't save from calamity in this world; God can see helpless babes dashed to pieces in the storm, drowned in the billows, burned in the flames, starved in the famine, and never apply one principle of redemption, though supplicated with many prayers and tears. But what a comfort to know you hav a ticket that will pass you through the narrow gate when you die! What a thing it is to be saved after we are dead! But if the blood of Christ does not save us in this world, what security hav we in another? A. B. PIKARD.

B F. UNDERWOOD lectured at Nora Junction, Iowa, Nov. 26th, 27th, and 28th; at Brazil, Indiana, Nov. 30th, Dec. 1st; Marysville, Ohio, Dec. 3d, 4th, and 5th; and will speak at Big Rapids, Mich. Dec. 7th and 8th.

TERRA ALBA, or white earth, is used to adulterate white sugars, cream of tartar, and other commonly used articles. Its use tends to produce disease of the kidneys, bladder, and stomach.

Letters from Friends.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Nov. 29, 1878.

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: I don't like to write begging letters, nor is it pleasant to be begged for, but when necessity commands, one must needs accomplish its behests. A duty should never be shirked.

I hav just received a letter from our good old Liberal friend Jeremiah Hacker, one of the very few whose whole life has been a labor of love towards his kind. He has spoken bold, brave words of truth at a time when to speak them was to risk social martyrdom, disgrace, and contumely. He has helped many a poor unfortunate to obtain a home, an education, and a good standing in society; and now, while these recepients of his bounty and generosity are enjoying all the comforts of life, he himself is left, in his old age, bankrupt in consequence of his too active benevolence, which gave all and retained nothing for future use.

Many of us, my dear friends, are revelling in the possession of blessed and glorious truths which Mr. Hacker, in years past, scattered all over the land through the columns of his staunch little "Pleasure Boat," and now shall we sit comfortably by our firesides, reading our pet TRUTH SEEKER, while he, who blazed a way for it by hacking down the giant old oaks of the theological forest, and sowing the true corn of life—scientific knowledge and common sense truths—in their stead, is shivering with cold and perishing with want? No! A thousand times no! If we would be truly liberal we must open our hearts to the call of our aged and suffering brother's needs. Old age will come to us all, and when it comes we each one hope it will be for us a season of rest, peace, content, and happiness. We dream, dream, of a warm, cosy fireside, a comfortable arm-chair, little children about our feet, and peace and plenty all around us. Are we any more deserving of all this than is our aged brother? Shall we not each one do something for him to make his closing days a little brighter, to make his heart throb with gratitude to feel that there are warm, loving, true souls who rejoice to shed sunshine and happiness beneath his humble roof?

I feel, my friends, that every one of you, as you read this, are willing right now to do something in this good cause. Well, now is the time. Don't wait for to-morrow, but sit down before you go to bed, and for your evening prayer write a few friendly lines and inclose a little, if not more than ten cents, to Jeremiah Hacker, Berlin, New Jersey. And we must not let our help be spasmodic, either, but resolve to send at least ten cents a month as long as it is needed—not send each month, but twenty-five or fifty cents at a time. I shall send some yarn to-day for stockings. Cannot some good brother send a warm coat or flannels? He writes that his clothes are old and tattered and thin and threadbare. Money is terribly scarce now. I havn't ten cents in the world; but it is comforts he needs as well as money, so we can all do something. When I think of good men like him in need and want, it is the one bitter drop in my cup of life that my means are so cramped that I cannot do more for them. But "many littles make a mickle," and few are too poor to do something and giv something in a good cause like this. Hopefully yours,

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

P. S.—Will all who are willing to subscribe to this ten-cent monthly fund send in their names to Bro. Bennett, so that we may know that something is being really accomplished? E. S.

BURNSIDE, PA., SEPT. 28, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Sir: Through the kindness of my nearest neighbor, Alex. McCullough, one of your subscribers, I hav the pleasure of perusing your very valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like it very much; the Darwin story is a good one. I like Mrs. Slenker's writings, all of them; it is a pity the world is not full of just such women as Elmina D. Slenker. In regard to your late arrest, I would just say, a good tree always gets stoned for its fruits. Go on in your good work, Brother Bennett, your reward awaits you. Until the masses of the people are educated up to a higher standard we must expect such boors as A. Comstock and his priest-ridden class to persecute us. They are not aware, perhaps, that "to persecute is to propagate," and that it is a good advertisement for you and yours to arrest you. Please find inclosed fifteen cents in stamps for which send me "Cupid's Yokes," that awful book.

Yours truly, T. L. LOVELACE.

GREENSBURG, IND., Nov. 6, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Inclosed please find $3 to be placed to the credit of Col. J. C. McQuistian, who feels that to do without THE TRUTH SEEKER would be doing without the bread of life. You may set him down as a life-long subscriber, and when he is compelled to "shuffle off this mortal coil," and take that big leap into the dark, he wants a big pile of TRUTH SEEKERS to light upon, instead of "in the arms of Jesus," or any other man.

Respectfully, C. C. BURNS.

OAK HILL, MISURY, Nov. 30, 1878.

MYSTER BENET: Tobuz boried yer nasty Infidel paper from old Moses Stansbery, an I can stand it knough longer Ile expoze that long-knowzed Deeken Squidmore. Myster Edytur, heeze arter know good upon the erth, iether 2 yoo or 2 the church. Heel wruin yer payper az well az the church. Fer Gods ache doughnt let old Squidmore run yer payper. Ile tell yoo awl abought the Deekens name and carracter. Ive never seen 1 that wood do 2 tigh 2. Thare awl sneeks in the grass. U sea our church in Gosh'n doin good til Bruther Mil'r got the contrak 4 bil'dn a knew hous. He took the jaub sew cheep, the church elekted hymn deeken. Hwen Bruther Will and Bruther Psalm flue oph the trak an got the Infidels to help thegm put up Oak Hill Church. Then Bruther Will got 2 thik with a widder sister in the church. 2 sum up the hull, in 15 munthz Sister Wilson giv birth 2 a boy baby with white hare, and the very imij ov the Deeken. U sea the church wauntid 2 investigait the boy, butt Bruther Spouter, thee churches pasture, sedd that it wood nevver doo too stur a bad thyng, an eff Sister Wilson wud plede gilty, Bruther Will wud do the sayme, an Jesus wood be satisfighed. But Sister Wilson deklaired that Jesus node aul about it, an their wauz know yuce ov pleeding ghilty. Ryte aun the heels, Bruther Dow wauz maid deekin of Gosh'n; hee took a yung sister in2 hiz fammily to do for, an in 15 munths Bruther Dow had 2 taik a tripp 2 the Injin Nashun, an the yung sister had to gough laung 5 kook. Bless the Laurd, theign leffed it kriying inn the Injin Nashun, an kneether ov thegm ever c that cheild aughter.

U c I tolled Tobuz that Bruther Gow wood naught do, 4 evree thyme wen it kum 2 praigh, Bruther Gow wauz gawn aughter waughter. Thuss yu se deekens r aul bad egs, awl the time. Myster Benet, jest kumm doun on old Squid, & Jesus will bless yoo, an the church will bee filled. Ive allwaze heern tel as hou thare waughs sum good Infidels. The ole devil is luce, an is houling upp an doun the cuntry, jest phooling phoxe. Yu c in ole Squids 2d episel how that ole hownd tokt about the whimmen of Pius Hauler, as well as his blarney 2 his Sister Jones, an the ole fox hsz got her to smilin, an hwen theigh kan do that theigh think theigh kan do mower. I kud tell yew about a deekin pincushin, but U sea Bruther Compstik is aughtir aul sich.

Nothin mower Till deth, MRS. SUZA HANKS.

POSTSKRIPT.—Plees dont prent this, as Bruther Compstik mite awrest me in mistake. I dont waunt 2 b dragged about aphter sich. Sister Martha tolled me that Bruther Compstik had awrested his Unkil Psalm 4 puttin a nakid womban pictur upawn the gnu gnashunal silver ½ dauler. Its gnaked shoer, for Tommy Krites shode it 2 hour Sally an maid her blush wright smart. The thys r xpozed too a gr8 x10t as plane as kanby. MRS. HANKS.

P. S. 2.—I hav throne off the h8ful baunds an shakels of an effete an superstishus orthografy an revel in the deliteful pheeld of Freespellin. S. H.

CANT.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Nov. 6, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Deeming THE TRUTH SEEKER a great moral and intellectual educator, I have chosen as the subject of this communication the elucidation of the meaning of this little noun cant, as it is applied to some of the hackneyed phrases in common use, and accepted as reliable axioms by a great many people, and more especially is this the case with those reared with narrow ideas in regard to the duties and responsibilities of life.

It would be a thing impossible for us (were we to make the attempt) to number the thousands of men, women, and children who are living to-day in miserable hovels, in dreary and freezing quarters, or in dark, damp, and loathsome cellars, living in squalor, starvation, and woe, who are dragging out a miserable existence in our almshouses and workhouses or confined as criminals in our jails and prisons serving out years of penal servitude, who can ascribe no other good reason for their being thus situated, except it be their being the victim of cant.

They hav from early childhood heard iterated and reiterated such sophisms as "the Lord will provide;" "the world owes us a living," and scores of other cant phrases, until they hav come to look upon them as maxims, worthy of credence—verities to be carried out in the actualities of life, and the result of attempting to carry these sayings into practice has brought them where they now find themselves. Whenever I hear a person say "the world owes me a living," I feel like saying, What a lie! The world owes you nothing but the air you breathe, and that is often so fetid and poisonous with malaria as to be unfit to breathe, and only capable of producing disease and death. No! the world owes us nothing, but what we take hold with the powers and forces that are inherent in our own mental and physical natures, and by diligent work bring out by persistent contact with the powers in nature around us, and for a proof of this we hav only to look about us and observe the conflict that we see going on continually in all of the forces of nature around us.

The light and heat of the sun, the rain drops, the gentle dew, and the air, but touch the leaves of the mightiest forest trees, or the smallest sprig of moss that rears its tiny head in the desert, and they are absorbed for the purpose of giving new forms of life, and this principle, showing the necessity of action and work in order to obtain a living, is still more plainly illustrated in every form of animal life, from the smallest animalcule to the most powerful beast of prey that roams the jungle in search of food. These all show that the world owes no living thing a living that does not work to obtain it.

And the saying that the Lord will provide, is no less objectionable than the one we have just spoken of. It is a religious cant that has caused untold misery and suffering in the world, and when brought into practical life it has proven, and is proving over and over again to be nothing but silly sentimentality and bosh. As an illustration, read of the starvation in China and India; look at the suffering and death caused by the fever in portions of our own country during the past summer—almost depopulating whole cities and sections of country. These and all other calamities, be they great or small, are subject to natural law, and affect civilized and barbarians, Christians and Infidels alike, under like circumstances, conclusively showing that the cant that the Lord will provide is a mere mythical sentimentalism.

I do not wish to be understood as assuming that there is no God or Lord, or power, or force in nature higher than man. But if there is such a being as a God or Lord (which I hope there is), yet we find ourselves endowed with mental faculties, and physical powers, and it is through a proper use of these faculties and powers that we must provide for ourselves, and if we do not make good and effective use of these powers and forces, and do our level best to help ourselves, there will be very little use in our appealing to the powers and forces of the air, or complaining of their neglecting us if we are not properly looked after and provided for. And I do truthfully and honestly believe that the sooner we can get the people to comprehend and understand correct ideas of life, the sooner we shall be able to put a stop to a large portion of the pauperism and crime in the world. Then giv us light and liberty for all humanity.

I was rather pleased with the result of the session of the Liberal Congress at Syracuse. To be sure it would be better if all of the Liberals of the country could pull together, and work for the liberty and enlightenment of humanity. But there is no use of wasting all of the strength and usefulness of a good team in a vain endeavor to pull along a bawky horse. I was fearful that the namby pamby element of the Convention might capture it, and then we should hav had to hear of another year or two of cultured leadership. We may as well straighten up and stand erect like men at once, and not try to longer carry the foibles of the Christian Church on our shoulders. My idea is, Let every tub stand on its own bottom. F. F. FOLLET.

NEWFIELD, N. J., Nov. 10, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir; As the imprisonment of Mr. Heywood is doing good service in advertising "Cupid's Yokes," it ought to do the same for the other and better works of this eminent reformer. His little Word is one of the truest reform papers in the world; and his pamphlets "Yours and Mine" and "Hard Cash" are worth more than cords of books on political economy. No one can justly claim to be well informed on the currency and labor questions till he has read and considered the views presented in these invaluable little books. Let every truth seeker who has not read them procure and study them, and thereby aid the author a little and himself a good deal, and promote the cause of freedom and progress. A. M. J. M. PAGE.

COLOGNE, IND., Oct. 15, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed $1.00 to pay for my TRUTH SEEKER till the first of January next, and also postage stamps for two copies of "Cupid's Yokes." Please accept our (I mean pa, ma, grandpa, and myself) deepest and most earnest sympathy in your troubles. Wish we could send you something more substantial—a ten-dollar greenback, for instance; but we are poor. Grandpa says if he had the money he has spent in the support and defense of that old harlot, the Church, he would be able to send you something worth while. With kindest regard for you, I remain, Yours, KITTY E. GLASS.

N. B.—Pa wishes you to send him a few of those slips, that he may enroll his name with those noble and patriotic heroes for the defense and spread of truth. K. E. G.

LIVONIA, MICH., Aug. 28, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I should like much to write you a long letter to tell you how I appreciate your labor in scattering the clouds of superstition, for I myself, having been in darkness, can appreciate the light. I once belonged to the Congregational church, but, getting no evidence of what I professed to believe, I could not play the hypocrite, and was gradually cutting loose the bands of theology, and about one year ago saw your paper for the first time, and since then hav been a constant reader of it, and with its help hav made giant strides, and am now free from all church dogmas.

We hav organized a club called the Liberal Club of North Nankin, and hav had some of the best lectures of the times from the following named speakers: Dr. J. L. York, of California; G. B. Stebbins, of Detroit; Mrs. Morse; Mrs. Pearsal; and Mrs. Shepard. We expect Mrs. Morse with us again soon; and Dr. York will speak to us again on the 8th of September. We wish to get some good music for this occasion, and if you will please send me a half dozen copies of your "Truth Seeker Collection," I will remit the amount by return mail. Yours for the truth, C. D. PADDACK.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav long desired to say a few words of encouragement to you, but it being impossible to send any substantial token of sympathy, I hav resisted the impulse. Mr. Bradford (of opossum fame) pays for the glorious TRUTH SEEKER for me, and into my lonely life it comes weekly as a cheering ray of light. I am a poor old woman, more than half way between seventy and eighty years of age. I stand alone in the world—yet not so, for I hav a few very dear friends among the progressive minds. From my very childhood I was a skeptic—trained to be such by a father who always told me to adopt no opinion until I had put it to the test of my own reason. So I hav never joined a church; for I very early discovered that Christianity had been a humbug from the beginning. Yet I never would believe that this life was all of my existence. Besides, so many unaccountable circumstances happened in my existence that convinced me that there was an inner me combined with my material existence, and that this inner self could not lose its identity when the outward form went to decay; consequently I am a Spiritualist. At twelve years of age I became interested in the anti-slavery cause. In the year 1832, at the age of thirty, I came, with my husband, to the United States. Here we met, in pro-slavery sentiment, far more stubborness than we had encountered in England. I was abused and persecuted to such a degree that it sometimes seemed as if for me there was no standing-place. This only gave me more strength for the conflict, and gave me cause for persevering. But it kept us poor in this world's goods, but oh! how rich in the faith of ultimate success. But when I looked around on the condition of society, I could not think the severing the links of the slaves' fetters was the ultimatum of success. I thought it must be considered as a beginning, and as an entering wedge to rend asunder the fetters that were binding mankind all through what is called civilization. The greatest obstacle I hav ever seen or can now see in the path of progress is the religious institution of mankind. It is religion, Mr. Editor, that would immure you in a dungeon to rot out miserably your life. It is religion that has sent poor Heywood to the fate of a felon. Obscenity! What cares the church for obscenity? Doesn't she harbor the foul stuff in her bosom continually? Are not many of her chosen prophets sunk in filth the most coarse and revolting? And are not these the very ones most caressed and fondled by the pious sisterhood? Faugh! "The offense is rank, it smells to heaven."

O that I had the ability to pour out all that is in my soul! But I am afraid I hav already wearied you with my miserable scrawl. Wishing you a safe escape from the coming ordeal, I remain, in the bonds of sympathy,

Yours, ANN CLARK.

MCPHERSON, KAN., Nov. 8, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I received "Cupid's Yokes," which I ordered of you some time ago, and, after reading it carefully, must say that I fail to find any "obscenity" in it. It deals in a plain, open, and impartial manner with a subject which should receive the candid and serious attention of all thinking people, and upon which rests the future weal or woe of the human family—marriage and reproduction. It is a fearless work, and well calculated to awaken thought upon these subjects. That the writer is in prison and others are awaiting trial for selling it is far more dangerous to the morals and dignity of our free American institutions than all the Freethought publications that may ever be sent through our mails. These Christian would-be champions of morality and chastity should cast the beam out of their own eyes before attempting to remove the mote in their neighbor's; and I think the "Bible Abridged" would assist them very much in seeing the inherent rottenness of their "infallible" foundation, so far at least as the obscenity question is concerned. Please send two additional copies of "Cupid's Yokes," for which find money inclosed, and put my name on the Declaration of Rights. J. E. MILLIKEN.

MORRIS, Nov. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: As I hav occasionally found THE TRUTH SEEKER in my post-office box, and hav enjoyed much of its contents, I concluded to acknowledge the same to you, together with a little history of Liberalism in our town. The village of Morris contains just inhabitants enough to hav it incorporated, four churches, and as many pastors, with slim congregations, struggling to keep them alive with the aid of tea parties, festivals, etc., etc. Some twenty years ago a Universalist minister by the name of T. J. Smith, now passed over, as the phrase is, preached Spiritualism here, demonstrating it at his house, as his daughter was a medium. It had quite a run before the ministers could check it by warning their congregations to keep away and to accept no other doctrine than they preached (Christ crucified), although an angel from heaven proclaimed it; and, it being new to most of them, it did play some little antics in a few fanatics, which, of course, they were glad to take advantage of; but to-day I may safely say, I think, that one-half of this town (and surely half of the male population) are either Spiritualists or Liberals of some kind. There are not many Liberal papers taken here yet. We generally manage to hav a two days' meeting once a year. Lyman C. How has been here three times, I think, and draws a good house. I inclose a few stamps, for which please send me a few tracts. I will let you make the selections. It is hard work to get any one to take our papers, as they cost about three times what they can get the story and news papers for. Yours truly, E. WILCOX.

FLORENCE, IOWA, Nov. 11, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I see by the last TRUTH SEEKER that my friend Cornelius Rucker, of Belle Plaine, has fought his way out of the fogs of "liberal Christianity" into the full light of science and Freethought, and that henceforth he will wear the whole armor of Truth. Good! May he be always found fighting "for the truth which is in" humanity.

I like the spirit manifested by J. S. Verity and Prof. Rawson in the Syracuse Courier. And Abbot could not stand the amount of free speech necessary to enable a man to vote for the officer of his choice! What are we coming to? Mighty chiefs hav we! They were going to mob you at Syracuse, were they, for selling "Cupid's Yokes?" Poor, short-sighted bigots! Can they not see that every such attempt to suppress the sale of that excellent pamphlet increases the demand for it, and that their persecutions of you and others selling it is but so much free advertising? Quoting the sentiment, if not the exact words, of a recent writer, I would say that there is one class upon whom we can always rely to help us—the stupid conservatives. They never fail us.

Your Brooklyn correspondent, Mr. Bruce, thinks that when Mrs. Slenker stands by the coffined form of some dear friend she must "keenly feel the pangs of separation." Undoubtedly; but how does that prove immortality? He says that "nature inwardly revolts at the blasting idea of oblivion—of gone, and gone forever." There are many things at which our natures revolt, but how does that demonstrate the immortal existence of the individual? We must be careful not to mistake our desires for more than they are—desires. Many of us desire wealth, fame, love, a thousand things which never become ours. If our minds are constituted aright and the surrounding circumstances are favorable, we can obtain some of the objects of our desire, as contentment of mind, honesty of purpose, temperance, and sometimes the wealth that we covet, the fame for which we struggle, or the love which we crave, become ours. But the desire for a thing is no prophecy that we shall sometime possess it. All things are subject to decay. This is nature's great fact. Nature is a unit. If we are immortal, as entities, there is a miracle somewhere. E. C. WALKER.

ILLIBERAL LIBERALS.

It is an old saying that "it takes all sorts of folks to make a world;" and I think it takes nearly all sorts to make the world of reformers and Freethinkers. Some push out boldly in one direction, in advance of the world, and strike telling blows against certain evils and falsities, while in other equally important reforms they seem to be ignorant, stupid, prejudiced, hostile, and illiberal. We hav men who repudiate, renounce, and denounce orthodoxy and popular theology with great zeal and ability, but at the same time are very hostile to any change or reform in the laws, customs, habits, and fashions in sexual and social relations, and are filled with "holy horror" of Freelove and Freelovers—as though there could be any other love than free love. I am astonished when I see so much sexual and social bigotry and ignorance among men who would fain be called Liberal and tolerant—men who, in regard to the sexual and social slaveries and tyrannies which are all in character with and an outgrowth of that theology which they hate, are as narrow and conservative as bigotry could ask. I suppose the order of evolution into freedom is: physical, political, religious, and social. The last, highest and most important degree—social and sexual freedom (I mean that freedom that givs every man and woman entire control of his or her person)—seems not yet to hav dawned upon the minds of most of our theological, religious, and political iconoclasts and reformers.

When a man calls himself a Liberalist and Freethinker, and at the same time says he will not belong to any society or associate with a Freelover, I am impressed that he has no liberality or manhood "to brag of." Said a man to a boy, "What business hav you to be hallooing when I am going by?" "What business hav you to be going by when I am hallooing?" said the boy. Well would it be for some of our self-righteous Liberals if they would remember that "difference of opinion is not always a difference of principle." Some seem to be so constituted that they can see truth and error only in one direction, while they are very illiberal and sometimes denunciatory towards those who see the need of knowledge and reform in other directions. It should be the constant aim and effort of all free, progressive minds to look out from the center of their own being or the universe, in every direction, for truth and error, with clear eyes and an unprejudiced mind. The illiberality displayed at the Syracuse Convention greatly disappointed and saddened me, for I felt that the term Liberal League was almost a misnomer. Yet I suppose Liberal Leagues are progressive, and must hav time to grow. J. H. COOK.

MARMORA, CAN., Nov. 19, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Hav been pressed for time, or would hav written before. "The Champions of the Church" will deal a heavy blow to the pillars of the Church. I wish all its benighted members would read this book and view its various characters in their true light as there depicted; there would then be less fanaticism and bigotry than now. The scales would fall from their eyes, and they would be led to exclaim, Whereas, I was born blind, but now I see. There would be no need of a miracle or a heavenly vision. I hope your efforts in spreading the much-needed literature of Liberalism abroad through the country will be fully appreciated and prove a source of profit both to yourself and the community at large. I subscribe to the Declaration of Rights as given by Elizur Wright, and consider that every Liberal in the country ought to do the same. I also go for repeal, yet am no Freelover. I go for the principle of right, and, considering the Comstock law as radically wrong and dangerous in the extreme, therefore I say repeal; then, if such kind of laws are found necessary, frame a new one, based on a more equitable footing, properly defining what is obscene and what is not, and laying down the proper regulations to guide all concerned in the carrying of it out in a proper spirit. There is no necessity for any Paul Pry poking his nose into every stench-hole throughout the community; stirring it up only makes it smell the worse. There are enough decent people left in society to cover up and get rid of such things as prove a nuisance without a great deal of special law-making on the subject. Society is not all Anthony Comstocks yet, always ready, like him, to hunt up every indecency. With kind regards, I remain, in haste,
Yours fraternally, ED. PAYNE, M.D.

GOLD HILL, NEVADA, Oct. 28, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been a reader of your invaluable paper for three months. It is needless to say that I am exceedingly pleased, yea, in love with it. It affords me a great deal of pleasure to send you the names of six trial subscribers. Four of these were obtained by my Infidel friend, D. D. Clark, who is also one of your many readers. I hav reason to believe that when the new subscribers will hav read the noble TRUTH SEEKER for three months they will not readily part with it. I am glad to see that the very liberal offers which you make to new subscribers are numerously accepted all over the country. I read with rapt attention the many able and encouraging letters which you receive touching that great outrage perpetrated at Watkins by the followers of Christ. I am somewhat disappointed however, in not seeing any such letters emanating from this state of Nevada, for I know that your friends and sympathizers here are quite numerous. And I hav no doubt that as lovers of truth and justice, all who can will tender you a helping hand in the present emergency.

I inclose you ten dollars, so besides the six trial subscribers and the books there will be one dollar and fifteen cents for the Defense Fund. Brother Bennett, this is all I can do for the present, but will try to send you my subscription for 1879. May success crown your noble efforts for the good of mankind. Yours for truth and justice, PAUL GARIEPY.

PEORIA, ILL., Nov. 11, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: I cannot help thinking how foolishly the Rev. Gordon, Abbot & Co. hav acted in the late Congress. They certainly appear in a very unreasonable attitude, and their satellites, etc., must regret the movement. I must add a word of approval of THE TRUTH SEEKER for its lead in phonetic spelling. This language reform has a loud demand for the support of publishers, and they can put it into practice in a limited degree.
Fraternally yours in all true reform, F. RICE.

DOWAGIAC, MICH., Nov. 18, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find postal order for $7, for which send "Champions of the Church," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," and "The Bible of Bibles." Not long since I sent you $1 to apply on my subscription to the T. S., and since then you hav been sending me two copies. I guess you hav got me down twice on your mail list. I don't object to receiving them, for I pass them around, and no doubt they will in time bring forth fruit; but I guess you can't afford it, so you had better attend to the matter and cut off one.

Last March I wrote about fifty circular letters to the Freethinkers in this city and vicinity, inviting them to meet at my office for the purpose of forming a Liberal League, and at the time appointed there were forty present. And not knowing anything about a National League at the time, we organized on our own hooks, and hav been steadily making accessions to our ranks ever since. We are all in sympathy with the Repealers, and will soon make application for admission as an auxiliary of the old National Liberal League. I will, at our next meeting, endeavor to raise semething for the Defense Fund. Keep right on, Brother Bennett, striking your ever-telling blows against ignorance and superstition, and for the mental freedom of the human race, never heeding the "fire in the rear" of Abbot, Comstock & Co. Yours respectfully, DR. THOMAS RIX.

BOWLING GREEN, KY., Oct. 2, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: All true Liberals must admit that you take the only just views concerning the obscenity question. No other views can sustain Freethought, free speech, free press—the only access to truth, liberty, happiness. I hav never read "Cupid's Yokes," yet whatever its contents, they are the opinions of one who had a right to free thought, and consequently a right to free expression and promulgation of the same. Yes, however far Mr. Heywood's theory may be from the remedy of the evil which he proposes to cure, it was an endeavor to find the truth, and as truth is only found by endeavor, should it not endeavor be free? Should we persecute and imprison him who, though vainly, exercised this freedom? Oh, deny the broadest facts of earth! Call every truth man yet has found a lie save this: "The free endeavor, however blind, to find the true is truth."

The crucible of Freethought is the only correct test of the genuineness of truth. The creed that has not undergone this test is yet dubious, dangerous. The doctrine that prohibits criticism fears purification. No truth, no faith, is too sacred for criticism; no doubt is too criminal for freedom. Only freedom of thought can establish truth; get the truth once thus established and not all the power of Freethought itself can shake it, but must play about it as harmlessly as the idle zephyr about the Pyramids of Egypt. And he who builds his faith on truths not thus established must prove the dupe of his own egotism. Loathing all that is obscene,
I am yours, W. H. BRASHEAR.

PERSECUTION.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Nov. 8, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: All reformers hav been persecuted. "Cupid's Yokes" is no exception to this general, generous Christian rule. This subject is of great importance to mankind, and it should be much better understood than it now is. It has indeed been long—too long—neglected. If selection and adaptation of natural laws hav done so much to improve stock, fowls, grains, vegetables, fruits, flowers, etc., how much more desirable and necessary to improve and elevate mankind! This is the meritorious design and intention of "Cupid's Yokes." This is a nation of science, progression, and improvement; but the Church (as in former ages) is bound to oppose and persecute all who differ in opinion from her ancient creeds and dogmas. Anything objectionable in "Cupid's Yokes" can easily be laid aside without destroying a good cause. This idea should hav prevented a rupture amongst reformers. It is deeply and doubly painful to see contention in their front ranks. It seems that this might hav been avoided had each party been determined to do right. It is possible that laws may be so framed as to plainly and clearly define what is lawful on this subject and what is not lawful, so that the innocent may all be protected, and none but the guilty exposed to punishment. Will every advocate of reform use the pen to thoroughly ventilate this long-neglected but most important subject? A. B,

NAT. MILITARY HOME, OHIO, Nov. 13, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav read "Cupid's Yokes;" it is not obscene; but I do think it is a poor bucket of slops for Liberals to fight over. Perhaps it is best to resist all entering wedges, but I could wish we didn't hav to handle dirt. Christianity is delighted with the business. If they had hired Heywood to poke up the stink, he could not hav pleased them better. They wish to compel Infidelity to shoulder their stink, or to lose the "right of way." And some Liberals feel compelled to push the stink cart through, or lose the "right of way." Christians don't hate obscenity, don't fight it, and I am sorry to see the fight diverted from the real issue. I know, too, what Christians do hate—it's light. I don't indorse "Yokes;" it is fanatical, absurd, and but a special pleader against decent marriage; but it is not obscene. Christians know they lie when they say so. It is immodest and exaggerated; so is the Bible, also. But I must close. Yours ever for truth, B. W. ALLEN.

WINDSOR, KAN., Nov. 9, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find $2 00, which place to my credit, and fifteen cents in postage stamps for "Cupid's Yokes." I want to see that terrible book, and I will giv fifty dollars to see the man, woman, or child that "Cupid's Yokes" has materially injured. I hav never seen a book or pamphlet or paper that injured me—not even the Bible. Go all your weight for repeal of the Comstock law. I want no half-way grounds. I go the whole hog or none. I did not sign your petition last winter because of the word "modification" in it. As Mr. Seaver says, a bad law should be repealed. Yes, it should, first and last, and all the time. If you get up a petition for unconditional repeal, put my name to it in full—William McManaman Robinson, or send me a petition. All the Christians except the real low and vulgar ones signed Mr. Heywood's petition in these parts. Some fifty persons signed the one I circulated. I am very much obliged to you for waiting on me so long, but I could not help it. I sent you one dollar the first of June last. Did you receive it? It was, as this, to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER. W. M. ROBINSON.

DETROIT, MICH., Nov. 18, 1878.

DEAR BRO. BENNETT: I hav been a constant reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for a year or so past, as it is kept on sale at one of our principal bookstores on one of our principal streets right in the face of Uncle Sam's postoffice in our city. But seeing your very generous offer for trial subscribers, I've concluded to send my name and the amount for THE TRUTH SEEKER for three months, and by the high and holy help of my own exertions, I hope to continue to be a subscriber as long as I continue to exist in mortal form, and when out, it will remain (in my opinion) for me to find out what I shall do. As for the premium book, you can send me that grand old patriot's work, Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," not because I hav never read the same, On the contrary, I hav; but as I am so proud of a man who was bold enough to publish and circulate to the bigoted world of his age and day such a sound and reasonable work, I feel like memorizing him to having his best work grace our family centre-table. I hav no holy Bible in our house, except the "abridged volume," published by the Independent Bible Society of New York, and for sale by yourself. I purchased a copy of the same while at our glorious Watkins Convention, as well as the photo. of Thomas Paine. I read the "Holy Bible" (abridged) with delight, and keep it exposed to the view of all who may call. I shall continue to loan it to my friends, and orthodox friends in particular, and to Sabbath-schools and the Young Men's Christian Associations it should be read by, and especially the above, for I think without reading carefully the abridged volume of the holy writ people are not competent to judge of the beauty of the inspiration of the word of God. But enough. We hav quite a Liberal city, the grand old town of Detroit. However, with all its Liberalism, we hav the usual amount of hide and creed-bound (so called) Christians.

The grand old soul, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, gave two of his usual eloquent discourses here last week. His closing discourse was, "Some Mistakes of Moses." Notwithstanding the extreme inclemency of the night, Whitney's large Opera House was filled to its suffocating capacity on the holy Sabbath evening of last week; aye, standing room was at a premium, demonstrating the fact that the world is "moving on," and people are eager and hungering for fresh food, and not the old dingy crusts of the creeds. The Colonel did good justice (as well might be expected) to his subject, in showing old Moses "most beautifully up."

I hope I may be able soon to add something to the list on the National Defense Fund. Times are hard, and money is hard to get hold of. Send the paper and the book to 170 Michigan avenue, Detroit, Mich. Yours in truth,
P. O. HUDSON, "The Liberal Sankey."

452 WESTERN AVE, LYNN, MASS., Nov. 13, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: "The Champions of the Church" is the most complete and exhaustive volume I hav ever read; it is a library of itself on churchology. You hav brought the whole world of Liberals under the deepest obligation. So much light upon such dark subjects must help on the progress of humanity among the "sinful ones." I find the portraits of some of my old friends with whom I hav held "sweet communion" in years past, when we talked of the dear young man who parted his hair in the middle. I am greatly pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your catalogue is very tempting, but money is awfully scarce in the city of shoes just now. Yours truly,
W. D. CORKEN, M. D.

FAIRFIELD, PENN., Nov. 19, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find three 3-cent stamps, for which you will please send by mail the pamphlet of 120 pages containing T. B. Wakeman's speech, etc. Isn't it curious, just so soon as science lets in the light and the people refuse to believe, then the Church tells us the Bible doesn't mean that. I wonder if the clergy hav any just idea of the extent to which society is honeycombed with unbelief. I am inclined to think, from what I see, that the vast majority of intelligent people are skeptics. Prudence is the only thing that ties their tongues and prevents an avowal of their Infidelity—the fear of loss of patronage and votes. If the clergy could only see it—could it, by some magical process, be revealed to them but for a moment, they would be stricken dumb in their pulpits. Let anything be uncontestably established, no matter how strenuously the Church has opposed it—truth—then, of course, it is not incompatible with the sacred scriptures. As bayonets now think, laymen now generally are trying to see this. The clerical profession is fast sinking to the rank of the fortune-teller. Very respectfully, A. O. SCOTT.

Sad yet Glad.

BY E. L. SAXON.

When I look on the earth so bright and fair—
It was fair for thee—
I beat my hands in a wild despair,
And am sad for thee.
I look on its sorrow, woe, and pain,
And know you are free;
Death was my loss but it was your gain,
And I am glad for thee.

Memory holds you, so bright and sweet,
In your love for me;
With the ready hands and willing feet,
And I am sad for thee.
But a woman's life of woe and pain
Is spared to thee;
I think of her tears that fall like rain,
And am glad for thee.

I miss you, my sweet, my own little girl,
In your love for me;
I am lonely, I long for my heart's pure pearl,
And am sad for thee.
There comes to my heart, like a sad refrain,
"From earth's sorrows free;"
And I murmur low, in passionate pain,
"I am glad for thee."

Nov. 7th, 1878.

Thoughts on Life.

BY ROBERT CUMMING.

Oh life! through ignorance, how oft thou art
A thing not worth the having! Sure thy cost
Is greater than thy profit to the heart
Of bleeding millions, now so cruelly tost
On thy rough billows. Wronged, repulsive host,
Wounded and wounding with unwitting jeers,
Starving and taunted, all in night engrossed!
"Over-abundance" ringing in their ears,
To soothe their cries for bread, and wipe away their tears.

Deliverance, knowledge! may the rays extend,
Till day shall bid the painful night begone.
For 'tis where comfort, truth, and beauty blend,
Fate's stern decrees assume their mildest tone.
Oh would that these in every land were known,
In every home to match the sunny clime,
Inviting sweet perfection to her throne,
For these alone can render life sublime,
Prolong the page of bliss, and close the book of crime.

Liberty or Death.

TUNE—Hold the Fort.

Ring again the war-cry sterling,
As in days of yore,
When her banner Truth unfurling
Woke the sea and shore.
Let it wake the slumbering nations,
With its vital breath,
Till it joins the aspiration,
"Liberty or death."

CHORUS.—Cry aloud and wake the nations,
Spare not voice or breath;
Cry aloud for truth and freedom,
"Liberty or death."

Freedom for the mind and spirit
And the thoughtful brain;
Freedom that we may inherit
Truths that conquer pain;
Freedom till investigation,
Deepening with each breath,
Sounds the holy inspiration,
"Liberty or death."

CHORUS.

Grasp the sturdy blade of Reason,
Sharp from thoughts within;
Cowardice is direst treason,
Ignorance is sin.
Nature's arsenal is ready,
Potent is her breath;
Freemen, form, then, strong and steady—
"Liberty or death."

CHORUS.

For themselves let souls be thinking,
Learn from all around;
From dear Nature's fountain drinking,
Till true freedom 's found.
Chorus yet again the glory,
Free from slavery's breath;
Men and women, sing the story,
"Liberty or death."

CHORUS.—Cry aloud, etc.

The foregoing stanzas are arranged from Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn's "Giv us Liberty or Death," published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Nov. 23d. Many years ago a quaint old English preacher named Robert Hill said that he did not see why the devil should hav all the best tunes; and he prevailed on his church choir to sing sacred words to "Home, Sweet Home," "Auld Lang Syne," and other popular melodies. Some of the airs sung by Moody and Sankey hav found great favor with the people generally; and there is no reason why they should not be adapted to songs the sentiments of which may be sung with approval and pleasure by persons who do not care to sing what are called gospel hymns. "Hold the Fort" is a good, stirring tune, and almost everybody can sing it. The stanzas above are suited to the music.

The Primitive Man s Ideas of God.

The following is from a review of a new work by Prof. Duncan in the N. Y. Sun:

"The religious ideas and ceremonies which obtain among the lowest of the extant types of man have been collected by Prof. Duncan from the works of scores of travelers whose observations hav been carefully winnowed and digested. In the light of the evidence brought forward many popular misconceptions are dispelled or gravely modified. We learn, for instance, that the Andaman Islanders manifest no notions whatever of a Supreme Being or of a future existence. They hav no tradition and apparently no notion of of their own origin. According to DeButts, "neither the village nor the forest Veddahs hav the slightest conception of a creator or of a future life." According to Bailey, they (the Veddahs) have no knowledge of a Supreme Being. "Is he on a rock, on a white ant hill, on a tree? I never saw a God," was the only reply he received to repeated questions. It appears, however, that the Veddahs hav a vague belief in a host of nameless phantoms, whose influence is rather for good than for evil, and a still more definite faith in the guardianship exercised by the spirits of their dead relatives. It is curious that the shades of their departed children, or "infant spirits," as they call them, are those which they invoke most frequently. Whether the natives of Australia hav an idea of a Providence is doubtful, but they evidently dread evil agency. The natives of Victoria hold that after death they will by and by come back "white fellows" for the obvious reason that when their men die or are killed in battle, the skin is drawn off before the flesh is roasted, and when flayed in this way the flesh of a black man is perfectly white. We may note here a curious superstition observed in West Australia where every tribe holds those to the north of it in special dread, imputing to them an immense power of enchantment. This has been thought to justify the inference that the peopling of New Holland took place from various points toward the north, such superiority being naturally accorded to a parent stock by offshoots. As to the Fuegians, it may be said that while they hav some vague ideas of a spiritual existence, of beneficent and evil powers, yet such competent observers as Cook and Fitzroy never witnessed or heard of any act of a decidedly religious nature, nor could satisfy themselves of their possessing any notion of the immortality of the soul."

Proceedings and Addresses
AT THE
FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION
HELD AT
Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

Will be ready by Oct. 20th. It is a volume of rare value, containing much of the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

A Modern Symposium.
SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Ingersoll's Second Volume.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures,
CONTAINING
The Ghosts, Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child; The Declaration of Independence; About Farming in Illinois; Speech at Cincinnati; "The Past Rises before me like a Dream."

A 12mo volume of 232 pages. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

NOTICE.—I have hitherto published some of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lectures in cheap form, believing that by so doing I was aiding in the diffusion of valuable Liberal reading matter and doing a favor to the general public. At the request, however, of Col. Ingersoll, I shall publish no more of them, but will keep for sale all his lectures so far as published under his own auspices. D. M. BENNETT.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,
WINNERS OF THE
ONLY GOLD MEDAL
AWARDED TO AMERICAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS AT
Paris Exposition, 1878;
the highest distinction in the power of the Judges to confer.

PARIS, 1878 Two Highest Medals.
SWEDEN, 1878
PHILADA, 1876
SANTIAGO, '75
VIENNA, 1873
PARIS, 1867.

AT EVERY WORLD'S EXPOSITION FOR 12 YEARS
They have been awarded the
HIGHEST HONORS

At the Paris Exposition, 1878, they are awarded the GOLD MEDAL, the highest recompense at the disposal of the jury; also the BRONZE MEDAL, the highest distinction for excellent workmanship. They have also received the GRAND GOLD MEDAL OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY, 1878. No other American Organs ever attained highest award at ANY World's Exposition. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES, with newest styles, prices, etc., free.
MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO.,
BOSTON, NEW YORK, or CHICAGO.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,
THE
CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,
Their Crimes and Persecutions,
BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation.

Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.

Address D. M. BENNETT
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

Correspondence Wanted,

By a young lady of good morals, social disposition, and mental temperament, with a gentleman of similar disposition and of the vital temperament, aged from twenty-five to thirty-five.
Address Miss Belle Earneat,
1149 Box 247, Springfield, Mo.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,
Containg the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of
The Holy Volume.
To the Missionary and Bible Societies, Sunday-schools, The Young Men's Christian Association, Societies for the Suppression of Vice, American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally, and especially to ANTHONY COMSTOCK, this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages, 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

Christianity and Infidelity
A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN
REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman
OF NEW YORK, AND
D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.
1y7

The Priest in Absolution,
The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo, Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT. Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

Proceedings of the Indignation Meeting,
Held in Faneuil Hall,
Thursday evening, Aug. 1, 1878, to protest against the injury done to the Freedom of the Press by the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood.

A handsome octavo pamphlet of 68 pages, containing speeches of Hon. Elizur Wright Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Thaddeus B. Wakeman Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, Laura Kendrick, Prof. A L. Rawson, and Moses Hull, and letters from Alfred E. Giles, Theron C. Leland, Parker Pillsbury, A. J. Grover, and D. M. Bennett.

Price, 25 cents. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price, by the publisher.
tf25 BENJ. R. TUCKER, Cambridge, Mass.

PROF. PAYNE'S

Catarrh Vapor and Liquid Ozone

Is Specially Recommended

For that prevalent disease, Catarrh in the head and throat. Hundreds of cases hav been cured by it after other remedies hav signally failed. It arrests the disease by destroying the invisible parasites or animalculæ which cause the disease, arresting putrefaction, killing contagion, purifying the system, and disinfecting the blood. It is used by inhalation, and is also used internally with the greatest success, not only in Catarrh but also Dyspepsia, Scarlet Fever, Small Pox, Measles, Dysentery, etc., etc. Used in connection with Prof. Payne's Liver Renovator Pills it will cure when a cure is possible. Price $1 a Bottle. Pills 25 cents. Send by express. Address, PROF. W. PAYNE,
Peabody Hotel,
2t49 260 South Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Religion of the Future.

A Discourse, by NETTIE PEASE FOX, Editor of The Spiritual Offering, delivered in Odd Fellows Temple, Rochester, N. Y., Sunday, Nov. 10, 1878. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. 1o1

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6.00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 48t75

AURICULAR CONFESSION AND Popish Nunneries.

BY WM. HOGAN,

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents.
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. SIMMONS, 845 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo, 543 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN, A novel. By Fredrika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc, 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp, 12 mo, 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences involved in Modern Thought. By Henry J. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus i, 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404pp. Postpaid, $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Professor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,
Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot,
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham,
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips.
Voltaire,	Emerson,
Rousseau,	Garrison,
Humboldt.	Henry Bergh,
Goethe,	Peter Cooper,
Schiller,	D. R. Burt,
Aug. Comte,	S. P. Andrews.
Heine,	Walt Whitman,
Alex. Pope.	Froude,
John Milton,	Max Muller,
Goldsmith,	Warren Chase.
Shelley,	Jas. Parton,
Byron.	Wm. Denton,
Burns,	Dr. Slade,
Washington,	A. J. Davis,
Franklin.	Foster,
Jefferson,	J. M. Peebles,
John Adams,	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams,	E. V. Wilson,
Madison,	G. L. Henderson.
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske,
Lincoln,	Fred Douglas,
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks,
Gerrit Smith,	P. V. Nasby,
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher,
J. S. Mill,	Tilton,
Sumner.	Moulton,
Edgar A. Poe.	G. W. Curtis.
Greeley,	Th. Nast,
Castellar,	J. G. Bennett,
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana,
Darwin	Phoebe Carey,
Tyndall.	Alice Carey.
H. Spencer,	Elizabeth C. Stanton,
Huxley,	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor,	Lucy Stone,
Draper,	Julia Ward Howe,
Bradlaugh,	Chas. Cheney,
Holyoake,	Paulina Davis,
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis,
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten,
Mendum,	Lizzie Fowler,
Seaver,	Mrs. Slenker,
L. Colby,	Susan H. Wixon.
Dr. Hare,	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy,
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).	Asa K. Butts,
Geo. Francis Train.	W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 10 cents each singly, or eleven for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 60 cts., to hold 50, 80.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St, New York.

ANAYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.
141 Eighth st., New York.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu;

THE BOOK OF THE GENERATION OF JESUS.

WITH PREFACE AND NOTES BY SCHOLASTICUS.

First English Translation

Of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about 106 B. C.; being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. By the power of a charm stolen from the Holy of Holies he cured lepers, raised the dead, and wrought other miracles. Wherefore he was arrested by the elders of Jerusalem, scourged, crowned with thorns, and by order of the Sanhedrin stoned to death and hanged on the day before the Passover and the Sabbath, in the reign of Queen Alexandra, about the year 75 B. C.

Death of Simon Kepha on a tower in the city of the Nazarines about 59 B. C. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros."

Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha.

Price 10 cents. Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

BEYOND THE VEIL

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.
D. M. BENNETT

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words. Postage paid on all.

It having been widely advertised under the caption of "America Ahead in Spool Cotton,"

that the Jury on Cotton textiles, yarns, and threads, at the Paris Exposition, decreed a Gold Medal and Grand Prize to the Willimantic Linen Company for "Spool Cotton especially Adapted for use on Sewing Machines," over all the great thread manufacturers of the world, we owe it as a duty to the public and to J. & P. COATS to announce that

NO GRAND PRIZES WERE DECREED AT PARIS FOR SPOOL COTTON.

We are advised by cable of the following awards:

J. & P. COATS, GOLD MEDAL.

Willimantic Linen Co., Silver Medal.

And we claim for the winners of the First Prize that as they hav established in Rhode Island the largest Spool Cotton Mill in the United States, where their Spool Cotton is manufactured through every process from the raw cotton to the finished spool, AMERICA, as represented by J. & P. COATS, is still AHEAD IN SPOOL COTTON.

AUCHINCLOSS BROTHERS,

Sole Agents in New York for J. & P. COATS.
1t49

THE VOICES.

"The Voices of Nature," "The Voice of a Pebble," "The Voice of Superstition," and "The Voice of Prayer." 8th Edition. A Poetical Eye-Opening volume of 226 pages.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.

Judge Baker in an elaborate review of "The Voices" says: "Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature, the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more and wider encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anti-creedal work ever published."

Price reduced to one dollar. Sold wholesale and retail at The Truth Seeker office.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR:

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

From the Doctrines of the Church. In Poetry. Particularly sharp and pointed. It is well worth reading. Price only 10 cents. Sold at The Truth Seeker office.

THE GREAT SPECIALIST,

Treats all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases with unprecedented success. The thousands of cures he is performing annually substantiate this fact. He has at this moment patients in every State of the Union and in the British Provinces. Every reader of this who has any affection of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the Skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or diseases of the Eye or Ear, are invited to write to Dr. Fellows, whose system of practice is entirely original, omitting all Drugs and Mineral Medicines of both the Old and New schools, hence reliable. The Doctor's crowning medical achievement has been in the discovery of an external or outside application for the permanent cure of Spermatorrhœa and Impotency as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy.

Dr. Fellows has prescribed his external remedy for 1,500 cases without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane Asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of Consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information address, with two 3-cent stamps, Vineland, New Jersey, where Doctor R. P. Fellows is permanently located, and obtain his private circular on "Spermatorrhœa and its Cure," or, if afflicted with other complaints, his large circular treating on the above-named chronic diseases, both containing sworn evidences, which is convincing and positive testimony to the Doctor's great skill. In order that all can avail themselves of his services he has placed his terms at a very reasonable figure.

[From the Denver (Col.) Rocky Mountain Herald.]

"Dr. Fellows is a successful specialist for all the diseases which he claims to cure, such as chronic and sexual complaints. His wonderful skill and success are bringing him hundreds of cases weekly by letter and otherwise from all over the United States."

[From The Boston Investigator.]

"Dr. Fellows is a physician of superior education and extensive practice in private, chronic, and sexual diseases. We don't see any need of priests for anything, but as a good DOCTOR is, in our eyes, a benefactor of mankind, we would advise the reader if he has got any of the diseases mentioned, and doesn't want to keep them, let him write to Dr. Fellows, and obtain health, which is better than fortune, political office, or even religion."

Gems of Thought.

WHAT vigor absence adds to love!—Flatman.

THE miser's cheese is wholesomest.—Franklin.

BE great in act, as you hav been in thought.—Shakspere.

A STIRRING dwarf we do allowance giv before a sleepy giant.—Shakspere.

THE joy of meeting pays the pangs of absence, else who could bear it?—Rowe.

IT behooves the high for their own sake to do things worthily.—Ben Jonson.

THE fi'ghty purpose never is o'ertook unless the deed go with it.—Shakspere.

ALL flowers will droop in absence of the sun that waked their sweets.—Dryden.

ALL powers appear only in transition. Permanent power is stuff.—Novalis.

THE absent are never without fault, nor the present without excuse.—Franklin.

ACTING is the presence of function—character is the record of function.—Greenough.

'TIS ever common that men are merriest when they are from home.—Shakspere.

THE force of his own merit makes his way, a gift that Heaven givs for him.—Shakspere.

REMEMBER in all miseries lamenting becomes fools and action wise folk.—Sir Philip Sidney.

LOVE reckons hours for months, and days for years, and every little absence is an age.—Dryden.

ACTION is the highest perfection and drawing forth of the utmost power, vigor, and activity of man's nature.—South.

ABSENCE diminishes moderate passions and augments great ones, as the wind extinguishes candles and kindles fires.—Rochefoucauld.

PROSPERITY is too apt to prevent us from examining our conduct, but as adversity leads us to think properly of our state, it is most beneficial to us.—Johnson.

THERE are more people abusive to others than lie open to abuse themselves, but humor goes round, and he that laughs at me to-day will hav somebody to laugh at him to-morrow.—Seneca.

LET us, if we must hav great actions, make our own so. All action is of infinite elasticity, and the least admits of being inflated with celestial air, until it eclipses the sun and moon.—Emerson.

THE stomach listens to no precepts. It begs and clamors. And yet is not an obdurate creditor. It is dismissed with a small payment, if only you giv it what you owe, and not as much as you can.—Seneca.

BE not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature.—Shakspere.

NO MAN should be so much taken up in the search of truth as thereby to neglect the more necessary duties of active life; for after all is done, it is action only that gives a true value and commendation to virtue.—Cicero.

REMEMBER that it is not he who givs abuse or blows who affronts, but the view we take of these things as insulting. When, therefore, any one provokes you be assured that it is your own opinion that provokes you.—Epictetus.

ACT! the wise are known by their actions, fame and immortality are ever their attendants. Mark with deeds the vanishing traces of swift-rolling time. Let us make happy the circle around us—be useful as much as we may. For that fills up with soft rapture, that dissolves the dark clouds of the day.—Salis.

LET not thy table exceed the fourth part of thy revenue; let thy provision be solid, and not far fetched, fuller of substance than art; be wisely frugal in thy preparation, and fully cheerful in thy entertainment; if thy guest be right, it is enough; if not, it is too much; too much is a rarity; enough is a feast.—Quarles.

I AM not sure if the ladies understand the full value of the influence of absence, nor do I think it wise to teach it them, lest, like Cleleas and Mandanes of yore, they should resume the humor of sending their loves into banishment. Distance, in truth, produces in idea the same effect as in real perspective. Objects are softened and rounded, and rendered doubly graceful, the harsher and more ordinary points of character are mellowed down, and those by which it is remembered are the more striking outlines that mark sublimity, grace, or beauty.—Walter Scott.

EVERYTHING that men prize most they think specially created for them and called god-given, yet the good is no more a miraculous gift than is the bad. All that is, is evolved from matter, and man being also an evolution, a slow development, is therefore adapted to much that is around him. His very organs are the result of surrounding circumstances—they develop because conditions demand them. Had his living depended on plucking bread or fruit from lofty trees by hand, we should in time hav become enormously long-armed, because those possessing the most length of arm would hav been most fitted by natural selection for making a living. It is the same with all organs of all animals. The rivers do not run by large cities, but the cities are built near large rivers. God does not giv man good gifts, but man develops into conditions that demand the enjoyment of the goods that are around him. Vultures were not created to feed upon offal, but the offal existed, and gradually it found its devourers, and among them the vulture and the buzzard were slowly developed.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

A ROCKY place—The nursery.

THE best time on record—Lunch time.

THE waterspout—A temperance lecture.

CHEAP out-of-door breakfast—A roll on the grass.

BALLET girls and geese are the animals that can stand the longest on one leg.

How many apples did our first parents eat in the Garden of Eden? Eve 8 and Adam 2.

A FELLOW in Chicago who bit off half of a man's nose was bound over to keep the piece.

IT would seem that we hav about got down to a hard money basis. At least it's allfired hard to get hold of it.

"What news to-day?" said a merchant to his friend lately. "What news!" responded the other. "Nothing only things get better—people are getting on their legs again." "On their legs?" said the first. "Why, yes," replied the other; "folks that used to ride are obliged to walk now; is that not getting on their legs again?"

RULES FOR FAIR VISITORS.

Don't come over the fence, but through the gate. The fence is simply for ornament.

Keep to the right as you pass around. If you don't you may get left.

If you observe any animal which strikes your particular fancy, go by it at once.

Don't be in a hurry, you can get a free pass at any time to go out.

Beware of pickpockets! In order not to put them to unnecessary trouble, carry your wallets in your hands.

In case you get lost, hire some one to find you. Twelve cheap boys will be stationed on the ground for this purpose.

In walking round you will find plenty of chances to get a square meal.

An efficient corps of police are on the ground ready to club in and make the fair a success.

PRESCRIPTIONS FOR FITS.

For a fit of passion—Walk in the air. You may speak your mind to the winds without hurting any one, or proclaiming yourself to be a simpleton.

For a fit of idleness—Count the tickings of a clock. Do this for one hour, and you will be glad to pull off your coat and work.

For a fit of extravagance—Go to the workhouse, or speak with the inmates of a jail, and you will be convinced.

For a fit of ambition—Go to the church-yard and read the grave-stones. They will tell you the end of man at his best estate.

For a fit of repining—Look about for the halt and the blind, and visit the bed-ridden, the afflicted and deranged; and they will make you ashamed of your light afflictions.

For a fit of envy—Go and see how many who keep their carriages are afflicted with rheumatism, gout and dropsy; how many walk abroad on crutches or stay at home wrapped up in flannel; and how many are subject to epilepsy and fits.

JOSH BILLINGS' PAPERS.

Counseling with fear iz the way cowards are made; counseling with hope iz the way heroes are made; counseling with faith iz the way Christians are made.

The most dangerous characters in the world are those who liv in the suburbs of virtew—they are rotton ice.

Lazyness is a good deal like money—the more a man has of it the more he seems to want.

There iz no such thing as inheriting virtew—money and titles and fever sores can be inherited.

Life iz like a mountain—after climing up one side and sliding down the other side we put up the sled.

When a man proves a literary failure he generally sets up for a critick, and like the fox in the fable, who had lost all his brush in a trap, kan't see a nice long tail without hankering to bob it.

The devil owes most of his success to the fact that he is alwuz on hand.

There iz many who are kut out for smart men, but won't pay for making up.

How many people there iz whose souls lay in them like the pith of a goose quill.

PENALTIES.

The penalty of popularity is envy.

The penalty of thin shoes are corns.

The penalty of tight boots is a cold.

The penalty of a baby is sleepless nights.

The penalty of a pretty cook is an empty larder.

The penalty of a god-father is a silver knife, fork, and spoon.

The penalty of a public dinner is bad wine.

The penalty of kissing the baby is half a dollar. One dollar, if you are liberal to the nurse.

The penalty of having a haunch of venison sent to you is inviting a number of friends to come and eat it.

The penalty of interfering between man and wife is abuse, frequently accompanied with blows from both.

The penalty of remaining single is having no one who cares a button for you, as is abundantly proved by the state of your shirts.

The penalty of buying cheap clothes is the same as that of going to law—the certainty of losing your suit and having to pay for it.

The penalty of a legacy or a fortune is the sudden discovery of a host of poor relatives you never dreamt of and a number of debts you had quite forgotten.

The penalty of lending is, with a book or an umbrella, the certain loss of it; with your name to a bill, the sure payment of it; and with a horse, the lamest chance of ever seeing it back again sound.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.	8
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.	5
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	2
9.	The Story of the Flood. "	5
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "	2
11.	Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett.	2
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "	2
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "	8
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.	3
15.	Come to Dinner. "	2
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "	2
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "	2
18.	Slipped Up Again. "	2
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	8
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	8
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Mon. J. Syphers.	3
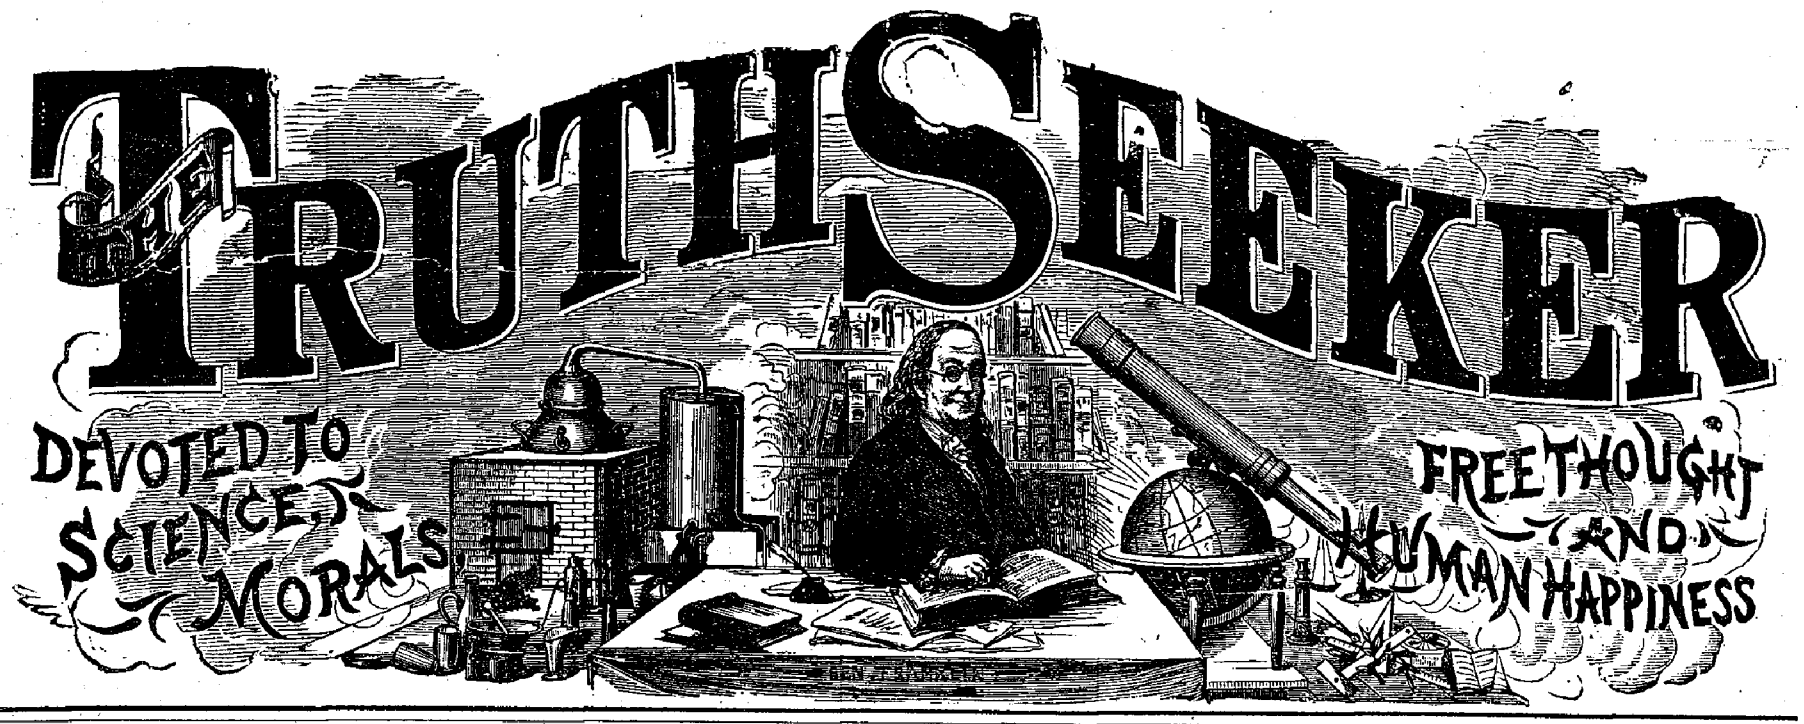
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett. 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage. 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp.	2
114.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
115.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
117.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
118.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
119.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1.	Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D.	5
2.	Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood.	3
3.	Darwinism. B. F. Underwood.	3
4.	Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin.	5
5.	Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D.	3
6.	Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll.	2
7.	Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D.	5
8.	How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.
9.	The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske.	2
10.	The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.
11.	Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollar worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.



As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers.	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright.	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50: cloth.	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jea Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works.	27,00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot.	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion.	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus.	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theoligical Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch, Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor.	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future.	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakspere's Text. God Proposed, Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False. 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science.	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species.	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell.	60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright.	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity.	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion.	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs.	1 00
" Safest Creed.	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle.	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach.	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood.	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	2 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature.	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans.	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols.	5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion.	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah.	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review.	1 00
" Hymns.	35
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	3 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy.	2 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 50
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World.	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works.	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle.	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	15
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper.	1 00
" Political Works, cloth.	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	4
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	50
Syntagma, Taylor.	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New.	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.	3 50
Sexual Physiology, Trall.	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul.	2 00
The Case against the Church.	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey.	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4
The Champions of the Church. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot. 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade.	50
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason, M.D.	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	25
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins.	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

Vol. 5. No. 50. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, December 14, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

To "INQUIRER."—No; Talmage's sermons are not preserved. Nobody can can cant.—Graphic.

SOME people think the diphtheria is a disease of recent origin; but the Baptists hav had the dip theory among them for two hundred years or more.

AN Iowa clergyman boasts that he is able to marry twenty couples in an hour. Pretty good. Twenty knots an hour is pretty fast, even for a clergyman.

THE Rev. Mr. Pentecost of Boston in a sermon against round dancing, said that a very respectable and intelligent young woman had assured him that the hugging was to her the pleasantest part of a ball.

A JUSTICE of the Peace at New Hartford married a couple the other day, and the groom asked him his terms after the knot was tied. "Well," said the Justice, "the code allows me two dollars. "Then," the groom said, "here's a dollar; that will make you three."

THE Rev. James Stephenson, the Methodist Presiding Elder who was arrested for drunkenness in Dayton, had for years been one of the most active of Ohio's temperance agitators. His friends claim that he is insane! On the other hand, an old charge of lechery and adultery is revived against him.

WE hav the information from the Boston Globe that Anthony Comstock, the pious guardian of our morals, the man who ordered Hans Makart's picture to be removed from a Fulton street show window, and passed an hour and a quarter in viewing three frail daughters of Eve in a nude condition on Greene street, and then arrested them, is about to arrest the naked truth, and so stop the circulation of bare assertions.

PATROLMAN Flannery and Roundsman Lewis distinguished themselves the other day—not, indeed, by capturing the men who stole Stewart's body, or the men who robbed the Manhattan Bank, or the man who stabbed Alderman Morris, or the perpetrators of any of the other recent crimes that hav startled New York, but by intrepidly arresting Dr. Mary Walker as she was taking a stroll up Broadway. Superintendent Walling promptly set Dr. Mary at liberty, and strictly charged the too zealous Flannery not to disturb her future promenades.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK is too pure, or too impure, to liv in this world of temptations. His last feat, ordering a copy of Hans Makart's great picture of Charles V. in Antwerp from a store window in New York, because there were some nude figures in it, shows the narrow spirit of the man. What a pleasant state of things would we hav if he were able to carry out his ideas. Venus would be put in petticoats, and Narcissus would get fitted to a pair of pantaloons. Even Eve, mother of the race, could not be represented until after the fall. Mr. Comstock ought to be put into a dimly-lighted ice-closet.—Boston Herald.

THIS is the way our Sunday-school children are sometimes taught to sing. The verse is a sample from a new book of praise:

I love to see my teacher smile
I love my classmates, too;
I love to learn my lessons, while
I've nothing else to do.

The love of learning, according to this, is something that will do to sandwich in between hours for which there is real employment. The children who sing this rubbish are not supposed to make a business of study. They study only because they hav nothing else to do. The Superintendents and choristers who introduce this sort of hymnology into their Sunday-schools cannot be too severely censured. Better fill up the time by singing "Grandfather's Clock," or "Johnny Morgan."

SOJOURNER TRUTH, the colored woman more than a hundred years old, and whom we hav heard of ever since we were a boy, has recently visited our city and delivered lectures in Cooper Institute. She spoke in a full voice, and was easily heard by the audience. She is pious, and likes to talk about Jesus and his early coming in great glory. A few weeks ago the publisher sent us a copy of a book giving a detailed account of Sojourner's remarkable life, including the time she was a slave and the many decades of public speaking and missionary work she has since performed. It is an interesting work and well worthy of perusal. Price $1.25. Published by Mrs. F. W. Titus, Battle Creek, Mich.

AN insurrection has broken out in the province of Kwangsi, China, and has already assumed such formidable proportions as to cause considerable anxiety to the imperial authorities. The leader of the insurgents is a general named Li-Yung-Choi, who was also notorious in the great Taiping rebellion, but prudently deserted to the imperial side when he saw that the collapse of the rebellion was imminent. Li-Yung-Choi has gained distinction in the service of the emperor, and been honored with the Yellow Tunic. It seems that he was disappointed at not receiving some coveted preferment, and put himself at the head of a revolutionary movement. At latest advices his army numbered fifty thousand men, and he was carrying all before him.

VIOLATING THE LOTTERY LAWS.—Special Agent Anthony Comstock recently sent a decoy letter, over the signature of Nichols, to the lottery firm of Porter & Co., at Norwalk, Conn., in which he requested the firm to send him some lottery tickets and certain information concerning them. Porter & Co. complied with the request, and Mr. Porter was arrested by Mr. Comstock's orders. At his trial before Commissioner Shields, recently, Judge Dittenhoefer, counsel for the defense, in cross-examination of Mr. Comstock, ascertained that the letter addressed to "Nichols" was delivered to Mr. Comstock by the Postmaster at Norwalk, and counsel therefore asked that the proceedings against his client be dismissed on the ground that as the letter had not been sent to Comstock by Porter through the mails, no offense had been committed, and the intent to send a letter to "Nichols" did not exist until a Government agent had induced the intention. The Commissioner reserved his decision.

CHINESE THEOLOGY.—Chinamen, says Eli Perkins, begin to show themselves in all parts of New York. Chinese laundries are very common, and on Baxter street they hav a house of worship—a Joss house. Many of the Chinamen are very bright. They are all very skeptical when you talk about the Bible miracles, and when you come to the doctrine of the Trinity they rebel out and out. Yesterday, in a conversation, I was trying to explain to Si Wung about Christ being the son of God.

"Yes," I said, "Christ was the only begotten son of God. Do you understand, Si Wung?"

"No; me no savee. You speakee Chilistee son of God. God mally? Then how can do? God no mally, how can God hav son?"

"But Christ was the son of Mary, Joseph's wife," I explained.

"Me savee; God catchee Joseph's wife!" exclaimed Si Wung.

"No, Si Wung, Mary was a virgin." I replied.

"Chlist's fadda he no mally, Chlist's mudda he no mally! How can do?" asked the Chinaman, in amazement. "How can hav childee?"

"Oh, Christ was born of the Virgin Mary, through a miraculous conception." I continued.

"And God Chliste's fadda?"

"Yes, God is Christ's father."

"And you speakee Velgin Maly Chliste's mudda?"

"Yes, the Virgin Mary was Christ's mother.

"And you speakee Chlistee elle same God?"

"Yes, Christ and God are one—all the same?"

"Then you speakee Maly God's mudda?"

"Yes, Mary was the mother of God."

"Maly mudda of God!" exclaimed Si Wung; "How can be? Gluk hi chi chow wing bung. No can do. You talkee damn fool. You go 'long, me velly busy."

THE Mr. Soule whom Anthony Comstock caused to be arrested in Rochester for advertising a medicine named "Neutraline," for preventing a too rapid increase of population, and seized some eight or ten cartloads of circulars and advertising matter, has had a partial preliminary examination in the police court of that city. The accused is ably defended by state senator George Raines, of Monroe county, who seems to be well posted as to Comstock's characteristics and style of doing business. Anthony was the principal witness, and admitted under oath that he had written for the medicine under the fictitious name of Nancy Farnsworth, and that he had also called upon the doctor in person to obtain some of the medicine for his wife, who, he represented, livd in Buffalo, and that he had come down from that city for the express purpose of obtaining some of the medicine and then must immediately return. When Comstock had admitted this falsehood, Raines, in a sonorous voice, said, "For that lie may God hav mercy on your soul." Comstock was much crestfallen, as the large crowd of people present laughed outright. On the adjournment of the case, Comstock made an effort to obtain an allowance for witness fees and traveling expenses, but Raines laughed in his face and defeated the little game of the sneak, who may not find quite as easy sailing in Rochester as he hoped for.

TRUTHFUL TALMAGE.—In the interests of vital religion, it seems high time that the so-called Reverend Talmage, of Brooklyn, were suppressed. The looseness of his legs and arms was a well-established fact long ago. No clergyman, so far as we know, has ever made such industrious use of his limbs. Those who hav witnessed his performances say that when he reaches the climax of his discourse, the platform on which he appears seems to present a whirling and kaleidoscopic view of legs and arms. Such looseness of limb has never been seen since the departure from our shores of the celebrated Ravel troupe of pantomimists and contortionists. Mr. Talmage is as loose in the tongue as he is in the joints. We take it for granted that he would die if he were not talked about, and that, since he cannot be famous, he would be notorious. Nevertheless, though he may rub his hands at being publicly stigmatized as being a charlatan and a slanderer, it is the duty of an honest newspaper to call attention to him as a man who is doing his level best to bring into disrepute the sacred cause which he professes to serve. Talmage, per se is nobody, but as a professed preacher of righteousness, a teacher, and a pastor, he is capable of doing infinite harm if permitted to go on in his erratic career without rebuke and exposure. If Mr. Talmage is a quack in his profession, he may do more harm than a medical pretender possibly could. He started out to warn his hearers against brothels and gambling-hells, and he visited them in order that he might paint them in lurid colors. The haunts of iniquity were speedily exhausted. Each one is so like every other that the panorama came to an end with the heretofore innocent spectators wishing that there was more of it. Then Mr. Talmage took another flight, and pictured the clubs as being next to the "dives" and hells in the category of social wickedness. He drew a gorgeous sketch of some representative club. It is superfluous to say to the intelligent reader that there is no such club-house in this city. There may be dens of vice and shame, inaccessible to decent men, but open to Talmage and his attendant policemen, and which steal the name of club-house, as certain rum shops steal the name of "inn." But to say that Mr. Talmage's tropical description of a social rendezvous may be truthfully applied to any institution properly known as a club is to giv currency to an outrageous falsehood. No decent gentleman can say where Mr. Talmage's idea of a New York club-house originated, unless it was born in an overheated and distempered imagination. Our concern in this matter is not with the clubs. They can manage their own affair with Talmage. We do know that blameless Christian gentlemen, clergymen, church officebearers, and churchmen lend their countenance and membership to the leading clubs of New York. But what we are concerned about is that a man who professes to preach the gospel should thus wantonly wound the cause which he should uphold. While he preached of the crimson horrors of the nether life of New York, he was believed by those who had no report but his of the subterranean wickedness of the great city. When he ventured upon a phase of social life which is well known to multitudes of men, a monstrous fable was immediately discovered. His lurid and false picture of club life made the irreligious scoff and the judicious grieve. Possibly, this was done for the poor sake of notoriety; possibly, it was a random shot in the dark. But, in any event, the man who is responsible for it has inflicted upon the cause of truth and religion a great and lasting injury. That he is branded as a slanderer is of no great consequence. It is of consequence that, in the sacred name of the Christian faith, he has spoken that which is not true.—N. Y. Times.

Events of the Week.

PRESIDENT ALCANTARA of Venezuela is dead.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., had eight inches of snow on the 5th.

O'LEARY has just finished a walk of 400 miles in 124 hours.

A GOLD mine has been discovered in Niagara county, this state.

ST. LOUIS has shivered with her first snowstorm of the season.

THE miners and laborers in May & Co.'s colliery, Shamokin, Pa., are on strike.

TWO ENGINES collided on one of our elevated railroads the other day; nobody killed.

FOURTEEN horses were burned to death in a Fortieth street stable, this city, recently.

OLYPHANT & Co., once the leaders of the China trade in this city, hav gone into bankruptcy.

A MAN was frozen to death while out hunting in the mountains of West Virginia a short time since.

THE first shipment of American horses for the use of the French army has arrived in France.

A FIRE in Macon, Miss., has destroyed four squares, comprising the entire business portion of the town.

THE premature explosion of a blast, on the Canada Pacific Railroad, one day last week, blew up three men.

ONE lady took in $20,000 at her table at the late gambling carnival in St. Patrick's Cathedral; meanwhile the poor are starving.

THE West of England and South Wales Bank, with forty-two branches, has suspended payment. Its liabilities are $17,500,000.

THE Executive Committee of the National Greenback party has effected a permanent organization with headquarters at Washington.

THE Afghan war is virtually over, the Ameer having submitted to England's terms. God, as usual, was on the side with the biggest battalions.

IN three months the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad of this city has carried four and a quarter million passengers, killed two persons and injured five others.

A NUMBER of German Socialist refugees, expelled from Prussia, are expected to arrive here shortly. Among the number is Haselman, late member of the Reichstag.

MR. SEWARD, American Minister to China, is being tried, at Washington, for certain alleged irregularities in his methods of transacting official business in China.

JO COOK, the so-called clergyman and untruthful defamer, gave one of his gaseous and peculiar pseudo-lectures to an alleged Christian audience in this city on the 5th.

AN attempt has been made to burn Newport, N. J. There seems to be a determination on the part of somebody to burn down all the watering places when the profitable season is over.

IT is rumored that Postmaster General Key intends to discontinue the postal car service on January 1st on account of the smallness of the Congressional appropriation for carrying it on.

THERE is trouble in the Rev. Talmage's gospel menagerie, Mr. Talmage is accused by members of his flock of misrepresentation and duplicity in money matters pertaining to the church debt.

SOME sensitive New Yorkers are trying to hav one of our church bells suppressed, declaring it to be a nuisance. It strikes twenty-two times an hour, and is discordant enough to giv the Almighty the earache, as his infinite ear is everywhere.

THE New York Excise Board has been arrested by the Society for the Prevention of Crime for granting licences to persons who had incurred their displeasure. If some power would arrest or suppress those canting hypocrites and societies that promote and induce vice and crime in order that they may fatten on the fines derived therefrom, all moral people would rejoice.

Selections.

[From The Canadian Spectator.]

A Remarkable Book.

I desire, through the columns of the Canadian Spectator, to draw the attention of the Canadian public to the merits of a work (now accessible in a cheap reprint) whose value has long been known and appreciated in England, but for some reason, doubtless its former high price, is not yet so universally known in this country. Now that the obstacle of an inaccessible price is removed there is no reason why all persons interested in the subjects discussed in the book should not make themselves familiar with them. There is one class of persons who, I contend, are in duty bound to do this—viz., the clergy. No clergyman appreciating the responsibilities of his position can pass this book by with indifference, for reasons which will presently appear. The clergy of at least one city in the Dominion, to an unexpected extent numerically, I am glad to apprehend, are becoming aware of this, and I understand that no less than thirty copies were disposed off to them alone. This is highly satisfactory and encouraging to those who feel a personal interest in the book, and presents a striking contrast to a time, a few years in the past, when such a book as Mr. Greg's "Creed of Christendom" would have been regarded with horror, and Mr. Greg himself anathematized as a dangerous and abhorrent Infidel. The times have changed, fortunately, and our clergy have too much intelligence not to be aware of this; but is the change great enough for them to accord Mr. Greg a fair and patient hearing? Of course it is not right to generalize from personal experience, but I feel bound to state that my own experience with clergymen has given rise to the impression that the large majority of them have been so warped by early education, and other influences, as not to be open to conviction upon some matters; and if they dip into heretical books at all, they do so with the deliberate intention of perceiving errors and blemishes indiscriminately, and make good but ungenerous use of their perversion of vision in pointing a moral with telling effect in their next Sunday's sermon. If I am wrong, however, in my judgment of the profession, I humbly crave pardon.

William Rathbone Greg's "Creed of Christendom" has been before the world for nearly twenty-eight years, and in all that period it has had a steadily increasing sale, edition after edition having been called for and disposed of. It is not too much to say that the book has had an immense influence in Great Britain, as it is beyond question the most notable statement of the points of difference between the orthodox and rationalistic parties ever given to the world. Apart from this, it is remarkable like for reverent treatment, for judicial calmness of tone, for thorough scholarship, for clearness and closeness of reasoning, and for breadth of view. These combined characteristics, seldom displayed in so eminent a degree in one work, will inevitably give it a greater influence than it has ever yet attained, unless one adequate—nay, an overwhelming answer be given to its objections to the structure which has been built up over the foundations of the Christian religion.

Throughout the twenty-eight years which this most powerful book has been silently, but none the less surely, making itself felt, no special reply worthy of the name has ever been made to it. It is indeed difficult to account for this supineness in the orthodox party. Is it not a curious fact that the appearance of some quibbling work upon unimportant matters of sectarian doctrine is almost certain to raise a theological breeze, while on the other hand, the most startling and sustained attacks upon the very foundations of existing religious denominations usually meet with little opposition and excite no tremor of apprehension? Sometimes, it is true, a feeble effort is put forward in answer, but it soon subsides and fades into oblivion without having accomplished anything, because, in all probability, it was restricted to little points of details of no moment, degenerating in places to mere verbal quibbling. I might cite as one instance of such unworthy work Canon Lightfoot's puny attempt against the positions built up by the industry and scholarship of the celebrated author of "Supernatural Religion."

Indeed, the failure of divines to ward off the constantly recurring attacks their creed has sustained of late years is worth remarking. Are they afraid to submit "the fundamentals" of their religion to open discussion, anticipating disastrous results? Or are they so mentally obtuse as to rely upon such brittle reeds as the indolent conservatism of possession and the known antipathy that the ordinary run of people have of meddling with existing institutions? Either hypothesis is sure to lead to the one result: A creed always assailed and never defended must perish at last. The first implies on their part feebleness of conviction, if not downright dishonesty, sure to be exposed sooner or later; while the other infers a fallacy which has been pretty well ventilated during the nineteenth century, viz., that the habits of the race never change. Already as a matter of fact, there is a tendency in the younger generation, not characteristic of their parents, for questioning the why and wherefore of things which may prove sometimes extremely awkard to divines who are not prepared with better replies than the old cut and dried ones. This tendency will either increase and spread, or practically cease, according to the stand taken by the clergy. On this account I deem it incumbent upon them not to pass over in utter silence the earnest objections leveled against the orthodox faith by conscientious, truth-loving men, whose own spiritual demands cannot be satisfied by the sustenance afforded by what they term a worn out and false creed, but to furnish an adequate reply to these objectors if possible, and if not, to candidly avow their inability to do so. This would be the honest course, and would finally settle the question. It is neither honest, manly, nor politic to shirk the question altogether, as a reverend professor did recently before his students in one of our colleges. In commencing a lecture upon the inspiration of the Scriptures, he said: "Two positions must be held as settled before the consideration of the inspiration of the Scriptures is in order, viz., (1) that there is a personal God, the Creator and moral Governor of the universe; and (2) that he has made a supernatural revelation of himself to mankind, of which the Scriptures are a record," etc. After these positions had been indicated, he might have saved his rhetoric and sat down instead of floundering on through two mortal hours of the merest drivel, for all the light the remainder of his lecture bestowed on the world or his students.

Mr. Greg intends his great work to be a defense of Christianity, properly so called. He says in his preface that he earnestly hopes the book will not be regarded as antagonistic to the faith of Christ. Nevertheless he has serious objections to put forward against the Christianity which is popularly believed and taught, though the narrowest minded zealot could scarcely find cause to carp with his manner of bringing them forward. He even admits that he still loves the simple old creed, which was the creed of his earlier days, but which inquiry has compelled him to abandon. This admission in the beginning throws a pathos over the whole work; in every sentence of objection the reader sees, in imagination, the struggle undergone in the mind of the writer, which finally resulted in the triumph of what he believes to be truth over his affections. One cannot read very far without becoming thoroughly convinced that Mr. Greg is a manly, modest, truth-loving inquirer, bent earnestly upon eliminating error, not merely upon making a book, and you feel you can repose confidence in him accordingly.

It is not within the scope of this article to give an analysis of the "Creed of Christendom." The questions discussed embrace nearly all the momentous theological problems of the age, and it would be hopeless within such narrow limits as I have at my command to even indicate the different lines of argument Mr. Greg employs. The beauties of his style; the eminent sincerity of his utterance; the wide knowledge he manifests; the eloquence of his speech; the great earnestness he displays—all these can only be enjoyed by a perusal of the book itself. I shall content myself simply with outlining some of his positions.

The three great conclusions that Mr. Greg endeavors to make clear, as he says himself, are: That the tenet of the inspiration of the Scriptures is baseless and untenable under any form or modification which leaves to it a dogmatic value; that the gospels are not textually faithful records of the sayings and actions of Jesus, but, occasionally at least, ascribe to him words he never uttered and deeds which he never did; and that the apostles only partially comprehended, and imperfectly transmitted, the teaching of their great Master. He thinks the Scriptures, however, should be relieved from the responsibility of the actual creed of Christendom. He rejects the Trinity and the Atonement as "unscriptural;" the Apostle's Creed he does not consider as the outline of Christian belief; the fourth gospel he holds to be a polemic of the latter part of the second century; the Epistle to the Hebrews he deems anonymous; and the epistles of Paul as having no historical relation to Jesus. Out of the more compact canon which remains he attempts to disinter "that religion of Jesus which preceded all creeds and schemes and formulas." Mr. Greg assigns great weight to this religion, which he calls the true essence of Christianity, and declares that its "rescue, rediscovery, purification, and enthronement as a guide of life, a fountain of truth, an object of faith, will be the highest of achievements." With this conclusion, I doubt not, he will have many of the more earnest of the orthodox party in sympathy. In his reverence and admiration for Jesus he will doubtless have many more. He regards Christ "not as the perfection of the intellectual or philosophical mind, but as the perfection of the spiritual character—as surpassing all men of all times in the closeness and depth of his communion with the Father. In reading his sayings we feel that we are holding converse with the wisest, purest, noblest being that ever clothed thought in the poor language of humanity. In studying his life we feel that we are following the footsteps of the highest ideal yet presented to us upon earth." Strong, deep-seated, and well-grounded as are these convictions in Mr. Greg's mind, he does not think that the rare moral and mental qualities of Jesus are such as to bring us to the conclusion that they were supernatural endowments; on the contrary, he adduces reasons to prove that a pure and powerful mind might naturally arrive at the conclusions which Jesus reached as to the duties of man, the attributes of God, and the relation of man to God. He believes, moreover, that there is no necessity for supposing that Christ's views as to God and duty were supernaturally revealed to him, but that there is almost a necessity for adopting an entirely opposite conclusion. Mr. Greg's arguments upon this point—too long for citation here—are very powerfully and effectively put, and seem to be conclusive.

In his investigation into the origin and fidelity of the gospels, Mr. Greg reveals some startling things, not essential to Christianity, he claims, however, but fatal to "dogmatic Christianity." This inquiry, difficult as it is, he conducts with great learning and ability. After a most minute and careful analysis of all the external and internal evidence attainable, he pronounces that at least three of the gospels (he sets down no confident opinion upon the fourth) are compilations from a variety of fragmentary narratives, and reports of discourses and conversations, oral and written, which were current in Palestine for thirty or forty years after the death of Jesus. This being the fact, it was to be expected, even after conceding to all concerned both faithful intention and good powers of memory, that the evangelists would fall into errors both of omission and commission, exactly as Mr. Greg shows them to have done. The gospels, while they give a faithful outline, upon the whole, of Christ's teaching and character, fill up that outline with much that is not authentic. Many of the statements therein related, he thinks, are not historical, but legendary or mystical; and that portions, at least, of the language ascribed to Jesus were never uttered by him, are unconformable to his character as otherwise delineated, are irreconcilable with the tenor of his teaching as elsewhere described, and are at variance with those grand moral and spiritual truths which have commanded the assent of all disciplined and comprehensive minds. Such portions Mr. Greg ascribes either to the imaginations of the evangelists themselves, or to the traditional stories from which they drew their materials. It is rather curious to observe that the specific assertion of one of the most untenable and uncharitable doctrines of the orthodox creed—that belief is essential, and the one thing essential, to salvation—is found only in the spurious portion of the Gospel of Mark (cxvi. 16).

The fourth gospel, Mr. Greg thinks, is so clearly imbued with the writer's idiosyncrasy that, although there may be a nucleus of fact, it can scarcely but be regarded as inferior in value to the synoptics. Among the many proofs of this may be stated its absence of demoniacs and parables; the length, the mysticism, the dogmaticism of its discourses; the narrowness of its charity; the apocryphal appearance of its first miracle; its exaltation of dogma over morality, etc. In common with nearly all recent critics, Mr. Greg is inclined to regard the fourth gospel as a polemic rather than an historical composition, and in all likelihood was written in the latter half of the second century to confute certain heresies which had irregularly sprung up in the Christian Church.

In his chapter headed "Christian Eclecticism" Mr. Greg draws forth from the New Testament the elements which he regards as characteristic of the religion of Jesus. He boldly and clearly states that we must lay aside the letter and adopt the spirit of the precepts, "distinguishing those that make the purest of faiths from others that appear irreconcilable with a just philosophy." Christianity not being, in his estimation, a revelation, but a conception, he values the religion of Jesus, not as being absolute and perfect truth, but as containing "more truth, purer truth, higher truth, stronger truth, than has ever yet been given to man;" and he believes it is fitted, if obeyed, "to make earth all that a finite and material scene can be."

Of course, in the above view of Christianity a future life becomes no longer a matter of positive knowledge. But Mr. Greg holds on to intuition. He believes that this evidence as to a future life is a matter "which comes properly within the cognizance of the soul" alone, and thus is a matter of faith, of hope, of earnest desire, with which reason can have nothing to do. To the man who disbelieves the soul's existence this statement will appear illogical and nonsenical; yet Mr. Greg believes it is the only foundation on which the belief in a future life can rest to those who do not accept a miraculous external revelation. He thinks all the arguments, both moral and metaphysical, for the immortality of the soul are worthless, and asserts that all appearances, without exception, proclaim the absence of any spiritual essence in man, the absolute sway of power, the permanence of death.

Such, in a rough outline, are a few of the positions maintained by Mr. Greg in his "Creed of Christendom." They may only be partial truths, or they may not be truths at all; every reader must judge the validity of the conclusions for himself. Mr. Greg's great merit in these investigations consists in the freshness, force, and judicial calmness with which he presents the results of wide reading and deep reflection upon the claims and contents of Scripture. His arguments may not all be without a flaw, yet every reader will bear testimony to the marvelous care and pains the author has taken to make them so. On this account the book is worthy the attention of every thinking man. And because there is in it a notable absence of dogmatism and of offensive allusion to the religious beliefs of others, we need not wonder if it becomes the most popular heretical work that has been written in the nineteenth century. R. W. DOUGLAS.

Communications.

Are Jesus, Peter, and the Twelve Apostles Myths?

A CHAPTER IN RATIONAL EXEGESIS. BY WILLIAM EMMETTE COLEMAN.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of April 13th may be found the assertion, by its contributor "Antichrist," that no such person as the Apostle Peter ever existed, and that Jesus Christ and the twelve apostles are all myths. As our erudite brother tells us, for three years past he has been endeavoring to establish the truth of his pet theories upon this subject in the columns of The Investigator, but, I judge, with but scant success, so far as regards the impression made upon the bulk of his readers. I hav read carefully his learned and labored efforts in that journal to demonstrate the validity and tenableness of his speculations, but found them invariably strained, far-fetched, fanciful, and baseless. The facts are all against him, and facts, we know, are stubborn things.

Scholars are familiar with the elaborate expositions of the solar-mythical theory of the historic characters of the Bible, found in the works of Drummond, Robert Taylor, Dupuis, Volney, Higgins, Dulaure, and other writers of the earlier portion of the present century, but little impression did their unwarranted postulations and whimsical assumptions make upon the sturdy common sense of the world. Undoubtedly, there is a subtratum of fact underlying the astronomico-theological exegesis of the scriptural narratives. Traces of the ancient sun-worship—Sabaism, or worship of the heavenly bodies—of the earlier Hebrews still remain in the testaments, and, in some cases, hav been blended with the incidents related in the lives of real historical characters; the legendary and the mythical thus being intermingled with their genuine history. Upon this slender foundation of undoubted fact the biblical mythologists rear a vast superstructure of ingeniously fabricated presumptions and elaborately attained suppositions, one and all devoid of any substantial basis in actuality.

The crude speculations of these myth-hunters hav been of late years tacitly ignored by the great body of rationalistic biblical exegesists. The truths and falsities, the fact and fiction, the actual and the legendary, the real and the ideal, the historical and the mythical, of the Bible, both Old and New Testaments, are now being thoroughly established by the "scientific method" of analysis and interpretation. The most eminent scholars of Germany, Holland, and England, including such representative names as Baur, Kuenen, Zeller, Davidson, and Sharp, hav been for years sedulously working upon the engaging problems of biblical lore, the periods and circumstances of writing, the probable authors, and the relative reliability, the times and the extent of the interpolations, recensions, and redactions of the various books of the Hebrew scriptures and cognate subjects, and in every instance the results of their arduous, persevering labors hav been destructive of the ultra-mythical theories. Not a single biblical critic of any reputation at the present day but what is positively convinced of the utter falsity of the astrologico-allegorical or solar-mythical theory of the Bible. Its untruth has been completely demonstrated beyond all doubt. It is dead, dead, beyond all hope of revivification.

A few erratic minds here and there, infatuated with this hobby and patiently endeavoring to nurse it into life, seek to enlist the world's attention to their irrational dogmas. Among the latter-day myth-worshipers, Dr. Milton Woolley, of Streator, Illinois, is a conspicuous example. He has published a ponderous volume of over six hundred octavo pages, inaccurately and presumptiously denominated "The Science [?] of the Bible," which work explains the whole Old Testament as a symbolic representation of the movements of the sun through the heavenly constellations and of the action and influence of the summer and winter season upon the earth. In a small pamphlet, Dr. Woolley has applied the same theory to the New Testament, and posited Jesus, the apostles, Pilate, Herod, Jerusalem, Nazareth, and every person, place, and thing in the Testament as mythical idealizations of solar and climatic phenomena. Two wilder or more absurd productions the nineteenth century has scarcely produced, I trow.

The researches of sound biblical criticism and rational exegesis conclusively affirm the objective existence of Jesus and the twelve apostles; that they lived in Judea about the time specified in the gospels; that he was crucified; that a strong belief in his visible appearance alive after his death and burial was tenaciously held by his apostles and followers; and that, in the latter portion of his earthly career, he either himself proclaimed, or allowed others to proclaim, that he was the Jewish Messiah, which claim was persistently advocated by his disciples after his crucifixion, coupled with the earnest belief in his speedy bodily reappearance and the establishment of his messianic kingdom in Judea and over the earth. These are undoubted facts, unequivocally established by the "scientific method" applied to the Christian Scriptures.

Our friend "Antichrist" has labored vigorously to make the world believe that Christianity originated from an astronomical allegory—a mythic Jesus and twelve mythic apostles; but, on the other hand, Margaret Chappellsmith, equally as learned, as skeptical, and as untiring a student, and withal possessed of a more discriminating mind, less addicted to far-fetched speculations and fanciful theorizing, has, in a series of papers in The Investigator, completely refuted at every point the theory of Christianity being based upon an astronomical allegory, "Antichrist" being routed, horse, foot, and dragoons, by her able presentation of attested facts upreared upon logical predicates and sound scientific deductions.

"Antichrist" is fond of harping upon the mythic character of the Apostle Peter; and to this pet theme of his he has devoted an article in THE TRUTH SEEKER, having exhausted the subject, apparently, in The Investigator. Now, in all his ingeniously woven web of Jesusian and apostolic mythology, the case of Peter furnishes him with the strongest of all his superficial argumentation. Well may he, therefore, be continually parading his Petrine theories before the public gaze. This being the strongest point raised by him in his entire system of Christian interpretation, let us test its validity, and see if there is any real strength in the argument presented. If this be demolished, all the rest will crumble to the earth through their own inherent instability and weakness.

The first thing engaging the attention of the peruser of his Paulo-Petrine complication is, that the whole is based upon a philological quibble, a linguistic quiddity—the manner in which a certain word was translated from Syro-Chaldaic (or Aramean) into Greek. The language spoken by Jesus and the twelve was Aramaic or Syriac, and the name bestowed upon Simon by Jesus was, in their vernacular, Kipha, equivalent to the English word rock or stone. This was, be it remembered, merely a secondary appellation, or title, given to Simon because of his supposed possession of the characteristics of a rock—that is, Simon the Rock. It is probable that at that time no such proper name as Kipha (Rock) was borne by the Syrians, hence the name Kipha had not been Grecized—that no Greek equivalent of Kipha as a proper name was in the language. The Greek for rock is Petros, which is the equivalent of Kipha in Syriac as regards signification; and so when Simon the Rock was translated into Greek from Syriac it was rendered Simon Petros. This was all very plain and natural; there was nothing of a fraudulent character about it, as "Antichrist" asserts. The same process in translation has been universally practiced—is done to this day. Look at the titles of crowned heads translated into English, such as William the Silent, Philip the Fair, Charles the Bald, Louis the Stammerer, etc., etc. In every case the English equivalent, in meaning, of the foreign words significant of the characteristics of those so termed are attached to their names, and never the foreign words themselves in an Anglicized form; yet "Antichrist" tells us that the case of Peter "is the only instance where a proper name has been translated instead of being transferred," a statement very far from the truth.

"Antichrist" admits the existence of Cephas as an apostle at Jerusalem of the ideal Jesus Christ, but because his name was Kipha in his own language, and not Petros as rendered into Greek, there was no such person as Petros the apostle! Such literary quibbling is really unworthy of a cultured thinker like "Antichrist." Did the translation of his name into Greek destroy his individuality? No matter whether we call him Kipha or Petros, the person was at Jerusalem, as "Antichrist" is forced to admit, and he was a prominent apostle of Jesus Christ, as he is also compelled to admit; that is, an ideal, mythical Jesus, not a bona fide flesh and blood Hebrew. By the same course of reasoning (??) we are justified in denying the existence of such a person as the Apostle Paul; for, as all know, the Aramaic or Hebrew name of the Apostle of the Gentiles was not Paul but Saul (or its Syriac equivalent)—an entirely different name, although as Anglicized they are quite similar in orthography and pronunciation. Likewise, the existence of the Apostle James at Jerusalem can be successfully denied; since James was not the Syriac name of the Apostle, but Jacob. So, if no Apostle Peter ever lived because his Syriac name was Cephas, in like manner no such apostles as Paul or James ever lived, because their Syriac names were Saul and Jacob. The utter absurdity of such a puerile argument is at once perceived by all.

Again, if the translation of Kipha into Petros is the "only instance" of a proper name being translated and not transferred, how comes it that the Syriac title of Jesus as the Messiah, Ha Mashiach, is translated into Greek as Ho Christos? Ha Mashiach in Aramaic signifies the anointed, and instead of being transferred into Greek as Ho Messias (see John i, 41), it is translated as Ho Christos, meaning also the anointed—the signification of the word being translated, not the word itself, precisely as in the case of Simon the Rock and in that of titles generally in all ages. By his own showing, therefore, "Antichrist" is found to hav made a misleading statement in asserting that Peter's was the "only instance" of cognominal translation.

"Antichrist" tells us that Cephas, James, and John were Essenian followers of the ideal Iesous Ho Christos. This is purely an "ideal" statement, as not the least proof exists that the three apostles were Essenians. Where is the historical evidence of such a thing? None exists, the theory being simply a necessary conjecture to bolster up the unreal phantasm of allegorical primitive Christianity. A broad line of demarcation exists between the teachings and the practices of the Essenes and those of the early apostles, though, no doubt, on some points there was agreement between the two, as there was, likewise, between those of the Pharisees and those of Jesus and the apostles. A portion of the precepts of Jesus were evidently Essenian in their origin, but others were radically antagonistic to Essenian principles. The term Essenian applied to the early Christians is a palpable misnomer; and the attempt of the solar-mythiolators to identify Paul and the primitive Christians with the Essenes or Therapeutæ has long been an exploded fallacy, scouted by all biblical scientists, all students of exegetical rationalism.

"Antichrist" appeals to Paul's epistles to prove his unsubstantial surmises. So be it. I will take the four genuine epistles of Paul, known to be such, and apparently so regarded by "Antichrist," as he quotes from them as from veritable history. These four, the epistles to the Romans, the Galatians, and the two to the Corinthians, are the only undoubtedly genuine writings of Paul that we are in possession of, the other epistles attributed to him being either positively spurious, as in cases of the two to Timothy and the one to Titus, or of very doubtful authenticity, as in cases of those to the Philippians, Ephesians, Colossians, etc. In these genuine monographs of the great apostle of the Gentiles do we find him teaching an ideal Iesous Ho Christos—a mythical Jesus, a phantasmatical Joshua Ha Mashiach? or do we find him laboring vigorously with pen and voice to establish the following literal facts: the existence in flesh and blood of an objective Jesus, his objective death on an objective cross, his objective resurrection from the dead, and his speedy objective return to this objective world to establish his everlasting objective kingdom? Assuredly every one conversant with the teachings of Paul, and with the gospel he so urgently pressed upon the people's acceptance, so cogently and clearly set forth in his genuine epistles, is aware that the latter is the case. These four epistles were written about twenty-five years after the crucifixion of Jesus, and he was acquainted and held converse with the older and original apostles of Christ, who certainly knew whether their Master and Messiah was a subjective myth or objective personality from whom they derived their gospel.

Paul, in Romans i, 2, tells us that Jesus Christ was born on earth of the seed of David in the flesh—was a descendant of David in flesh and blood. Can a myth be born in fleshly garb? Can an astronomical allegory be a descendant of David in the flesh? In various places he speaks of Christ being crucified; and in 1 Corinthians xv, 3, he informs us that Jesus died for our sins; that he was buried; that he arose from the dead the third day and was seen alive by Cephas, by the twelve apostles, by James, by five hundred brethren, and also by Paul himself at a later date. Can an ideality die upon the cross and be buried? Can a solar symbolism be seen objectively as a living personality by "apostles" and "brethren?" If Jesus was a myth and the twelve apostles myths, we then hav the sublime fact of twelve myths seeing another myth. If the twelve that saw Jesus were myths, then the others who saw Jesus in like manner as the twelve, by a parity of reasoning, must be also myths. Therefore Cephas, James, and Paul himself must hav been myths, one and all—astrological allegories, each and every one. "Antichrist" tells us that Cephas and James were genuine living entities, apostles of Jesus at Jerusalem; while Paul informs us that this same Cephas and James saw Jesus as a personality after his crucifixion and burial, and that, in a similar manner, Jesus was seen by the twelve apostles. Now, if Cephas and James were living actualities, and not myths, then the twelve must hav been living actualities also; or are we to suppose that Jesus was, in Paul's estimation, seen in a similar manner by both realities and myths, by living apostles and by astronomical symbols? Paul relates that Jesus was first seen by Cephas, then by the twelve, then by five hundred brethren—some of whom had since died—then by James, then by all the apostles, and lastly by Paul. According to "Antichrist's" interpretation of this passage of Paul, its meaning is clearly this: Jesus—a myth—was seen first by Cephas, a living man; then by twelve myths; then by five hundred living men; then by James, a living man; then by all the myths in a body; and lastly by Paul, a living man. Paul in two other places speaks of having seen Jesus, and urges that fact in evidence of his apostleship, of his being on a par with the twelve.

"Antichrist" says: the Twelve Apostles were myths; Paul says they were living men; and also mentions Cephas (or Peter), James, and John as prominent among the Apostles. This James, we are told by Paul, was the brother of Jesus. Verily, this is strange, passing strange, friend "Antichrist!" James, one of the "pillars" of the ideal Jesus-worship, a brother to that same ideality! A most astounding marvel, truly! Nay, further, Paul, in 1 Corinthians, ix, 5, in speaking of the Apostles, mentions the brethren of the Lord Jesus. Can a myth hav brothers in the flesh? Can a solar idealism be possessed of fraternal relationships in the persons of men on earth? Can an astronomical allegory be related by ties of blood and consanguinity to Jewish worshipers of itself—of its own Allegorical Mythical Highness?

In 1 Corinthians xi, 23-25, Paul narrates how Jesus the same night he was betrayed, gave bread and wine to his disciples, and instructed them to continue the custom of so doing in commemoration of him. We hav here a description of the institution of the "Lord's Supper," as Paul terms it, precisely as narrated in the gospels, and also a confirmation of the betrayal of Jesus also found in the gospels. Can these things be narrated of an allegory or myth? Are they not matter-of-fact statements of historical occurrences in the lives of Jesus and the apostles, as believed by Paul. Assuredly one myth cannot eat and drink with twelve other myths, by one of which twelve the one was betrayed. A more preposterous conception of Paul's idea of Jesus cannot be imagined.

Again, in 1 Corinthians, xv, 12–28, Paul asserts that Jesus was a man who had lived upon earth, and who, after dying, had arisen from the dead, his resurrection being identical with that of all other men, the same law governing all.

"13. But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen."

"20. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."

"21. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead."

Can language be plainer? Christ, says Paul, is a man, the first who demonstrated the fact of life after death, and all other men, through his example, are destined to the same resurrection after death. Could the resurrection of an ideality, an astronomical mythos, demonstrate the resurrection of mortal man? Absurd!

It is well established that Paul's epistle to the Galatians was written about A. D. 57, or twenty-four years after Jesus's death. In that epistle Paul alludes to his conversion to Christianity as having occurred at least seventeen, and possibly twenty years previous to the writing of the epistle, his conversion thus dating from a period only from four to seven years after the crucifixion. He speaks of visiting and conversing with Peter and James three years after his conversion, or certainly not more, and probably less than ten years after the date assigned to Jesus's death. We thus learn from Paul's unquestioned writings, that only ten years after the death of Jesus there were at Jerusalem various apostles of Jesus, including Cephas (or Peter), and James the brother of Jesus, besides others unnamed. Certainly Paul in conversing with them well knew whether they believed in or taught an ideal, symbolic Jesus or a living, breathing man regarded by them as the Messiah or King of the Jews. Surely, James the brother of Jesus ought to hav known the nature of his brother, whether myth or man. Yet Paul, in all his writings, constantly speaks of Jesus as a man, living and dying for the redemption of mankind, in whom and through whom the world would be saved. He often combated the teachings of the Judaising Twelve Apostles at Jerusalem on doctrinal points, such as circumcision, eating of meats, and other observances of the ceremonial law to which the Twelve rigidly adhered, but on the question of the personality of Jesus and his divine mission he never antagonized the tenets of the other apostles, no allusion being ever made by him to any difference of opinion upon that point between himself and the Jerusalem brethren. It is therefore an indisputable truth, completely established by the genuine monograph of Paul, that he and all the other apostles, Cephas, James, Apollos, Barnabas, taught the objective existence of Jesus as a human individual, the predicted Hebrew Messiah, who had been crucified, and as was supposed, had arisen from the dead. No fact in rational Biblical criticism in modern scientific exegesis is more firmly established; and it can never be shaken, neither by crude mythological vagaries nor by far-fetched and illogical allegorical symbolizings.

The whole gospel of Paul is based upon the personality of Jesus in the flesh, and his crucifixion and resurrection. If Christ be not risen from the dead, said he, his gospel and teaching were useless. No trace of an ideal Jesus can be found in Paul's epistles or in any other part of the New Testament. Jesus is always held up as an actuality; a living reality; the Jewish Messiah in person, soon to reappear in power and glory on earth. Can an allegory sit upon a throne and reign over the world? Can a mythological substratum of an infinitesimal nothing be the savior of the world from its sins, the final judge of mankind, and the mediator between God and man, as Paul tells us Jesus is? What an absurd idea it is to posit the Hebrew Messiah as an ideal abstraction! No Hebrew mind in that age of the world could ever hav entertained such a conception as the basis of a new and living faith, much less a collection of minds, like the apostles, and then make that ideal nonentity the pivot of all their doctrinal polemics, successfully inaugurating, in the midst of persecution and death, a system of religion, thought, and worship directly antithetical, as regards the personality of Jesus, to that held by themselves. By what strange transmogrification did the ideal Jesus of the apostles become materialized into the man of Nazareth? Not a vestige of a mythical messiah can be found in early Christian literature. It is true that when the mysticisms and subtleties of Grecian philosophy, Gnostical and Platonic, had become intermingled with the Judaic matter-of-fact Christianity, the conceptions of Jesus's personality became idealized and spiritualized, and as some—as the Docetae—denied the fact of Jesus ever having had a genuine body of flesh and blood, he having only assumed the appearance of being incarnated in fleshly garb when on earth. In no case was the personality—the individuality—of Jesus ever denied, neither was the fact of the manifestation of his personality on earth ever a subject of dispute. Such a being or thing as an impersonal, unindividualized, astronomico-allegorical, solar-mythic Jesus was never heard or dreamed of among primitive Christians; and not the slightest vestige of actual proof of such a state of things has ever been, or can be, produced. As before remarked, the facts are all against it; not a single thread of doubt exists thereupon in the minds of all sound biblical critics, all scientific exegesists.

Many other facts establishing the objective existence of Jesus and the apostles might be adduced, notably the evidence of the Talmud and of the Book of Revelation (Apocalypse), written by an ultra-Jewish Christian in A. D. 68; but sufficient, I opine, has already been presented to thoroughly disprove the crude, untenable, and baseless hypothesis of the mythiolaters. At some future time it is proposed by the writer to consider the question of the mundane existence of Jesus in all its points, setting forth, in addition to the evidence herein embodied, that from various other sources open to our investigation and analysis.

Let it be directly understood that I am writing, not as an advocate of the truth or of the importance of the doctrines enunciated by the Nazarene euthusiast or his chosen followers, but simply in the interests of historical truth, entirely irrespective of the character of the personalities involved in the discussion. So far from being a Christian, even in the most attenuated sense, I wholly repudiate every vestige of the name. I am not only non-Christian or extra-Christian, but I am anti-Christian in the full meaning and extent of the term. I regard Christianity in all its phases as an enemy to the highest and deepest interests of mankind, less so, of course, in its milder aspects of Liberal Christianity, Christian Spiritualism, etc.; yet still, even in its mildest phases, its basis is pregnant of evil to humanity's dearest welfare, and its claims a stumbling-block in the path of man's advancement in wisdom, purity, truth. Christianity, we all know, is primarily based upon the application of the term Christ to an individual living in an ignorant, semi-barbarous country nearly two millennia agone, which individul claimed to be the Messiah, or Christ of God; the vicegerent of the Eternal Father; the chosen, or the anointed of the "Infinite Oversoul;" the destined ruler over the hearts and the persons of all mankind. Any person calling himself Christian, necessarily, in so doing, posits himself as, in a distinctive manner, a follower or disciple of the Christ, Jesus of Nazareth, whether in the matter of the fullness and super-excellence of his moral and spiritual teachings as a heaven-inspired evangel to a sin-sick world, as held by the Liberal Christians, or, as in the case of the more orthodox, he be accepted as the redeemer and savior of the world in some magical, mystical manner; unworthy of credence in a rational mind.

I totally and unreservedly reject Jesus as in any special sense a guide, teacher, exemplar, savior, or what not. His doctrines were a mixture of good and evil, sense and nonsense; his claims to messianic supremacy over man were, in an eminent degree, childishly bombastic and foolishly egotistical; his eccentric life, his peculiar works and deeds, are no pattern for us to follow, and are but of little service to us in determining the method of attainment of a well-regulated, harmonious life, wherein the exercise of all our faculties, physical, mental, moral, spiritual, may be in even balance; in just and stable equipoise.

Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

The Liberal League Movement.

AN IMPORTANT WORK SUGGESTED.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Please giv place in your columns to the following letter from Mr. P. Himrod, county treasurer of Rice county, Kansas, which contains very good and practical suggestions, and which I hope will be complied with immediately by the Liberals of the state of New York, where there are millions of church property exempt from taxation, and where every one of the thousands of priests and "ministers of the gospel" are also exempt fifteen hundred dollars from taxation. I am getting some blank petitions printed to be used in procuring names in the several towns of this state to present to our Legislature, to ask that these unjust laws be repealed. I will mail one to any person who will circulate. We should send in 20,000 names this winter on this petition, and increase the number every year, until justice is done. Here is the letter that brought the subject to my mind, and I hope it may influence Liberals in other states to carry out his valuable suggestions.

H. L. Green.

MR. P. HIMROD'S LETTER.

Lyons, Kansas, Nov. 28, 1878.

H. L. Green, Esq., Salamanca, N. Y., Dear Sir: I see by The Truth Seeker of the 16th inst. that you wish suggestions from the readers of that paper as to the methods of accomplishing some of the work of the Liberal League. Now I am a reader of that paper, and hav been all my life a Freethinker, and although not a member of the Liberal League, there are some portions of its platform I heartily indorse. One of the chief objects of the League, as I understand it, is to accomplish the secularization of the state. Two of the main points to be obtained are the taxation of church property, and the repeal of the Sunday laws. These are entirely in the hands of state governments, and can be much more easily obtained than anything that may be in control of the national government. My plan would be to attack the most vulnerable point first, devote all the power and means at your command to the carrying of one outwork. If you can win at one point, the citadel will eventually fall. The best chance, I think, is the taxation of church property. Take two or three of the states where the Liberal element is strongest. You are better prepared to decide where to commence than I am. I can only speak for this state.

A good way to commence the work is to hav petitions printed and sent to the subscribers of all the Liberal papers. The Spiritualists will be valuable assistants in the work to be done. Do not neglect them. Select some Liberal member of the Legislature who has enough spinal column to present with the petition a bill for the repeal of the exemption law, and see that it is not smothered in committee. The larger the petition the better. If a proper effort is made, in many of the states five thousand names at least can be obtained. Get a square vote in the legislature, and if defeated, then try it again in the next legislature. The Liberals can if they try, defeat every member's re-election who votes against the bill. If we cannot get a bill passed repealing the exemption laws, then get the question submitted to the people. In any event we hav started the agitation and by agitation we always gain. Take one state up after another, and in a short time the word of secularization will roll over the whole West, and from there will spread to the East and South. I will giv ten dollars towards the work to be accomplished this Fall and Winter, if this or some similar plan is adopted. You may call for the money whenever you want it. You may butt your head against the halls of Congress, and you will accomplish nothing if you liv to the age of Methuseleh, but by commencing at the bottom and going for the enemy in detail, you can liv to see a change you hardly dare hope for. Yours respectfully, P. Himrod.

[This is a feasible and practicable proposition, and we are glad it is going to be acted upon. If all Liberal and Spiritualistic papers will copy the above article they will be aiding the good cause. Let us work together, and we can accomplish much more than in being divided.—Ed. T. S.]

B. F. Underwood lectured at Big Rapids, Mich., Dec. 7th and 8th; at Carlinville, Ill., Dec. 11th to 14th; and will lecture at Minier, Ill., Dec. 16th to 21st.

A Paragraph from Bro. Bell's Letter.

I hav during the last two months lectured in different parts of New York, Ohio, Indiana, and of course hav met and discussed with many prominent Liberals in these states the question now up, but I hav yet to meet the first Liberal who defends Abbot. Francis Ellingwood is simply committing suicide in butting his editorial head against the 70,000. And on the other hand, all whom I hav heard speak of the Syracuse Convention expressed themselves out and out in favor of repeal.

"The Truth Seeker declares explicitly that our position on the Comstock laws 'unfits' us for the office we now hold, and nominates Hon. Elizur Wright for our successor; as if, forsooth, our faithful and honored friend did not take substantially the same position."—The Index, Oct. 3rd.

"The mutual agreement. . . was flagrantly violated by this total sweep of the chief offices and the election of a new administration unanimously pledged to repeal."—The Index, Nov. 7th.

"The vote for President was taken by ballot. Hon. Elizur Wright had 76 votes, and F. E. Abbot 51; and Mr. Wright was declared elected."—The Index, Nov. 7th.

The above italics are ours; we can't quite straighten them out—"but Brutus is an honorable man."—The Word.

(From Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.)

The Impertinence of Comstockism.

Little by little the agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice is impertinently crowding himself against respectable people and treading upon their toes until by and by an indignant foot will be raised which will hoist the aforesaid agent higher than his ambition could ever carry him. Much excitement has been caused by a large placard in the window of a Fulton street confectioner bearing, in large letters which can be read nearly across the street, the statement that Hans Makart's celebrated historical painting had been removed by order of the agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice. This picture, according to the Telegram, represents "Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp, and the ground of complaint was that among the fifty figures introduced were three scantily clothed women in front of the Emperor's charger." The Telegram further assures its readers that there was nothing in the actions, countenances, nor in the disposition of the draperies of these noble ladies to suggest lewdness. It then very correctly adds: "Cant like this is as repulsive as lewdness itself. We need more nude works of art exposed in our windows, not less. The reason that street boys' minds are 'improperly affected' by such sights is because of the ignorance and puritanic prejudices of a large proportion of our population, which hav forbidden the exhibition of such pictures. Nothing is more exquisite than the naked human form when so drawn and painted as to be the expression of a healthful art that worships the beautiful. Before Mr. Comstock repeats an outrageous act like this let him learn what art is. Of that he seems at present lamentably ignorant."

The Telegram heads its article, "The Dictatorship of Anthony Comstock." The Tribune called this meddlesome individual "The dragon guardian of New York's virginal modesty;" and nearly all our daily papers hav given the agent a good drubbing. That high-toned paper, the Nation, thinks the time has come "for some public-spirited person to resist the Society and, if possible, punish such uncalled-for interference with private rights."

We are glad the Nation is waking up. We wish that not only the newspaper so called would awaken from its profound nap when the liberties of the people are threatened, but that the entire nation, which so recently won its boasted liberties with the blood of its revolutionary sires, would arouse from its Rip Van Vinkle sleep.

It is creditable to the National Defense Association that its President, Prof. Rawson, immediately waited upon Mr. Hope, the confectioner, to assure him that if he would replace the picture he should be resolutely defended by the Association. It is, perhaps, not strange that Mr. Hope had so much disrelish for the intricacies of the law that he concluded it best to let his placard remain in the window in the place of the picture. Very likly, too, this course would be quite as effective in throwing discredit upon Mr. Comstock's meddlesomeness as a legal duel would be.

The remark of the Nation that some public-spirited person should resist the Society shows that this journal is not posted in what is going on. The Liberal editor, Mr. D. M. Bennett, has been resisting both the Society and its agent for several months by disregarding all arrests and persistently selling the very publications which caused these arrests. All who abhor Comstockism, whether in sympathy with Mr. Bennett's views or otherwise, should gather to his support and also to the strengthening of the hands of the National Defense Association.

Considerable discussion is going on both in Europe and America at this time concerning what is proper in art, and the following is copied from the London Truth:

The most animated discussion at the Social Science Congress was that on Mr. Rathbone's paper on the "Moral and Æsthetic Aspects of the Undraped Figure in Art." It was a dangerous subject to handle, but as the main portion of the discussion turned on the merits or demerits of Mr. Alma-Tadema's picture, "The Sculptor's Model," which so terribly shocked the Liverpool spinsters when it was exhibited there, it was easy to discuss it from an artistic point of view. There is, no doubt, a vast amount of nonsensical prudery prevalent in regard to these matters. The mischief is due, not to the pictures or sculpture complained of, but to the vitiated minds of those who see evil in them. If men and women had become accustomed to the beauties of what Mr. Rathbone calls "the ideal nude," there is very little question that we should no longer see the distorted waists and other malformations of the body which fashion has prescribed, and which hav led to the sacrifice of so many lives.

Our Watkins Trial.

Soon after this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER reaches the hands of our patrons—on Sunday evening the 15th inst—we will hav to leave our home and betake ourselves to Watkins to be prepared for our trial which is set for the 17th inst. Hon. Jeremiah McGuire, formerly Speaker of the Assembly of this state, and John J. VanAllen Esq., will defend us and Miss Tilton and Messrs. Bell and Mosher. They are able attorneys, and we feel confident of their ability to do our cases full justice.

Watkins is in a bigoted community where the power of the Church is almost supreme. Christian intolerance is aroused, and the disposition is evinced to prosecute us as vigorously as possible. Our arrest and indictment were instigated by the clergy of the town, and they hav kept alive the feeling of opposition to us. An article very recently appeared in one of the Watkins papers which was evidently written by a clergyman, as it contains the pious cant and sanctimonious verbiage which a clergyman only is capable of, and which contained unfavorable and unfair remarks about the Freethinker's Convention which was held in their town. It asserted that the people of the Convention assembled there with much pretension, and claimed to do much for the welfare of the human race, but what did they accomplish? Did they do anything to promote the cause of temperance? Had they done anything to promote the cause of chastity? Had they done aught to shed light on the pathway of those who were prayerfully seeking to find the road to Jesus? Had they done anything to giv consolation to the souls borne down with sin and condemnation, and seeking to lead a better and purer life? The Convention did nothing to help souls seeking the truth as it is in Jesus, and was a signal failure etc., etc. We quote from memory, but this is the tone of the article, the object of which was to raise a prejudice against the Convention and those who attended it.

We also are informed that a revival meeting has been organized to be continued through the session of the court, and that the Rev. Mr. Wells has been brought on from Ohio to preside over it. This is probably the same Rev. Wells who a few years ago was reported as saying:

"The time is coming when Christians will love God so intensely that they will put to death even their own children who may be found holding or teaching heretical opinions."

If he used such language, or is capable of using it, we certainly do not wish that he should hav the power to exercise his "love of God" upon us.

It is believed that the revival meeting, to be continued during the Court term, was expressly devised to affect public opinion and the jury so that a verdict can easily be obtained against the Infidels to be tried. What the result of the trial will be we cannot, of course tell; but if, under the circumstances, a conviction is obtained it cannot be thought strange of. If, however, justice rules, four persons will hardly be sent to prison for selling a harmless pamphlet which has never injured any one and never will, though ten thousand may be sold.

We shall aim to keep our readers advised as our trials progress. Arrangements hav been effected to hav the trial reported, and the speeches and proceedings will be duly laid before our readers.

Declaration of Rights.

A CASE FOR THE COURTS.

To the Editor of The Transcript: Quoting from my remarks in Faneuil Hall, as reported in full in the Globe of yesterday, you kindly commend my motives, but condemn my logic. Bad logic is dangerous. It brings men to beggary and nations to the dust. Yours seems to assume that courts never make mistakes, and, therefore, the Comstock law is constitutional and "Cupid's Yokes" an obscene book. Let that be true, and what follows? By chapter 165, section 15, of the General Statutes, the possession of an obscene book is an offense, punishable by imprisonment and fine. I possess "Cupid's Yokes," and mean to do so, whatever the courts have decided or other people think. If the District Attorney of Middlesex, knowing all these facts, does not prosecute me as soon as possible, he will violate his oath of office. Will you show your readers where the flaw is in this logic and oblige,

Medford, Mass., Aug. 3, 1878. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

We, the undersigned, free and independent citizens of the United States, recognize the above words of the Hon. Elizur Wright as the utterance of a brave, honest, and independent American. They were published more than a month ago, and he still has his liberty. It is to be inferred that the District Attorney of Middlesex does not regard "Cupid's Yokes" as an obscene book; otherwise he is derelict in the performance of his duty. We wish also to place our names on record that we do not regard "Cupid's Yokes" as an obscene publication. Many of us have read it, have it in our possession, and propose to so retain it so long as we choose. While we do not indorse every sentence in it, and think some portions of it are in bad taste, we regard it as the expression of an honest, earnest man, who had a legal and undoubted right to so express himself, and that every American possesses the right to read it, to own it, to buy and to sell it, to exhibit it, and to send it from point to point by any public mode of conveyance.

We furthermore recognize the attempt on the part of any one to deprive us of the right to own, buy, sell, or transport this or other similar books, including works on medicine, hygiene, physiology, sociology, social ethics, relations of the sexes, etc., as subversive of the very highest principles of American liberty; and while we are opposed to obscene and vile literature, that really is so, we hereby pledge ourselves to forever uphold freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of the mails. These are the fundamental principles of American liberty, the birthright of every American citizen, and we never wish to see them infringed or subverted. To maintain and perpetuate these rights "we pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

D. M. Bennett, G. L. Henderson, A. L. Rawson, S. P. Andrews, E. B. Foote, Sr., M.D., Charles Winterburn, M.D., H. B. Brown, L. A. Fields, E. M. Macdonald, H. J. Thomas, T. C. Leland, Mary A. Leland, Jas. A. White, Theodore R. Stevens, G. H. Weeks, Thomas Grattan, Henry H. Moore, James H. Phair, C. L. Andrews, A. C. Macdonald, E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D., J. M. Comens, M.D., Geo. E. Macdonald, J. W. Nichols, J. Q. Sands, A. K. Butts, M. L. Holbrook, M D, C A Codman, S H Preston, G W Allen, R L Buckner, Chas W. Torrey, M D, Caleb S Weeks, Dr Andrew Stone, T B Sidney, Courtlandt Palmer, Wm Jones, C T Burke, H M Smith, Thomas Parkman, B Doscher, George Geer, David Mills, Henry Crum, Stephen Purdy, Seward Mitchell, Josephine Chase, Susan C Clark, L N Colman, P M Filbert, Samuel Purcell, Addison Strong, C T Phillips, A J Phinney, S A Wilbur, P T Hunter, T B Larkin, Smith Evans, Abraham Saddler, Mort Twitchell, D B Mortimer, Arthur Hodges, S G Burlap, A C Brundage, E A Boeth, Daniel E Ryan, Wm U Dame, John A Jost, Peter Steiner, Alvin Dutcher, Foster G Huddleston, Joshua Benest, Arthur M Stoddard, K P Worthington, Moses Keinselman, Simpson Dodd, H Ellington, F L Moffett, John G Scofield, E B Jones, Christopher Hurd, S M Perry, D T Whipple, A P Crowner, T A Parker, P V Underhill, A F Raymond, M. D., D B Carver, F E Aspinwall, M. D., Mrs Maggie E Clark, Mrs A M George, D Bodifield, M. D., Samuel M Grimes, Moses Hull, Wm U Scholes, S E Whittemore, J H W Toohey, Abel T Smith, R D Loomis, Asa P Barker, S U Percival, L M Scudder, M B Turner, L R Kinney, Parker Dodson, Joseph Fritts, Nelson Porter, R W S Briggs, John Didier, Calvin M Gates, Elisha Purdy, Abner Reynolds, Peter M Carman, Andrew J Krider, E C Walker, W S Williams, W E Coleman, B M Lawrence, M.D, Mrs P R Lawrence, O H Thomas, Geo B Stone, S T Whitney, S W Pike, D T Brownell, Gilford Patten, Simon B Fitch, L A Brundage, Addison T Brown, W M Peters, Wm J Parkinson, L H Pammel, W G Markland, William Henry Burr, J E Frick, John D K Miller, James W Ellis, R B Grace, D O Rowlett, George Triplett, John Emery, W H Williams, D Manley, Bennett McGarry, M S Fairchild, C Beals, Smith Crocker, Thomas F Doyle, George Smith, Alexander Gage, G W Bradley, P L Ransom, Geo Henley, Samuel Hutchinson, Sidney Pillsbury, Thos J Walker, J M Crippin, Geo T Clark, D M Warren, Daniel McGovern, Solomon Burnheiser, Joseph Hamburger, Elijah Solomon, Wm T Hicks, A P Welden, R Jones, A M Dart, Benson Kidder, Nathan Wardwell, A B Lewis, Werner Boecklin, Cornelia Boecklin, Mrs W V Aspinwall, Joseph Henry, S H Preston, B F Underwood, James W Stillman, E McGregor, J W Scott, W D Hart, W L Hawes, A H Haskins, Richard Yoemans, M D L Carrell, Geo Austin, C E Vader, Josh Williamson, Josephine S Tilton, J Flora Tilton, Laura Kendrick, J S Lyon, M D, J W Truesdell, Miss Nettie Lyon, Mrs J S Spencer, C A Whitcomb, Rebecca Whitcomb, Frank Rivers, J S Verity, A Minski, Wm Rowe, R W Hume, Geo Paddington, Edward E Martin, W F Jamieson, Homer Jackson, W S Bell, Stephen Young, Henry E Hunter, G Gunnerson, Thos C Clapp, O B Milliken, Wm Hart, Geo Veloudios, C H Holzgrape, J H Cook, Frances A Cook, A W Jay, Janet Jay, H S Blair, Wm Evans, Belle Evans, G H Miller, Hiram Crum, C D Nichols, Aaron Evans, J Brown, G H Holygrife, F H Moore, Wm Hillerly, Wm H Chambers, F Hayes, H L R Jones, E J Ames, M Branin, T C Edwards, C E Kenney, M D, Renny Calais, H C Slee, James S Field, J B Blackburn, H M Adams, Chris Brown, Mrs A E Brown, F Hollenwood, Minnie Hollenwood, James L McKelney, Eber Budlong, A A Hadly, C S Rowley, M E Tilton, M P Thurston, D W Hull, Wm Gurley, J C Hall, R B Lamborn, R J Lamborn, James McTurk, Charles C Chase, V J Borrette, James K Mills, Henry Damon, David Sobieski White, D W Crandall, A M Studley, L V Bicknell, John T Krell, Henry Justin, S D Pilcher, P M Carter, J E Warren, G W Kingsley, H Gilmore, James Lavallye, Wm K Galloway, Charles Schwartz, Julius H Franklin, Samuel Painter, B F Worthington, H C Carpenter, Johnson Smith, Alfred Birdsall, S G Crofts, J L Dinkelspiel, J. Samuelson, B Frankenberg, M V B Sill, David Aplin, Turner Hardin, B T King, Porter Clark, A S Brown, Samuel Hardy, B F Kincaid, Arthur G Wells, Almond Burt, B F Weythmar, M.D, Prof C G Ohlson, John W Stokes, Dr F O Baker, M C Beach, E K Hosford, E C Hotchkiss, W H Sadden, F Wheeler, H I Austin, C P Hopkins, Mrs C A Wheeler, Mrs Joanna McGee, M.D, T P Kelley, James G Doane, S S Ashby, G A McGee, Anton Roberts, Stephen Kepler, A G Brown, M D, A J Burton, G W Dryden, Samuel Dryden, Peter Shultz, Daniel Vickers, Daniel Bird, Olson Crandell, Enon Marshall, Mrs Mary Marshall, Miss Agnes Marshall, M B Campbell, David Burrett, Benj Sanderson, F T Ingalls, B T Kirby, Adam Stecker, D W Hunter, Peter G Crowley, A P Striker, J H Lewis, M.D, C D Thomson, R W Bowers, W M Neece, G E Wold, John W Taylor, C F Perry, D H Howell, H E Sherwood, F H Sherwood, Charles O Brall, J J Hunt, M H Horsell, Wm Hunt, J B Hunt, G M Tomson, J Sands, S Johnson, Joseph Winship, Martin Johnson, L W Fugate, A M Champ, F M Jackson, W H Goard, F C Ferring, J W Scannell, Peter Saispair, P W Lute, Jennie Lute, Abner Garland, A J Purdy, T L White, A M Cline, Thos J Pilcher, B F Brown, P R Rodman, Nathan Clark, John T. Smith, Arthur Walker, Agnes Walker, Annie Walker, Lyman Porter, David W Davis, Samuel Crowe, Mary E Atkins, R L Atkins, T B Atkins, J V Carpenter, Addison Wing, T C Morrison, John Kane, Murphy McGuire, David Slater, Frank L Burgess, Otto Kumler, Herman Gott, Benj F Lake, G W Hunter, A M Keller, J E Milliken, M Ostin Hutchings, A C C Tamsey, Joseph Sedgebeer, John M Price, Daniel Frey, Isaac Van Schaaick, R C Trowbridge, Geo Hinman, E N Kingley, A O Rue, D Hewins, James Hull, W W Stickney, W A Stickney, Ira A Scott, T R Kinget, M.D., T R Kinget Jr, W R Kinget, Wm McClintock, Howard Smith, W H Weber, S P Williams, Harry Hoover, Mary E Hoover, A R Clapson, Ann Clark, T J Sutton, James S Bedel, Henry Appleton, J W Bennett, Harriet Bennett, Rachael A Oaks, Anna M Brooks, C E Kimmen, Israel Betz, M W St John, John H Reed, Mrs M C G Reed, Alex McCullough, O G Irvin, B C Fleek, W J Smith, V R Holman, James M Irwin, Martin V Clayton, Robt Johnson, A C Smith, Oliver Hayes, Lewis Masquerier, William Forgarr, Augustus Wentworth, Charles McCartie, Patience Tabor, John H Ellis, John Scholes, Dr J H Moore, Harriet A Moore, M E Tillotson, J M Coburn, J F Brown, Otis Smith, M L Loomis, John Wells, B P Foster, C K Fish, Anne E Smith, C D Morey, A E Price, E J Robinson, M M Vanclief, J M Slate, S Cornell, F B Goodale, S W Goodale, A B Crosby, M D Howe, C E Loomis, J M D Ward, D M Hersey, Lucius O Wood, D W Allen, L K Coonley, MD, R A Mills, Mary Harwood, C A Hersey, H L Tilton, Solomon Guess, W W Dover, H Wingart, John Northniard, S A Stephen, Dr C R Mueller, L Shoemaker, M Laumar, J H Woolenhan, Charles Radloff, Alph Hutchinson, C Todt, Wm Haustetter, G C Heromann, C V Cordell, Richard Howard, Henry F Buettner, Hugo W Weisbrod, Jno C Wagner, D W Cordell, John Thurston, Andrew J Hall, George Wood, Wm H Baxter Geo W Chapman, Joseph Goldsmith, A L Thompson, P W Leet, Jennie E Leet, Mrs Elmina D Slenker, J L Owen, R E Thompson, E O Molsterteig, S Peterson, Dr Wm Thompson, A O Molsterteig, O F Johnson, Louis C Berry, John Monson, R H Thompson, George Nye, MD, P P Johnson, H H Valder, Hans Valder, Ed Payne, MD, John H Haslam, Walter Walke, PM, Hon H P Haight, J H Cook, Frances A Cook, A W Jay, Janet Jay, H S Blair, Wm Evans, Belle Evans, G H Miller, Hiram Crum, C D Nichols, Aaron Evans, J Brown, Wm Tyler, E C Kinman, Chas Ed Williams, Zamos Parsons, Albert Barshow, Thomas Riley, D H Welch, W M Carter, Clayton S Crosson, W M Curtis, J H McDowell, Amanda McDowell, J R Haines, C Bonsall, E A Curtis, A M Curtis, George Meredith, Maria Clemmer, G W Cowgill, Mary M Edmonds, Dan'l Bonsall, H B Miller, J B Metzger, August M O Rex, L L Goodwin, Thomas Dutton, Elizabeth Dutton, Valentine Shuler, William Jookers, A Colman, D F Hanna, David Macy, G C Patten, A P Shour, H Bunker, C M Potter, A S Martin, O A Macy, J C Pot, W D Shuler, E B Dixon, S Y E Dixon, Asa S Lindsey, J Q Smith, Milton Eads, E P Richardson, Robt B Richardson, Robt Rhea, N J Hicks, Turner Richardson, Wesley Taylor, George Dickson, John Wise, E Prary, J W Hicklin, J Dickson, V F Terry, W H Kelley, Rubon Adkinson, Calvin Stout, John Beedloo, M Blakley, Wm Wells, Frank Shringer, Robt G Brey, Conrad Lutz, Henry Miller, F Hildebrand, Paul Steel, Edward Heithy, Rev J M Barnes, Isaac Beadle, Lucinda Beadle, James Rogers, Josephine Rogers, Stephen Thanaford, Adaline Thanaford, Raymond Schehrer, John Thanaford, Maggie Wood, Thomas Wood, Sara Chase, Delos Fuller, Louisa Snyder, Jennie Chase, Nellie L Chase, George, Miller, Lovinda Miller, Charles Reynolds, Sarah Reynolds, Jenene Hunt, Patrick Hunt, Margaret M Thomas, Wm Reynolds, David Garrit, Henry Grim.

Still Another Arrest.

Just as this paper is going to press, Tuesday, four P. M., December 10th, the editor has been arrested on a bench warrant from the U. S. Circuit Court at the instance of Anthony Comstock, on the charge of sending a copy "Cupid's Yokes" through the mails. Bail was demanded in $2,000. E. B. Foote, Sr., M.D., was accepted. The case may come to trial in one or two months. There may be more of these prosecutions than will prove interesting.

Died.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: D. H. Hise, an ardent admirer of your paper and a faithful worker in the cause of Liberalism, departed this life Nov. 17, 1878. Very truly yours, EDWIN HISE.

Salem, Ohio, Dec. 8, 1878.

MIND AND MATTER. No. 1, Vol. I., of a new paper by this title, published at 713 Sansom street, Philadelphia, J. M. Roberts, editor and publisher, is received. It is devoted to the promulgation of the Spiritualistic philosophy, and as Mr. Roberts is an able and earnest man, articles of research and thought may be looked for by his readers. It is gotten up in good style, and is furnished at $2.15 per year. We wish it success and long life.

TEN Mormon missionaries, with 150 of their dupes, arrived here a few days ago from Europe.

Selections.

Pocket Theology.

BY VOLTAIRE.

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH FOR THE FIRST TIME BY MISS ELLEN CARROLL

AARON.

The high priest of the Hebrews, the worthy brother of Moses, and the perfect pattern of our modern priests. He caused his followers to worship, and he himself worshiped, the golden calf, an example that has been pretty closely imitated by the majority of his sacerdotal successors, even down to the present day. For his want of faith he was forbidden to see the Promised Land, which, probably, accounts for the slight faith of his successors in the promises of future bliss they so liberally hold out to believers. However, in spite of these drawbacks, God knew so well the value of a high priest that he showed himself deeply interested even with regard to the number of bells that he was to wear on his petticoats. This should teach us that nothing concerning his ministers is indifferent to God.

ABBEYS.

Sacred retreats from the corruptions of the world, built and endowed at divers periods of quickened faith by pious brigands, and destined to receive a certain number of very useful citizens and citizenesses, who consecrated themselves to singing, eating, and sleeping, all to the end that their fellow-citizens should succeed in their labors.

ABBOT.

A spiritual father, in the enjoyment of a temporal income—attached to an abbey—on condition that he shall read his breviary, torment the monks, and go to law with them. Every abbot in this world is not in the enjoyment of an abbey, though he would very much like to be so. A goodly number are only in the enjoyment of the right of going about dressed in black, wearing a linen band round their necks, and retailing items of the news of what is going on in the world.

ABNEGATION.

A Christian virtue; the effect of divine grace. It consists in hating one's self; detesting every species of pleasure; avoiding everything that is pleasant and agreeable as if it were the plague itself, all of which becomes quite easy if the subject has received a dose of grace sufficient to deprive him of his wits.

ABRAHAM.

The father of all the faithful. He lied, and was made a cuckold; he pared off his foreskin, and, in a word, gave proof of so much faith that, had it not been for angelic intervention in the nick of time, he would have cut the throat of his own son, whom the Lord, in a jesting mood, had commanded him to sacrifice. God then made a covenant with him and with his seed forever; but the Son of God afterwards annulled this treaty for some good reasons that his papa did not foresee when he made it.

ABSOLUTION.

The remission of the sins we have committed against God. The priests of the Romish Church grant it to sinners in virtue of a blank from the divinity itself; a most happy invention, well calculated to reassure certain timorous rogues who might be inclined to feel remorse for their shortcomings did not the Mother Church thus take the trouble to set them entirely at their ease on that score.

ABSTINENCE.

A most pious practice which consists in depriving ourselves of the benefits of divine Providence, who created all good things to the sole end of preventing his creatures from enjoying them. Thus it is that by commanding us to abstain the Church merely remedies the too lavish goodness of God.

ABSURDITIES.

There can be none such in religion, which is the work of the Word, or the Divine Reason, which, as we all know, has nothing in common with human reason. It is only through want of faith that incredulous persons fancy they can perceive absurdities in Christianity, whence it results that a want of faith is the height of absurdity. The absurdities of the Christian belief disappear when its doctrines have been inculcated from earliest childhood and adhered to without doubt or question. The more absurd a thing may appear to the eyes of human reason, the more fit and proper does it appear to the eyes of divine reason, or, in other words, of religion.

ABUSES.

Abuses will here and there creep into the Church in spite of the divine vigilance. The only thing to be done in such cases is to reform such abuse or abuses when they have become too notorious to be any longer upheld. For the rest, it is only the incredulous who can detect such abuses, the eyes of believers being blind to them.

ADAM.

He was the first man. God created him a big booby, who, to please his wife, was stupid enough to devour an apple which his descendants have never since been able to digest.

ADVENT.

A time of fasting, mortification, and tears, during which all good Christians grieve and mourn over the near coming of their Savior.

AGNUS DEI.

Small cakes of wax much revered by Roman Catholics, and blessed by the pope himself, consequently having received from the fountain head the miraculous power of driving out devils, exorcising witchcraft, and stilling storms and tempests. This is why thunderbolts have never been known to fall in localities in possession of this blessed commodity.

ALIENATION.

The property of the Church cannot be alienated, the priests being but the guardians thereof, and God himself the proprietor. His ministers, therefore, have the power to alienate nothing, save and except their own wits and the wits of those who listen to their pious teachings.

ALMS.

A distribution of one's own possessions, or of somebody else's to the end of perpetuating the pious leisure of priests, monks, and other lazy folk who find it much more agreeable and convenient to pray than to work.

ALTARS.

God's tables, upon which he, disgusted with the meats formerly served up to him, now requires that his sacrificers shall serve up to him his own Son, of whom they (the sacrificers) likewise partake and cause others to partake. The sight of this delicate repast disarms the Eternal Father of his anger and inspires him with the friendliest sentiments for all who thus sit at his table and gobble up portions of his beloved Son under his very nose.

The altar, in a figurative sense, is always opposed to the throne, which means that priests are often more cunning than potentates. In the meantime it is the custom, whenever the Church is attacked, to proclaim with a loud voice that both the altar and the throne are in danger. In this manner the Church is rendered interesting, and potentates are led to consider themselves as bound in honor to espouse her quarrels and to interest themselves in her affairs, even to the detriment of their own interests.

ANATHEMA.

A species of charitable curse launched by the ministers of a God of peace against all or any that displease them—devoting those to eternal torments for the good of their souls when they cannot get a chance of torturing their bodies.

ANCHORITES.

Very holy men, and justly held in esteem and veneration by the Church, who withdrew themselves from all commerce with the world, in the fear of incurring the misfortune of being of any good to it.

ANGELS.

The messengers of the celestial cabinet whom God dispatches to his favorites here below. Without the angels, God would be obliged to do his own errands. Every Christian enjoys the privilege of having a guardian angel all to himself, who would prevent him from doing many foolish things were it not for the principle of man's free will, which cannot be set aside. Archangels are to angels what archbishops are to bishops: the Divinity employs them on its most important mission.

ANGER.

A deadly sin in a layman, who should only get angry when the Church gets angry, because then it is God himself who gets angry. In truth, the God of all goodness is an angry God, whose beloved children are created in wrath. It is therefore mete and proper that the latter should get angry when he himself is so, otherwise he might get angry if his creatures were less angry than he. Priests are the surest thermometers of the divine wrath.

ANNATS (first fruits).

Catholic sovereigns wisely allow a foreign priest to fleece the priests of his own states. Otherwise the latter could not, in their turn, exercise the divine right of fleecing their fellow-citizens.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Communications.

Catholic Morality.

The Cathedral Fair is over, and I trust that, as a lesson, it will be beneficial. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars hav been accumulated, and for what purpose? That a monument to that mixture of ignorance, superstition, and corruption, called Catholicism, may be completed. It is of little import to the priests how the money was procured. Little they heeded that the young man staked, perhaps, his first dollar at the gaming-table. Of small moment was it to them how often our hitherto virtuous wives and daughters sold themselves to the embraces of, perchance, cut-throats, thieves, and libertines at so much per kiss, so long as their coffers were heaped up with the taxes from the poor and hard-working people.

In the name of the Lord the money was obtained, and in the name of the Lord the fat beasts of pollution and hypocrisy are now gloating over the spoils.

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars! It is hard to tell what portion will go towards completing the Cathedral and what portion will be spent by the priests in "whooping up the wine."

There can be no doubt—and the writer asserts positively, through his own personal experience, having held peculiar and intimate relations with the priesthood for two or three years of his life—that whenever a fair, a concert, or an entertainment of any kind has been given by the church and for the benefit of the church, in the "blowout" usually held every night after the entertainment is over, the cost of the wines, liquors, etc., has been fully equal to one-fourth, and in most cases one-half, of the receipts. This I assert as a fact of my own personal knowledge. What is more, and just as true, with very rare and exceptional cases, the priests guzzle the most and become the most grossly intoxicated of any of the company.

In the service of the Lord, at this famous cathedral, many young men hav taken their first lesson in gambling. It is easier to begin this way, and as it is countenanced by society in general at the Fair, and is not interfered with by the law, it is not difficult to become initiated. In substantiation we quote from the Post of this city, whose reporter asked the following question of the Rev. Father McGlynn, of St. Stephen's Roman Catholic Church in 28th street:

"I should like to ask you one more question. When at the Cathedral Fair, I observed a small, round table, at which a young priest stood, surrounded by a dozen or more eager boys. The table was marked off into twelve triangular sections, the apex of each triangle being at the center of the table's surface, where was inserted a pivot, on which an arrow turned. The sections were numbered 1, 2, 3, and so on up to twelve, and on each one of them lay a cent, contributed by the boys. The priest gave the arrow a rapid turn, and when it stopped he picked up six of the cents and handed them to the boy who had contributed that had lain on the particular section over which the head of the arrow had stopped. The other six cents he kept for himself. I noticed that the boys were pretty eager in the sport and that the priest's exhortations to them were earnest and successful. Now, was there any harm in that?"

The question was something of a poser to the reverend Father, but he thought that it was a "question of taste;" and as the money must be procured in some way, it did no particular harm, as it was in the Lord's service. As a fact, it is gambling, and nothing more nor less, and there is no apparent reason why it should not hav been suppressed, except that it was carried on in the name of the Lord, who, according to all accounts, has the burden of many people's sins on his shoulders.

It is nothing that, as currently reported, young girls were not only sanctioned but encouraged in selling their kisses to any and all who chose to pay for them. Why not hav gone further and sold their bodies? It is a poor system that will not bear carrying out; and it would not hav been wrong according to Father McGlynn's priestly logic, but only a "question of taste." If in the one the end justifies or sanctifies the means, why not in the other? Of what composition are people made that they will quietly submit to the atrociousness, the imposition, of designing, hypocritical, canting priests? For those of them who know anything are baseness and corruption itself, and those who are sincere are generally ignorant asses; and is it not a marvel that men and women with minds and brains capable of reasoning should so far lose and forget their self-respect as to trust themselves to the guidance of either class? Are people blind that they cannot see that they are robbing themselves and their families to support in debauchery and licentiousness this putrid mass of corrupt priesthood, the Catholic Church? Are they idiots that they will suffer themselves to be so imposed upon? What if a structure ten times as grand, ten times as imposing, is built, what are they to get for it? The blessings—which surely prove the curses—of the Church. That is all. For their worship, for their blind devotion, they receive nothing and pay everything, of which their money is of the least importance.

What good could not be done with one hundred and fifty thousand dollars? Think of it! you poor, superstition-blinded devotees of the Romish Church. Think of what this sum of money, rightly expended, might do for you, and of what little it will do for you where it now is—gone to fill the bellies of the vultures in human form who feast upon your very heart's blood.

But that is of no consequence. Fill to the brim the coffers of the Church. Poor thing! she needs it. The priests must liv in luxury; what if you do starve? It is for the glory of God and the holy Catholic Church. So giv—giv to the last dollar you possess; and then, with empty pockets and hollow stomachs, hie away to the confessional and obtain such a receipt in full as the reverend Father, fresh from his women and wine, will invoke, if he is not too drunk—his blessing or his curse, as the case may be, according to the amount tendered.

Then let us thank God that in his name we are permitted to hav our sons taught to gamble and our daughters initiated into the art of lascivious embrace in public, and that, within the sacred precincts of the confessional, their minds, if not their bodies, may be debauched and polluted.

So pile on the blocks of marble; carve out your saints of stone; gild and incense your altars; adorn your sacred walls with paintings of the holy Virgin and saints, but do not forget to inscribe upon the monument:

"Erected to the memory of departed truth, honor, and virtue." EDWIN A. BOOTH.

Are We Criminals?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In the issue of Nov. 9th of the Seymour Times—"a paper with few principles"—is the following. It is, I suppose, the opinion entertained of the majority by the editor: if not, he has written himself down a hypocrite:

"That such questions as free lust and the free transit through the mails of abominable literature should be allowed to creep into and burst up a League of Liberal thinkers calling itself 'national' is a blasting, blighting, withering disgrace to the Freethinkers of this entire continent."

I was a delegate to that Congress, and I protest emphatically against such downright misrepresentation. It is slander; and the author ought to be amenable to the laws of libel, or indicted for moral assault with intent to kill. I was one of five representatives from a league composed of as respectable men and women as can be found in this city or in any other. We all voted with what has been sneeringly termed the Freelove party, but I defy the "paper with few principles" to find an advocate of immorality in that majority. Such accusations can only come from ignorance or a spirit which would find congenial company among the ghouls and ogres in the graveyard of the liars. For the dishonesty which givs that spirit life I hav no words to express my contempt. That a man professing to be a Liberal should resort to such despicable calumnies is one of orthodoxy's best arguments for the total depravity of man. Free lust was never thought of by any body but the Boston party and the "paper with few principles."

Because we advocated the repeal of an unjust law—a law so elastic that it can be stretched to cover even the "reformers" if the Christians care to expend the strength—the snakes of slander hav been let loose to coil their disgusting carcasses around our characters!

There is not a "reformer" who does not know that there was not a defender of obscenity in the Syracuse Congress, but there is not one of them, with the shining exceptions of B. F. Underwood and John W. Truesdell, with the honesty and the manhood to say so. On the contrary I pick this out of an editorial in The Index of Nov. 12, 1878:

"Whoever gives aid or sympathy to the movement for repeal is—we deliberately and emphatically repeat the statement—a willing or unwilling abettor of obscenity and Freelove."

Can the slanderer make his words plainer? The thousands in favor of standing by the Constitution, of folding it in the Stars and Stripes and holding it so high that its Christian enemies cannot reach it, are abettors of obscenity and Freelove! Will the Liberals of the country stand by and be lied about in that way? I for one will not, and all the seas of sophistry which may ever flow from the metaphysical pen of the would-be Liberal pope can not make me believe that I am a moral leper or that my vote at Syracuse was mental suicide. Saying it once was not enough, but he must stop and "deliberately and emphatically" rub it in. He was afraid we shouldn't believe it if we found it recorded as only his passing thought, but if he solemnly declared it to be so, who could doubt it! Certainly none of those who seceded at Syracuse to show their devotion to —what? not the principles of the Liberal League but to F. E. Abbot.

Here is another passage so miserably insinuating that its writer ought to be sued for slander:

"Liberalism itself is now on trial before the world. Will it or will it not submit to be governed, guided, and represented by the combined forces of general licentiousness and immorality?"

All of which means that if F. E. Abbot is not allowed his way in everything Liberalism will go to eternal smash. All who differ from him on a point of law are with "the combined forces of general licentiousness and immorality," which is but an elegant way of saying that we are libertines and prostitutes. And that is what we get from such pure men as F. E. Abbot! That is his argument for the constitutionality of the Comstock laws!

What is this obscenity, anyway, of which Dr. Monroe and Mr. Abbot seem to be so terribly afraid? Is it a tangible evil that can be weighed and determined? Can the ruin of anybody be traced to reading lewd books or gazing at miserable pictures? For one such there can be found a thousand who hav been been ruined by their own debauched thoughts and carefully concealed crimes. Yet I do not hear Abbot and Monroe advocating a law which shall search the thoughts of any one, or seek out hidden crime. My thoughts are in my letter, and I hav put them down for the reading of only those whom I wish should see them. If the law has no right to search my brain to see my thoughts, it has no right to open my letter. The Government of the United States is not an Inquisition for the regulation of morals and religious opinions. Having agreed to carry books in the mail, it has no right to say what such books shall be. The United States has agreed to carry garden-seeds to the weight of a certain number of ounces. Shall it hav the power to say what kind of seeds it will spread over the country? It would hav the same right to exclude poppy-seeds from the mails because opium is made from poppy-heads, and is positively injurious, that it would hav to exclude books that are injurious to morals and may lead to crime. Timothy grass is bad for some soils, but shall Congress take it upon itself to refuse to carry timothy-seeds because of the injury it may do some soils if injudiciously applied by incompetent farmers? I think not even Mr. Abbot or Dr. Monroe would argue for this assumption of power by Congress. The point I wish to impress upon those who advocate a censorship of the press is this: Having once voted to carry books through the mail at so much per pound, Congress has no moral or constitutional right to discriminate as to the contents of that book. It shall carry all books offered it on which the postage is paid. It shall not say it will forward the works of one publisher and reject those of another. Such a course would manifestly result in making Congress a censor of our reading matter, and, as the majority of Congress can do practically as it sees fit, it would be the surest and quickest way of uniting Church and State. All any sect or body would hav to do would be to elect their representatives—and on a religious question it would be easy to do this—and they hav the power of refusing to forward any printed matter not in harmony with their views. Let the test come up in the present House, and I hav no doubt all Freethought publications would be summarily squelched. Let the Congress be Catholic, and where would be your Protestants? Let it be composed of blue-bellied Presbyterians, and where would be your Catholics, your Adventists, or your Methodists? Let it be any of them, and where would be the Seymour Times or The Index? Hunting for the occupation of the dusky Moor.

In another place the "paper with few principles" has this oracular utterance: "We cannot become the champions of vice." The "we" used is evidently intended to mean the Liberals of the country, and not the editor who hides his personal narrowness under the "we" of editorship. Now I would say, what the editor with no—I forgot, the "paper with few principles" already knows, and that is, that no one in the ranks of the "repeal" party is championing vice. Every fair-minded man, although opposed to repeal, admits that, and it is more than dishonest, it is infamous, in the "reform" editors to take advantage of the popular Christian cry that all Liberals are immoral, to try and fasten the stigma of obscenity on a body of men and women as pure as the editors are unfair—a fact that speaks volumes for their purity.

What is the reason of this endless howl about obscenity? Is it the great abhorrence felt by the immaculate reformers for all sorts of causes of crime that leads them to protest so vigorously against obscenity? Is it a regard for the welfare of the young, or is it simply a pandering to a sickening sentimentality more dangerous to liberty, because more insidious in its workings, than the utmost freedom? If the reformers were actuated solely by a desire to benefit the world they would not confine their denunciations to one cause of crime, but would labor to eradicate all causes. The curse of strong drink does a million times more damage than all the obscenity ever printed, but we do not hear any labored denunciations of that from the prurient reformers; nor do we see eleven columns of any newspaper taken up in a vain endeavor to prove that drinking is unconstitutional or that the General Government has the right to imprison any one who imbibes. The demons of drink can wind themselves around the throat and gnaw the very heart of the nation, but we hear no sound from Boston heights, and no echo comes rolling back to us over the prairies of Indiana. Every student in every college in the land can be supplied with unlimited liquor by unprincipled men who sell it solely and only for gain, but we hear no indignant protest from the monopolizers of purity. A prohibitory liquor law would justly meet with condemnation. But when it is obscenity—a vice which does not cause one millionth part of the crimes and abuses that alcohol does—that is legislated against, then every hand is raised in horror, and a desire to be "respectable" causes them to shake the filth from the ends of their fingers with all possible haste. The Government derives a large portion of its income from the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquor. Why do we not hear some protest from the learned legal light who went into hysterics over the idea of the Government deriving any profit from the carrying of pernicious literature? If the reformers are opposed to obscenity only because of the harm it does, there is no need for so much vehement denunciation. It does but a small per cent of damage compared with rum and tobacco. But no Liberal is so foolish as to demand that tobacco seed or liquor advertisements shall be excluded from the mails. Yet on the principles held by the "reformers," it logically could and ought to be done. An excessive use of cigars will induce paralysis, heart disease, and gradually undermine the constitution. Yet we do not hear any one argue that the Government has the right to suppress smoking. It would be an unbearable infringement of personal rights and no one would submit to it for an instant. And yet the people of the United States would be better off, physically and mentally, were the art of growing and manufacturing tobacco lost forever.

The cry of obscenity is the only argument left the Church, and to transfer the dastardly charge to the repealers is the chief aim of the reformers. I hav seen no other argument used and I doubt if they hav any. The persistency with which the charge has been repeated shows either uncommon stupidity or uncommon dishonesty. But I for one am getting sick of being called a Freelover and obscenist. They might as well call us what they are when they undertake to rob us of our reputation before the world. An open enemy is better than a sneaking assassin, and if they hav anything more to say about the majority I hope they will go over to the Christians unreservedly and not stay in our camp and shoot into our backs their arrows poisoned with jealousy and humbled arrogance.

EUGENE MACDONALD.

What is Money?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The discussion of the money question in the columns of your paper has certainly elicited some very queer ideas on money. Several correspondents speak of gold and silver as the money of the world. Others hav the dollar so many grains of gold or silver the world over. Now there certainly is no natural money, and hence no money of the world. What, then, is money? Money is the legal value put by the authority of a government upon some material to represent the value of lands, tenements, commodities, and whatever has value and is exchanged, and this legal value, which alone makes money, has nothing whatever to do with the intrinsic value of the material upon which it is placed. If it is stamped upon gold or silver, then these metals hav a double value—a legal and a commercial one. Now if government stamps are equal value upon these metals and paper, the money value of all three is the same.

That this is the true theory of money is demonstrated by the fact that all money ceases to be money whenever it leaves the jurisdiction which made it. For instance, the legal value which Congress puts upon gold or silver adheres to it only so long as it remains within the limits of the United States, and whenever it goes beyond it only retains its commercial value like wheat or any other commodity.

Now that which more especially concerns the people on this money question, is a system of finance that will not continually fluctuate so as to change the value. Herein lies the great defect of our system. If contracts would fluctuate with the money, the hardship would not be so severely felt, but they are permanent, while other values change. Uniformity of values can only be maintained when the money is unchangeable in value and in amount per capita. Can this result be attained so long as we use gold and silver as a basis for our monetary system? I do not believe that it can, for the following among other reasons: Gold and silver are commodities that are constantly in the markets of the world, and so long as we use these metals as money their legal value is fixed while their commercial value continually changes with the supply and demand (and I might say here that they are a commodity that is more easily manipulated for speculative purposes than any other), for it follows as an invariable result when the commercial value of these metals is greater elsewhere than their legal or money value is here, they instantly cease to circulate as money and become an article of commerce, like grain or stock, and paper money based on them depreciates, and a suspension of specie payment follows, with a change of value which violently alters the relation of debtor and creditor, and necessarily does injustice either one way or the other. I believe it is a universally admitted fact that there is not a sufficient amount of gold and silver to answer the purposes of commerce, and paper has generally been used to supply the deficiency, but it has never had independent legal or money value for all purposes, anywhere; indeed there is not an instance in the financial history of the world of a money that was not based on something besides its own legal or representative value.

The assignat currency of France is often quoted as such, but it was based on the land of the state at a time when the ownership was not well settled. The same is true of the Confederate money. It was based on the success of the Rebellion, and the Continental money was really based on specie, and the fate of it was the same which has and will invariably follow specie-based paper money in the end, viz., depreciation and of necessity a change of values which must always injuriously affect contracts and all other business relations.

In a future communication I will indicate the kind of money which will not be subject to these defects.

Yours truly, J. HOKE.

Cordova, Ill., Nov. 25, 1878.

Selected by Elmina Drake Slenker.

A SPIDER, named "Pholeus," when alarmed hangs down from its web by its legs—which are long, by the way—and swings its body around so fast that it can hardly be seen. How do you suppose that this little atom, half an inch long knows that one can't see well anything moving rapidly?

A ROYAL UMBRELLA.—In Abyssinia an umbrella is a sign of royalty, and no one else is allowed to use one. It is made of crimson silk, and carried by a servant. Even in Constantinople no umbrella can be opened in the sultan's palace. Orientals are said never to use the umbrella, but to wrap their heads in shawls.

AN OLD FASHION.—Before the days of numbering the houses in cities, people had to resort to various devices to tell where they livd. Some painted the houses an odd color, others decorated the doors with something new and striking; still others colored the door-posts, or the balconies. Signs for shops were more absurd still. I hav heard of a grocery with the sign of a grasshopper.

THE civilization that does not hold woman as first and foremost is not a civilization. The world to-day, the whole world, even the Christian world, is in barbarism. Look at Virginia! Ten lashes with a cat-o-nine-tails and six days' imprisonment in the common jail for a wife who "stole" from her husband!—Ballot Box.

IN 1599 Anthony Gibson wrote a work called "A Woman's worth defended against all the men in the world, proving her to be more perfect, excellent, and absolute in all virtuous actions than any man of what quality soever.—Mrs. Gage.

THE greatest river in the known world is the Mississippi 4,000 miles long.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 14, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

Close of the Volume.

Two numbers after the present close volume V. of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and will complete one year of the enlarged size, making a total of 832 pages for the year, containing far more reading matter than any other Liberal paper ever published. The cost of getting up such a paper, with all the economy we are able to use, and working closely sixteen hours a day, amounts to a great deal of money, and what we receive in the way of subscriptions is insufficient to meet all the expenses. What we realize on the sale of books is required to make up this deficiency. Some write us the paper is too dear, and think it ought to be furnished at one dollar and a half or two dollars per year. We would, of course, like to supply it at the prices named, but we do not see how we can do so unless the number of subscribers is largely increased. The composition or type setting is much the heaviest item in the expense account, and white paper is also a large item—nearly seven hundred reams, or 40,000 pounds, being required for one year's issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The postage alone costs over $500 per year, and the folding, wrapping, directing, etc., costs a thousand dollars more.

But we are anxious for THE TRUTH SEEKER to live many years, and to be read by double the number of people who now read it. We would be glad if every patron would continue to take it and pay for it, and thousands more be added to the number. We are sorry to receive orders to take names from the list, and we must confess that we hav received many letters of this kind. The times are hard, and many think they can do without the paper. It must be apparent to every one that if this kind of business is carried far enough, the paper must discontinue for want of support. We hav before said that we hav no capital in reserve. Every dollar we hav is in the business, and we depend from week to week upon what we receive from patrons and customers. If they withhold the required aid, or what is due us, we languish, and suffer from impecuniosity accordingly. It should be a question with every Liberal in the country, Shall THE TRUTH SEEKER be sustained? And it is to be hoped that this question will be answered in the affirmative by their remitting its price for the year. We hav endeavored to be faithful in our duty, and to fight the good fight of truth. We hope enough may stand by us to enable us to continue the contest. We will not forsake the good cause if friends do not forsake us.

We propose, with Vol. VI., to commence, 1. A BIBLE DICTIONARY, from a Liberal standpoint, giving the facts respecting Bible matters, free from sectarian bias and untruthfulness. One page each week will be occupied with this, which it is hoped will prove of interest.

2. A DISCUSSION between W. F. Jamieson and Rev. Jacob Ditzler, D.D., of Kentucky, held in Kirksville, Mo.

3. GOTTLIEB and his remarkable adventures. He died, went to the gates of heaven, but, not being admitted by St. Peter, he went down to hell, but, not liking the manner in which it was conducted, he went off by himself and started an improved hell of his own, which proved so much superior to the existing order of things that the devil became enamored with it and adopted the reform, and thus converted his own extensive domains from hell into a perfect heaven. The fame of this great reform movement reached even to heaven, and God and his Son were finally induced to go down and take lessons from Gotlieb and then introduce his reforms into heaven, thus making a most decided improvement there. The work is written in the best style, and cannot fail to be appreciated.

4. UNDERWOOD'S LECTURES and Essays will be continued.

5. SCIENTIFIC ARTICLES, as Haeckel on the "History of Creation," Lectures and Essays on Astronomy, Geology, and other branches of science, will be continued.

6. VOLTAIRE'S POCKET THEOLOGY, commenced in this number, will appear from week to week.

7. LETTERS FROM THE DEVIL will be resumed.

8. LETTERS FROM FRIENDS will appear as heretofore.

9. ANSWERS TO INQUIRERS will receive more attention than for some time past.

10. DEACON SKIDMORE is expected to continue his letters.

11. WHAT I DON'T BELIEVE will appear more regularly.

12. COMMUNICATIONS from various sources will hav place every week.

13. THE RADICAL PULPIT, or reports of discourses by Mr. Frothingham, Prof. Adler, Mr. Chadwick, and others, will be continued.

14. SELECTIONS from the best sources will be given from time to time.

15. NOTES AND CLIPPINGS, EVENTS OF THE WEEK, GEMS OF THOUGHT, POETRY, selected and original, and ODDS AND ENDS, will appear as heretofore.

16. EDITORIALS on live questions may be looked for.

It is believed THE TRUTH SEEKER will continue to prove worthy of the approval and encouragement of the Liberal public. It is hoped its present patrons will promptly renew, and that many new subscribers may be obtained. Let every friend of the paper constitute himself a committee of one to obtain subscriptions. Price $3.00 per year, or 25 cents per month, including postage. To new subscribers it will be sent three months for 50 cents.

An Appeal for Justice and Fairness to Both Sides.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I agree with you that it is unfair and unjust to represent the party of "repeal" as in favor of obscenity. The friends of repeal (with a few exceptions) equally with the friends of reform are in favor of laws against obscenity. The difference is as to the best way to suppress this evil consistently with justice and freedom to all. The question is whether Congress has rightful authority, and whether it is for the best interests of the people to exclude from the United States mails any kind of literature on account of its moral character.

Judge Hurlbut and other Liberals, while they are opposed to the law of 1873 as it now stands, believe it can be so modified as to protect the mail from actual obscenity, and at the same time be neither unconstitutional nor dangerous to the just liberty of the press.

Mr. Wakeman and other Liberals maintain that Congress has no constitutional authority to make laws for the exclusion from the mails of any class of literature, and that no such law can be framed which will not involve constant danger to freedom of the press, and the rights of American citizens.

Both parties are opposed to obscenity; both are in favor of laws against obscenity; both are opposed to the methods of Comstock and his doings (so far as they are dishonorable and wrong); but one party holds that all legislation having for its object the suppression of obscenity should be by the states and territories, while the other maintains that obscenity can be defined as clearly by a law of Congress as by a statute of the state, and that since obscenity is an evil admitted by everybody, and since Congress alone can legislate in regard to the mails, it has the right to prevent their use for the transmission of such literature as is written to inflame the passions and corrupt the minds of the youth.

Neither party is in favor of suppressing any work on account of the views advanced therein. Both admit there is some difficulty in characterizing the class of books which should be suppressed, and at the same time preventing the liability of interference with books, which, however objectionable as to their sentiments and style, are not obscene; but the friends of "reform" think it as difficult to make the distinction in a state law as in a United States law, and that an objection that can be urged equally against both can be consistently urged only by those who, like Mr. Heywood and Mr. Tucker, are opposed to all laws against obscenity, whether by the state or national government.

And here it is but just to the gentlemen above named to say that they claim to hav no sympathy with obscenity, but hold that we should rely wholly on moral agencies and influence for its suppression, since any attempt to stop its circulation by legislation must result in injury to the cause of freedom.

Let those who are disposed to continue the discussion of this subject represent fairly the position which they assail, drop personalities, and rise to the dignity and importance of the subject. Let the friends of "reform" show the strength of their position, and show what they think the weak points in the arguments of those who take the opposite view.

Let the advocates of "repeal" stop representing that the friends of "reform" are in favor of suppressing any opinion, or are in favor of the law of 1873 as it now stands, or of sustaining Comstock, or encouraging any of his dishonorable Paul Pry practices. Nor can any good result from ungentlemanly flings at those who honestly advocate "reform." The titles "Rev." and "ex-Rev." hav been in a tantalizing way prefixed to the name of Mr. Abbot and others who no longer use it, as though somehow there were a connection between these titles and their positions. It may be a misfortune to hav been a "minister of the gospel," but it is not in good taste to reproach with it those who hav left the profession of the ministry. Let us rather congratulate them on their independence and courage in leaving the pulpit, and show our appreciation of the sacrifice they hav made. By a paper just received I notice that Mr. Frothingham, whom we all admire for his noble qualities, has given his adherence to "repeal," convinced by the force of Mr. Wakeman's argument. Would it be generous in me to attempt to lessen the weight that his name will carry by referring to him sneeringly as the "ex-Rev." Frothingham? By no means. I admire him none the less since reading his letter to Mr. Wakeman. I recognize Mr. Wright, Mr. Wakeman, Mr. Parton, and other prominent advocates or adherents of repeal as able, earnest, and honest men, and the great body, whose position they represent as sincere and desirious of getting at the truth as I claim to be myself. Other Liberals, quite the equal of any that the cause of repeal can claim, such as Judge Hurlbut, Ingersoll, and Julian are quite as honest in their belief that Congress has the right to legislate on the subject herein referred to, even though by discourtesy they be designated as "Abbot, Comstock & Co."

The indescribable folly of introducing this question into the Congress of the National Liberal League at Syracuse is apparent, I believe, to the great mass of Liberals, East and West. It is some satisfaction to me to know that I earnestly protested against it, in private letters and in public communications. It was a controversy between two papers, embittered by personalities and resentments, on a subject concerning which Liberals are disagreed, carried into the League; and when good sense and moderation had so far prevailed as to promise a harmonious termination of the proceedings, it is deeply to be regretted that a desire to commit the organization, in its administration, to the policy of "repeal" finally defeated that for which many of us had labored throughout the Congress—the continued unity of the League. I did not wish to see the League pledged to the one position or the other, knowing that it could not be done without great dissatisfaction to a large minority. The resolutions that were adopted were sufficiently broad to receive the concurrence of the entire Congress, and were a sufficient protest against "Comstockism." The only possible way for the two Leagues to reunite is by leaving this question to be decided by the members individually, and return to the work of state secularization.

I can hardly restrain my indignation when I think how this matter was forced upon the National Liberal League to the entire neglect of its proper business and to the great injury of the organization.

I write this on the wing, and probably will not be able to giv attention to whatever criticism it may evoke, as I am lecturing almost every night, and a large correspondence takes all my leisure. Respectfully,

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Nora Springs, Iowa, Nov. 27, 1878.

REPLY.—It is very pleasant to see the fairness which Mr. Underwood evinces, and to see him accord as much love of virtue to repealers as to modifiers. Had this disposition been shown by those who hav led the opposition to repeal, much bitterness and unfriendliness would hav been saved. If a common love of morality could hav been accorded to us instead of our being charged with a love of obscenity, vileness, "nastiness," etc., etc., far less enmity and harshness would hav been the result.

The questions to be settled are, How shall obscenity be dealt with? Are the state governments unable to cope with it? Is it an evil of sufficient magnitude to require the United States to employ its detectives, its marshals, its courts, and the prisons of the country to check it? Should the general government deem it necessary to interfere until after the state governments prove themselves unable to master it? Are the facilities of the general government for suppressing obscenity in any respect better than those of the states? If it is kept entirely out of the mails are there not many other avenues open through which it can just as easily be sent? If, then, the postal laws can stop but a fractional part of what may be circulated, do they not fall far short of being a perfect remedy, and as the state laws are a perfect remedy is it not absurd for the general government to interfere with the matter at all? Is it really any worse for obscene matter to be conveyed by mail than by express or other conveyance? Is not the harm done by it accomplished after it is received by the person to whom addressed, and not while in transit? Is it any better for immoral matter to be sent in letters and sealed packages than wrapped up otherwise? If the principle of examining books, pamphlets, and papers for obscenity, in order to keep the mails pure is correct, should not the same inspection be equally applied to letters and sealed parcels? Is it advisable to only half-way perform any good work? Were not the mails established for irreligious people just as much as for religious, for the immoral as for the moral, for the impure as well as the pure? Is any class, creed, or shade entitled to privileges in the mails that all are not equally entitled to? Is there the slightest guarantee in the Constitution for one class to deprive another class of the rights which the same Constitution confers? These questions may be continued indefinitely, but it is hardly worth while. They are, however, such as are fitting for Liberals to consider and decide for themselves.

Mr. Underwood is probably quite correct in the partiality he feels to the one side rather than the other; his preferences hav not been hidden. It is possible we hav indulged in "ungentlemanly flings," and in the use of the terms "Rev." and "ex-Rev.;" but inasmuch as Messrs. Gordon, Clark, Mills, Abbot, and Ellis are either clergymen now or hav been, the offense of styling them so would seem far less culpable than to accuse them of offenses of which they are not guilty. (We learn that Mr. C. D. B. Mills, who is discoursing to a society of Unitarians and Universalists, is now being advertised in the Syracuse papers as "the Rev. Mr. Mills.") We did not intend to intimate that there is any disgrace in having once been a clergyman. There are many fine men who hav been clergymen, and many such who are clergymen still. There is, however, some truth in the old adage, "Once a priest, always a priest." The priestly manners, self-right-righteousness, and cant, are hard to be shaken off. But "bad taste," and even "ungentlemanly flings," are not as great offenses as falsehood, slander, and untruthful imputations. We do not think all the fault in this little unpleasantness is on our side.

It may be very wrong in us to hav used the firm name "Abbot, Comstock & Co.;" but inasmuch as Mr. Abbot approves of Comstock's laws, or at least a portion of them, and is strongly opposed to their repeal and to those in favor of it, and as he has devoted some columns of his paper in not only lauding Mr. Comstock and his work, but in quoting with approbation various Christian authorities in commendation of the peculiar methods which Comstock has employed, and as his friends sustain him in this course, and are in favor of his laws, it does not seem wholly unfitting to style them "Abbot, Comstock & Co." It does not sound nearly as bad as it would to call them "vile obscenists," "immoral Freelovers," "defenders of obscenity," "dealers in and defenders of nastiness," "ghouls," "vampires," "dealers in filth," etc., etc.

It is quite true that Judge Hurlbut claims that Congress has a constitutional right to establish a system of censorship and espionage over the people's mail, comprised of postmasters and deputies or clerks, to inspect the mail matter to see that it has the requisite moral and decent qualities before it is allowed to proceed on to its destination, but we are sorry to think that Mr. Underwood approves of that system, or that it forms any part of Liberalism, or that Liberals are in any manner bound to accept it. We feel very sure that Col. R. G. Ingersoll advocates nothing of the kind, nor the Comstock laws. We hav heard him pronounce them wrong in toto, and say that he was opposed to them. He has also expressed himself as entirely opposed to them to friends of ours, who hav reported the same to us. We are less acquainted with Mr. Julian's views, but we hardly think he would indorse Judge Hurlbut's plan. We hav seen a letter from him in which he approved of Mr. Wakeman's argument on the unconstitutionality of the Comstock postal law, admitted its soundness, etc. It may be barely possible, however, that he is slightly troubled with the complaint called "respectability." Some cannot bear to hav even a suspicion get abroad that they would not go to almost any length to suppress obscenity. The word has a perfect terror for them, and throws them into a panic, if not into convulsions.

The question of whether Congress has the constitutional right to prevent papers, books, etc., which may be deemed indecent, immoral, or obscene, passing through the mails, is, in all essential respects, like the one introduced into the Senate of the United States more than forty years ago touching anti-slavery papers, books, and pamphlets. The defenders of slavery termed it "incendiary matter," and wished to prevent its passage through the mails. A strong effort was made in Congress to enact such a law, but the greatest statesmen which this country ever boasted of—Webster, Clay, Cass, Benton, Wright, and others—were decidedly of the opinion that such a law would be wholly unconstitutional, and that the Constitution confers upon Congress no right to authorize postmasters and their clerks to inspect the mails to see whether the matter passing through them possessed the requisite political, moral, or religious character; and they were sustained by the good sense of the nation. If the Constitution conferred no such power then, it does not to-day. If postmasters had no right then to search the mail to find anti-slavery literature, they hav none to-day to find immoral or indecent literature. The principle is precisely the same, and it is pitiful to see Liberals supporting such a measure and evincing a willingness to surrender the dearest principles of liberty for the sake of appearing respectable in the eyes of our opponents, who would gladly bring us to the stake and gibbet had they the power. Joe Cook is sighing for granite rocks to sink us under the waters of the ocean, and many other Christians think we ought not to be suffered to liv. We think it will be conceded that the statesmen above named considerably outrank Judge Hurlbut; and even he has acknowledged to friends of repeal and those who hold to the unconstitutionality of the Comstock laws that they hav "the argument on their side." We must return the compliment, however, by insisting that he has not given any argument in favor of or showing where the Constitution confers any right upon Congress to pass laws touching the moral quality of the mails. We looked for it in the Judge's address, but in vain. We hav looked to all that has been said in favor of Congress passing moral laws, but we must confess that we hav not yet seen the first good reason advanced in favor of Congress passing such laws or of establishing a censorship and a system of espionage in all our post-offices.

Judge Hurlbut, Col. Ingersoll, Mr. Julian, and Mr. Underwood ought to know that the procurement of the passage of those Comstock laws was a sectarian movement to obtain the power to strike down, suppress, and punish Freethought in its various phases; that the President of the Society, which Comstock organized and which was instrumental in procuring the passage of those laws, has said in a public meeting of their Society, within the last year, in this city, that Freethought publications were in a fair way of soon being stamped out; they ought to know that Comstock, the Secretary of the Society, in his printed annual report, has said the same; they ought not to forget that one Freethought editor is now languishing in a Massachusetts prison by virtue of those laws; that a New York Freethought editor has served a term in prison by virtue of the same laws; that another New York Freethought editor has been twice arrested and indicted by virtue of the same laws, and is in a few days to be tried, with a view of sending him to prison; they ought to remember that a Freethought publisher in Boston is now under indictment and liable to be brought to trial at any time by virtue of the same laws; they ought not to forget that Dr. Foote, Dr. Abbey, and several other eminent physicians hav been arrested, subjected to very heavy expenses, some of them heavily fined and dishonored by means of these laws, simply because they exercised to a limited extent the same privilege of free thought in medicine that others hav used in theology. Those gentlemen ought to know that while, by the oppressive character of the postal laws of 1873, those cases named, and a hundred others—in any of which there was not the slightest shadow of obscenity—have been before the courts, there has not been, in the nearly six years that hav gone by since the laws were passed, a real case of obscenity prosecuted under them, simply because there was none to prosecute, all obscene publications having been suppressed and destroyed by state laws that previously existed. Those gentlemen should not forget that in the passage and exercise of these laws the very question of liberty and human rights is involved, and that obscenity is only a pretext or blind to obtain the power for theologians and narrow-minded sectarians to rule this country and to oppress those who dare to think and speak and act for themselves. It is pre-eminently a question of Liberty, and every true Liberal and every American ought to feel an earnest desire to hav all the constitutional guarantees maintained, for the preservation of free speech, a free press, and a free post-office. They ought to be able to see that if we yield the point that a censor shall be suffered to examine the mails for indecency, it will only be another step in the same direction to extend the inquisitorial power to examine also for other forms of immorality, heretical opinions, etc. They ought to be able to see that the whole thing is a form of intolerant inquisition whose ultimate purpose is to break down every form of mental liberty and freedom of speech. It is fervently hoped that those gentlemen named, with others who hav a very exalted opinion of "respectability," will not deem it of more value than liberty and freedom of thought.

Mr. Underwood grieves much that the question of "repeal" or "reform" of the Comstock laws was introduced into the National Liberal League, and says he can hardly restrain his indignation when he thinks how the matter was forced upon its attention. But it is to be regretted that he is unable to see that this is a question of Constitutional liberty; that under the odious term of obscenity the very foundation of liberty had been attacked and some of its defenders stricken to the earth, and others threatened with destruction. It is to be regretted that he is unable to see that our most valued rights and our dearest liberties are seriously endangered. What more proper work could the National Liberal League engage in than to seriously consider this attack from the powers of ecclesiasticism upon the principles of free thought, free speech, free press, and free mails? The question of whether the Jewish God shall be placed in the Constitution pales into insignificance when compared with this question.

But admitting for a moment that the introduction of this vital question into the League Congress was a great wrong, who is responsible for it, and who should be censured? It is only necessary to make an extract from the call from Francis E. Abbot, President, and Wm. H. Hamlin, Secretary of the National Liberal League, issued in Boston, Sept. 13th, 1878, and for several weeks published in The Index, to show by what authority the consideration of the question was introduced into the Liberal Congress. Among the questions of "the utmost practical importance" enumerated in that call, to be discussed in the Congress, were these:

"4. How can the rights of free mails and a free press be most effectively defended, and how can the wrongs of persons unjustly punished under the so-called Comstock laws be most effectively righted?

"5. Shall the National Liberal League abandon the stand it originally took on the 'obscene literature' question at Philadelphia, July 4th, 1876, or shall it continue to defend equally the cause of public morality and the cause of free mails and a free press? Shall it now demand the total repeal of the existing laws on this subject, and thereby practically protect and foster the circulation of obscene literature? or shall it continue to demand the radical reform of those laws in such manner as shall protect freedom of thought to the uttermost without protecting obscenity in the least?"

"The last two of these questions are peculiarly important at this time, and will inevitably come up for settlement by the approaching Congress."

"In order therefore, that these vital questions may be fairly and wisely decided, it is recommended that all local Leagues elect their delegates with special reference to it."

Thus it can easily be seen whence came the authority for the introduction into the Congress of the questions of repeal and reform. It surely did not come from THE TRUTH SEEKER, from its misguided editor, nor from any of the friends of repeal in New York or elsewhere. When Mr. Underwood's memory is refreshed that it came from Mr. Abbot, the President of the National League, and the editor of The Index, possibly he will cease to be horrified that the inevitable question was introduced, and not charge the offense upon any of the friends of repeal. From the time Mr. Abbot, a year ago, so malignantly attacked the movement of asking Congress to repeal or modify the Comstock laws—leaving it optional with that body as to which it should be—it has been the great question before the Liberals of the country, and it is vain to wish it may be kept in the background. It is the vital question of the hour, and it will not down. It cannot be evaded. It must be fairly, squarely, and bravely met. Those who side with the orthodox portion of the country must show their hands, and the real friends of liberty will also be known. The distinction must be made.

Mr. Underwood is mainly fair in his criticisms; the principal exception is where he charges the friends of repeal, in electing Elizur Wright and the other officers, with aiming to divide the League or to commit it in its administration to the policy of "repeal," thus defeating the harmony which might otherwise hav prevailed. He admits that a course had been pursued that promised a harmonious termination of the proceedings, but thinks the vote for Messrs. Wright, Palmer, Rawson, and Green "knocked the whole thing into a cocked hat." Really, the vote for officers for the coming year had nothing to do with the resolution that had previously passed to lay the question of repeal over for a year. The vote to defer the question for a year was passed Sunday morning, and the officers were elected in the afternoon. Does Mr. Underwood mean that because the majority magnanimously yielded the point of taking a vote on the question of repeal, that therefore they were under the slightest obligation to vote for a man they did not prefer? Or does he think it was in the faintest degree wrong for them to vote for the man they did prefer? Would it be Liberalism worthy of the Liberal League to compel men to vote for a man they had good reasons for not wishing to hav re-elected? If seventy-six persons honestly preferred Elizur Wright to Francis E. Abbot, should fifty-one get offended and divide the League because they exercised it? Is there anything in the Constitution of the National Liberal League making it obligatory on its members to always vote for Mr Abbot? And is not Mr. Wright, to say the least, as honorable, as intelligent, as true to liberty and human rights, and every way as worthy of being voted for, as Mr. Abbot? Where, then, was the wrong in voting for him?

In The Index of October 2d Mr. Abbot said, "THE TRUTH SEEKER declares explicitly that our position on the Comstock laws unfits us for the position we now hold, and nominates Elizur Wright for our successor; as if, forsooth, our faithful and honored friend did not take substantially the same position." If, then, according to this explicit avowal, Mr. Wright was a near friend of Mr. Abbot, and occupied substantially the same position, was there sufficient ground given for Mr. Abbot and his friends to get angry, to leave the Congress in a huff, and to organize at once an opposition League?

One great means of magnifying the importance and necessity of obscene postal laws is the false representations that hav persistently been made of the traffic in obscene literature and the immense quantity of it that has been and is being sent through the mails. The fact is, there are no parties publishing obscene literature, and there is none of it passing through the mails, and has not been for six years. There are many publishers in this city, and many establishments where nearly all kinds of literature are sold, but not at one of them, for love nor money, can an obscene book, pamphlet, or paper be obtained; and the alarming cry about the vast quantities that are being sent through the mails is entirely false. All this class of stuff was driven out of the market years ago, before the passage of the Comstock laws. There never has been a case of genuine obscenity prosecuted under these laws, but more than one hundred cases of cruel persecution, in which parties hav been arrested under them tried, and some of them convicted, when no offense against morality had been committed, and when no obscenity had been published or circulated. These arrests and prosecutions hav cost the innocent victims the loss of reputation, disgrace to their families, ruin to their business, and in the aggregate hundreds of thousands of dollars, to say nothing of several lives that hav been prematurely terminated by these most cruel and oppressive laws. There was no necessity for their passage, there is no necessity for their continued existence on the statute books, and there is no necessity for Liberals to waste their strength and energies defending them for the sake of appearing respectable before their enemies. The laws themselves are not respectable, simply because they are not right, and it is one of the greatest misfortunes that ever happened to the Liberal cause that any considerable portion of its defenders hav been drawn aside to the support of such an ignorant, coarse, illiterate, and unprincipled persecutor as Anthony Comstock, and the oppressive, unjust, and unconstitutional laws that he procured to be passed. Could all Liberals hav taken a clear view of the situation, and realized the fact that those laws were a covert attack upon their mental liberty and the right of free thought and free speech, and had united in a solid phalanx against the encroachments of the power of intolerance and oppression, they would hav done themselves far more honor than to divide their forces and a part of them kiss the hand raised to strike them to the earth.

But we hav said, perhaps, about all that duty requires us to say upon this subject, and we are well aware that many of our readers are weary of it. It has seemed to us a vital question, necessary to be met and discussed. We hav felt called upon to say much more than we should otherwise hav done by the course of misrepresentation and defamation which has been pursued towards us and the side to which we are attached. We hav endeavored to defend the rights of the people and the principles of liberty. We hav been more intent on being right than on being respectable. We would rather be falsely accused of defending immorality than be guilty of unresistingly surrendering the rights of American freemen. Morality and decency do not consist in being unfaithful to a righteous cause, nor in relinquishing the dearest rights and privileges of free men and women.

But now let us hav peace; let us bury the hatchet of discord and trust to time to set those right on the questions alluded to who hav been unable to take a clear view of the situation. One after another Liberals are becoming able to see the merits of the case and the misrepresentation that has been employed. In due time, we believe, nearly all will arrive at the truth, and be able to discard the effects of prejudice and timidity. Let us devoutly hope for this desirable consummation, and work in accord and concord in the promulgation of mental light, reason, and truth.

IF the editor of this paper is sent to prison for the dire offense of selling a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," the readers need indulge no fear that THE TRUTH SEEKER will not be continued. It will go on with increasing power and earnestness.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Sixteenth Letter.

A FEW REFLECTIONS.

ZION HIL, N. J., Dec. 9, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: I se by yure last paper that won week from tomorrow yu and 3 others ar to appeer before the kourt ov Skyler Kounty to anser to the egrejus offense ov seling the littel pamflet kalled "Kupid's Yokes." You'll remember perhaps that I sent for a kopy and I red it but I didn't se anything in it to send a man to prizon for riting or selling. I told yu it did not agree with my old vews, but that don't make any difference. I hav no speshal sekurity that my vews ar korrektin that subjekt eny more than others. Mr. Heywood ma be rite and I ma be rong, but if I am rite and he iz rong that iz no rezon why he shood be sent to prizon or bekauz he duz not agre with Mr. Abbot and Mr. Komstok. Sending peepel to prizon on akkount ov eny opinyun tha ma onestly hold iz vary danjerus biznes and as evrybody's opinyuns ar almost konstantly changing on sum subjekt or other it kan hardly be nown hoo iz safe. Evry person's vews differ in sum respekts from sum body else's and if it iz rite to send won to prizon for differing, why not send all, as all do differ in sumthing?

No, Mr. Editur, it iz about time that kind ov biznes waz stopt. I no it uzed to be karried on extensively a few hundred years ago, but it waz a mizerable praktis at best and it aut to go entirely out ov use. If our nashional and state kourts hav nothing better to do than to spend thare time and the peepel's munny to try persons for differense ov opinyun tha had better disband and get into sum better okkupashun; almost enything onerabel wood be better. Picking up skrap iron and old rags iz better than sending peepel to prizon for not thinking akkording to rule. The rite wa iz to let evry body hav the rite to think az to him seems best and let him hav the rite to giv expreshun to that thawt and not to send him to prizon for doing eether. Ov kourse a a man's kondukt shood be such az not to interfeer with the rites ov others, and if he duz enything to really injur others in property or person he aut to be duly punished by the kourts ov hiz state. I beleev az yu do that the United States kourts hav nothing to do with men's opinyuns or with the krimes which belong to the states to attend to. The general government shood punish thoze only hoo kommit offenses aganst the laws ov the United States, and never for opinyun.

I am reminded ov what my muther uzed often to sa, "This iz a da ov small things," and when I think ov it that yu and 3 others hav to leev yure homes and go 2 or 3 hundred miles and be prosekuted for selling that littel harmless pamflet it seems to me our kourts and our government ar dejenerating and really turning out to be pretty small potatoze. When we look around and se how much robery and swindling and steeling goes holy unpunished and how konfiding peepel ar robbed ov hundreds ov thouzands ov dollars ov thare hard ernings and savings by banks, insuranse kompanys, ralerode kompanys and other korporashuns that ar got up on purpus to cheet peepel out ov thare munny, and not the furst thing dun to punish the theevs and robbers, it seems that "Kupid's Yokes" mite be allowd to pas, for I don't beleev that it ever hurt a living sole.

Allow me to sa that I hope yu wil kum off litely at yure trial; that the juj and jury ma not be gover-nd by prejudis towards yu bekauz yu ar publishing an Infidel paper and Infidel books. I kant se why an Infidel haz not the same rite to publish hiz vews that a Kristyan haz to publish hiz. Nobody iz kompeld to reed them, nor to beleev them if he duz reed them. If we pretend to hav a free kuntry it aut to be az fre for wun klass ov thinkers az for another. It iz pretty hard to tel among all the vews that men entertain hoo iz rite and hoo iz not, and az I sed before no wun aut to be punished for what he thinks.

I shall watch yure kase with a grate deel ov interest, and if the peepel ov Skyler Kounty ar bigoted and prejudised enuf to seud yu to prizon I shall feel like leeving home and going over into yure state and sirkulating a petishun for yure governor to pardon yu. I no I wood take a petishun around here in this kounty if it wood be aksepted or do eny good. If yu do hav to go to prizon for a while I hope yure TRUTH SEEKER will go rite on the same az it duz now. I think yu told us wunse that such wood be the kase, that the paper wood not stop if yu were imprizond. I am glad if it wil be so. It iz possibel that letters and editorials from behind the bars wood be more effektiv than if written in yure offis.

I am sure meny thouzands wil watch yure kase with grate interest, for I juj yu hav a grate number ov reeders hoo feel a warm interest in yu and wil feel grate indignashun if yu ar sent tu prizon on such a pitifully smal provokashun. Kaptin Smith waz over here yesterday afternoon and we tawked konsiderably about yu and the kontests yu hav on hand. Ov kourse he thinks more ov the wurk yu ar engaged in than I do, tho I dont know az he thinks yu eny onester than I do, for I do giv yu the kredit ov bein onest and saing just what yu think. The Kaptin sez if tha do send yu and Bel and Mis Tilton to prizon on the charj on which yu ar arraned that it wil be wun ov the meenest akts that haz been kommited in this kuntry for a hundred yeers, and that it wil be a burning shame and aut to dam, in the estimashun ov all good men, not only our pretended kourts ov justis but our system ov religun as wel. He insists that yure opponents ar aktuated bi the same spirit ov hatred and persekution that haz governed the bigots and persekutors ov the church for a thouzand yeers. He sez that evry viktim that the church sent to the stake, the skaffold, or the dunjun, made it more and more odius and helped to dam it in the eyes ov an enlitened wurld, and that the same law wil wurk in the same wa now. He feels konfident that if yu and the uthers ar sent to prizon for such a trivial offense that such unreezonabul oppreshun wil do more to open the eyes ov the publik to the real motivs and the persekuting spirit ov the dominant system ov religun than enything that haz okkured for a jenerashun. If such a thing shood take plase I think the Kaptin wood almost fly off the handle, for he iz so fired up with indignashun that it wil take but littel to make it bust out into a konsuming flame. But he sez yure konvikshun and inkarserashun wood do good; it wood not only arouze a deep feeling among all yure friends, but wood sho to all obzerving peepel the intoleranse and oppresiv spirit that aktuates church adherents; and we both agreed that yu are not the man to let pass unimproved the opportunity to sho up this spirit to the wurld. We both hoped, however, that yu wood not be konvikted, but be aloud to return to yure home to pursu yure okkupashun in peese.

We also tawked sum time about your Boston frend, the editur ov The Index. The Kaptin sed he konsidered it wun ov the gratest misfortunes that haz okkured in the Liberal ranks for a kwarter ov a sentury that that editur haz taken the stand towards yu and all that ar opposed to the Komstok laws that he haz, and that he kood hav dun fu things that wil make him more unpopular with reely liberal-minded peepel. I saw he waz afrade that jelusy and envy had not a little to do with the kourse the man haz pursued from the start, intensifyd by a morbid desire for respektability and the approbashun ov high-toned peepel. The Kaptin sez respektability iz all wel enuf, and he hopes he ma never looze his self-respekt nor the respekt ov eny good man, woman, or child hoo nows him, but he insists that he wood rather part with the respekt ov evry person ov hiz akwantanse than to abandon the prinsepels ov rite and liberty. And when an editur or a stikler for respektability karrys hiz esteem for respektability so far az to make rite and oner subservient to it, he only shows that he iz not the proper man for leeder ov brave men and wimen. Respektability, which in its plase, iz ov kourse well enuf and always dezirabel, he holds, az yu see, holy subordinate to the grander prinsipels ov rite, liberty, truth, and oner. It iz not a star ov the first magnitude, and it iz a grate mistake to try to exalt it to that pozishun.

The Kaptin kontends that yu hav made an ernest struggle for the prinsipels ov human rite and personal liberty, and hopes yu ma sukseed in manetaning yure ground and in konvinsing others ov its korrektnes. He iz utterly oppozed to the governmental supervizuun ov morals or opinyuns, and insists that the imprizonment ov such men az Heywood for the konvikshuns he entertanes and attempts to promulgate iz a deep and damning disgrase upon our government, which kannot be wiped out. He sez in futyure decades and senturys the man most offishus or instrumental in bringing it about will be regarded with averzyun and abhorrense.

I tryd to defend the moral side ov the kwestyun, and to show him that vise and krime aut to be saut out and krushed out ov the land, and that we never kan hav a moral, virchuus kommunity so long az bad men ar allowd to korrupt the minds ov the yung and to spred thare vile moral poizon broadkast over the land; and I undertook to show him that it waz the duty ov government to look after the morals ov its subjekts and to protekt the rizing jenerashun. He wood not admit, however, that the inspektshun ov morals or opinyuns waz eny part ov the biznes ov the general government. Wrongs aganst sosiety and individuals he sez shood be duly punished by the states in which tha ar kommitted, and so long az we manetane state governments the jeneral government shood hav nothing to do with it.

The Kaptin kan rather outtawk me, and az he alwaze manajes to hav a good deel ov reezon and kommon sense on hiz side, he most alwaze gets the best of the argument, no matter hoom he talks with. I must konfess that when I get into a mental enkownter with him, I am not over positiv in the posishuns I take, for I hav learned by experiense that in most kases he kompels me to bak down or to aknolej the korrektness ov his vews. When I begin an argument with the Kaptin, it iz jenerally with the konvikshun that I will hav to agree with him before I get thru, and this iz not very hard to do, az he iz so fare and reezonable in his manner and langwij. I tell yu, I wish thare wer a grate menny more such men az Kaptin Smith. If thare wer no worse men than he in the kommunity, it wood hav but littel that iz bad in it. He tels me he has no desire to do rong to himself or to enybody else. If it kums in hiz wa to do a good deed to a fellow-man, and he kan do it without ronging himself, he takes plezure in doing it. If everybody akted upon that prinsipel this wood not be a very bad sort ov a world, and we wood not need menny Komstoks to bizzy themselvs at prying into our affares. But, unfortunately, thare are grate numbers ov peepel in the world—not az well-dispozed as our naber—hoo seem to be spending thare lives in trying to take advantaj ov thare fellow-men and to get sumthing for nothing—to get a living without erning it and make other peepel kontribute to thare support.

Wun duz not hav to look around a grate deel to se that this world seems to be made up on rong prinsipels and that thare iz a grate deel more ov the hog and dog nacher in men and wimmin than thare aut to be. Almost everybody iz super-selfish and iz alwaze trying to benefit himself at the expense ov uther peepel. The selfish kwality in man's nacher seems to be kultivated more than any uther kwality he possesses. It iz, ov kourse, good enuf in its plase, but it is to be regretted that it haz bekum to the extent it haz the kontroling influense among men. If we wood all try az hard to make thoze around us happy az we do to take advantaj ov them in neerly all the affares ov life, we kood produse a much better state ov sosiety than we now hav. But alas! the world iz far from being what it aut to be. With all the blessed relijun that men hav believed in, and all the grase that has been shed abroad over the erth, thare iz stil a very bad state ov happiness and morals existing, and I sumtimes wonder whether the grase of God and Jezus wil be suffishent to bring all mankind around to a state ov goodness and happiness. Menny doubts prevale in my mind; but stil I shal hope and pray on and not giv up to kiskurejment or dispare. The grase ov God is grate. Let us all hav a share in it.

Frend Smith sends hiz kind regards to yu, and hopes yu wil kum out of yure trubbels all rite. Suzan duz the same, and even my wife Sally sez she wood be sorry to heer that yu had been sent to prizon. Yu sertenly hav my best wishes. Yures trustfully,

JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Communications.

National Liberal League

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, 34 Bond Street, NEW YORK CITY.

The duty of preserving the rights and liberties that are guaranteed by the Constitution rests upon all citizens of the United States. Those who are most aware of the dangers that now threaten to destroy our rights and liberties by the practical union of Church and state, in enacting and enforcing sectarian laws, favoring one class of citizens, or some particular religious views, at the expense of others, in educating youth at the general charge in sectarian schools, in the support of sectarian institutions by public funds or lands, and in the almost uniform neglect of adequate protection of our citizens in their constitutional rights at home and their national rights in foreign countries, are uniting to put away these evils by forming The National Liberal League.

The N. L. L. is formed by the union of Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, and how to organize them is the object of this circular to explain.

Any person (man or woman) can place the following CALL at the head of a sheet of paper and solicit subscribers.

CALL.

WE, the undersigned citizens of ———, agree to organize an Auxiliary Liberal League, to work in connection with the National Liberal League, and to pay the sum set opposite our names for that purpose.

Names.	Residences.	Amounts.

PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

The following form of constitution is offered as a guide only. The National Liberal League does not dictate in this matter, nor require any pledges beyond the acceptance of the platform, or any one of its planks.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—The name of this association shall be "The Liberal League of ——, ——;" and we hereby declare ourselves to be a "local auxiliary Liberal League," in sympathy, fellowship, and affiliation with the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE II.—The objects of this association shall be, first, to co-operate with the National Liberal League in furtherance of the public objects, both general and specific, enumerated in its Constitution; and, secondly, to promote the welfare of our own members as a local Liberal society, as provided in this Constitution.

ARTICLE III.—Any person who shall sign this Constitution, and pay —— annually into the treasury, shall be a member of this League.

ARTICLE IV.—The officers of this League shall be a President, Secretary, Treasurer, and four Councillors. All these shall constitute the Board of Directors, which shall hav general management of the affairs of the League, subject only to instruction by the League itself.

ARTICLE V.—The duties of the President, Secretary, and Treasurer shall be those usually pertaining to these offices. It shall be a special duty of the Secretary to furnish the Secretary of the National Liberal League with a complete list of all the members, with their post-office addresses in full, and a list of the officers; and also to furnish him promptly with information of all important action by this League.

ARTICLE VI.—Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any regular meeting of the League by a three-fourths vote of all the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made unless the proposed amendment shall hav been announced as a part of the required notice of the meeting which is to act upon it.

ARTICLE VII.—Such committees shall be appointed as this League may decide upon by vote.

ARTICLE VIII.—All appropriations from the Treasury shall be by vote of the Board of Directors; and all orders on the treasury shall be signed by the president and Secretary.

As soon as ten persons hav subscribed, and five dollars paid in, make out an application for a CHARTER, inclosing it, with a money order for five dollars, to the Secretary of the N. L. L. The fee for a charter is ten dollars, and the Board of Directors hav voted to allow the getter-up of the auxiliary league to keep back five dollars for that work.

Any Liberal society can by a vote qualify itself as an auxiliary Liberal League, and take out a charter.

On receipt of the five dollars and application signed by the President and Secretary of the new League (and as many others as may choose) the Secretary will forward to the applicant a charter signed by the proper officers of the National Liberal League.

By order of the Board of Directors.

A. L. RAWSON, Sec. N. L. L.

34 Bond st., N. Y. City.

OFFICERS FOR THE YEAR 1878–1879.

PRESIDENT.

ELIZUR WRIGHT,	Boston, Mass

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

SAMUEL E. SEWALL,	Boston, Mass
NATHANIEL HOLMES,	St. Louis, Mo
HENRY BOOTH,	Chicago, Ill
PARKER PILLSBURY,	Concord, N. H
JAMES PARTON,	Newburyport, Mass
F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,	San Francisco, Cal
ABRAHAM PAYNE,	Providence, R. I
M. J. SAVAGE,	Boston, Mass
B. FELSENTHAL,	Chicago, Ill
W. H. SPENCER,	Sparta, Wis
SAMUEL L. HILL,	Florence, Mass
KARL HEINZEN,	Editor of Der Pioneer, Boston
HORACE SEAVER,	Editor of The Investigator, Boston
ISAAC M. WISE,	Editor of American Israelite, Cinn
D. M. BENNETT,	Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, N. York
MORITZ ELLINGER,	Editor of Jewish Times, New York
J. R. MONROE,	Editor Seymour Times, Seymour, Ind
ROBERT COLLYER,	Chicago, Ill
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,	Peoria, Ill
T. L. BROWN,	Binghamton, N. Y
R. S. MCCORMACK,	Franklin, Pa
F. W. EVANS,	Mt. Lebanon, N. Y
ELIZABETH THOMPSON,	New York City
AMY POST,	Rochester, N. Y
SALLIE HOLLEY,	Lottsburgh, Va
MRS. JAMES PARTON,	Newburyport, Mass
FRANCIS W. TITUS,	Battle Creek, Mich
J. H. W. TOOHEY,	Chelsea, Mass
CLARA NEYMAN,	New York City
HENRY DAMON,	Boston, Mass
STEPHEN BREWER,	Cortland, N. Y
T. B. WAKEMAN,	New York City
WILLIAM DENTON,	Wellesley, Mass

SECRETARY.

A. L. RAWSON,	34 Bond St., New York City

ASSISTANT-SECRETARY.

MRS. A. C. BRISTOL,	Vineland, N. J

TREASURER.

COURTLANDT PALMER,	117 East 21st St., New York City

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, A. L. RAWSON,
COURTLANDT PALMER, H. L. GREEN,
LUCY N. COLMAN.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Alabama,	J. H. HALEY, Selma
Arizona,	S. C. ROGERS, Charmingdale
Arkansas,	JOHN AHRENS, Monticello
California,	A. J. BOYER, San Francisco
Colorado,	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada
Connecticut,	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport
Dakota,	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton
Delaware,	JOSEPH D. GOELT, Greenville
District of Columbia,	W. H. BURR, Washington
Florida,	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprize
Georgia,	Dr. A. A. BELL, Madison
Illinois,	Dr. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg
Indiana,	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia
Iowa,	J. C. MICHENER, Adel
Kansas,	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott
Kentucky,	S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville
Louisiana,	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans
Maine,	W. H. BROWN, Bangor
Maryland,	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market
Massachusetts,	HENRY DAMON, Boston
Michigan,	CARL SCHMENANN, Detroit
Minnesota,	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis
Missouri,	L. T. WELLS, St. Louis
Montana,	LEE F. MARSTON, Bozeman
Nebraska,	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln
Nevada,	V. J. BORRETTE, White Rock
New Hampshire,	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester
New Jersey,	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic
New York,	H. L. GREEN, (Chairman), Salamanca
North Carolina,	J. W. THORNE, Warren
Ohio,	E. D. STARK, Cleveland
Oregon,	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin
Pennsylvania,	G. W. BALDWIN, Linesville
Rhode Island,	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence
South Carolina,	B. DORSCHER, Charleston
Tennessee,	E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga
Texas,	J. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville
Utah,	W. WALKER, Farmington
Vermont,	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington
Virginia,	S. SPALDING, Norfolk
Washington Ter.,	J. STRAIGHT, Walla Walla
West Virginia,	A. M. DENT, Weston
Wisconsin,	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee
Wyoming,	L. T. WILCOX, Laramie City

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

LUCY N. COLMAN,	99½ Gifford St., Syracuse, N. Y.
FRANK RIVERS,	23 School St., Boston, Mass
J. S. VERITY,	Boston, Mass

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

LEAH AND RACHEL.

The history of these two mothers in Israel opens in Genesis xxix, and includes a continuation of the career of Jacob, whose wives these two young lady sisters became in the short space of one week. Here was a double honeymoon not to be scouted at by any modern Mormon.

But to the story. It will be remembered that, in our last story, Jacob was sent by his mother Rebekah to Laban, her brother, when she feared the life of Jacob at the hands of his brother Esau, after the deception had been practiced upon him by herself and her too willing son.

This unjustifiable outrage upon his innocent and unoffending brother did not prevent the Lord from meeting Jacob on his journey, and in a dream showing him a ladder which reached from earth to heaven, angels of God ascending and descending on it, the Lord himself standing on the top round, or above it, and saying to this holy young man, "I am the Lord God of thy father Abraham, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it and thy seed . . . and behold I am with thee, and will keep thee."

Thus blessed and refreshed, Jacob vowed a vow, built an altar, (after he had fairly awaked), and went on his journey with a happy heart, soon came to a well where Rachel, his uncle Laban's daughter, came with the sheep. No sooner did Jacob ascertain, from a bystander, who she was than he very gallantly "rolled the stone from the well's mouth, and watered the flock of Laban his mother's brother. And Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice and wept."

Whether Jabob wept because his pretty cousin slapped him in the face for taking such liberties with a stranger we are not informed; but as the record states that he told her that he was her father's brother (which he was not, but her father's sister's son), we may presume that such was the case, and he thought it best to introduce himself at once to save his reputation.

Laban has highly delighted to see his sister Rebekah's son, kissed him, and brought him unto the house, etc., as you will learn by reading chapter xxviii.

The reader may suppose he is well acquainted with the Bible, but he is earnestly requested to refresh his memory with a reperusal of this story in the sacred book.

Now Laban had another daughter, Leah, who was the elder; but "Leah was tender-eyed, while Rachel, the younger, was beautiful and well favored," and as young Jacob had fallen in love with her at first sight at the well he told old Laban, when he bargained with him for wages, that he would serve him seven years for Rachel, and the daughter-seller accepted the proposal for wife-flesh with alacrity. "And Jacob served seven years for Rachel, and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her." Pretty strong love that. But Uncle Laban was not quite so fair in his trade as his nephew had supposed. Knowing that "tender-eyed" Leah would not be salable property in the matrimonial market, he conceived the idea of substituting Leah for Rachel, and may be supposed to have reasoned thus: Now, if I let Jacob take beautiful Rachel, what am I ever to do with her homely elder sister, Leah? Shall I not always have her, an old maid, on my hands? Jacob loves Rachel so well he will serve another seven years for her if I put Leah in her sister's place? Besides, I shall secure fourteen years' wages. I'll do it!

And so "it came to pass that, in the morning, behold, it was Leah." Judge of Jacob's disappointment and chagrin! He called the old rascal to account for his deception; but he excused himself by pleading that it was not the fashion in their country to give the younger before the first-born, and for a consolation told him he might yet have Rachel if he would serve another seven years, but he need not wait the seven years for her, but might work one week as security. Jacob agreed, and at the end of the week "went in also unto Rachel, and he loved also Rachel more than Leah, and served with him yet other seven years."

Now it does not appear that these girls had one word to say in this matter, but were bargained off by the father like cattle without consultation or consent; and whatever may have been Rachel's feelings when her father supplanted herself with Leah, was of no manner of consequence, her affections were not to be taken into consideration, neither were Leah's, thus to be bartered off like a lame animal, deceiving the purchaser, who would not have bought had he known the value of the stock. And yet our Christian friends have the audacity to inform us that woman owes her present elevation and privileges to the Bible and religious influences arising from its teachings. I deny the assumption, and will prove from and by the book that its whole tendency is to degrade woman and give her an inferior position, ranking her even among the cattle, as in the tenth commandment. Where is there one word of condemnation in the whole book against polygamy or those relations sustained by Abraham, Jacob, Lot, David, Solomon, and the holy men and kings of the Bible. They were even blessed of God and provided with numerous wives by God, for we read, "I (Lord God of Israel) gave thee thy master's wives into thy bosom, . . . and if that had been too little, I would have given thee such and such things" (2 Sam. xii, 8); that is, God declares he would have given "David the man after his own heart," more wives, if those he had of his master's, Saul, had been too little or few, but he (David) had done wrong to kill a man for his wife (Bathsheba), but there was no wrong in a multiplicity of women, be they wives or be they concubines, the only wrong being in taking another man's "little ewe lamb out of his bosom."

But to return (chap. xxix, verse 31). It is unfit for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Suffice to say, when the Lord saw that Leah was hated, he gave her children as a compensation for the loss of her husband, and she became the mother of four boys in rapid succession, giving God all the praise. But Rachel, though loved by Jacob so fervently, had no family, and, instead of appealing to the Lord, like her elder sister Leah, she flies to Jacob, in a fit of envious jealousy, and accuses him of being the cause. Jacob gets very angry, pleads not guilty, and charges the effect upon the Lord. "Am I in God's stead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of thy womb?" retorted this loving husband. This well might be termed a family quarrel on a private matter. So Rachel, envious at her sister's fruitfulness, and in despair as to herself, to mend the difficulty, like Jacob's old grandma, Sarah, gives Jacob "Bilhah, her handmaid, to wife," who bore Jacob two sons, which caused Rachel to declare, "God hath judged me, and hath also heard my voice, and hath given me a son. . . . With great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and I have prevailed." Leah, determining not to be outdone by Rachel, and despairing of more children of herself, then "took Zilpah, her maid, and gave her to Jacob to wife."

Jacob seems to have borne this infliction of double concubinage with the same stoical firmness and patience that he did the former penalty of double wifery, having now four women at the same time; though it appears domestic harmony was never known in this polygamous family. These two jealous sister-wives were always in a muss about Jacob, and it does seem a great pity that they could not each have had a separate and whole man. In chap. xxx, verse 14, another terrible quarrel is recorded, just because Rachel asks Leah, "Give me, I pray thee, of thy son's mandrakes." Leah gets furious, and tauntingly sneers, "Is it a small matter that thou hast taken my husband? And wouldst thou take away my son's mandrakes also?" Now came Rachel's turn to recriminate, for she appears to have suspected the use to which the mandrakes were to be put by Leah. "Therefore, he shall lie with thee to-night for thy son's mandrakes," she blurted out. When Leah saw Jacob coming from the field, she got the start of poor Rachel; for it appears, as well as Jacob loved Rachel, he loved mandrakes better. Rachel without mandrakes, though loved, was no match for Leah with mandrakes, though hated; for when Leah, with the mandrakes in her hands, met the holy patriarch, Jacob—he who was to be "the Israel of God"—when she met him, coaxingly saying, "Thou must come in unto me; for surely I have hired thee with my son's mandrakes," he could not resist her or her mandrakes, though lovely Rachel stood pouting and fretting hard by—"for he lay with her that night." Who will argue the power of love over the palate when such a fact as this is recorded under plenary inspiration! Leah was well rewarded for her perseverance by "God hearkening unto her, and bearing to Jacob a fifth son," a sixth son, and a daughter Dinah.

Thus did these two holy women quarrel, and thus did they become the mothers of the twelve patriarchs (assisted by the two handmaids, who were each the mother of two boys); for in process of time the Lord attended to poor Rachel's case, "hearkened to her, and——" (unfit for THE TRUTH SEEKER) gave her two boys, Joseph and Benjamin.

What an example of ancient Mormonism is this! Women considered themselves of no value but to become the mothers of boys. Sarah, Rebekah, and Rachel were particularly unfortunate in this direction, being a barren lot, and not fit for productive purposes till doctored by the Lord; a miracle being wrought in the case of each of these women, that God might raise up to himself a peculiar (?) people—the Hebrew nation; and through these godly women it must come. Also the Messiah was to descend in this line; but, strange to say, the tribe of Judah was from the issue of the hated Leah instead of the beloved Rachel. What a picture is this! In what other book would it be tolerated? Is it not ridiculous to place such reading in the hands of youth in our public schools? What lessons of immorality and false opinions in regard to women are here taught to young men! Two sisters contending for an amative embrace from the one husband, and the one who succeeds hiring him with something good to eat! What a false estimate is thus placed upon woman in this nineteenth century, when these two Jewish wives are set up as examples for the wives of the present generation!

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Letters from Friends.

WEBSTER, MASS., Dec. 7, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: My TRUTH SEEKER bearing date of Dec. 7th is just received, and I hav read Mrs. Elmina Slenker's hearty appeal in behalf of our poor brother Hacker. I thank her over and over again for her kindness. May heaven bless her for every word and line, and may she never, never be obliged to realize, by personal experience, so much of the cold side of life as our needy brother does at the present time. Some time ago my husband wrote to the Boston Investigator, asking its patrons to help Mr. Hacker liv through the present cold winter. A very few good friends responded to his call, and that same few are entire strangers to both Mr. Hacker and us. I trust they will forgiv me if I publish their names in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Miss Ella Gibson gave five dollars; Mr. M. Reiman, 49 Murray street, New York, gave three dollars; Ruth Brattell, of Rochester, gave fifty cents and many kind words; a lady in Massachusetts gave one dollar. To these kind friends I tender my most sincere thanks, and may they always hav enough and some to spare, and an abundance of kind friends on their right and their left. I know too well what pinching want means, for I was poverty's child. I did not happen to meet with any D. R. Burt or J. Hacker to take me to their home and care for me. But I was young, and toughed it through some way. Mr. Hacker and wife are both feeble and old, and their weight of years is more than they can well bear alone; so, friends, do giv them a kind thought—write to them, and, as Mrs. Slenker says, let us band together and pledge weekly or monthly installments. My husband and I will each giv ten cents a month, and will pay ten months in advance. We will send it direct to him now.

In conclusion, let me say to the Liberals of THE TRUTH SEEKER family that, however far apart our paths may lie, the way is open now for us to join heart and hand in a most noble mission. And to those dear, good friends who hav already helped him, may prosperity ever attend them, and they may rest assured that I appreciate and accept their kindness as a favor done to myself.

Very truly yours, MARGARET FLINT.

[We cordially indorse what Mrs. Flint and Mrs. Slenker hav said in favor of our aged and needy brother, and we hope all who are able to send him little articles to make him comfortable in the evening of his life will not fail to do so. We shall send a few dollars' worth of books for him to sell and to use the proceeds as his needs dictate. A friend unites with us and sends some clothing.—ED. T. S.]

A PEEP INTO THE LIBERAL CAMP FROM AN UNCULTURED STANDPOINT.

NOBLE, KAN., Nov., 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I was in hope before the Syracuse Congress that there would be a fusion between the modifiers and repealers of the Liberal League, and that they would come out of the Congress one and indivisible, for I considered that essential to success. But, to my surprise and dismay, I saw it was not the case. The repealers certainly did all in their power to attain that desirable end. In leaving the Comstock laws until 1879, after being conscious of having strength enough to carry them overboard (where they belong), it was magnanimous on their part. I see the purists were not satisfied with that concession, for when they failed to elect the man of their choice they withdrew and got up a little concern of their own. Now, if this is Liberalism, what is illiberalism? Mr. Abbot has done much good work in the Liberal vineyard, but he has also shown that he was not qualified to be the leader of a new political movement. The leader of such a movement should be a good judge of human nature, and also a close observer of the signs of the times. He must be willing to win small battles before great victories. When that petition was first circulated it did not emanate from the President of the League (some hav said that was the original sin). It not only made an appeal to the members of the League, but as it was plain that individual rights had been trampled upon by Congress, it made an appeal to all friends of those rights. Some signed it who had but very little sympathy with the Liberal League, still they were willing to grant to others the privileges which they wanted for themselves—the right of expression of opinions and the right to circulate them through the mails. If Mr. Abbot had been a leader, he would hav seen the importance of the movement; he would hav seen it was a grand opportunity for the Liberals of America to become a power in the land; he would hav seen the disintegration of the old political parties; he would hav known that there are thousands of voters who are tired of voting for shallow politicians; he would hav known that when organized hypocrisy exists in a state it is only a few steps from the Liberalism; he would hav known that there is a vast semi-Liberal element which is only waiting for a little victory on our part to join our ranks; and even if he thought those laws could be made constitutional, if he had been a leader he would hav said, "Let them be repealed," and to-day the Liberal League would be a power in the land. Many weak-kneed newspapers which assail us to-day would remain silent, or gurgle forth the milk of human kindness in our behalf. Many Auxiliary Leagues would hav been started where nothing but hypocrisy, prudery, and puritanism will flourish. Instead of that he said, "Stop! you are going in the Tartarus of obscenity." From my uncultured standpoint I thought it meant, "It is better to let one of your generals go and perish in a prison; it is better to let Congress transcend its own powers; it is better to make falsifications; it is better to let a man defile with his slimy fingers the sacredness of private correspondence, and to destroy the last vestige of private liberty; but for God's sake, my friends, it is better that all these be done so you only save the appearance of decency." And I said in my own heart, O decency, how many crimes hav already been committed in thy name! The Index man has been defending that course ever since.

One very pleasing argument which he has advanced is when he says, "By denying Congress the power to legislate upon that question it would be limiting the power of the people." He fails to see that the powers of Congress are limited by the Constitution. We don't send tyrants to Congress; we send men there to make constitutional laws only. When Congress has power to punish treason and counterfeiting, it is simply because those crimes may destroy or affect the life of the nation, while so-called obscenity can only destroy the peace of the individual, and that belongs to the states to punish. Our Constitution was instituted to foster justice, and not tyranny. A crime cannot take place unless some one has sustained an injury. When two individuals circulate through the mails literature which they want, and which might look obscene to folks of exquisite purity, it cannot be a crime under any sense of justice, because no one has been injured. But the purist will say those men may send some literature which I do not approve of to my little daughter. Well, my good men, you find those men, and if you can prove it has been a detriment to your little girl you can hav them punished. Then the extra pure will say, I may not be able to find them. Do we know who comes and steals our horses in our stables? Do we know who steals our pocketbook? Do we always know who slanders us? And are we going to compel every man to giv a pledge of honor when he crosses the street, because thieves travel on them? And because we may be slandered are we going to compel a man to show that he belongs to the Knights of the Garter of Purity before we allow him to speak? If this is called individual liberty, I am prepared to try my luck in Russia.

I need not extend any further upon this subject, for Mr. T. B. Wakeman and others hav already handled it in a masterly manner.

I wish we could become united. There are not enough Liberals in America to form two separate camps. I hope that the minority will see they hav made a mistake, and that by next year we will all be one again. Then, with such an honorable and fearless leader as Mr. Wright, we can move ahead and plant the torch of light in the temple of liberty.

JOSEPH LE CLERC.

P. S.—I send you one dollar to help defend your case at Watkins. J. L. C.

THE BIBLE OF BIBLES.

WEBSTER, IND., Dec. 2, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav just finished a careful reading of Mr. K. Graves' new book, entitled "The Bible of Bibles." This is another wonderful book, another astonishing production from the pen of Mr. Graves, another deadly battery planted in the field of orthodoxy. I am absolutely amazed when I behold the mighty work effected by this book and the manner in which it is done. Of all the books ever published exposing the errors, evils, and absurdities of our false theology, this book certainly takes the lead. I am familiar with all the principal Liberal works that hav been published, and I confess "The Bible of Bibles" excels them all in the way of exposing and exploding popular theological errors. The complete wreck and ruin it makes of old theology is really astounding. The overwhelming amount of facts and arguments which it wields against the whole list of popular dogmas excels everything I hav ever read. The laborious researches of Mr. Graves into ancient history hav arrayed against our modern Christianity such a battery of logical needle-guns that not one Christian dogma or superstition escapes utter demolition. In fact, the book is a complete armory of weapons against our false religion that every lover of truth should hav. It explodes its ten thousand errors into fragments. No Liberalist should fail to secure a copy immediately, and it is just the thing for a Liberal club, and no one should be without it. It is worth three times its price. No work of a Liberal class ever equaled it. I consider Mr. Graves the greatest theological writer of the age. He makes thorough work in demolishing the temple of old theology. He leaves not one stone upon another. The reader's astonishment will be excited a hundred times to the highest pitch on reading it, and when he gets through and looks back at what he has read, and views the vast field he has gone over, he will be struck with amazement. Never before has the subject been so thoroughly and completely handled in all its details. "The Bible of Bibles" is a complete library in itself. It casts all other Liberal works in the shade in the thorough manner in which it analyzes and pulverizes the whole list of errors, evils, and absurdities in the orthodox creed. Again let me urge every Liberalist and lover of truth to procure a copy at once. He or she will never regret it. It is true that times are hard and money difficult to obtain, but by the use of a little economy or a little sacrifice any one can obtain this great theological work—one of the most valuable acquisitions to our Liberal literature, a masterpiece of logic, and a theological battering-ram. Any person who will procure Mr. Graves' three works will hav a complete library of Liberal works.

Yours for the triumph of truth, THOS. HARVEY.

DETROIT, MICH., Nov. 26, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The tag on my paper indicates that it has expired, although I had thought its life would continue until the 18th of January, 1879. I therefore send you twenty-five cents, if peradventure that will giv it breath until New Year's shall again greet me. Until then I will consider whether I shall further infuse life for another year. It is no use to keep repeating a story that I fear will hav just cause for such action for many days to come. Manfully will I meet the condition of things and govern myself accordingly. Rome was not built in a day, and I do not expect in my short life to see half the expectations of my soul satisfied. I see the great need of very many things to be accomplished, but I feel but an insignificant force for their consummation. Younger, stronger, and abler men must do the work and enjoy the fruits of realization. I must be satisfied with a hope only.

Bidding good speed to the right, the true, and the noble, I am ever, Yours, BENJ. F. STAURM.

[We hope our friend will continue to patronize us. Our expenses are so heavy that we need the aid of every friend and patron.—ED. T. S.]

MEDICINE LODGE, KAN., Oct. 1, 1878.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find fifteen cents for "Cupid's Yokes," which you will please send at your earliest convenience, as I am very anxious to see what the devil's agent has done to cause our Christian friends to hold up their hands in holy horror and cry out, "crucify him."

I am sorry to say I am alone (excepting one man) with my Infidelity in this far-off corner of civilization, but I am surrounded with plenty of godly people, as a little circumstance which I will relate will prove. It chanced a family of emigrants lately moved into this vicinity and some three or four of the family were suddenly taken sick, consequently there were not enough well ones to take care of the others. It also chanced that my Infidel friend referred to was the first to learn that they needed help. For several days and nights both himself and wife were with them, doing all the good they could, so to get some rest. This unbeliever went to town (one mile distant) to get some one to take their places, but not one of those church-going Christian people could be induced to giv a helping hand. To end my story; one of the family died (a young lady), the preacher came, and so did all the congregation, and to see their solemn faces and black crape you would hav thought they were burying a near relative. The groans and amens that went up from these very pious people at the grave were truly heartrending. Plenty of pious people to bury her, but one—an Infidel—to help her while living.

Excuse this lingo, and consign it to whatever place you like, but don't forget "Cupid's Yokes." Yours, etc.,

SAM SAWYER.

PALMYRA, N. Y., Nov. 26, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I forward a set of resolutions. Nearly all were at first in full accord with them. A few who had not read Mr. Wakeman's argument were satisfied to vote with us, after hearing Mr. Frothingham's honest letter to Mr. Wakeman. I shall within a few days forward something for the Defense Fund, and, if I can get the money, for some documents for circulation. Farewell till then, and all success attend you. HENRY M. NORTH.

BLACK HAWK, Col., Nov. 8, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find $1, which I send for the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion." I do not take your paper, but hav been reading it for some time, and would subscribe for it now, but am going to move from here; but as soon as settled will send for it, as I think it is one of the most sensible papers that I ever read. I was reared among Christians, and took the Bible as granted until I became old enough to reason with myself about such things, then I began to see that I did not believe the Bible, although there are some of the best teachings it we hav ever had if they had not been confounded with other teachings that are not only bad but devoid of either reason or justice. Why I should be condemned for sins done by my parents even before I was born is a thing beyond my comprehension; or how a good deed can come out of evil-doing. The more I read the Bible, the less I believe. There is another thing I never could see through, even when I was quite young; I hav thought about it, it is, why (taking the book itself for proof) we hav better proof that Christ was not the Son of God than that he was, for it says the wise men were among the Jews. If so, are we to believe wise men or superstitious fools? Why is it that God—an all-wise, all-just being—will condemn man, when man, so much his inferior, would not, and has more reason of justice than to condemn his fellow-man for the same? I think it is time to do away with superstitious fears and teach a religion within the bounds of man's knowledge and reasoning powers. When we learn to be honorable between ourselves and our fellow-man we will stand a better chance to get to heaven (if there is such a place) than we will to listen to the teachings and following the examples set by the most of our ministers of to-day. Yours with respect,

WM. H. PELHAM.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Nov. 23, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: I see by the T. S. that Miss Ella E. Gibson is wishing for an opportunity to deliver a course of Liberal lectures the coming winter and only asks a situation where she can barely make her board and expenses.

Where is the Rev. who would work thus cheaply for Jesus and the salvation of his brother, man, from an eternal hell. I hav just been re-reading Miss Gibson's excellent speech at the Watkins Convention, "Have we a Right to Criticise Jesus," and I only wish with all my heart that there was an opening for her here in Snowville. We should rejoice to board her gratituously, knowing her society would be a full equivalent. But, alas! There are not half a dozen men and women in all the place who would dare to go to an Infidel lecture. Hardly more than that number came to hear Mr. J. M. Barnes, though they had pledged him not to mention the forbidden subject. In small places like this where there is but one church and she has all power, she becomes so arrogant and aggressive that the Pope himself hardly draws a tighter reign on his victims. But surely there are large towns with thousands of inhabitants, and many churches, and consequently a variety of beliefs, where some generous Liberal family could giv Miss Ella a home and thus do a glorious and good work for our dearly beloved cause. Those who cannot work in one way should aim to do it in another. We can all do something. Our good speakers ought not to remain idle when they are so much needed and work so cheaply, Thine in hope, ELMINA D. SLENKER.

HINSDALE, MASS., Nov, 23, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I see that you are advertised for a trial for a breach of the law. I am rather too poor to contribute to the Defense Fund, but perhaps it would be well for me to pay up for the paper, hoping that you will be more cautious in the future in regard to your sins and transgressions. Now, I am not an Infidel in any sense of the word as I understand it, but I do admire the expressions and writings of many of your correspondents, who I consider must be the world's best workers for humanity, and it matters not to me what people believe as long as they do unto others as they would that others would do unto them. All Infidels are not Liberals, or a brother, because you printed some Spiritualistic matter, would not hav said, "Stop my paper," because to him you hav polluted it. I was reminded of a lady of the "upper-ten-dom," whose name was very familiar to me when a lad, and to you, also, Mr. Editor. At one of her parties she remarked that she wished there could be a department in heaven where the better classes could associate together. This was in the day of candles, and one evening she rang the bell for the servant, who soon appeared, and the command was given:

"Take those amputators and top the most superfluous part of those luminaries."

"What, marm?" said the servant.

The hifalutin command was given again, and the same "What, marm?" was again repeated, which brought the response.

"Snuff the candles, you brat."

Now, Bro. Bennett, I saw you once a few minutes, and possibly I may again. One brother remarked that if he did not see you here he thought it very doubtful if he should ever hereafter; now, if he, you, or I, or the brother that said, "Stop my paper," or Bro. Davis, Bro. Edmonds, or Sister Slenker should never meet over there, it would be no evidence in the least, to my mind, but that we would all be there.

Please find two dollars inclosed, and pass the same to my account. Devoutly yours for truth and endless progression,

L. P. Brague.

Snowville, Va., Oct. 17, 1878.

Dear Friend Bennett: I am greatly disturbed and grieved that we hav so many conflicts between our editors, and between nearly all our best and noblest champions of Freethought.

It seems sometimes as if every editor was determined to hav some other one by the ears, so as to hav a chance to display his pugnacity and rancor. And the partisans of each then take up the cudgels in defense of their pet leaders, and a general melee is the result. Why can we not "agree to disagree?" Why not discuss all differences of opinion in a kind, liberal, frank, generous manner? Let each one state his views and back them up by the best arguments he can, and dispense with personalities and recriminations. Let each one show up the fallacies in the arguments of his opponent, but do it in the spirit of love, charity, and inquiry. Oh, I do so long for the spirit of peace, harmony, and union amongst us. We cannot expect to all think alike or to all agree upon ways and means, as long as our platform is the widest in the whole world—as long as we hav such a vast congregation of all shades of opinion, and giv to each and all equal and full liberty to speak and be heard. But we can cultivate a sentiment of loving, kindly toleration and forbearance towards those who are unable to think as we think. We hav a great number of the best Liberal papers the world has ever known, and I love every one of them, and value every worker in the field of Freethought as a personal friend, and admire all of them for their efforts for the good of humanity, but I do regret that any one of us should do or say an unkind thing to a brother or sister worker. If we are wrong we should each one of us be glad to be set right. If we advance an opinion that is erronous we should be grateful to any one who proves it to be so, but we want the refutation to be done in a kind, charitable and courteous spirit.

I admire the letter of Lucy Colman in Truth Seeker of Oct. 12. It is a noble production. She evinces a strong determined will to do right and shows a just and righteous indignation at the way she has been treated by those whom she loved, trusted, and admired. She is not bitter or sarcastic, only grieved and hurt, but still resolves to go on in her labors for the real good of all. With her I too say, "I am for Freethought without limitation, always spoken openly and with honesty." I was truly glad to see James Parton come out so plainly for the repeal of the Comstock laws, and the article on "Beliefs and Disbeliefs," shows that many of our most cultured writers and thinkers are Liberals. D. W. Hull on "Moral Disease" has probed a subject that has long needed public discussion and the advanced light of the age thrown upon it. So many helpless unfortunates are cruelly punished and even robbed of life for what they could not help, what was a disease and not a crime. I missed "Deacon Skidmore," but of course prominence must now be given to the matters concerning the Liberal League Congress and I do hope and trust the next one may be a meeting of good spirits and true, and that love and good will may pervade its councils. Thine truly,

Elmina Drake Slenker.

Macomb, Ill, Nov. 25, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: After a lapse of some time I feel to write you again, hoping to giv you a few words of encouragement in the noble work in which you are engaged. While I have deprecated the war of words and sentiments between The Index and The Truth Seeker I cannot but feel that a sense of truth and justice is on your side. I believe, and I think I know and can truthfully represent that the feelings of the Liberals of the West and North are in accord with mine, that if we cannot agree on the minor points of difference, we should at least not be against. If we cannot be for anyone who gets into trouble while working for the great end, viz., the entire separation of church and state, to the end that we shall not even be ostracized socially because we cannot see things theolgically, as our more credulous neighbor does. Our worthy brother of The Index should hav been, in reference to your's, Heywood's and others' troubles, more as the Illinois volunteer just before he entered the battle of Buena Vista prayed God to be (it was his first attempt). He said, "Oh Lord! be for us if you can; but if you cannot, do not be against us, but lay low and keep shady and you will see the d—dst fight you ever seen." The Index, and those who are so earnest to excuse the action of the minority, to the extent that they misrepresent the motives and sentiments of those who signed your petition for the repeal of the Comstock laws do the Liberals, especially of the West and North, great injustice when they designate them as "dealers in obscene literature; and Freelovers," and bear in mind that we consist of no inconsiderable number, and that if all the petitions were like those from this section, the business connection accompanied the name—merchants, physicians, lawyers, farmers, mechanics, etc., and all of good standing and reputation, and most of them married men with sons and daughters. One of our towns furnished more names to the petition than any other town or city in the Union—a town noted for its sobriety, for its obedience to law and order, and last, but not least, for its humanity. Not a place that could furnish the material for even one of the Rev. Talmage's sensational "varieties." Seventy thousand petitioners! Why the West and North alone could, and were it to do over would, send five hundred thousand names calling for repeal. Neither are we "dealers in obscenity," and as for Freelovism we (save our respected editor of the Seymour Times—Doctor Monroe of whom and whose ability we are a great admirer), know but little of its teachings, and certainly, we find him (at least when he has the spleen), advocating the action of the "bolters" and surely his proclimation smacks somewhat of Freelove, inasmuch as he wants us to walk nine miles, and support from seven to nineteen if they are good looking, and the partners of our bosom, etc. But then we will forgive the Doctor if he will render due honor to Josephine S. Tilton (and we know he will for he is too kind of heart to do otherwise). We do not know her, neither hav we seen or read "Cupid's Yokes," nor is it material to the issue. It is her nobleness and boldness in resisting the persecution underlying the actions of Anthony Comstock and embodying the principles of the Church in and under the name of the Y. M. C. A., that we admire. It cannot be a very bad book or Elizur Wright, the old wheel-horse of human and social reform and advancement would not read and retain it in his possession. Will the President release Heywood? I venture the assertion, without fear of successful contradiction, that many more than seventy thousand Liberals heartily hope that the mission to Washington of the kind-hearted Laura Kendrick may be crowned with success.

I am pleased that you announce in your last that B. F. Underwood has had the fairness to denounce the infamy of styling the repealers "venders of obscenity." He knows it to be an unjust epithet, and it enhances the already growing high regard that we of the West hav for his ability and highly cultivated reasoning powers. I had the pleasure of listening to some of his ablest addresses at the Freethought Convention held at La Hare, Ill., Nov. 8th, 9th, and 10th, and we feel that he is an able worker in the "common cause." In a conversation with him relative to the Syracuse disagreement, he said that he "had not withdrawn from the old League, but was a member of both, and that it was his most earnest wish that they reunite before the end of a year, and if not that they at least work harmoniously on the main issue." Wm. F. Jamieson, one of the ablest lecturers of the West and North, in our cause, was present at the Convention, and expressed himself in the same conciliatory mood. Bro. Jamieson is dealing sturdy blows on the strongholds of theology, while he deprecates the unseasonable warfare of the Eastern Liberals among themselves. Now is the time that all our forces should be concentrated in opposition to the waning powers of "theological superstition." They see "the handwriting on the wall," and are marshaling their forces for the contest, making breastworks of all bickerings among ourselves. They mean business.

One of the noted divines of the West said lately in one of his discourses, "That the Christians (so-called) should hav a Christian ticket in all elections from President down." Let them make a success in that, then would we hav their God, whether we would or no, embodied in the Constitution, if their commission for the revision of the Bible can decide which god it is.

A. B. Cole of Macomb, Ill., the talented lawyer and orator, delivered one of his course of lectures—Superstitious Follies, at the La Harpe Convention, and the interest with which it was listened to, and satisfaction expressed as to its merits, warrants me in saying that its deep research as to the authenticity of the Bible; its total exposition of their Mt. Sinai manuscript; its expose of the dire necessity to which the "bread and butter brigade" are reduced to bolster up their waning hold upon the credulity of the masses; its pert exposition of the fall of the first pair in Eden's bower; its review of the Bible lusts, rapines, murders, and its 'thus saith the lord' (with a little l,) are herculean blows calculated to set both man and woman to reading and thinking for themselves instead of hiring others for that purpose, and all Liberals should be glad to know and be more than willing to encourage those who hav the courage and boldness to beard the theologian in his stronghold, knowing that they will all unite to ostracise him—Catholic and Protestant alike. In conclusion I will say, that it is my humble opinion, that if Abbot & Co., will not let you alone you can further your own and the interest of the cause, by letting his shafts pass unnoticed, for rest assured that the sturdy Liberals of this whole country are not going to be governed by any bolting clique, or any other clique, but simply by their own honest convictions in this unequal fight between "The Gods and Humanity."

"With malice toward none, but with charity for all," I subscribe myself. Yours respectfully, T. L. Kendrick

---

Canesville, Wis., Dec. 2, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I wish to announce in the columns of your most liberal of all papers, that I am prepared to giv Liberal Lectures in any place or before any society within a reasonable distance from home, and would like my name and address permanently added to your list of lectures. I hav had experience in the past as a public speaker, and feel myself competent to address the Liberal public upon such topics as I choose to discuss. My terms are moderate.

And now a word of fraternal greeting to you who so bravely meet freedom's foes, not only in the ranks of orthodoxy, but among professed and cultured Liberals. Let me assure you that all over the prairie lands of our broad western country beat thousands of strong and true souls in full accord with the expansive and free Liberalism that distinguishes you and your co-workers from the "obscenity" and Comstock Liberals. And in the trial that the brave and independent trio of Freethought advocates are soon to pass remember that all our hands reach out to you in cordial, sympathetic clasp, while our hearts breathe the fervent wish that victory shall be on the side of the champions of freedom of thought, speech, and press, which means a free humanity. Thine for the right,

Elvira Wheelock.

Adrian, Mich., Nov. 28, 1878.

Friend D. M. Bennett: As I hav just finished reading Judge Hurlbut's Address in the last Truth Seeker, I must say that I was rather surprised to find that a man of such mental attainments as some parts of his address betrays, should use it in fighting a ghost of his own creating. As his Honor asks the charity of his audience on account of his age and infirmities (to begin with), in case he should stumble under the weight of its importance, he hoped they might giv him credit at least for good intentions, which he tells us is considered by some as not a mean order of talent. If the honorable judge had thought of this when he was holding Mr. Heywood up to his audience as a fool, and his little book as a pole-cat, it would hav been a trait of good sense in him. He seems to be terribly afraid of "Cupid's Yokes," as tending to lead the race back to the ape-like man, or rather, as he would say, to the man-like ape. I would not wish to intimate ape to the honorable judge, but I can't help but feel that this sounds a little apish to me. To be sure there are some parts of the little book that I could not approve of, so there are many parts of the Bible that I cannot approve of, as well as much obscene and vulgar in that old religious text-book that has kept the race back, ape-like, to a greater extent than all the "Cupid's Yokes" ever can, though they were spread over the land as thick as the autumn leaves, and for this reason I never encouraged the reading of it in my family.

The honorable judge tells us that when he was young he wrote a work in which he maintained the legal right of a man to be a fool. Of course this was sound logic, because it is a plain case, he had no choice in his creation. But I would like to ask his Honor this question, From his moral standpoint, has a man and woman the right to join together in legal marriage and giv parentage to fools?

We will all be glad to hear from Mr. Wakeman on the freedom of the mails. I, for one, want no censor sitting in judgment on thy mail, to tell me what I must not read nor let my children read. The next move would be to tell me what I must read and what my children must read and what church we must support. No! no! Mr. Editor, when I pay Uncle Sam to carry my mail for me, he becomes my servant for the time being, and I will expect him to carry it as I direct him, without poking his nose into it to see what kind of literature I hav to send or get for myself and family to read, as I feel that I am abundantly able to attend to that matter myself.

Yours for a higher manhood, common sense, and the entire repeal of all postal laws touching the freedom of the press and the mails,

Samuel D. Moore.

San Jose, Cal., Nov. 18, 1878.

Friend Bennett: "Cupid's Yokes" came all right, and has been read by a number, and I for one do not see anything very obscene in it. It contains many facts and suggestions which would harm no one to know and to ponder upon. With "Cupid's Yokes" we received two copies of the "Declaration of Rights," one of which I took and got a few names attached, and I hereby return it as I had not time to canvass for names. I asked a few to sign, but they seemed to smell obscenity, wanted time to investigate, to read the pamphlet, etc., etc. Heywood's theory appears to be pretty good in some respects; that is, emancipating women, giving her the right and liberty to own herself, to select the best stock to breed from, instead of being compelled to hav children by mere wrecks of humanity, as drunkards, idiots, fools, and lunatics; to improve the human race on precisely the same principles as cattle breeders do their stock. That is good doctrine, friend Bennett, but I imagine Heywood is too fast, is in advance of the age. Public opinion must be educated up before such a radical theory could go into practice. But enough of this.

I see by The Truth Seeker that you had a pretty stormy time at Syracuse. Some delegates made remarks that ought to disgrace a real Liberal. I think, Bennett, your position is exactly right on the obscenity question and the Comstock law. I say repeal! if it can be brought about. I want the right of speaking, writing, or publishing my honest views on all subjects whatever.

In your issue of Nov. 9th is a first-rate letter from H. Jr. Green, headed "The Liberal League Movement," "Now for work." Yes; let the weapons of warfare be laid aside and all fall into the ranks of both "Leagues" and work for the cause of truth, morality, liberty, and constitutional rights and against superstition, intolerance, persecution, and priestcraft.

I appreciate your labors, friend Bennett, and intend to aid you a trifle, if money comes in, by sending for some books and pamphlets. Fraternally yours,

Tamos Parsons.

Pratt, Ill., Dec. 4, 1878.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I was elected state representative of the Eleventh Senatorial District of the state of Illinois on Nov. 5, 1878, by a large majority on the National Greenback ticket. I received a much larger vote than the strength of my party, although some of the church members made a great effort to defeat me on account of my religion. I only mention this to show Mr. Abbot that it is not anyways likely that I am in favor of obscenity, and I am with you to the end for repeal. I was one of the seventy thousand signers to the petition, and also circulated the petition, and I think Mr. Abbot has shown himself a bigot and a fanatic, and I can find no cause to find any fault with your course. Of course I dislike family quarrels in our ranks as much as any one, but I could see no other way open for you only to defend yourself. How such a man as Underwood can hav any sympathy with Abbot is past my comprehension. I think every Liberal should cut loose from bigots whether they profess to be Liberal or not. The Index man is as bad or worse than a full fledged orthodox clergyman to the cause of Liberalism and humanity. I hav no sympathy for a falsifier, and when Abbot says you are in favor of obscenity, he knows he is speaking falsely. Respectfully,

James M. Pratt.

Vineland, N. J., Dec. 6, 1878.

I hav just read T. C. Leland's elucidation of the principles of liberty applied to love, amplifying on Emerson's little bequest, under the caption, "The Poets on Freelove," and am so grateful for his favor to the public—benefitting the many who do not readily perceive that when thus applied purity, elevation, and justice are designed—that I cannot turn from the topic without an expression of joy. Could I take in hand The Truth Seeker of Nov. 23d, go forth laying this article before the best cultured women of America, no doubt but a million would wish to sign my card. Just one point in the poet's idea I would that the poet Leland had a little more illuminated. All will not quite see that exercising love without the decision of knowledge is being "mean;" that Freethought on love, as on hope, or on business, and obeying reason's mandate in the case, is "courage stout," and that when invited by the monarch Mind, "the gods arrive." But to fully explain love would require more writers than hav felt free to investigate it; yet they who hav love enough to love liberty ought to hav liberty enough to free their love and honor enough to sustain both. Mr. Leland's good service will hav some thanks before the gazing, faltering world, and very many where lack of courage cannot manifest. May his sensitive spirit feel these as secret donations in his stilly hours.

Mary E. Tillotson.

Some dentists assert that eight children out of ten inherit the father's teeth, not the mother's.

It is reported that Mr. Gerome intends to paint a picture of the burning of Shelley's corpse on the Italian coast near Viareggio.

Parson Williams' Sabbath Breaking.

On the grave of Parson Williams
The grass is brown and bleached;
It is more than fifty winters
Since he lived and laughed and preached.

But his memory in New England
No winter snows can kill;
Of his goodness and his drollness
Countless legends linger still.

And among those treasured legends
I hold this one a boon,
How he got in Deacon Crosby's hay
On a Sunday afternoon,

He was midway in a sermon,
Most orthodox, on grace,
When a sound of distant thunder
Broke the quiet of the place.

Now the meadows of the Crosbys
Lay full within his sight,
As he glanced from out the window
Which stood open on the right,

And the green and fragrant haycocks
By acres there did stand;
Not a meadow like the Deacon's
Far or near in all his land.

Quick and loud the claps of thunder
Went rolling through the skies,
And the Parson saw his Deacon
Looking out with anxious eyes.

"Now, my brethren," called the Parson,
And called with might and main,
"We must get in Brother Crosby's hay,
'Tis our duty now most plain!"

And he shut the great red Bible,
And tossed his sermon down.
Not a man could run more swiftly
Than the Parson in that town.

And he ran now to the meadow,
With all his strength and speed;
And the congregation followed,
All bewildered, in his lead.

Ha! not often on a Sunday
Such sight as this, I ween,
Of a parson and his people,
A New England town had seen.

With a will they worked and shouted,
And cleared the field apace;
And the Parson led the singing,
While the sweat rolled down his face.

And it thundered, fiercer, louder;
And dark grew east and west;
But the hay was under cover,
And the Parson had worked best.

Not a moment had been wasted;
The rain was falling fast
As the Parson and his people
Through the village breathless passed.

And again in pew and pulpit
Their places took composed;
And the Parson preached his sermon
To "fifteenthly," where it closed.

When the services were ended
The people talking stayed,
And among the sternly pious
There were bitter comments made.

And the good old Deacon Crosby,
A meek and godly man,
Hardly dared rejoice his haycocks
Had been saved on such a plan.

But the Parson came down, striding
In haste, the narrow aisle,
And the Deacon's bent old shoulders
He patted, with a smile.

And he said: "No fear, my brother,
Lest God think it is a sin;
For he sent the sun to make your hay,
And your friends to get it in."

H. H.

PARIS, 1878 PARIS, 1878

GOLD MEDAL at Paris Exposition, 1878
CO-LABORERS' do. do., 1878
GOLD MEDAL Sweden & Norway, 1878
GOLD MEDAL at Mechanics' Charitable Association, Boston, 1878
SILVER MEDAL (for cases) do., 1878

MASON & HAMLIN

Have the honor to announce the above awards for their

CABINET ORGANS

the present season. The award at Paris is the highest distinction in the power of the juries to confer, and is the ONLY GOLD MEDAL awarded to American musical instruments. THIRTY-ONE leading manufacturers of the world were in competition. At Every World's Exposition for twelve years the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS have been awarded Highest Honors, viz: Paris, 1878; Sweden, 1878; Philadelphia, 1876; Santiago, 1875; Vienna, 1873; Paris, 1867. NO OTHER AMERICAN ORGANS EVER ATTAINED HIGHEST AWARD AT ANY WORLD'S EXPOSITION. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES with newest styles, prices, etc., free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont Street, BOSTON; 25 Union Square, NEW YORK; 250 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

Proceedings and Addresses
AT THE
FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION
HELD AT
Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

It is a volume of rare value, containing the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, E. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Ingersoll's Second Volume.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures,

CONTAINING

The Ghosts, Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child; The Declaration of Independence; About Farming in Illinois; Speech at Cincinnati; "The Past Rises before me like a Dream."

A 12mo volume of 282 pages. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

NOTICE.—I have hitherto published some of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lectures in cheap form, believing that by so doing I was aiding in the diffusion of valuable Liberal reading matter and doing a favor to the general public. At the request, however, of Col. Ingersoll, I shall publish no more of them, but will keep for sale all his lectures so far as published under his own auspices. D. M. BENNETT.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containing the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the Missionary and Bible Societies, Sunday-schools, The Young Men's Christian Association, Societies for the Suppression of Vice, American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally, and especially to ANTHONY COMSTOCK, this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

PROF. PAYNE'S
Catarrh Vapor and Liquid Ozone
Is Specially Recommended

For that prevalent disease, Catarrh in the head and throat. Hundreds of cases hav been cured by it after other remedies hav signally failed. It arrests the disease by destroying the invisible parasites or animalculæ which cause the disease, arresting putrefaction, killing contagion, purifying the system, and disinfecting the blood. It is used by inhalation, and is also used internally with the greatest success, not only in Catarrh but also Dyspepsia, Scarlet Fever, Small Pox, Measles, Dysentery, etc., etc. Used in connection with Prof. Payne's Liver Renovator Pills it will cure when a cure is possible. Price $1 a Bottle. Pills 25 cents. Send by express. Address, PROF. W. PAYNE, Peabody Hotel, 2t49 250 South Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Religion of the Future.

A Discourse, by NETTIE PEASE FOX, Editor of The Spiritual Offering, delivered in Odd Fellows Temple, Rochester, N. Y., Sunday, Nov. 10, 1878. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

THE
Resurrection of Jesus.
BY W. S. BELL.
Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. to1

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,
HIS
Character and Doctrine.
A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."
BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo, Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

Proceedings of the Indignation Meeting,
Held in Faneuil Hall,

Thursday evening, Aug. 1, 1878, to protest against the injury done to the Freedom of the Press by the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood.

A handsome octavo pamphlet of 68 pages, containing speeches of Hon. Elizur Wright Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Thaddeus B. Wakeman Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, Laura Kendrick, Prof. A. L. Rawson, and Moses Hull, and letters from Alfred E. Giles, Theron C. Leland, Parker Pillsbury, A. J. Grover, and D. M. Bennett.

Price, 25 cents. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price, by the publisher.
tf25 BENJ. R. TUCKER, Cambridge, Mass.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6.00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 43t6

AURICULAR CONFESSION
AND
Popish Nunneries.
BY WM. HOGAN.

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

BEYOND THE VEIL

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.
D. M. BENNETT

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words. Postage paid on all.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo, 543 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN. A novel. By Fredrika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc. 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid. $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp. 12 mo. 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. By Henry D. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid. $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus i, 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Postpaid. $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Profesor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S
Sixteen Crucified Saviors;
OR,
CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST.

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark.

Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages, $2. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. ; EMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers. 25
" " Cloth " 50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl. 75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright. 75
Apocryphal New Testament. 1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth. 75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jea Meslier. 25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon. 1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. B. Taylor. 2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World. 25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. 25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works. 27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. 15
Bible in India. Jacolliot. 2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion. 30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols.. 8vo. 4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80
Bible in the Balance. Fish. 1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum. 2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna. 1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future. 1 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus. 25
Christianity before Christ. Craven. 25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages. 1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity. 1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd. 1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and 60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle. 1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood. 15
Conway's Sacred Anthology. 1 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of. 25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor. 2 00
Diegesis " 2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records. 50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future. 1 50
" Radical Rhymes. 1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed. Spiritualism True, Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science. 1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.. 3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species. 2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.) 3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt. 1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell. 60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright. 35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach. 40 and 60
Eight Scientific Tracts. 25
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity. 1 50
" Child's Book of Religion. 1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs. 1 00
" Safest Creed. 1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature. 2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers. 2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle. 1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach. 1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 2 00
" Lost and Hostile Gospels. 3 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors. 2 00
" Biography of Satan. 50
Greg's Enigmas of Life. 2 00
" Creed of Christendom. 1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood. 1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell. 1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises. 1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons. 1 75
" Man's Place in Nature. 1 25
" Critiques and Addresses. 1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans. 1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols. 5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous. 1 50
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. 1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah. 50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures. 1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization. 25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper. 1 00
Jehovah Unveiled. 25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger. 1 00
Josephus' Complete Works. 2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo. 5 00
John's Way. 25
Kneeland's Review. 1 00
" Hymns. 25
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet. 2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols. 4 00
" History of European Morals. 3 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. 3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind. 3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each 150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization. 2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated. 2 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts. 3 50
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps. 3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire. 2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade. 2 00
Peeble's All Around the World. 2 50
" Seers of the Ages. 2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works. 2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 80 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle. 1 50
Paine's Common Sense. 12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth 80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth 80
" Theological Works, with portrait 1 50
" " " paper. 1 00
" Political Works, cloth. 1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait. 2
" Political Works, steel portrait. 1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth 75
Parturition without Pain. 1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense, E. B. Foote, M.D.. 1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy. 20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen 60
Syntagma, Taylor. 1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach. 2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible. 25
Studying the Bible, Mrs. Slenker. 75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New. 2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.. 12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.. 3 50
Sexual Physiology, Trall. 2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii. 25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul. 2 00
The Case against the Church. 75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey 2 00
The Voices, Warren Sumner Barlow. 1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and 4
The Champions of the Church. Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and 4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts. Vols. I. II. III. and IV., by the lot, 50 & 3 75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms. Hymns, and Recitations. 75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade. 30
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.. 1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate. 35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts. 80
Vestiges of Creation. 75
Volney's Ruins. 1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History. 1 50
Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary. 5 00

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No. (REVISED LIST.) Cts.

1. Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. 8
7. The Story of Creation. Bennett. 5
8. The Old Snake Story. " 2
9. The Story of the Flood. " 5
10. The Plagues of Egypt. " 2
11. Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. 2
12. Balaam and his Ass. " 2
13. Arraignment of Priestcraft. " 8
14. Old Abe and Little Ike, Syphers. 3
15. Come to Dinner. 2
16. Fog Horn Documents. " 2
17. The Devil Still Ahead. " 2
18. Slipped Up Again. " 2
19. Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. 5
20. Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. 2
21. The Great Wrestling Match. " 2
22. Discussion with Elder Shelton. " 10
23. Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. 3
24. Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. 5
25. Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. 5
26. Underwood's Prayer. 1
27. Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. 5
28. Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. 10
29. Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. 2
30. Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. 2
31. Gods and God-houses. " 2
32. The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. 3
33. What has Christianity Done? Preston. 3
34. Tribute to Thomas Paine. " 2
35. Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. 1
36. Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. 2
37. Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 1
38. Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. 3
39. The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. 3
40. Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men, J. Syphers. 3
41. Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. 1
42. Elijah the Tishbite. " 3
43. Christianity a Borrowed System. " 3
44. Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. 2
45. Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. 3
46. Did Jesus Really Exist? " 3
47. Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. 5
48. Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. 5
49. Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. 3
50. Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. 1
51. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. 6
52. Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. 3
53. Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. 2
54. An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. 5
55. The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. 3
56. Bible Contradictions. 1
57. Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. 2
58. Prophecies. 2
59. Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. 2
60. Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. 2
61. History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. 5
62. The Jews and their God. " 10
63. The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. 3
64. The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. 2
65. Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
66. God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. 5
67. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. 5
68. Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. 2
69. Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 2
70. Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. 3
71. Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. 3
72. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. 2
73. Foundations. John Syphers. 3
74. Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. 2
75. An Hour with the Devil. " 10
76. Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. 3
77. The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. 5
78. Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. 3
79. The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. 2
80. Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. 5
81. Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. 1
82. Christian Courtesy. Bennett. 2
83. Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84. Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. 2
85. Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. 10
86. An Enquiry about God's Sons. " 2
87. Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. 1
88. David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 3
89. Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. 3
90. Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. 2
91. Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. 1
92. The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. 5
93. Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. 1
94. The New Raven. Will Cooper. 5
95. Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. 10
96. Ichabod Crane Papers. 10
97. Special Providences. W. S. Bell. 2
98. Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. 2
99. Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciots. 5
100. 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. 5
102. The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. 1
103. Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet. 2
104. Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. 10
105. Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. 2
106. Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. 2
107. The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. 5
108. The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. 1
110. Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp. 1
111. Reply to Scientific American. Bennett. 1
112. Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp. 2
113. Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp. 2
114. Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115. The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett. 2
116. The Sunday Question. Bennett. 2
117. Constantine the Great. Preston. 3
118. The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell. 5
119. The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard. 3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. 5
2. Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 3
3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 3
4. Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. 5
5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. 3
6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 5
8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. 3
9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 2
10. The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. 3
11. Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. 3

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off; on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollar worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.	F. E. Abbot,
Paine's Bust.	Frothingham,
Paine's Monument.	Wendell Phillips,
Voltaire.	Emerson,
Rousseau.	Garrison,
Humboldt,	Henry Bergh,
Goethe,	Peter Cooper,
Schiller,	D. R. Burt,
Aug. Comte,	S. P. Andrews,
Heine,	Walt Whitman,
Alex. Pope.	Froude,
John Milton,	Max Muller,
Goldsmith.	Warren Chase,
Shelley,	Jas. Parton,
Byron.	Wm. Denton,
Burns,	Dr. Slade,
Washington,	A. J. Davis,
Franklin.	Foster,
Jefferson,	J. M. Peebles,
John Adams,	Frances Wright.
J. Q. Adams,	E. V. Wilson,
Madison,	G. L. Henderson,
Jackson.	Prof. Fiske,
Lincoln,	Fred Douglas,
Lincoln's Monument.	N. P. Banks,
Gerrit Smith,	P. V. Nasby.
Henry C. Wright.	Beecher,
J. S. Mill.	Tilton,
Sumner,	Moulton,
Edgar A. Poe,	G. W. Curtis,
Greeley,	Th. Nast,
Castellar,	J. G. Bennett,
Tennyson.	Chas. A. Dana,
Darwin	Phoebe Carey,
Tyndall,	Alice Carey,
H. Spencer,	Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Huxley,	Susan B. Anthony.
Proctor,	Lucy Stone,
Draper,	Julia Ward Howe.
Bradlaugh,	Chas. Cheney,
Holyoake,	Paulina Davis,
Ingersoll.	Mary F. Davis,
Underwood.	Emma H. Britten,
Mendum,	Lizzie Fowler,
Seaver,	Mrs. Slenker,
L. Colby,	Susan H. Wixon,
Dr. Hare,	D. M. Bennett.
Judge J. W. Edwards.	W. S. Bell.
Lizzie Doten.	J. C. Bundy.
Mrs. J. Conant.	S. S. Jones.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).	Asa K. Butts,
	W. F. Jamieson.

Geo. Francis Train,

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 10 cents each singly, or eleven for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 60 cts., to hold 50, 80.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St, New York.

WHAT OUR GIRLS OUGHT TO KNOW.

A book that ought to be in the hands of every young woman and every young girl in the country.

BY MARY J. STUDLEY, M.D.,

Graduate, Resident Physician, and Teacher of Natural Sciences in the State Normal School, Farmingham, Mass.

CHAPTER HEADINGS:

Study God's Poem; Know Thyself; What shall we Eat, and How shall we Cook It? The Heart; How we Breathe; The Brain and Nerves; Nerves and Nervousness; How Plants and Animals are Perpetuated; How to Become Beautiful; The Uses and Abuses of Dress; The Mate and the Home; Perfect Woman.

No book of 260 pages contains more valuable information than is found in this volume.

Price, in cloth, $1.25. Sold by

KIDDER'S SECRETS OF BEE KEEPING.

This book should be in the hands of every bee-keeper in our land, whether he has one swarm of bees or a hundred.

It is a guide to the bee-master, in every branch of the business.

No more losing bees in winter; nor in their flight to the forests in swarming time; nor in their being destroyed by moth millers, or by being robbed by other bees. No more stinging by bees when we go to the hive for honey or for any other purpose.

In fact the book shows how all losses and trouble with our bees can be successfully overcome and remedied.

And on the other hand it will instruct any one how they can keep bees with great profit, and with but a small investment.

This book contains more matter than any other book that sells for one dollar and fifty cents.

But in order to have a rapid sale and place the book within the reach of all, the publisher proposes to sell the book at the very low price of 75 cents bound, paper covers 50 cents.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office, 141 Eighth street, New York.

Heathens of the Heath

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

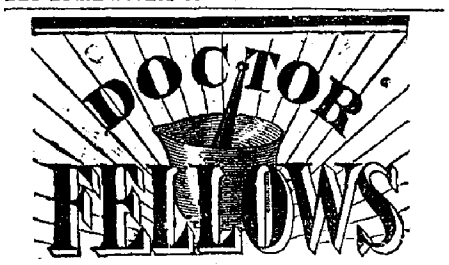
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is, its positions are all proven. . . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

THE VOICES.

"The Voices of Nature," "The Voice of a Pebble," "The Voice of Superstition," and "The Voice of Prayer." 8th Edition. A Poetical Eye-Opening volume of 226 pages.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.



Judge Baker in an elaborate review of "The Voices" says: "Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature, the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more and wider encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anti-credal work ever published."

Price reduced to one dollar. Sold wholesale and retail at The Truth Seeker office.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR:

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

From the Doctrines of the Church. In Poetry. Particularly sharp and pointed. It is well worth reading. Price only 10 cents. Sold at The Truth Seeker office.

THE GREAT SPECIALIST,

Treats all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases with unprecedented success. The thousands of cures he is performing annually substantiate this fact. He has at this moment patients in every State of the Union and in the British Provinces. Every reader of this who has any affection of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the Skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or diseases of the Eye or Ear, are invited to write to Dr. Fellows, whose system of practice is entirely original, omitting all Drugs and Mineral Medicines of both the Old and New schools, hence reliable. The Doctor's crowning medical achievement has been in the discovery of an external or outside application for the permanent cure of Spermatorrhœa and Impotency as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy.

Dr. Fellows has prescribed his external remedy for 1,500 cases without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane Asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of Consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information address, with two 3-cent stamps, Vineland, New Jersey, where Doctor R. P. Fellows is permanently located, and obtain his private circular on "Spermatorrhœa and its Cure," or, if afflicted with other complaints, his large circular treating on the above-named chronic diseases, both containing sworn evidences, which is convincing and positive testimony to the Doctor's great skill. In order that all can avail themselves of his services he has placed his terms at a very reasonable figure.

[From the Denver (Col.) Rocky Mountain Herald.]

"Dr. Fellows is a successful specialist for all the diseases which he claims to cure, such as chronic and sexual complaints. His wonderful skill and success are bringing him hundreds of cases weekly by letter and otherwise from all over the United States."

[From The Boston Investigator.]

"Dr. Fellows is a physician of superior education and extensive practice in private, chronic, and sexual diseases. We don't see any need of priests for anything, but as a good DOCTOR is, in our eyes, a benefactor of mankind, we would advise the reader if he has got any of the diseases mentioned, and doesn't want to keep them, let him write to Dr. Fellows, and obtain health, which is better than fortune, political office, or even religion."

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," "EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will reprove the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty.—Martin Luther.

First published in the Canadian Monthly. Price 10 cents, by mail.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds."
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

ALL FOR TWENTY CENTS.

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. $2 Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted. 6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gems of Thought.

A GOOD example is the best sermon.—Franklin.

TIME enough always proves little enough.—Franklin.

WRITE injuries in dust; benefits in marble.—Franklin.

HE that won't be counseled can't be helped.—Franklin.

KEEP conscience clear, though never fear.—Franklin.

MANY foxes grow gray, but few grow good.—Franklin.

COURAGE would fight, but discretion won't let him.—Franklin.

WHAT is serving God? 'Tis doing good to man.—Franklin.

PRESUMPTION first blinds a man and then sets him running.—Franklin.

HAVING been poor is no shame, but being ashamed of it is.—Franklin.

THERE is no man so bad but what he secretly respects the good.—Franklin.

DRINK does not drown care, but waters it and makes it grow faster.—Franklin.

DEATH and to-morrow are never here; they are either coming or gone.—Anon.

WE are not so sensible of the greatest health as of the least sickness.—Franklin.

A QUIET conscience rests in thunder, but rest and guilt liv far asunder.—Franklin.

HONEST Tom! You may trust him with a houseful of untold millstones.—Franklin.

DEATH comes to a good man to relieve him; it comes to a bad one to relieve society.—Anon.

IF woman is truly beautiful, let not her beauty be made dim by the flash of diamonds.—Anon.

THE wise man draws more advantage of his enemies than the fool from his friends.—Franklin.

How many rays of sunlight are about us if we would only open our windows and let them in! —Anon.

THE face of truth is not the less fair for all the counterfeit viands that hav been put upon her. —Anon.

TRANQUIL pleasures last the longest. We are not fitted to bear long the burdens of great joy. —Anon.

HE who despises praise will not be likely to practice the virtues that would entitle him to it.—Anon.

THE misery of idleness is nearly as manifest in high life as in rags and filth of extreme poverty.—Anon.

THE wasp attacks the ripest fruit first; so will slander attempt to ruin the most honest fame.—Anon.

ACCUSTOM yourself to some employment for every hour you can prudently snatch from business.—Anon.

IN the time that men waste in bewailing the perverseness of their fortune they could gain a competency.—Anon.

STRIVE to be the greatest man in your country, and you may be disappointed; strive to be the best and you may succeed.—Franklin.

ALL the means of action—the shapeless masses, the materials—lie everywhere about us. What we need is the celestial fire to change the flint into transparent crystal, bright and clear. That fire is genius.—Longfellow.

IT is good policy to strike while the iron is hot; it is still better to adopt Cromwell's procedure and make the iron hot by striking. The master-spirit who can rule the storm is great; but he is much greater who can both raise and rule it.—E. L. Magoon.

SOME men giv so that you are angry every time you ask them to contribute. They giv so that their gold and silver shoot you like a bullet. Other persons giv with such beauty that you remember it as long as you liv; and you say, "It is a pleasure to go to such men." There are some men that giv as springs do; whether you go to them or not, they are always full, and your part is merely to push your dish under the ever-flowing stream.—Beecher.

MAN is the only animal on the earth that has used his capacity for loving to degrade and brutalize himself and his offspring. And he has been enabled to do this through his possession of superior powers of reasoning. Hence the great importance of instruction and guidance, for though we must admit that man has done this in ignorance for ages, and is therefore entitled to all charity, Nature knows no charity, and avenges herself upon ignorant and wise alike when they violate her laws.—Charles Ellis.

OCCASIONAL storms and tempests may strengthen and make us hardy and healthy if we are properly prepared to endure them; but sunshine and calm are our daily need. A little necessary leaven of evil may be well enough but we do not want an overdose of it. Hills and mountains beautify and diversify the landscape, but there must be beautiful meadows, broad prairies, and fertile fields, and green, sunny acres of lowland to make the hills even tolerable. So the philosopher calmly takes life as he finds it, and makes the most and the best of all that is, knowing that it is but the result of all that has been, and that we must work out our own good and our own salvation from misery, amid the environments that surround us, by our own individual efforts.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

AN Irish paper advertises, "Fowls for sale (seven hens and a cock), all laying."

A WOMAN can't put on any side-saddle style when she goes in swimming. She has either got to kick out like a man or get drowned.

IT has been discovered by a close observer that hen-pecked husbands are invariably men with hairless lips. It takes a moustache to awe a female.

FATHER, to sleepy boy—Come, James, you ought to be up with the lark on such a beautiful morning. Matter-of-fact boy—That's all right; but how'm I goin' to get up there?

A FASHIONABLE young lady accidentally dropped one of her eyebrows in the opera box and greatly frightened her beau, who, on seeing it, thought it was his moustache.

A WESTERN paper apologizes thus: Instead of "Mayor N. was tight last evening beyond doubt," please read "Mayor N. was right," etc. The compositor that did the mischief has been asked to remove himself.

"WHO was the meekest man, my son?" said the superintendent of a Bible class in Missouri. "Moses, sir," "Very well, my boy; and who was the meekest woman?" "Please, sir, there never was no meekest woman."

SAID Mrs. FitzMaurice: "The dear child is such an etherial creature, and so delicate. You will scarcely credit it, but she lost a hairpin out of her head one day last week, and she has had a frightful cold ever since."

A FAIR one wrote to her lover begging him to send her some money. She added by way of postscript: "I am so ashamed of the request I made in this letter that I sent after the postman to get it back, but the servant could not overtake him."

"AND Moses was an austere man," read the minister from the Bible. "Dar now, you dun hear dat, Sam; de Scripture says Moses was an oysterman, an yo dun flung at me dat sellin' oysters wasn't a 'spectable bizniss. If it was good 'nough for Mases, it's 'spectable 'nough for me."

A GENTLEMAN in New Orleans was surprised to find a plump turkey served up for his dinner, and inquired of his servant how it was obtained. "Why, sir," replied Sambo, "dat turkey has been roosting on our fence tree nights. So dis morning I seize him for de rent of de fence.

WHY is it that people boot a dog and shoo a hen? and foot a bill? and cap a climax? and head a movement? and shoulder a responsibility? and back a racer? And why, oh, why will green apples make a monkey wrench? and why does sea-sickness make the rich retch and the retcher wretched? And then, again, why does a pretty girl wear her left stocking longer than the other? And why, for heaven's sake, why do people—but we pause.—[To be continued.]

OUR CHOIR.

There's Jane Sophia,
And Ann Maria,
With Obadiah,
And Jedekiah,
In our choir.

And Jane Sophia soprano sings
So high you'd think her voice had wings
To soar above all earthly things.
When she leads off on Sunday;
While Ann Maria's alto choice
Rings out in such harmonious voice
That sinners in the church rejoice,
And wish she'd sing till Monday.

Then Obadiah's tenor high
Is unsurpassed beneath the sky—
Just hear him sing "Sweet By and By,"
And you will sit and wonder;
While Jedekiah's bass profound
Goes down so low it jars the ground,
And wakes the echoes miles around.
Like distant rolling thunder.

Talk not to us of Patti's fame,
Or Nicolini's tenor tame,
Of Carey's alto—but a name—
Or Whitney's ponderous basso!
They sing no more like Jane Sophia,
And Ann Maria, Obadiah,
And Jedekiah in our choir,
Than cats sing like Tommaso!

BAD FOR BOYS.—A rat of a boy who had in vain searched the Postoffice corridors for the nickle which a careless hand occasionally drops at the stamp-clerk's window, yesterday took his position before a chestnut stand on Griswold street and eyed the fresh nuts a long time before drawing a deep sigh and groaning:

"Oh, I wish I was rich!"

The chestnut-roaster made no reply, and the odor of the roasting nuts finally induced the boy to inquire:

"Are chestnuts healthy?"

"No, bub—they are prolific of indigestion," was the reply.

After awhile the boy thought it was time to remark:

"Did you ever hear the story of the man who gave a poor boy a handful of chestnuts, and when the boy grew up and got rich he rewarded the old man with a diamond pin and a four-horse team?"

"No, never did, but I heard of the man who brought a poor boy to the edge of the grave by giving him a dozen chestnuts."

The lad took a turn up and down, secured another strong sniff of the pleasant odor, and then leaned over and whispered:

"If I'll take the chances of the edge-of-the-grave business will you take the chances on the chestnuts?"

The vender finally thought he would.—Detroit Free Press.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of he London edition, $5.00.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.

Cash orders will be filled in rotation.

Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

ANAYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $2.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman

OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers; and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

The Priest in Absolution,

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu;

THE BOOK OF THE GENERATION OF JESUS.

WITH PREFACE AND NOTES BY SCHOLASTICUS.

First English Translation

Of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. By the power of a charm stolen from the Holy of Holies he cured lepers, raised the dead, and wrought other miracles. Wherefore he was arrested by the elders of Jerusalem, scourged, crowned with thorns, and by order of the Sanhedrin stoned to death and hanged on the day before the Passover and the Sabbath, in the reign of Queen Alexandra, about the year 75 B. C.

Death of Simon Kepha on a tower in the city of the Nazarines about 39 B. C. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros."

Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha.

Price 10 cents. Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 51. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, December 21, 1878. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A MAN hanged in Indiana nodded to the chaplain as the drop fell and said: "I'll see you later."

THE Examiner and Chronicle prints in its advertising columns a parody on one of the most beautiful hymns, in the interest of a salve for chapped hands.

AT SHEFFIELD, England, a "Church of England Funeral and Mourning Reform Association" has been organized. The livery-stable men and undertakers hav no respect for it.

THE Protestant Episcopal bishop of western Texas denounces church fairs as "iniquities and enormities." Church oyster soup in Texas is said to be even thinner than in this latitude, and not so numerously supplied with oysters.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL boy of Holyoake, Mass., rather nonplussed his teacher when she was telling how God punished the Egyptians by causing the first-born in each household to be slain, by inquiring: "What would God hav done if there had been twins?"

DR. BROWN SEQUARD, in a late letter to the French Biological Society, states that milk, moderately warmed, if injected slowly into a human artery, will revive a dying patient quite as much as injections of blood. He cites a number of cases in which he has successfully tried the experiment.

THE total number of cotton spindles in the North are now estimated at about 9,900,000, and in the South 600,000, or a total in the country of say 10,500,000. Of the 68,000,000 spindles employed in the manufacture of cotton in 1876, the United States had in round numbers 10,000,000, and Great Britain 40,000,000.

AN invention comes to England from New Zealand in the shape of a "nail gun" for driving nails. It is not unlike a gun in shape and size. The nail is inserted in the muzzle and slides to the bottom, when a rod falls upon it and drives it with one blow. By this method one man can do the work of half a dozen.

"You cannot imagine the terror with which the advancement of American industries is filling British manufacturers," said Prof. Silliman in a recent address. "We, as you know, took the leading prize at Paris for the best steam engine in the world, and it is not denied in Europe to-day that America heads the list in the manufacture of agricultural machinery."

HERBERT H. HAZLOW was very honest and exact in his business, in East Bridgewater, Mass. He was a conspicuous Baptist too. Before leaving the place he paid every one of his debts, and arranged his affairs so that they could be easily comprehended by whoever might take charge of them. The only person who could complain of his unexpected departure were his wife and Edward French, for he eloped with Mrs. French.

A QUACK doctor is traveling in Ohio, accompanied by a remarkably beautiful young woman. Her complexion especially is perfect. He tells the people, in free lectures, that this fair creature was once rather ugly, but has been improved by the use of his elixir, which he offers at $3 a bottle. Nobody buys any at the conclusion of the lecture, but on the following day, when his agent goes from house to house, the sale is large.

DURING the first three years of the Presidency of Dr. McCosh at Princeton he received gifts of money for the college amounting to about $1,000 per week. After that subscriptions rose to $10,000 at a time; and, altogether, there has been received $2,500,000. That nice little sum of money ought to insure a goodly number of God's favored ones a front seat in heaven where the song of Moses and the Lamb can e chanted happily forever and ever.

ARTHUR GRAVES, clerk in holy orders, pleaded at Exeter assizes to forging a promissory note for £20, and Lord Coleridge sent him to prison for nine months, with hard labor; remarking that he passed a light sentence because he though the prisoner, being an educated man of good birth, would feel it particularly severe. For no worse an offense another clerk in holy orders—one Dr. Dodd—was hanged not long since.

OUR cotton crop for the year ending Aug. 31, 1878, according to the figures of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, amounted to 4,811,265 bales, against 4,485,123 bales in 1877. This is the largest crop since that of 1859-60, the greatest known, and is only a little behind that. Of the total supply, 3,340,166 bales were exported, while 1,546,298 were taken for home consumption. The takings for home use were largely in excess of previous years.

THE Rev. Mr. Chambers of the Mount Pisgah Methodist Church, Philadelphia, has had three of his brethren and two sisters arrested for whipping him. There has long been a division in his congregation, and recently one faction got control of the edifice and locked him out. Last Sunday he came with a letter from his Bishop, authorizing him to conduct services; but the five accused persons yanked him from the platform and threw him out of doors.

JOHN C. INGERSOLL, a nephew of Col, Robert G. Ingersoll, publishes a partial account of how he was recently hazed by fellow-students at Cornell. He says that he was put through an absurd initiatory ceremony by members of a mock secret society. Several years ago one young man was killed and two were badly injured by falling into a gorge, near the college, while engaged in that kind of diversion at midnight. At that time the faculty endeavored to break up the practice, but, it seems, without success.

THE Order of Foresters, being a secret society, is under the ban of the Roman Catholic Church. A Forester named Kress was on his death-bed in Syracuse, and sent for Father Stoller to administer the rite of extreme unction; but the priest refused to officiate unless the dying man would renounce the society and giv up its secrets. Kress refused to comply with the conditions, and, after death, was debarred from burial in the Roman Catholic cemetery. The matter has been taken up by other Roman Catholic Foresters, and the priest has appealed to his Bishop for support.

MELISSA UNDERWOOD of Vincennes, Ind., was so susceptible to wooing that she promised to marry both Philip H. Donovan and William Ayres. At length she consented to be linked to Ayres if the marriage could be kept secret for a while from Donovan; but Donovan was informed by somebody, and burst into the room just in time to interrupt the ceremony. He grabbed Melissa in his arms and cried, "Hold on! you promised me first." "Go on, parson," said Ayres; "we're half married, anyhow, and you'd better finish the job." But the clergyman refused, and Melissa is not yet a wife.

THE objectionable practice of eating missionaries, which was for a long time out of fashion, is now revived by the natives of New Hebrides, a group of small islands off the northeastern coast of Australia. The missionaries who were eaten were from the Fiji Islands, and were wrecked on the shore. The natives ate them more because they were foreigners and were tender than because they were missionaries. The best chance now for mission work among those people will be to send old and tough missionaries who will be rejected as food, and may therefore succeed in prosecuting their work.

THE imports of dry goods and general merchandise at the port of New York last week amounted to $5,369,231, against $4,718,735 the corresponding week last year. The total of these imports since the beginning of the year has been $259,970,320, against $286,028,205 for the same period of 1877. Our exports of domestic produce for the week ending last Saturday were $6 365,550, against $6,503,661, same week in 1877. The total of these exports from New York since January 1st has been $307,382,920; for the same time last year it was $256,301,773. Our exports of domestic produce exceed our imports so far in 1878 by $47,412,600.

THE British Registrar-General gives a weekly account of the rate of mortality in a number of the great towns of the world, and among them he describes the following as having a population exceeding a quarter of a million. First comes London, with its 3,577,304 people. Next is Paris, with its 1,988,806; New York, with its 1,084,528, and Brooklyn, with 549,488; and then Berlin, with 1,019,620 inhabitants. Philadelphia has its 876,118; Vienna, 727,271; St. Petersburg, 669,741: Bombay, 644,405; Glasgow, 566,940; Liverpool, 532,691; Manchester, with Salford, 530,765 people. All these are above the half million. Then comes Naples, with its 457,407; Calcutta with 429,535; Madras, 397,552: Hamburg (the state), 406,104; Birmingham, 383,117; Baltimore 355,000; Buda-Pesth, 319,530; Dublin, 314,666; Leeds, 304,948; Amsterdam, 302,266; Sheffield, 289,537; Rome, 282,214; and Breslau, with 267,000 population. Why those cities of phenomenal growth and generous rivalry, Chicago and St. Louis, are omitted from the list is unaccountable.

THE katydid may sing her song,
The beetle he may whistle;
The grasshopper chew the ripening corn;
The taterbug eat the thistle;

The bullfrog croak the whole night long,
And with the firefly tussle;
While nightingales sing dreamy songs,
And bees get on their muscle.

Their noise combined will not awake
The sleeper half so quick
As the gay mosquito when he alights
And in his bill doth stick.

THE Texas papers contain detailed accounts of the lecherous conduct of the Rev. W. G. Veal, who tried persistently to seduce a young married lady whom he had joined in matrimony with her husband a short time before. He told her the sin would be his and not hers; and he said. "O, I hav such an amount of passion! How can I contain myself! You must yield to me!" etc., etc. Now all this is reprehensible in the extreme, but then it is but a trifle compared with some offenses which the United States Government punishes with fines and imprisonment. The sensual pastor probably never sold a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," and all other offenses can easily be overlooked.

IF the Rev. James Dixon tried to lead Miss Elizabeth M. Kepley of New Albany, Ind., from the path of virtue, his attempt was base enough without the additional depravity of endeavoring to alienate the young woman from an honorable lover by making her believe that the lover was a thief. Mr. Noble D. Morris, the young man in question, has sued the Rev. Mr. Dixon for slander, and the facts of this peculiar case will probably be brought out in a judicial investigation. Mr, Dixon says that he was only a fool; it remains to be seen whether he was not a knave. Of course this kind of thing is very wrong and unworthy of a man who claims to be a pattern and teacher of morality. But then the miserable man probably never sold a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" nor deposited one in the mail, and all other faults can be forgiven if he has not committed this, which, like sinning against the Holy Ghost, cannot be forgiven in this world nor the world to come.

OUR GREAT APPLE CROP.—This year's apple crop is now gathered, and it is one of the richest the country has ever had. In some regions apples are so plenty that they are fed to pigs, cows, and horses, and the cider mills are everywhere pressing out more cider than they can readily dispose of. This very palatable and healthful drink may be bought in the country at one dollar and one dollar and a half a barrel, and it ought to be on draught in the cities at a price which would tempt the poorest customers There is no need of anybody's drinking sham cider this year. The real juice of the apple is plenty enough for any demand there is likely to be for it. A splendid apple crop can, fortunately, now be disposed of to much better advantage than formerly. An extensive European demand for our apples has grown up within recent years, and this autumn we are exporting more of them than ever before, though the prices are very low, running from 75 cents to $1.62 a barrel, according to quality, so great is the supply. Vast quantities of apples are regularly shipped to Europe by steamer. The manifest of one vessel from this port last week showed that she carried 4,671 barrels, and all the outgoing European steamers are weighted with them. A Boston steamer took 5,000 barrels last Wednesday, the largest shipment of apples ever made from that port. Three steamship lines from Boston hav engaged to carry more than 40,000 barrels, and the export from New York will reach an enormous and unprecedented total. If the fruit is carefully picked and selected and well packed, it reaches Europe in good condition and brings a fair profit to the sender. Apples ought to be plenty and cheap in England this autumn.—Sun.

Events of the Week.

A YOUNG wife died recently in Newport, R. I., of excessive laughter.

CAIN is the name of a Bostonian who recently killed his brother-in-law.

NINE murders were committed in western Nebraska in a single week recently.

A LARGE tobacco factory was burned in Richmond, Va., on the 15th. A $75,000 smoke.

BAYARD TAYLOR, American Minister to Prussia, has been very ill, but is recovering.

THREE negroes were lynched at Lake City, Fla., on the 14th, for arson and robbery.

THE Crown Prince of Austria accidentally shot himself a short time since, not fatally.

WADE HAMPTON, who has been very low, having recently had a leg amputated, is recovering his health.

THE drivers on the Third Avenue street cars of this city are on strike. Cause, the discharge of some of the drivers.

A MAN fell to the sidewalk from the fourth story of the New York Postoffice, the other day, and was instantly killed.

AN election riot took place a few days ago in Manitoba in which several men were shot. A priest was at the bottom of it.

A LONDON banker has just lost $3,000,000 in a stock speculation, thereby breaking the bank and ruining many of the depositors.

SPAIN is encouraging Chinese immigration to Cuba. By a treaty just ratified Chinamen are placed on an equal footing with all other foreigners.

THE Congressional Committee on Naval Affairs is endeavoring to secure the indictment of ex-Secretary of the Navy Robeson for malfeasance in office.

OWING to the defalcation of the Saratoga Treasurer, business in that town is at a standstill, the last two banks having just suspended, one of them hopelessly insolvent.

THE Bridgeport, Ct., clergymen are at war with one another on the church lottery question. It is cheering to know that some of the clergy are opposed to pious gambling.

AN engineer in Denver was crushed under his wrecked locomotive, and could not readily be taken out. He endured the agony two hours and then cut his throat with his pocket knife.

PRINCESS ALICE, Grand Duchess of Hesse, third child and second daughter of Queen Victoria, died on the 14th, of diptheria. Her death interrupts the vice-regal festivities in Canada.

Two Indians were taken from the charge of a Government agent in Salmon City, Dakota, by a mob, a few days ago, and shot in revenge for the killing of a citizen by hostile Indians a few days before.

THE Rev. Fred Bell, of Brooklyn notoriety, is running a revival business in London, but his sins are finding him out. Some of the London clergy are circulating handbills exposing some of his amorous doings with servant girls, etc.

DR. BRADFORD, a New York physician, has been sentenced to fourteen years and a half in state prison for complicity in an abortion case which terminated fatally. Strange to say, there was no pious clergyman involved in the affair.

A WEALTHY ITHICAN named Ogden, a leader in the Methodist church, has been arrested for wife-murder. His wife died last spring under suspicious circumstances, and he immediately married again. His first wife's body has been disinterred and a large quantity of arsenic discovered in the system.

ON the night of the 10th the Eastern and Middle States were visited by a storm, which destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property Railroad tracks, culverts, and bridges were swept away, and several trains were wrecked, many passengers being killed or wounded. In Ulster county, N. Y., there was fully $1,000,000 worth of property swept away by freshets, In Woodstock fourteen bridges were destroyed. Mill Brook lost twenty-one bridges. Telegraph poles hav been prostrated in many places Many vessels were driven ashore.

Selections.

Modern Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

In contrast to those transcendental systems which assume that in the depths of consciousness lie buried all possible intellectual treasures, waiting to be called forth on the field of experience, Materialism teaches that all knowledge is derived from experience; that the beginnings of all intelligence are the reactions of the organism in response to the movements of an external world. Without perception, imagination can have no elements to combine in ideal forms, conception nothing to represent in symbols. Our feelings, the basis of all experience, increase in number and variety, and range themselves in groups and classes, until we arrive at the complex conception of the cosmos, which is the subjective synthesis of all our perceptions and ideas, or primary and secondary impressions. This world arising in consciousness grows for us only as we grow. With every stage in the evolution of the organism arise corresponding differentiations in the universe, as seen by us.

But although Materialism admits no possibility of knowledge in advance of experience, it should not and does not ignore the fact that ancestral experiences are organized in the race, and transmitted from age to age. We come into the world with an organized form, every part the result of changes reaching back through unimaginable periods of time. The organism is born with certain tendencies which determine its reactions when sensible stimuli are presented. If the body is an evolution in which organs and parts, formed through ages, have been inherited from ancestors, what we call the mind is equally an evolution in which inherited experiences, or their results, have become organized in us, so as to determine largely individual experiences. The inherited tendencies thus received correspond with Kant's a priori "Forms of Sense and Understanding," save that they are not, as he held, transcendental, or anterior to all experience, ancestral and individual alike. Thus the so-called laws of thought, instead of being prior to all experience and above all processes of thought, like Fate above the Olympian gods, although connate, are as much the result of experience as any individual acquirement can be. If man has come up through countless ages, and bears in his structure the results of innumerable modifications of ancestors, it is obviously a corollary that the feelings and aptitudes, the powers of thought, and the mental characteristics in general, have likewise been developed from the lowest organic activities. As Lewes observes: "The notorious facts of heredity show how habits once organized may become transmitted to descendants, so that the unnatural action of 'begging," when a dog is taught to perform it, may become a natural action in its descendants, requiring no teaching. Nay, this very process underlies all development. The voluntary actions become involuntary, the involuntary become automatic, the intelligent become habitual, and the habitual become instinctive. It is the same in the higher regions of intellect; the slow acquisitions of centuries of research become condensed into axioms which are intuitions."

In the Spanish Gypsy, George Eliot says:

"What! shall the trick of nostrils and of lips
Descend through generations, and the soul,
That moves within our frames like God in worlds,
Imprint no record, leave no documents,
Of her great history?

"Shall men bequeath
The fancies of their palates to their sons,
And shall the shudders of restraining awe,
The slow wept tears of contrite memory,
Faith's prayerful labor, and the food divine
Of fast ecstatic,—shall these pass away
Like wind upon the waters tracklessly."

There is a deep meaning in these lines, which Locke, representing the sensational school, and Kant the transcendental school of metaphysics, failed to see, and an understanding of which would have rendered the long controversy between these two schools utterly impossible.

Having adverted to the source of knowledge, we come next to consider what, according to the materialistic view, we really know.

We are aware of the untenableness of the common notion that the senses directly mirror outward things; and it is equally evident that impressions have to be assimilated, or transformed into sensations, before they can become motors, or have any value for us. If the existence of an external world came originally by inference or deduction, it has long since become second nature for us to regard it as the cause of our impressions and subjective states. It is a fact of feeling woven into consciousness. That there are objects which affect us by their presence, and have qualities that affect us in various manners, cannot be disputed without a violation of the first principles of thought. Why call in question an external world, when no one can help believing in it, however ingeniously he may argue against it? What the externality is, how much of what we see and feel is due to the colorings of our consciousness, how much belongs to the outer world, and how much to the reactions of the organism, it may be impossible to determine. Berkeley, after reducing what is commonly called matter to sensations, denied an external world or noumanon, and maintained that our sequent states of consciousness are due directly to the will of God. Kant admitted an external world, but claimed nothing could be known of the "thing in itself." Fichte held that the sequence of our state of consciousness depends upon the constitution of the mind—that there is no objective order—indeed, nothing save what the mind creates for itself.

It is not uncommon for writers to-day to use the arguments of these ingenious philosophers to expose the untenableness of Materialism. They refer to the fact that what is called matter is a congeries of qualities, many of which by psychological analysis can be shown to be names for the ways in which our consciousness is affected. But it seems to me they all leave untouched the fact, the conviction of which is irresistible to themselves, that there is something outside of the mind that produces the sensations of which we are conscious. That the external reality, except in its relation to us, is that objective synthesis which we call matter, I admit, cannot be successfully maintained; neither can it be resolved into the groups of thoughts and feelings that we call mind.

If Materialism required me to regard things as they appear to me, as absolute realities out of all relations with the organism, I should be compelled to reject it at once as a superficial view of the universe; for take away the living organism and there is no reason, none whatever, for believing that what we understand by heat and cold, light and darkness, noise and silence, have any existence. Sound, light, color, fragrance, hardness, softness, and all the so-called secondary qualities of matter, at least, can be shown to depend for their existence upon consciousness.

There can be no sound without an ear to collect and transmit the aerial vibrations to the acoustic nerve where it can be transformed into a sensation. And without an eye there can be no luminous effect. I must hold with Lewes that these qualities of bodies are states of consciousness, viewed from the subjective side, and states of objects, viewed from the objective side; or, in other words, the products of two factors. There must be both vibrations of the air and an acoustic nerve to have sound, undulations of ether and retinal sensibility to have light, emanations of particles and an olfactory nerve to have fragrance, an external object and nervous sensibility to have hardness or softness. These illustrations serve to show the absurdity of supposing objects exist outside of consciousness just as they appear to us; and at the same time they indicate that there are external objects of different qualities, of which all we can possibly know is their relations to the organism. As for "the thing in itself," it is inconceivable, for whatever exists, exists in relation to other things. That there are other beings of whom we know nothing, between whom and the same external world are other relations of which we can have no conception, is not denied (although in the absence of evidence we may not believe it); and the only meaning "the thing in itself" can have for us is the external world, considered in relation to imaginary beings with constitutions or natures radically different from our own.

Materialism, because it will not join in the hunt after "the thing itself," or indulge in aspirations after the "otherness of things," is frequently charged with limiting the realm of existence to the range of the senses. It does nothing of the kind. It is evident that there are many motions of the universe to which our dull senses make no response. In some respects even the lower animals have a susceptibility to impressions which we do not possess. Before the ethereal undulations have reached some four hundred billions per second, and after they have reached twice that number, the retina refuses to respond, and there is no luminous phenomenon, although there are reagents on which the undulations do act on either side of the luminous limits. So there may be a great number and variety of movements in the external world of which we have no knowledge whatever. Had we superior sensorial perceptions we might take cognizance of many of these movements; but this fact does not reduce the value of the knowledge which we derive from the movements to which our senses do respond.

Some of our most advanced thinkers, who are themselves as strong Materialists as a belief that all phenomena are the result of matter and causation can make them, occasionally give the impression that they are not in sympathy with Materialism; but in such cases they associate it with crude views that are in fact no part of it, even though they have some times been put forward by incompetent writers who have written in defense of Materialism. Of this class is Professor Tyndall, who is a Materialist in every proper sense of the word, and Professor Huxley, who is still more Materialistic, if possible, except in a certain sense in which his view can have no practical value or influence, and indeed no interest save for such as find a charm in the old controversy between idealism and realism.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Pocket Theology.—Continued.

BY VOLTAIRE.

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH FOR THE FIRST TIME BY MISS ELLEN CARROLL.

ANNUNCIATION.

A visit of ceremony paid by a pure spirit to a virgin of Judea, accompanied with a pretty compliment. The result was a fine brat, as big as his papa, who has since made a certain noise in the world, and, there is room to hope, will make a great deal more if mankind continues to be as good and wise as it has been hitherto.

ANTHROPOLOGY.

A way of explaining themselves peculiar to our sacred writers, and which consists in endowing with eyes, hands, passions, and wicked malice the pure spirit that rules the universe. God created man in his own image, and the priests have made God in the image of the priests. This is, possibly, why we love them so.

ANTILOQUY.

A theological term to designate the contradictions to be found from time to time in the Word of God. These contradictions are but apparent, of course, and none but stone-blind people can detect them. People of enlightened faith can perceive at once that God cannot contradict himself, unless, indeed, his ministers cause him to change his mind.

ANTIPODES.

To believe in the antipodes constitutes a wicked heresy. God, who made the world, ought to have known if there were such a thing, and it is evident from his books that he did not believe in it.

ANTIQUITY

Is infallible, and cannot err. Its antiquity is the indubitable proof of the soundness of an opinion, of a custom, or a ceremony. It is highly important to repulse and discourage all attempts at innovation. Old shoes are more commodious and easy to the feet than new ones. The clergy must never relinquish whatever they have hitherto practiced. The more ancient the church, the more prone is she to wander both in action and discourse.

APOCALYPSE.

A very curious and worthy book of Holy Writ, commented by Newton, and containing a series of tales invented by St. John, of a rather less cheerful character than the fables of LaFontaine, but infinitely better calculated to stir the minds of the grown-up children who read them. During three centuries the Greek Church persisted in regarding the Apocalypse as an apocryphal book, but the Latin Fathers, much more knowing, have declared it sacred, thereby confirming its right of canonization.

APOSTLES.

A dozen of knaves, as ignorant as owls and as poor as church mice, who composed the court of the Son of God here below, and were charged by him to teach the universe. Their successors have since risen in the world, thanks to theology, which their predecessors, the apostles, had not studied. For the rest, the clergy, like the aristocracy, is so constituted as to derive a greater degree of luster in proportion as they recede from their primitive origin, or the resemblance between them and their predecessors fades away.

APPARITIONS.

Supernatural visions permitted to him or her gifted by God with the special grace of possessing a cracked brain, a hysterical temperament, a disordered digestion, but, above all, the art of lying with effrontery.

APPEAL.

An impious custom, and offensive to the Church, wickedly established in certain countries, where the people have the temerity to appeal to profane judges against the decisions of saintly ones, who are, as it is well known, incapable of abusing their authority or ministry.

APPELLANTS.

These are, in France, the Jansenists who have advisedly appealed against the bull unigenitus to the future Council General which shall settle definitively all disputes touching divine grace. According to the latest news, this council will be held without fail on the eve of the Day of Judgment.

ARCHBISHOP.

A title unknown in the earlier centuries of the Church, but invented since by the humility of her pastors, who, after having raised themselves up on the backs of the profane, endeavored to climb on each other's backs to see what was passing in the fold of the Lord.

ARK OF GOD.

The cash-box of the clergy. There is no joking with God touching this same cash-box of his spouse, which contains all the property and jewels of the community. Were it not for the faith that sustains them, princes, who are sometimes "hard up," might be tempted to lay hands on it. However, by going the right way about it, they might try the thing. God, who sometimes slumbers, might perhaps let them carry off the strong box without giving the alarm.

ARMS.

The clergy may not carry arms themselves, but, in case of need, may place them in the hands of laymen to do battle in the cause of Mother Church, who, at a safe distance, raises her pious hands to heaven to implore its aid in favor of those who are fighting for her divine rights or the gratification of her sacred whims.

ARM (Secular).

A monarch, a magistrate, a policeman, or a hangman, to whom the Church, tender mother, may hand over any one of the children that offend her and whom she has not the heart to murder herself.

ASSASSINATION.

A case involving the criminal dock with regard to the laity, but privileged with regard to the clergy. In some countries the latter enjoy the right of thieving and assassination in utter defiance of ordinary justice. Moreover, the Church enjoys by right divine the right of assassinating heretics, tyrants, and miscreants, or at least of causing them to be assassinated by the laity, she herself abhorring bloodshed.

ASSES.

Long-eared animals, patient and humble, and the true models to be imitated by all good Christians, who, like them, must allow themselves to be saddled with their burdens and carry their cross. Jesus was mounted on an ass which did not belong to him when he entered into Jerusalem, by which action he intended to proclaim to all whom it might concern that the priests should thenceforward enjoy the right of riding on the backs of Christians to the end of all time.

ATHEIST.

A name given by theologians to whoever differs from them in their ideas concerning the divinity, or who refuses to believe in it in the form in which, in the emptiness of their infallible pates, they have resolved to present it to him. As a rule, an Atheist is any or every man who does not believe in the God of the priests.

ATTRIBUTES (Divine).

Incomprehensible qualities which, by dint of reflecting on, our theologians have decided can only belong to a being of whom they have not the least idea. These qualities seem incompatible to persons of weak faith, but are easily reconcilable to those who do not reflect about them. The negative attributes with which theology has endowed the Godhead clearly demonstrate that the divinity can have no possible resemblance to any being or thing we can possibly imagine. This is conclusive, and eminently calculated to settle our ideas on this point.

ATTRITION.

A theological term which signifies the regret felt by a Christian for the sins he has committed, with an eye to the chastisement that may follow them. This regret, according to the Jesuits, suffices to appease God, but the Jansenists deny this. God himself will doubtless some day show us which of these is right.

AUGURS.

How our modern augurs must enjoy themselves when, glass in hand, they devise among them of the folly of all who are not, as they are, members of the college of the augurs!

AUSTERITY.

An ingenious means invented by perfected Christians of rendering themselves agreeable in the sight of a God of infinite goodness by torturing themselves with fastings, flagellations, etc. God is, of course, always delighted with such like inventions in his honor on the part of his creatures. Austerities are, moreover, advantageous and profitable, inasmuch as they create an extreme wonder in those who are witnesses of these marvelous follies, while, on the other hand, the meek and pure of faith regard them as both wise and good.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

THE WATKINS SPEECHES AND ADDRESSES.—BRO. BENNETT: Allow me to remind the two or three hundred Liberals who arose at my suggestion at the Watkins Convention and agreed to take a copy of the book if you would publish it, that the book is now ready and they should keep their agreement by sending for it. I am sure they will be pleased with it. I consider it one of the most valuable publications that has issued from the Liberal press in many years, and it should hav a large sale. H. L. GREEN.

THE PROCEEDINGS AND ADDRESSES at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., in August last, hav been reported and bound up in a substantial volume by D. M. Bennett, of New York. It will be found a rich repository of Liberal and advanced thought, uttered by a large number of representative men and women. Some of the speakers attack Spiritualism, but it was to be expected of them.—Banner of Light.

Science and the Arts.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

CHAPTER XV.—CONTINUED.

As most readers are probably but little acquainted with the eight classes of the Protista just mentioned, I shall now add some further general observations on their natural history. The great majority of all Protista live in the sea, some swimming freely on the surface, some creeping at the bottom, and others attached to stones, shells, plants, etc. Many species of Protista also live in fresh water, but only a very small number on dry land (for example, Myxomocetes and some Protoplasta). Most of them can be seen only through the microscope, except when millions of individuals are found accumulated. Only a few of them attain a diameter of some lines, or as much as an inch. What they lack in size of body they make up for by producing astonishing numbers of individuals, and they very considerably influence in this way the economy of nature. The imperishable remains of dead Protista, for instance, the flinty shells of the Diatomeæ and Radiolaria and the calcareous shells of the Acyttaria, often form large rock masses.

In regard to their vital phenomena, especially those of nutrition and propagation, some Protista are more allied to plants, others more to animals. Both in their mode of taking food and in the chemical changes of their living substance, they sometimes more resemble the lower animals, at others the lower plants. Free locomotion is possessed by many Protista, while others are without it; but this does not constitute a characteristic distinction, as we know of undoubted animals which entirely lack free locomotion, and of genuine plants which possess it. All Protista have a soul—that is to say, are "animate"—as well as all animals and all plants. The soul's activity in the Protista manifests itself in their irritability, that is, in the movements and other changes which take place in consequence of mechanical, electrical, and chemical irritation of their contractile protoplasm. Consciousness and the capability of will and thought are probably wanting in all Protista. However, the same qualities are in the same degree also wanting in many of the lower animals, whereas many of the higher animals in these respects are scarcely inferior to the lower races of human beings. In the Protista, as in all other organisms, the activities of the soul are traceable to molecular motions in the protoplasm.

The most important physiological characteristic of the kingdom Protista lies in the exclusively non-sexual propagation of all the organisms belonging to it. The higher animals and plants multiply almost exclusively in a sexual manner. The lower animals and plants multiply also, in many cases, in a non-sexual manner, by division, the formation of buds, the formation of germs, etc. But sexual propagation almost always exists by the side of it, and often regularly alternates with it in succeeding generations (Metagenesis, vol. i, p. 206). All Protista, on the other hand, propagate themselves exclusively in a non-sexual manner, and, in fact, the distinction of the two sexes among them has not been effected—there are neither male nor female Protista.

The Protista in regard to their vital phenomena stand midway between animals and plants, that is to say, between their lowest forms; and the same must be said in regard to the chemical composition of their bodies. One of the most important distinctions between the chemical composition of animal and vegetable bodies consists in the characteristic formation of the skeleton. The skeleton, or the solid scaffolding of the body in most genuine plants, consists of a substance called cellulose, devoid of nitrogen, but secreted by the nitrogenous cell-substance, or protoplasm. In most genuine animals, on the other hand, the skeleton generally consists either of nitrogenous combinations (chitin, etc.) or of calcareous earth. In this respect some Protista are more like plants, others more like animals. In many of them the skeleton is principally or entirely formed of calcareous earth, which is met with both in animal and vegetable bodies. But the active vital substance in all cases is the mucous protoplasm.

In regard to the form of the Protista, it is to be remarked that the individuality of their body almost always remains at an extremely low stage of development. Very many Protista remain for life simple plastids or individuals of the first order. Others, indeed, form colonies or republics of plastids by the union of several individuals. But even these higher individuals of the second order, formed by the combination of simple plastids, for the most part remain at a very low stage of development. The members of such communities among the Protista remain very similar one to another, and never, or only in a slight degree, commence a division of labor, and are consequently as little able to render their community fit for higher functions as are, for example, the savages of Australia. The community of the plastids remains in most cases very loose, and each single plastid retains in a great measure its own individual independence.

A second structural characteristic, which next to their low stage of individuality especially distinguishes the Protista, is the low stage of development of their stereometrical fundamental forms. As I have shown in my theory of fundamental forms (in the f urth book of the General Morphology), a definite geometrical fundamental form can be pointed out in most organisms, both in the general form of the body and in the form of the individual parts. This ideal fundamental form, or type, which is determined by the number, position, combination, and differentiation of the component parts, stands in just the same relation to the real organic form as the ideal geometrical fundamental form of crystals does to their imperfect real form. In most bodies and parts of the bodies of animals and plants this fundamental form is a pyramid. It is a regular pyramid in the so-called "regular radiate" forms, and an irregular pyramid in the more highly differentiated, so-called "bilaterally symmetrical" forms. Among the Protista this pyramidal type, which prevails in the animal and vegetable kingdom, is on the whole rare, a id instead of it we have either quite irregular (amorphous) or more simple, regular, geometrical types; especially frequent are the sphere, the cylinder, the ellipsoid, the spheroid, the double cone, the cone, the regular polygon (tetrahedron, hexahedron, octahedron, dodecahedron, icosahedron), etc. All the fundamental forms of the pro-morphological system, which are of a low rank in that system, prevail in the Protista. However, in many Protista there occur also the higher, regular, and bilateral types, fundamental forms which predominate in the animal and vegetable kingdoms. In this respect some of the Protista are frequently more closely allied to animals (as the Acyttaria), others more so to plants (as the Radiolaria).

With regard to the palæontological development of the kingdom Protista, we may form various, but necessarily very unsafe, genealogical hypotheses. Perhaps the individual classes of the kingdom are independent tribes, or phyla, which have developed independently of one another and independently of the animal and the vegetable kingdoms. Even if we adopt the monophyletic hypothesis of descent, and maintain a common origin from a single form of Moneron for all organisms, without exception, which have ever lived and still live upon the earth, even in this case the connection of the neutral Protista on the one hand with the vegetable kingdom, and on the other hand with the animal kingdom, must be considered as very vague. We must regard them as lower offshoots which have developed directly out of the root of the great double-branched organic pedigree, or perhaps out of the lowest tribe of Protista, which may be supposed to have shot up midway between the two diverging high and vigorous trunks of the animal and vegetable kingdoms. The individual classes of the Protista, whether they are more closely connected at their roots in groups, or only form a loose bunch of root-offsets, must in this case be regarded as having nothing to do either with the diverging groups of organisms belonging to the animal kingdom on the right, or to the vegetable kingdom on the left. They must be supposed to have retained the original simple character of the common primeval living thing more than have genuine animals and genuine plants.

But if we adopt the polyphyletic hyp othesis of descent, we have to imagine a number of organic tribes or phyla, which all shoot up by spontaneous generation out of the same ground, by the side of and independent of one another. In that case numbers of different Monera must have arisen by spontaneous generation whose differences would depend only upon slight, to us imperceptible, differences in their chemical composition, and consequently upon differences in their capability of development. A small number of Monera would then have given origin to the animal kingdom, and again, a small number would have produced the vegetable kingdom. Between these two groups, however, there would have developed, independently of them, a large number of independent tribes, which have remained at a lower stage of organization, and which have neither developed into genuine plants nor into genuine animals.

A safe means of deciding between the monophyletic and olyphyletic hypotheses is as yet quite impossible, considering the imperfect state of our phylogenetic knowledge. The different groups of Protista, and those lowest forms of the animal kingdom and of the vegetable kingdom which are scarcely distinguishable from the Protista, show such a close connection with one another and such a confused mixture of characteristics, that at present any systematic division and arrangement of the groups of forms seem more or less artificial and forced. Hence the attempt here offered must be regarded as entirely provisional. But the more deeply we penetrate into the genealogical secrets of this obscure domain of inquiry, the more probable appears the idea that the vegetable kingdom and the animal kingdom are each of independent origin, and that midway between these two great pedigrees a number of other independent small groups of organisms have arisen by repeated acts of spontaneous generation, which on account of their indifferent neutral character, and in consequence of their mixture of animal and vegetable properties, may lay claim to the designation of independent Protista.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Selections.

Liberty and Morality.

A DISCOURSE GIVEN AT SOUTH PLACE CHAPEL, FINSBURY, LONDON, BY MONCURE D. CONWAY, M.A.

Among the most painful phenomena of nature are those of recurrence in things evil. From the earliest period man's courage has been daunted by the perception that though it might conquer an evil thing, that thing was pretty sure to return. Darkness vanished before the dawn, but it returned; the storm-cloud cleared away, but it came again; the sickly season might pass, but went its rounds again under its dog-star; fevers were only intermittent; the cancer was eradicated only to reappear; the tyrant might be slain, tyranny remained. Such phenomena underlie all those ancient fables which led man up to the conception of Fate—the doctrine of despair. Hercules might kill any one head of the nine-headed hydra, but two heads grew in its place; and when he had burned away all the other heads, one was immortal, and he could only bury it; but its venomous breath came up and gave life to venomous creatures after its kind. Science has, to a large extent, released the European man from this paralyzing notion of fatality in things evil. Some of the old hydras it has slain altogether. It has trampled out leprosy, and the black death, and some other ancient plagues, and civilization has cleared some regions of the wolf, the bear, and the worst serpents.

But there are other regions among us—in us—where the phenomena of evil recurrence are still present and powerful, and where some bow before them with a feeling of despair. There are social hydras whose heads seem to be immortal. Tyranny is a monster that never dies. It has passed into a proverb that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and that is because the spirit of oppression is never destroyed, and, on its part, is sleeplessly vigilant. Behold here to-day this great people, whose passion for liberty is recorded in splendid pages of history, whose resolution to build on these islands a commonwealth of justice and freedom is written on every acre of its soil in their heart's blood, and in royal blood, too; and yet after all those sacrifices and heroic martyrdoms, the scratch of one man's pen can run through the achievements of centuries, and turn the arm of England to a bulwark of barbarism.

The cause of such recurrences is not far to seek. The fatality is not in the evil thing, but in some strange popular hallucination like that which Hercules had about the ninth hydra head. Instead of killing that, he hid it under a stone; and, in the same way, whenever in history the Anglo-Saxon has vanquished a wrong, he has always spared one of its heads. He hides it away; he calls it obsolete; but, after lying still for a long time, up it starts again at the call of some ambitious partisan, all through this curious disinclination to eradicate a wrong utterly and leave no germ of it behind. The chief art of reform is to be radical. No unrepealed statute is ever obsolete. The head of every wrong lives still while its principle is spared, and though it seem antiquated one day, it may be a "spirited policy" the next.

The evil that is vanquished, but not slain—only hid—has not only power of recurrence, but of self-multiplication. Where one head fell, behold two, or perhaps more. The resuscitation of irresponsible power anywhere is accompanied by a corresponding revival of old oppressions generally. Vernacular press laws in India, Turkish alliances, and attacks on free printing at home, have all one neck. If any one had told me ten years ago that I should some day have to defend freedom of thought and of the press in this metropolis of civil liberty, I should have been as much surprised as if he had predicted that we should all be hunting wolves out of Epping Forest. I should have said to him, "Why, John Milton settled all that over two hundred years ago. Do you mean to say that the time can come again when a man can personally suffer for his honest thought and its honest publication?"

Such a prophet ten years ago might, indeed, have reminded us of how often the oppression of intellectual liberty had recurred since Milton's time; of how long Richard Carlile and his sister lay in Dorchester Jail for selling Paine's works; but he would have been rash, indeed, had he predicted that we should live to assemble in our free societies, hard by a prison in which an innocent Freethinker languishes, and beside a court which robs a mother of her child because of her metaphysics.

But now, let me say, such a prophet would have been only half right. Though oppression of thought has returned, it has had to put on such a disguise that it cannot be universally recognized. It is, I believe, true that it would be impossible at this day to punish a man for his opinions in any such open way as Richard Carlile and Holyoake were punished. I will not say such oppression will never return, for, as our Prime Minister once said, the impossible is always coming to pass; but, at any rate, no attack on free thought or free printing, open and aboveboard, could now be made without very serious and general resistance. This recent oppression has, if you will allow me the expression, sneaked back; it has subtly complicated itself with the moral feeling of the community; it has hid its horns under a white cowl of purity; it has masked itself as a defender of virtue and suppressor of vice. By so doing oppression of thought confesses that it cannot otherwise succeed even in seizing here and there an exceptional victim.

In the English breast there is but one sentiment higher than that of liberty—the moral sentiment. Nearer to man than his nation is his family, and dearer even than the freedom of his tongue is the purity of his home. As the moral sentiment when educated makes a nation's greatness, when ignorant it becomes a nation's weakness. All history has shown that when oppression has been foiled on every other side, its last resort is to alarm the moral sentiment of the masses, to confuse their common sense with black spectres of immorality. In that fear, that confusion, selfish power has often found a community's vulnerable heel, and there planted its fang. We can see through such masks in the past; we can recognize in many massacres which pretended to defend virtue the concealed hand of vice; but, alas, the lessons of history are not yet wisdom for the people, and the old device may still, it seems, be tried with success. I hardly need remind you that the recent cases in which Freethought has been judicially punished were complicated with moral questions. The priest watched for that opportunity. For years the mother had promulgated her religious heresies; it was only when a moral heresy was ascribed to her that his blow could be struck without recoiling upon himself from every heart in England that knows what is manly towards woman, and what is due to a mother. For years Edward Truelove, as honest a man as any in England, had openly sold the books which sent men to prison in the last generation; it was a book unrelated to the old struggle for free printing, a book apparently involving moral questions, which was adroitly used to confuse the public mind and veil this last stab at the heart of personal liberty.

These things could not have occurred were it not that the public mind is at sea so far as the precise relation between liberty and morality is concerned. The absence from popular discussions of any clear principle by which liberty is distinguishable from licentiousness, constitutes a new and startling danger. For liberty of thought involves liberty of speech, of printing, and of moral action. Liberty is no more sacred when it criticises the creed of the community than when it criticises moral institutions. Freedom of thought were an empty name if it did not carry with it the freedom that brings thought to bear upon the social laws and customs founded on past and fettered thought. "Unproductive thought is no thought at all." The intellect is man's instrument for conforming society and the world to reason and right; and to restrain its free play among the moral and social superstitions of mankind were like folding a living seed in wrappings of a mummy.

Many crimes, it is said, have been committed in the name of liberty; yes, but never one by the reality of liberty. Many crimes have been committed in the name of religion, but they were none the less irreligious. The very common mental confusion which regards things evil as only good pressed too far, is continually shown in the common phrase about "liberty degenerating into license." That is taking the name of liberty in vain, You cannot press a good principle too far. Liberty cannot degenerate into licentiousness; not any more than a diamond can degenerate into glass. Liberty can only be ascribed to a man as member of society, and means his right to seek happiness, to develop his nature, to do his duty, all to the best of his ability—in fact, his right to be a man—without hindrance from others or from the community, to whose well-being he is loyal. By its very essence, therefore, liberty can never mean the destruction of others' liberty, the sway of brute force, or selfish defiance of the public welfare. You may call that recklessness, if you please, or licentiousness, or anarchy, but it has no relation whatever to human liberty; liberty never runs to that kind of seed, but, on the contrary, finds in such the tares and briars that choke its growth.

But how, it may be asked, are we to distinguish the wheat from the tares? how discriminate the licentiousness to be punished from the liberty that is essential?

In the cases that concern freedom of thought and of printing, the Courts have recently given their answer to the question—an answer which, I affirm, cannot be maintained, and which could not be equally applied in any community without bringing on revolution. A man publishes and sells a certain book. Somebody dislikes the sentiments of that book, and believes the perusal of such sentiment would corrupt the community. He asks the judge to restrain his neighbor from circulating that book. The judge calls about him a jury, and asks them if they think the book will tend to deprave public morals. They say, Yes. Then the judge orders the book to be suppressed, and the seller of it to be punished. From first to last, the whole procedure is speculative. It is not shown that any injury has been done; it is not shown, or even suggested, that any evil was intended; it is a decision based upon the powers of imagination, at best; more correctly, perhaps, upon capacities for panic.

Such a decision reverses the chief aim of all real law, which is to protect the weak from the strong, to protect the individual from the brute force of majorities. It changes the jury from defenders of rights to inquisitors of opinion. The judges of Athens put Socrates to death on the ground that his opinions tended to corrupt the youth of that city. The High Court of Jerusalem sentenced Jesus to death on similar grounds. Practical Pilate asked, "What evil hath he done?" but he got no answer, Jesus had done no evil; he had only advanced opinions which the majority considered subversive of the moral foundations of society. And, in short, there is no persecution, no oppression of conscience, no massacre in history, which may not be justified on the principle that you may punish a man for the evils which may be imaginatively and prospectively attributed to the influence of his opinions. Nay, all contemporary discussion of vital problems, all new ideas, are thus placed at the mercy of nervous apprehensions. It is very probable that you might take the first twelve men you happen to meet on the street, and find that, put on oath, they would affirm their belief that the opinions of Dr. Martineau, of the Jewish rabbins, of our own chapel, must tend to deprave public morals. Such doctrines, they would say, by taking away hell, remove the restraints of fear from human passions, and by denying authority of the Bible, tend to destroy the influence of the clergy, of Christianity, and the ten commandments. The same arguments which imprisoned Edward Truelove would imprison any Liberal thinker, if his jury happened to be orthodox, and the same authority which suppresses one honestly-written book would suppress another if it happened to be distasteful to a jury.

It makes no difference that one book deals roughly with moral conventionalities, while another attacks such as are theological. That may make a great deal of difference to our tastes and sentiments, but none at all as to the principle of justice. Every idea must have its influence on morals; whether that influence will be good or evil cannot be determined by any foresight, least of all by the prejudices of those who do not hold that idea, who hate it, and have not impartially studied its bearings. Many of the best books in the world have been pronounced immoral and wicked in their time, and after it; and if the average commonplace of any period, as represented by judges that know only precedents, and jurors instructed by them, be allowed to suppress all thoughts and works that do not merely repeat the prevailing notions, all inquiry is at an end, all progress paralyzed.

What defense, then, has society against obscene books? it may be asked. Are we to allow men under plea of liberty of the press to send forth a stream of pollution into our homes, and corrupt the people?

I answer, No. Every person who is guilty of such an offense should be punished. Many such have been punished and nobody has raised any protest, because they really were guilty. They have never defended their publications. But you must show a man to be guilty before you can safely punish him. The verdict of a jury is not infallible even then; but we need not quarrel about that; it is the best means we can have of discovering guilt. The cases would be very rare where a jury would unanimously affirm wickedness in a man whose life had been upright. Where, for instance, is the jury willing to swear that they believe Edward Truelove to be a wicked, corrupt, and malicious man who for base and selfish ends has aimed to deprave society and injure his neighbors? No such jury could be impaneled in England. In the trial of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, the jury were careful to assert the innocence of the accused and the rectitude of their purpose in publishing the book they condemned. The judge then compelled them to bring in a verdict of "Guilty;" forced them to pronounce guilty persons they had just declared innocent on oath!

Suppose the charge had been one of murder, and the jury had brought in a verdict that though the prisoner had killed a man, it was in the effort to do that man a service, what would have been said had a judge compelled them to find that prisoner guilty of murdering the man he was trying to benefit? Or suppose, instead of an obscene libel, it had been a personal libel; suppose a man charged with printing a libel on another, and the jury declared that the matter printed was not meant to injure, that it was without malice, put forth in good faith and purely for the public good, would it be possible for any judge to turn that into a verdict of guilty—even if the plaintiff were injured—and to punish a public benefactor as if he were a criminal?

There are ordinary civil cases, cases of damages, where the law rightly ignores the question of intent; but it is not so in criminal cases. There, character is involved; there, punishment implies guilt; and it is unjust where there is no guilt. Malice aforethought makes murder, and a guilty mind must equally characterize every blow aimed at social virtue. Where the law is violated, the law is compelled to assume such guilt, because it does not know more than the appearance; but when innocence is proved—when it is admitted—it is criminal to act on the technical and disproved assumption. Such has been the grievous wrong done by the recent decisions, criminal intent being arbitrarily excluded from consideration in each case, when it was the essence of each case.

So much for the persons involved. But let us recur to the books indicted. They may not be to your taste or mine; they may be contrary to our moral views; that is not the question. Have those who believe such views true and beneficial to society the right to advocate and advance them openly? Has society any right to suppress them by force because they are unwelcome to the majority? Once let it be admitted that the publication is in good faith, meant for the public good, entirely free from corrupt motive, and it cannot be suppressed without violation of the fundamental principles of liberty. This would appear at once if such suppression were equitably applied to all works which are liable to the charge of offending the conventional moral sentiment. Goethe, being once in Kiel, was invited to attend a meeting called by some clergymen, for the suppression of obscene literature. He attended, and proposed that they should begin with the Bible. That ended the conference, and it was never heard of again. And that will end all these attempts to suppress books called immoral by prurient imaginations, just so soon as the same measure is meted out to Freethinkers and Bible Societies. Edward Truelove is in jail, but justice sees Solomon by his side and those who circulate Solomon; and St. Paul also, and Shakspere, Boccaccio, Montaigne, Dean Swift, Smollett, Goethe, and many other great men, who were not afraid to write of the facts of nature; nay, many naturalists and physiologists of our time and country would be there with him to-day if equal justice were done. There is no difference between the plain speech in many classic works and in those which have been lately condemned as immoral, and no difference is alleged between the motives with which they are all published.

The book may be very able in one case, very poor in another, but the principles of freedom and right protect them equally. To contend that a book which is decent for the the rich becomes indecent when priced within reach of the poor, is a mere insult to the people; it is on a par with the religion which regards subscribers visiting the Zological Gardens on Sunday as pious people, whereas sixpence would make them Sabbath-breakers.

Unless this nation is prepared to assume that all religious truth has been attained, it must allow free criticism of popular opinions, even though the majority say such criticisms destroy millions of souls. Unless the nation assumes that it has reached the supreme social and moral perfection it must allow free criticism of social and moral customs; and if such freedom be accepted as right, all its results must be accepted. If the honest Malthusian can be thrown into prison for corrupting morals, the honest heretic may be thrown there for destroying souls. In every branch of inquiry errors will arise; that is incidental to the search for truth. But Milton uttered the mature verdict of mankind when he said: "Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength. Let her and falsehood grapple. Who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter. Her confuting is the best and surest suppressing."

Nay, confutation by truth is the only suppression of error. Persecution only fans it into strength by mingling with its smoke the glow of martyrdom. In the present cases, several poor pamphlets have been drawn out of their obscurity and scattered broadcast through the land; and any man of common sense must have known that such would have been the result of attempting their suppression. What, then, are we to infer concerning those who have instituted these recent proceedings? Are we to suppose that they have not the common-sense to know that they would increase enormously the circulation of the opinions they profess to abhor?

I am sorry to say that, for one, I cannot come to so charitable a theory—not even after the blundering ignorance shown by their rigidly righteous lawyers. I cannot believe that this is any bona fide effort to suppress immorality. There are too many signs about it which compel to the sorrowful conclusion that there has grown up among us a society whose original aim may have been to suppress vice, but which has now fallen under control of persons with other aims. It would appear that to these the circulation of many thousands of a book they call vicious is of little importance compared with making a sensation and parading their own spotlessness before the public; and beyond this it is to be feared that a still baser influence has been at work to degrade this association of (originally, no doubt) well-meaning, though weak-minded people. There is money in it. A good deal of patronage and wealth has gone to it in the past, and its agents are highly paid; and if this stream of money and patronage is to continue to flow and gladden the host of agents, they must keep up a show of activity. They must always be attitudinizing as purifiers of society. If the nests of crime and vice are trampled out, and the funds begin to fall low, they must try and make their subscribers think there are nests where there are none; and, knowing well how unpopular Freethinkers are, how few friends they have in high places, they found among them a book which repeated the details of ordinary physiological and medical books—a book whose pages, with all their faults, are nowhere of biblical impurity. It must have brought their secretaries, and their lawyers, and their secret-service agents a golden Pactolus from orthodox purses to thus prove that the society might do injury to Freethinkers under cover of attacking immorality. The old privilege of the orthodox to imprison their opponents—the privilege so loved, but lost—must seem about to come back again, when it has been decided that facts familiar in the libraries of medicine and science cannot be printed by Freethinkers in a form accessible to the people without imprisonment. They know that many of these Freethinkers value their freedom highly enough to go to jail for it, and they are, no doubt, hoping for more victims and a flourishing business with plenty of vice to suppress.

For that organization, which, in its degradation, reveals that most miserable social gangrene, selfishness and hypocrisy, affecting the sentiments of virtue and philanthropy, I, for one, feel only loathing. But there is nothing new and nothing very formidable in that kind of thing, and it reaches its level at last.

Lucifer began, mythologically, as a heavenly detective. He was the lawyer retained by the gods for the suppression of vice; and, from long engaging in that business, he came to love it. When he had nobody to accuse, he was in distress, and went about accusing innocent people. So he was called the Accuser. And then he fell lower still, and went about tempting people to sin in order that he might prosecute them; and then he was called Satan. That was the course of the first Vice Society, and the end of its attorney.

But while we may smile at these traders in corruption, the degree to which they have been able to infect the Bench, and through it large numbers of the least thoughtful people, supplies grave cause for alarm. There are some ugly chapters in English history connected with attempts to suppress conviction—to throttle its expression under pretense of its being wicked or immoral. But we are so far away from those eras that many hardly remember their lesson; which is a pity, for such lessons are costly, and, if forgotten, can sometimes only be recovered at a heavier cost. The lesson taught by every effort to repress honest and public discussion of any subject whatever is, that all such efforts are revolutionary. Every honest man in prison is tenfold more dangerous than fire burning near fire-damp. The majesty of law is defiled when the innocent are punished deliberately with the guilty. Edward Truelove, in prison, has exchanged places with his judges, and his sentence on them, for their most immoral judgment, will be affirmed when their decisions have become by-words of judicial prejudice and folly.

They who menace man's freedom of thought and speech are tampering with something more powerful than gunpowder. They who suppress by force even an erroneous book honestly meant for human welfare, are justifying all the crimes ever committed against human intelligence; they are laying again the trains that have always ended in revelution; and, right as it is to suppress books notoriously meant for corruption, and punish the vile who, through them, seek selfish ends at cost of the public good, even that is a task requiring the utmost care and wisdom. Better that many base men and many bad books escape than that one honest woman be robbed of her child by violence calling itself law, or one honest man suffer the felon's chain from the very hand provided for protection of honesty.

Editorial.

Oh, For Better Employment!

It is a pity that his excellency, Anthony Comstock, has not some better business to attend to than to be lying in wait for unfortunate victims who mean to break no law, and, by his hypocritical, lying, decoy letters, induce them to commit what he calls a crime so that he may be able to throw them into prison, and by the help of the United States Inquisition extort money from them to put in his own pocket. He is a strong, muscular man, and is able to perform many kinds of hard work by which he could make an honest living without taking the $4,000 per year paid him for his unworthy services by his Vice Society and wrung from the unfortunate victims he is able to lay his clutches upon.

It is a pity that he could not feel disposed to do something more for his poor old father and his family of little ones, who are reduced almost to a state of starvation. Mr. Comstock, senior, some years ago, went to England, where he married a second wife, by whom, we are informed, he has several children. Anthony, according to the father's statement, does not like his step-mother, and has demanded that his father forsake her and cease to provide for her; and because his wishes hav not been carried out in this respect, he has refused to further provide for his aged parent. The old man has walked the streets with his toes protruding from his shoes, without a mouthful to put in his stomach for twenty-four hours, with the partner of his bosom and the little children at home without a mouthful to eat, and he begging a quarter from this friend and that who were charitable enough to giv him something to keep body and soul together; and all this while his pious son was receiving $4,000 per year besides the other fat pickings he is able to gather into his voracious maw. We ourselves hav had the pleasure of giving $5 to the aged Comstock to keep himself and family from starving. We know of a number of our Liberal friends who hav given similar amounts. One gentleman of this city has at different times given the old gentleman fully $200, otherwise it is believed the old man would hav starved, while at the same time the pretentious son was busy hunting down unfortunate victims to despoil and thrown into prison.

For the facts here stated we hav sufficient vouchers and would also refer the reader who wishes to satisfy himself to Mr. Thomas A. Comstock himself, who is a resident of the city of Brooklyn. If the son would spare a little of his surplus strength and piety that he now bestows upon those he seeks to ruin, and hav a trifle more sympathy and kindness for his own suffering kindred, it would be much better for all parties concerned.

Whither Are We Tending?

A little over one hundred years ago this government was established upon what was believed to be a perfectly unsectarian basis and upon the highest principles of liberty and equality in religion for every person in it. It was intended that Jew and Gentile, believer and unbeliever, Brahmanist, Buddhist, Mohammedan, Deist, Atheist, pagans of all kinds as well as the believers in the dogmas of Christianity should here find a quiet home and be allowed to entertain their honest views without fear of molestation on account of their religious opinions. When the Constitution of our country was framed it was not intended to lean with any more favor to one system of religion than to another, or to one creed more than another. Among the official utterances and acts by our first President, George Washington, was his signing a treaty with the government of Tripoli wherein he solemnly declared to the representative of that government in the document which he issued that "the Government of the United States was in no sense a Christian Government, and was not based on the Christian religion." The Christian religion of course was freely allowed to exist here the same as all other systems which the people preferred; but the Constitution did not recognize it as being any more true than other systems, nor was it enjoined upon the people to accept or to yield obedience to. To this extent was this true, that the name of the Supreme Being whom Christians believe in; the name of his son whom they believe was given for an atonement and sacrifice; the Bible which they believe was given from heaven to guide men and women to its happy shores, was not so much as alluded to nor recognized in that important state instrument. This very fact has caused modern Christians a great amount of dissatisfaction and unhappiness, and to make up for what they consider this great oversight and defeat they warmly advocate such amendments to the Constitution as will admit God, his Son, and his great letter to mankind, called the Bible, into it, that this nation may be in reality a Christian nation and the government strictly a Christian government, when to not be a Christian would simply imply a loss of all right to the protection of the government and the rights which freemen had before been supposed to be entitled to.

For several decades matters continued on in this way, but a change has gradually come over the face of things. While the general faith in the infallibility of the Christian system of religion has gradually weakened, and the number of doubting and skeptical minds has gradually increased, the power and dominion of the Church hav steadily increased Men hav been forbidden to testify in our courts of justice and to sit in the jury box because they did not believe in Christian theology or the Jewish and Christian deity. Men hav been consigned to prison because they did not possess the requisite faith in Christian doctrines, or were guilty of what is termed blasphemy, or speaking irreverently of God, the Holy Ghost, or their Son. The rule and influence of the Church has increased from year to year until there is now great danger that the old landmarks of liberty will be removed, and the guarantees of liberty and equality for all are about to be removed, and the safeguards of protection for unbelievers will be broken down. It has become easy to arrest leading skeptics and atheists, if not upon a charge of unbelief or blasphemy then to trump up a charge of immorality, indecency, and obscenity which an unconstitutional law has made possible to be done, and to throw them into prison upon this dishonest pretense, while those professing faith in Christian theology may go scot free, though ten times as guilty as the Infidel

All Church property in the country is exempted from taxation, while the unbelievers are taxed the heavier in consequence to make up the deficiency thus produced. Clergymen of the Christian faith, also freed from taxation, are saddled upon the country in the form of chaplains in the army and navy to teach the dogmas of the faith at the expense of the public treasury, which unbelievers hav to do their full share in supplying. Nearly all the places of honor and emolument are given to the professors of the popular faith, and if an unbeliever applies for a position, or offers himself as candidate for any office, the very fact of his want of faith is raised as an insuperable objection to him.

The clergy hav become a great power in the land, and are often the leaders of parties and the formulators of public opinion. Some of them obtain salaries of $10,000 to $20,000 per year for a few hour's service per week, and they are usually found to be in sympathy with the capitalists and monopolists of the country, who are constantly crushing the laboring masses, pressing out their very life-blood, and making paupers and mendicants by the hundreds of thousands, while the rich are steadily growing richer and more exacting upon the downtrodden masses. This unfortunate state of things forbodes great trouble in the not distant future for this fair land. The capitalists are becoming richer and stronger, while the masses are becoming more and more impoverished. The clergy or the leaders among them seem invariably to take sides with capitalists, the aristocrats of the money bags.

An ominous danger which threatens the principles of American liberty is foreshadowed in the doctrines upheld by prominent members of the clergy. Take for instance a letter from the Rev. Mr. Thompson, now in Prussia, and who has been a distinguished clergyman of this city, which letter appeared in a late number of The Independent, in which it was recommended that this government enact measures to prevent immigration of European Socialists to this country on the grounds of their unbelief in the dogmas of the Church and their disinclination to acknowledge allegiance to political, theological, and financial rulers. This is a decided departure from the origina lprinciples of this government, and it is quite sufficient to awaken the liveliest apprehensions in the minds of the true lovers of liberty as to the dogmatic rule that awaits us in the near future.

Of a similar character was a late editorial in the Christian Union, one of the leading organs of the Church, in which it set up the argument that inasmuch as there was no embargo upon the importation of slaves from Africa to this country up to the year 1808, since which time it has not been legal to import slaves, that now the Government has the right and should assume to decide who it does not wish to immigrate to our shores and to say who may come into our country from foreign lands and who may not, implying that immigrants of an objectionable character, or not of such habits or beliefs as may be desired, shall be prevented from entering our ports or becoming citizens of this Republic.

Here are grounds for the gravest apprehensions to every lover of the liberty bestowed upon this country over one hundred years ago. When we see the monopolies of the country—of which the ecclesiastical is by no means the least—we may well look around us and arouse ourselves with well-timed misgivings of what we are coming to and what our would-be rulers and dictators will do to us next—what the next blow at the liberties which we cherish near to our hearts. Let us not be slumbering away our day; let us not sit supinely at our posts and let the boon of liberty too easily be taken from our relaxed grasp. Let us arise in our strength, and, as long as life lasts, defend the rich bequest of LIBERTY. To attend to these existing evils is the legitimate work of the National Liberal League; and it is to be hoped that they may ere long become strong enough to produce a healthy check upon the wrongs here indicated.

ON the evening of going to press the editor of this paper left for Watkins to attend as an indicted criminal the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on the 17th, for the alleged crime of handing Warren Hurd, the brother of Judge Hurd, a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," and taking fifteen cents for it and handing the money to Miss Tilton. He knew not how long he would be absent or what his fate would be. Miss Josephine Tilton accompanied him. W. S. Bell has been at Watkins several days awaiting the trial.

THE editor of The Index is still crying for "Reform. Well, perhaps it is well enough if he is only sincere. It is thought he needs a little reform about as badly as anybody going. Defamers and slanderers should always try to reform.

The Radical Pulpit.

Conscience.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

What we desire we have declared: a religion so plain and clear that the most simple understanding shall grasp it, so strong in its commands that the most obdurate heart shall own its swaydom, and yet so high and pure that the élite of mankind, those choice, rare souls that dwell upon the heights of humanity, shall own it as their religion; nay, shall declare in humility that the scope of its demands far transcends what even they can ever hope to accomplish. And we have found, we have found what we desire. We are like men who have discovered a great treasure and who go about and again and again publish the news of their good fortune. We are like men who have been tossed on the mad sea and who now stand high on the rocks, whence the surges can no more dash them. We are like men who have feared the loss of some dear friend, and to whom their friend has been given back, even from the brink of the tomb. All this have we endured. We have been tossed on the mad sea of doubt; we have seen the friendliest influence of human life in jeopardy—our trust in the good.

If they ask you of our religion, tell them the pursuit of justice, purity, love—this is it.

Among all the possible theories of human life, there is one which will be forever intolerable to the generous heart: the theory that we are mere atoms in a world of dead matter. I see the stone that is thrown up fall back to the earth. I see the same law of gravitation which has caused this simple occurrence display its superb effects among the celestial orbs, binding with golden, invisible cords those worlds on worlds of infinite space as they move to the tones of spheral music, to the symphonies of cosmic harmony. I know how miraculous nature is in the immense, and how miraculous also in the intense; how great is the greatness of the Little, how rich the crystalline form, how graceful the fragile flowers of the field, what a world of swarming, multitudinous life even in a drop of water. Yet whatever there may be great, or astonishing, even awe-awakening in nature, I know that I am somewhat more awful to myself than all of nature besides; I know that I am somewhat greater, somewhat of a different order than the whole world beside; and, though the law of growth and decay has power over us also, though we, too, like the fruit over-mature that falls from its stem, shall fall into corruption, and as the autumnal wind now sweeps the withered leaves through the forest, soon to cover them with snow, so the autumnal winds of age shall sweep us away also to lie beneath the snow of death; yet not wholly are we like these leaves, not wholly does man perish; there is a meaning in our lives that remains after us. To fulfil the moral law, to extend the empire of good; that is the purpose of our being; therefore were we born; and in this we behold the satisfaction, the total dignity of human existence. And so again you perceive that conscience is the pivotal point of our philosophy.

And now the question comes home to us with greater force than ever before; what then is conscience? It is true that in the great practical applications of duty we acknowledge no uncertainty in this respect, we admit of no contradictory theories. We don't allow the malefactor to shield himself behind some quibble of casuistry; we don't allow the man of iniquity to hold up his private judgment against the judgment of mankind; but we oppose to his conscience the general conscience, and condemn him without compunction. If the robber says: I did not rob because of any evil propensity within me, but because I had philosophic doubts whether it was right to rob or not, we will take him before a magistrate and have him sent to an institution where they cure such philosophic doubts, at hard labor for a term of years.

And yet it is true that sagacious men, wise and honorable men, have widely differed as to the rights of conscience. There is one school of thinkers, in the first place, who profess to believe that there is no fundamental principle of conscience, and they point to the variations of the moral judgment of men in different ages, among different peoples and in different epochs, in support of their belief. It is not a difficult matter for one who is well versed in history to bring abundant proof in seeming support of such an assertion. You know that canibalism is not yet extinct among men. There is a tribe existing in the mountains of Hindostan among whom when a parent has grown old and no longer able to support himself, he is slain and devoured by his own offspring. There is another case equally in point, to which I have heretofore referred, that of the English traveler Hunt, who was invited by an African prince to witness the funeral obsequies of his mother. He accepted the invitation and joined the funeral procession, but was surprised nowhere to see the body of the dead. They arrive at the place of sepulchre, the procession halts, and the corpse—the prince's mother—steps forward! The grave is dug, she descends into it, the son places a rope about her neck and is about to strangle her, when the Engiishman, horror-struck, attempts to interfere, and the whole tribe turn against him, and chief of all, the victim herself, and he flies for his life.

The king of Dahomey, as we have heard during the past week, is about to sacrifice five hundred human beings to his idol, and he has no compunctions of conscience, no sympathy for his victims, no remorse for such actions. The most barbarous deeds are committed with the full approval of the conscience of the doer. The chief of the Fiji Islands, who washes the deck of his new boat with the blood of slaves, believes that he does what is acceptable to his God. The Roman Church, which lit its thousand fires of persecution in the Netherlands and in Spain, believed that it did what was acceptable to its God. The most common forms of honesty have been disregarded by nations not at all barbarous or uncivilized. Among the Spartan soldiers theft was considered a venial offense, if an offense at all, and the thief was punished, not for the theft, but for the clumsiness of its execution. The Bedouin Arab, who risks his life to protect a guest when he is under the shadow of his tent, is equally ready to stab the same man when he meets him again on the highroad.

So it is that conscience seems to contradict itself, and only on a profounder analysis does it appear that conscience is not chameleon-like, assuming different hues and aspects among different peoples and in different ages; only on a profounder and subtler analysis does there appear a method which covers all these variations, the unchangeable which perdures and prevails through all these changes.

There is a second school of thinkers, who recognize what the first do not: the fact that there is a fundamental principle of conscience, but who seek it in the wrong direction. We have experienced in modern times a strong reaction against the mediæval spirit. The spirit of the Middle Ages, coarse as it was, rude as it was, tended toward romanticism. What could be more romantic than the devotion of the knight errant to his lady! what more romantic than the elevation, that apotheosis of the lady in religion, which gave birth to the worship of the Virgin Mary! What could be more enthusiastic and imaginative than that spirit which drove the hosts of Europe in eight crusades against the mailed East, in the vain hope of wresting from the hands of the Infidel the sepulchre of the Savior! What could be more dreamy than that spirit which built the old Gothic cathedrals of Europe, through whose painted windows the dim light falls on vaults and tombs and prostrate penitents; those poems built in stone, those mighty piles that tower aloft so white and ghostly, with their tapering arches and their tall spires that yearn into the skies!

But in modern times all this is changed. We are not sentimental, we are practical; we ask of all things their utility; only that is valuable to us which is useful. But we have gone too far in this direction. We have gone too far, I say, when we apply the yard-stick of utility to moral principles also, as though they were wares which could be bought and sold by the ell. We have gone too far when we make the chief criterion of virtue to be its uses. It is selfishness refined; egotism is the new oracle to which they appeal. They say we shall not speak falsely, not because there is some inherent wrong in speaking falsely, but because if all men were to speak falsely, bonds and promises would be broken and we ourselves should be the loser. They say, Thou shalt not rob, not because it is wrong to rob, but because if all men plundered, my plunder also would be plundered. They say, Thou shalt not kill, not because there is a sacredness which hedges about the life of man, but because if the hands of all men were turned against each other my life also would be endangered in such a reign of violence. The selfishness of the individual, dammed in by the selfishness of all, that is what they name virtue, and that is a satire, a sarcasm on virtue, a counterfeit, a bastard changeling put in the place of the divine original. No; the utilitarians have not penetrated to the core of conscience.

Nor have those grasped the whole truth who seek it in the sympathetic side of human nature, the tender impulses of the human heart, the well-spring of our moral judgments. These gentle qualities—pity, tenderness, sympathy—are the sweet, younger sisters of virtue; but virtue is greater than they. Virtue commands us not only to be stern toward ourselves, but sometimes also to be stern toward others, to check the impulse of pity, to forego sympathy, if it so be that the law of right commands us. That alone is what we seek, the supreme law, that is, a more absolute law; then, when the moral life conforms to the supreme law, that is virtue. The law-abiding man, in the deepest sense, is the virtuous man.

In the series of discourses which opens to-day, I propose to discuss these various theories that I have here briefly indicated. I propose to show, in the first place, that there is a uniform standard of right, notwithstanding the seeming testimony to the contrary. I propose to analyze the utilitarian theory and show wherein it fails, and also the sympathetic theory, and to show that it, too, cannot offer us the virtue of conscience. I propose to show why it is we define morality to be the loftiest expression of the law. And then, from the vantage ground of these discussions, we may be able to shed some light upon those moral problems of the private and the public life of the day that agitate men's minds, and to set forth before you in their due order the duties which we owe to ourselves and the duties which we owe to others; the duties that we owe to the living, the duties that we owe to the dead, and the duties which we owe to posterity.

But before we enter upon so wide a field of investigation, it becomes me to endeavor to settle one fundamental and all-important point. It is held that belief in God is the foundation of all ethics, and that without that belief no one can be a truly moral man. Is that true? We have hitherto had little to say concerning the belief in God. What we have said I trust was reverential. It seemed to us far more important to rouse men's minds with words, which should be as blows upon the torpid soul, to an appreciation of the real, practical, moral needs of the present day. That is better, it seemed to us, than to spin out before them the gossamer threads of an abstract and abstruse philosophy which few men's minds are fine enough to grasp. If some one asks me, Dost thou believe in God? I am disposed to resent the insolence of the question; for either he may mean, what are thy thoughts concerning this vast riddle of the universe, and then I may answer him, they are my own, and I have the right to disclose them at whatever time and to whomsoever it pleaseth me, and to those whom I am reasonably certain that they will also understand. Or to him God and Good may be identical, and his question—Dost thou believe in God?—may mean, Dost thou believe in goodness? and then I will answer him, Friend, what heinous crime have I committed that thou dost put this question? But if I were to meet the questioner upon his own ground I should ask question for question—Dost thou believe in God? What God? There are a thousand gods. There is a different god in the mind of every illustrious thinker that has ever expressed his sentiments upon this question. There is one God to the Buddhist, one to the Christian, one to the Jew; there is one God to Socrates, another to Spinoza, another to Kant, and another to Fichte. Now, then, what God? If he answers this, I, too, will answer. But if he seeks to answer, presently he will find himself involved in pathless obscurities, and he will see how difficult it is to define the substance of that whose name men use so glibly. What they mean, we know and agree with; that there is a power around, above, within us, larger than ourselves; an inevitable will that sways the universe; an inevitable will in which we trust, also, that it is wise. Did they say, therefore, the "Unknown God," that were better, that were nearer the truth.

But at present it is not at all a question of the existence of God, or of the truth of any particular conception of deity that is called God. They may be right, I know not, when they say that those cannot be happy who do not believe in a father who not only governs the whole world, but who stretches down his arms to supply our individual needs, who knows our sorrows, who can dry our tears, and who in mansions of light keeps for us our departed friends until we shall all be again gathered, fathers and mothers, parents and children, lovers and their long lost loves. Those who don't believe this may be less happy; I know not. But the question is not now one of happiness.

Will those who refuse to believe that be less virtuous? that is the question. You know my answer. No. Morality is independent of theology, and I believe that can be proven both historically and logically. Historically then, in the first place

There was a time when religion not only failed to help, but actually hindered the development of morality. Religion then meant the worship of nature; nature was deified in all her endless manifestations. But the example of nature should not be followed by men. Nature is cruel. Nature has her sunny orb, but it is true that she also reveals herself to us in terrible forms. Nature shows herself in the devastating storm, and glares upon us in the eye of the ferocious wild beast that springs upon its victim. Nature is in the livid face of the plague which devastates the cities of the Southern states. Those nations who have worshiped nature have invented rites of religion which make us shudder, even to remember them. They dedicated temples to the destroying gods of nature; nay, they dedicated fanes to the lustful goddesses of nature.

[CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.]

So PERFECT were the Egyptians in the manufacture of perfumes, that some of their ancient ointment, preserved in an alabaster vase in the museum at Alnwick, still retains a very powerful odor, though it must be between 2,000 and 3,000 years old.

URANUS, a planet that few hav seen, is seventy times as big as this earth.

Communications.

"The Bible of To-day."

"Out of the heart of nature rolled
The burdens of the Bible old."

The assaults upon Christianity during the last century were the natural result of the rapid growth of mind and its accompanying unconscious cerebration. The then unparalleled rapid growth and mental development of the middle classes was caused by the printing press, which had then begun to lose itself and had partially thrown off its fetters. This rapid growth of the human mind required a different intellectual environment for its life, a different analysis, a different bound set for its limits, than that given it by the Church. There was an intuitive feeling that the Church and the Bible had become not guides, but intellectual prison bars. Very naturally, therefore, Freethinkers and liberators of thought attacked these obstacles to progress all through the last century. Freethought, as directed by Voltaire, the English Freethinkers, our own Thomas Paine, was pointed chiefly at the inconsistences of the Church and Bible. Unbelievers were continually pointing out the contradictions found in the Bible; its limitation, its defects. These reformers did their work well and nobly. The seemingly mighty barriers that then opposed human growth and development were removed or smoothed down. Of late years, however, our best thinkers aim, not so much to show the defects as to show the naturalness, the growth, and the humanity of the Bible, by applying to its explanation the theory of evolution. By this plan (originated and systematized by Max Müller) we hav now what might almost be called the science of "Comparative Religion."

The little volume whose title heads this article, from this standpoint contains, in the most complete and perfect form, the best results of modern scientific religious investigation as far as it relates or pertains directly to the Bible. The conclusions arrived at in this work of Mr. Chadwick are the results obtained by the labors of recent researches in this field of knowledge, and generally admitted to be correct by the best scholars, even those inside the Church. The ability with which Mr. Chadwick has brought the pith of the criticism collected from scores of authors, from many volumes printed in various languages, deserves the highest praise. The book is by far the best summary of the net results achieved by the joint efforts of Strauss, Renan, Kuenen, Max Müller, Matthew Arnold, and a score of other well-known students, as far, at least, as these conclusions help us to know what our Christian Scriptures really are. In this respect Mr. Chadwick's book is a volume of the greatest value both to the orthodox and the skeptical truth seeker.

There is no other book of moderate size and price that contains so much real help to the general reader in Bible knowledge. The nearest approach to it are Mr. Sunderland's "What is the Bible?" recently reviewed in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Mr. Frothingham's little volume, "The Cradle of Christ." The same idea runs through the last-mentioned book, and it is written with the consummate grace and beauty which seems natural to its author. But Mr. Frothingham only attempted to run over the ground with a chain and compass, and here and there drive down a stake. But Mr. Chadwick goes over the same ground with hammer and building tools and classifies geologically the huge masses of debris, rocks, and boulders which lie in such confusion around. He attempts to classify, create order, build up division fences, and erect a beautiful edifice from the materials of the chaotic mass, all of which harmonizes the whole landscape, besides making it subserve humanity.

But quotations from the book will giv a better idea of it than any description.

After stating some general facts admitted by all, for example, that the chronology which is now generally used of the Bible, dates from Archbishop Usher in 1660, that division into chapters and verses were not part of the original Bible, in which there was nothing but one solid mass of words, without capitals or punctuation, the Hebrew even without vowels, the undoubted cause of innumerable errors, the author says:

"Not until 1551 was the Bible printed with the present arrangement of chapters and verses by Henry Stephens, the greatest printer-scholar of that time." . . . "The Jewish division of the Old Testament is into 'the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings.'"

These three divisions do not so much correspond to the chronological order in which the different books were written, "as to their relations to the canon." Some parts of the Pentateuch were long after the oldest prophets, Mr. Chadwick starts with the prophets because, as he says, They "are the bed-rock, the hard-pan" of the Bible, and "on the average the prophets are much earlier than the law." As in the Old Testament our author attached the most importance to the prophets, in the New that division which includes the Epistles he regards as the key to the understanding of the gospels. He arranges the chronology of the Old Testament thus:

1. The oldest written book in the Bible is Amos; date, 878 B. C.; 2. The second in chronological order is Hosea, 785 B. C.; 3. The third in chronological order is Zechariah, 720 and 520 B. C.; 4. The fourth in chronological order is Isaiah, 757 B. C.; 5. Micah, 750 B. C; 6. Nahum, 630 B. C.; 7. Zephaniah, 630 B. C.; 8. Joel, 600 B. C.; Job, 600 B. C., and so on down to Daniel, who, the author says, "if called a prophet," lived only about 165 B. C.

Concerning the growth of the canon, the author explains how the different books of the Old Testament came to be considered "first precious, then sacred." "Before the Babylonish captivity—eight hundred years after the time of Moses—there were no sacred writings in Judea." There were some laws, some of the writings of the prophets, and some historical compositions, "but no special character was attached to them." "In the fifth century the law appeared and soon after came to be considered sacred."

Not long after this Nehemiah made a collection of histories and prophecies, together with part of the psalms that had then appeared:

"Not with any idea of puttting them on a level with the law, but only to preserve them from destruction." Nevertheless they in course of time became to be regarded as almost or quite as sacred as the 'law.' . . . Again as time went on there appeared other writings, and older ones came to be more regarded for one reason and another, and so somewhere along the first century before Christ they were collected, and in another century or two had become to be regarded as almost, if not quite, as sacred as the law."

In several successive pages the author briefly, yet luminously describes the character, date, history, of each of the prophets, how the book came to its present shape. These pages are the most interesting of the whole book. Opening the volume at random we read:

"Zechariah is put down in the Bible at 520 B. C., and this is the true date of the man. His prophecies extend from Chapter i to viii. . . It is not his beyond this chapter. Chapters ix to xi are by a cotemporary of Amos and Hosea 200 years and more before the time of Zechariah, Chapters xii to xiv are by another of the optimistic prophets, whose view of things was too encouraging to suit the prophet Jeremiah. Here is another sign how little critical acumen was invested in the enterprise of collecting and editing the literature of the Old Testament, another warning that we have here no supernatural message, but at best the earnest thoughts of many noble men jumbled together by the careless hands of other men, into a heap which has not yet been, and never can be perfectly assorted."

"The marginal date of Malachi is 397 B. C. It should be about 450 B. C." etc., etc.

The book uses several pages in giving a brief general history of the growth of prophecy on rational grounds, its commencement, its growth, and its decay, Then Mr. Chadwick goes on to say:

"We hav been taught: The basis of prophetism was the Mosaic Law. But the first prophet who mentions the Mosaic law is Malachi the last of the prophets. In the eighth century B. C. there was no Mosaic law in any modern sense. . . . The Pentatuch in anything like its present form was still far in the future: "Deuteronomy more than a hundred years ahead; Prophetism created Deuteronomy," and, we might add, the Pentateuch.

"But what about the wonderful predictions made by these prophets in the far distant future? They made no such predictions. They pretended to make none such. The idea that they did grew up long after they ceased from their labors. They were not soothsayers but preachers of righteousness. . . . Captivity and desolation were to be the punishment of sin; peace and prosperity the reward of righteousness."

Of the Pentateuch in the second chapter the author says:

"It is difficult to believe that less than twenty years ago the denial of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch by Bishop Colenso roused such a storm of indignation as threatened to cost the good bishop his position in the English Church, for at the present time Stanley, the Dean of Westminster, holds his position in the church, one of the proudest too, with absolute security while frankly publishing opinions far more radical than Colenso's. Moreover he has the scholarship of the Church on his side, and hundreds of the lower clergy."

But in America the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch is commonly assumed in all Evangelical churches:

But it is now tolerably certain "a very different matter from the imaginary Pentateuch of our popular Christianity which is a book made by Moses at one cast 1450, B. C."

It was really made up of fragments the last of which was brought together about 450 B. C. . . The Pentateuch was not a manufacture but a growth, a growth of many centuries.

According to popular conceptions to Moses is attributed a lofty spiritual monotheism, and the promulgation of every legal precept in the books of Deuteronomy and Numbers and Leviticus.

Of this the author of the book before us says:

"The scientific study of the Bible leads to conclusions very different from these. He learns that Monotheism of patriarchal times was purely imaginary; a reflection back upon those times of men's beliefs who lived centuries later, The religion of Israel, like that of every other people, began in fetichism pure and simple, in the deification and worship of petty natural objects, trees and stones. These trees and stones were afterwards adopted into the higher faith, and interpreted as monuments set up in honor of Jehovah or as marking the right of some appearance of deity to man."

In tracing the growth of the belief of one God and the history of the Pentateuch the author observes:

"Not amid the thunders of Sinai, but amid the thunders of Babylon was the law delivered, and not to Moses but to some daring innovator."

The conclusion of this chapter has these words:

"We hav here in these Old Testament histories no supernatural writings. More natural were never written; nor more human either. They are human in their errors, in their false pretensions, in their thousand imperfections, but also in their grandeur and simplicity. . . And so with religion. It is no ladder let down. It is no supernatural revelation. It is built up from earth with various blunder and mishap. It is an evolution, step by step from small beginnings to such conclusions as are still more remote."

"But as for the principal idea which has been forced upon us—that the religion of Israel was not a ladder let down from heaven, but one that was built up from the good solid earth—for this I offer no apology. A hundred times more rational, it is a thousand times more beautiful than the idea it displaces. It makes the religion of Israel of a piece with the other great religions of humanity, and with the universal order which by a million million infinitesimal variations has been evolved from primeval chaos."

Mr. Chadwick's book from its plan seems as though it might hav been written, not only from the standpoint of the new science of comparative religion and evolution, but also from the standpoint taken by the "Religion of Humanity." But while we are told there is a society in New York, we never hear from any of their individual members. Mr. Chadwick is certainly not a Positivist, for he is minister of the "Second Unitarian Church in Brooklyn." The summing up of the whole matter of this book may be made in these verses:

"Slowly the Bible of the Race is writ,
And not on paper leaves, or leaves of stone;
Each age, each kindred adds a verse to it,
Texts of despair or hope, of joy or moan."

EDWARD W. SEARING.

Resolutions for the Next Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I present this for the consideration of the next session of the Liberal League of which Elizur Wright is President.

WHEREAS, There are differences of opinion on the subject of obscene literature, more or less important, and held with tenacity, and whereas it is as unadvisable as it is impossible to waive, postpone, compromise, or suppress them; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the unanimous voice of this Convention that Anthony Comstock ought to be removed from the agency of the P. O. department.

Resolved, That while opinions differ as to the "reform" or "repeal" of the law, all agree that some change should be effected.

Resolved, That those for "repeal" sign "repeal" petitions, and those for "reform" sign "reform" petitions, and that they all be sent in one body to Congress.

Resolved, That any variation of this perfect freedom, either by coercive ballotings, or previous committal of any officers, is wholly subversive of the genius and basis of this organization, and tending to its dissolution. C. T. FOWLER.

Request for a Charter.

CARTHAGE, MO., Dec. 4, 1878.

A. L. Rawson, Esq., Secretary National Liberal League, Sir: I inclose herewith N. Y. exchange for $5,00, and desire a charter for the Carthage Liberal League. I also send a list of the members, officers, and committees. We see no reasonable excuse for the late secession in the N. L. L., and desire to work under the leadership of Hon. Elizur Wright. We hav adopted the form of Constitution recommended by the National League for auxiliary leagues.

E. BUDLONG, Sec'y. C. CONARD, Pres't.

And fifty others.

A Challenge.

CLARINDA, IOWA, Dec. 2, 1878.

Rev. M. A. Gault, Ash Grove, Mo., Sir: I hav just read your attack on Infidelity in the last issue of the Clarinda Herald, and at the risk of being thought "hopelessly blind and incredulous," I deny the truth of any one of the many allegations contained therein.

You declare that we "are waging an uncompromising war against the Christian institutions of our land." Let me answer without one tinge of bitterness that such is a misstatement, born of the arrogance and credulity of one of superstitions' most puerile purblind devotees. For "Christian" substitute "theological," and you are right.

We are fighting the churches because they disseminate error, because they fasten the contaminating filths of superstition upon the mind of man, because they degrade and debase the finer attributes of humanity, and offer us in lieu of life's enjoyments, its benevolent endeavors and their happy results, the frowns of the hollow, heartless thing called God, that sits supreme upon his golden throne, dispensing with a lavish hand the ills and curses of this life, withholding evermore the good, the beautiful and true. Theological institutions are not Christian ones.

We are battling for what we deem the right. We are searching for truth along the highways and byways of life, where the right and wrong, the true and false, lie commingled. We are investigators, accepting for truth nothing that will not bear the rigid test of reason. We throw odium upon no honest, earnest man that treads life's wondrous stage. We accept all for brothers who are worthy of or need a brother's aid, and without pausing to inquire what their religious convictions may be.

Again you assert "the Bible is an indispensable factor in the elevation and enlightenment of the world." I deny that, since it can be shown by all who dare to think that much of the woe, want, war, and crime that hav cursed humanity in the past, as it is doing in the present, is directly due to the influence of the Bible, and those who hav bowed to it the suppliant knee. Many of its most prominent advocates are a byword and reproach to the name of man, and many of them would hav received no more than their just deserts, had they been incarcerated in a felon's cell or expiated their crimes with their lives.

That the Bible is but the work of man any one may see if they will but read it without prejudice, and hav the feeling of worship obliterated from the tablet of the mind. It contains so much that is cruel, demoniacal, and revengeful in its nature; it is so contradictory in its statements, so vile in language, and often in sentiment, that to believe it the word of God we must undo and eradicate all that is noble, pure, tender, and sympathetic in the great, warm human heart.

Those who do accept it as such hug to their bosoms the vilest error that ever crossed the threshold of thought and polluted the temple of the mind.

That the public may hav opportunity of judging between my religion and yours; that they may decide for themselves which one is but the "baseless fabric of a dream," and subversive of the general weal of society, I respectfully invite you to meet me at any time and place you see fit, to publicly discuss the following question, viz.: "Is the Bible a divinely inspired volume, and is it calculated to improve the moral condition of the race?"

Hoping that all preliminaries may be speedily arranged, I am yours for liberty of thought,

WM. OSTIN HUTCHINGS.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 21, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

Our Third Arrest.

On the 10th of the present month, at 3:45 P.M., while sitting at our table in our office, performing our editorial duties, Deputy United States Marshal Fritz Bernhard entered the room and informed us that he had a warrant for us, and that we must accompany him to the United States Court-rooms. He said it was one of Comstock's cases, and one of the kind he disliked to hav anything to do with. He is the same marshal who arrested us thirteen months ago. On each occasion he treated us courteously, saying that, while he regretted having such kind of work to do, he was only discharging the duty imposed upon him. Upon looking over the warrant we perceived that we were charged with having deposited in the mail an obscene, lewd, and lascivious book, called "Cupid's Yokes," thereby "sinning against the peace and dignity of the United States," etc., etc.

There was nothing for us to do but accompany the marshal, which we did, after giving a few instructions to our assistants. Anthony Comstock did not accompany the marshal this time to arrest us, as he did last year, but sent up his first lieutenant, Joseph A. Britton, whose name we hav had occasion to mention before. He did not enter our office, but patiently waited at the entrance of the building, probably to render assistance if we attempted to escape or offer resistance.

We were taken to the rooms of U. S. Commissioner Shields, where we were soon joined by our attorney, T. B. Wakeman, and our bondsman, E. B. Foote, Sr., M.D., and his son, E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. In a reasonable time the bond was prepared and was signed by Dr. Foote and ourselves. The amount of bail required was first placed at $5,000, but Mr. Wakeman convinced the District Attorney that it was unnecessarily high, so it was reduced to $3,000. While the papers were being prepared, Anthony Comstock came into the room looking as happy as a clam at high water. While there he gently whistled the pious tune, "The Sweet By and By," and doubtless felt that to this extent the "sweet by and by" had come—he had accomplished another arrest of the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with a fair prospect of getting him into prison and having him fined heavily, a part of which fine he would hav the pleasure of placing in his own pocket. He was soon followed by his ubiquitous aide-de-camp, J. A. Britton, who looked nearly as well pleased that the game was so nearly bagged.

As Comstock passed by where two of our employees were standing watching the proceedings, one said to the other, "There goes old Comstock." The remark, though made in a whisper, was heard by the party about whom it was made, and he halted abruptly and said: "What is that you say, sir?" To which the reply was made: "It is none of your business what I said." "But you spoke my name." "I will speak it again if I see fit, and you cannot prevent me." To which the authoritative Comstock rejoined: "None of your impudence here. If you hav any more of it I will kick you out into the hall, you dirty loafer." The young man thus addressed by the pet of the Y. M. C. A., deemed it best to discontinue the sparring, and preserved silence. The little incident, however, shows the insolent, overbearing character of Comstock, who, while possessing immaculate purity himself, is capable of scenting impurity acutely in others.

This case was gotten up in Anthony's usual style of decoy, intrigue, and falsehood. In laying his trap for us, he last month wrote the following fictitious letter, which reached us by regular mail.

GRANVILLE, N. Y.

SIR: I am a constant reader of your paper that I get each week from a friend. So you see I keep up with the trials you have gone through i hav not much ready money but perhaps in an indirect way I might be able to help you by getting subscriptions for some of your works. I dont feel able to giv outright but it may help you in ready money if I send my might for some of your books. I thought to use about $5.00 but cant spare quite all to-day. Knowing that you have appealed several times for help I have a little sum to send you. As I say I cant afford to giv outright but so you may send me books in place and accept the will for the deed. I would like to get a copy of cloth bound Champions of the Church $3.00 a copy of the Bible abridged for 30 cents and a copy of that Heywood book you advertise Cupid's something or other you know what I mean. I send three and a half dollars and if that aint enough I will send the balance when I get the books. I wish I only had three hundred times the amount but I haint.

Please address plainly so no thief will steal, you know who I mean. G. BRACKETT, Box 202.

Granville N. Y. Washington Co.

The books ordered were duly wrapped and mailed. This falsehood and hypocrisy on Comstock's part was unnecessary, for had he written like a man in his own name, or visited us in person, he would hav been served just as well. We hav not been selling any of our books "on the sly," but openly and above board. We hav served all who wished our publications; we hav furnished our books to all who desired them without fear or timidity. We hav sold "Cupid's Yokes" because our patrons wished it, and because, as an American citizen, we considered we had a perfect right to sell it. We do not think it is in any sense an obscene publication, and to this opinion tens of thousands of the best men and women of our country will giv their sworn testimony. It is simply an earnest and honest argument in favor of a change in the existing order of things in the relations of the sexes. The views advanced may not be the true theory that is to elevate the race, and the publication may not, according to the judgment of many, be, in all respects, in the best possible taste; but it was written by an intelligent, upright, moral gentleman, and is couched in proper, well-selected language, and does not contain an indecent or improper word. Nor is it calculated to inflame the passions of the young. It is a dry dissertation, uninteresting and unattractive to young people.

It has never been deemed a necessity in authors and dealers that the works they write or sell should just correspond with the views of any particular class or any particular church. A writer has been thought to be perfectly free in this country to advocate and defend any theory or doctrine in theology, philosophy, morals, politics, or any other field, whether it was in keeping with popular opinion or not. And it is simply an outrage upon the rights and liberties of an American citizen to arrest him, throw him into prison, deprive him of his liberty, despoil him of his property, and rob him of his good name among his fellow-men because his views are in advance of or divergent from other thinkers or writers. Such treatment would be disgraceful to Russia, Turkey, or Tripoli, and much more the country which claims to be the freest, the bravest, and the most tolerant on earth.

Can it be possible that the government of this great nation has absolutely descended to the ignoble position of confining men in prison and depriving them of their rights and property for the opinions they hold and disseminate? Shall it be handed down to posterity that the Government of the United States in the last quarter of the nineteenth century imprisoned men, robbed them of their liberty and their honest gains for opinion's sake, or because their views did not suit such a man as Anthony Comstock? Shall it be recorded on the pages of history that this great government employed its attorneys, its marshals, its judges, to hunt down, harrass, and rob unfortunate victims who cannot think according to the prescribed rule, at the beck of the modern Matthew Hopkins, and to place their money in his pockets? If this is really so; if our government has no higher duty than that, no nobler mission to perform, it had better discontinue its existence. It had better disband its army of pensioned leeches and yield up to the people again all the power it has taken from them. When a government makes it its business to deprive subjects of their liberty instead of protecting them in it, it is time it ceased to be a government. If the American government is to retrograde into setting up a censorship over the rights of the people and in aiding spies, detectives, decoyers, and intriguers, its days of usefulness are past and the quicker it closes its career and gives place to a juster and truer government the better for the people. Such a rule was never intended by those who founded the American republic. It was never intended by the man who penned the Declaration of Independence, by the man who marshaled the forces of the struggling colonies or by the half-fed and half-clothed soldiers who achieved the independence of this Western world from the yoke of the British tyrant, to lay the foundation of a government which should imprison and despoil its subjects because their views and opinions did not measure acceptably by the gauge established by the Church or its modern worthless, insinuating, meddlesome agent.

There can be very little doubt that the arrest of the editor of this paper three times within thirteen months upon the charge of selling and circulating obscene literature has been simply because he is an unbeliever in current theology and cannot accept the claim that an all-wise and all-good Deity begot, upon the person of a Jewish maiden, a son equal to himself in age, power, and wisdom, and then allowed his arch-enemy, the devil, whom he had originally created with the power to frustrate all his designs, to put his Son to an ignominious death to save a moiety of the aforesaid God's creature's from the eternal fires of hell which the devil keeps up to carry out God's purposes, by roasting to the latest moments of eternity countless billions of poor unfortunate wretches who were neither accountable for their existence nor their ability to accept a creed which nine-tenths of them never even heard mentioned. Who can doubt that, had we been an active member of some orthodox church, and paid one to three hundred dollars per year to a well-fed priest who every week doles out to his hearers the old dogmas and fables that the pagans of the eastern world taught and believed in from three to five thousand years ago; that had we exercised in vocal prayer and worn a long, sanctimonious face, we would not hav been arrested for obscenity? We could hav sold thousands of "Cupid's Yokes," and even thousands of copies of the Bible, which, at the very lowest estimate, contains a thousand times more obscenity than can be found in "Cupid's Yokes," and no employee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and no agent of the holy Society for the Suppression of Vice would hav ever arrested or dragged us to prison. Perhaps it is unfortunate that we cannot believe what we cannot believe, or that we hav not the necessary hypocrisy to pretend to believe it, which, for all practical purposes, would answer just as well, for then we might be respected by the pious leaders of society and those who count themselves eminently respectable. We hav had the candor to avow our honest convictions. And while that makes us unpopular with the larger portion of the community, it is no reason why we should be oppressed, torn from our family, be covered with ignominy, and be cast into prison.

There are a great number of creeds and a great diversity of opinion in this country; all imaginable grades of believers in a God and a devil, some believing in a hell and some not, some believing that the little Jewish maiden, Mary, was the mother of God and some that she was not, some believing that priests hav the power to forgiv sins and perform miracles and some that they hav not, some that bread and wine are actually, by the mere manipulations of a priest, transformed into the body and blood of a person who died over eighteen hundred years ago, and some that they are only symbols of the long since departed body and blood; Some believing in the indispensable importance of baptism, others that it is of no special consequence; some that holy water possesses most remarkable powers; while others discard it altogether, and so on to the end of a long chapter; all sorts of things are believed in by some and disbelieved in by others. All or nearly all hav their organs or mouthpieces through which they can make their opinions known to the world. All are supposed to be entitled to an existence and all are left free to advocate what they believe. Shall not heretics and unbelievers hav the same rights to hav organs and publish their opinions as those possessed by their oponents, whose capacity for believing is a hundred times greater? Shall not the publishers of such papers and books be allowed to quietly pursue their way and not be thrust into prison and hav their property and effects stripped from them the same as those who differ from them? Is there any kind of equal justice in giving one class perfect immunity in printing and circulating what they please and denying the same right to others?

The indictment which the Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court presented against us, and to which Ex-Governor Stewart L. Woodford appended his signature, is indeed a formidable document; and that all our readers may judge of it for themselves, we will place it before them:

Circuit Court of the United States of America for the Southern District of New York in the Second Circuit.

At a stated term of the Circuit Court of the United States of America for the Southern District of New York in the Second Circuit, begun and held at the city of New York, within and for the District and Circuit aforesaid, on the second Wednesday of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight and continued by adjournment to and including the tenth day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight.

Southern District of New York, ss: The jurors of the United States of America within and for the District and Circuit aforesaid, on their oath present that D. M. Bennett, late of the City and County of New York, in the District of Circuit aforesaid, yeoman, heretofore to wit: on the twelfth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, at the Southern District of New York, and within the jurisdiction of this Court, did unlawfully and knowingly deposit and cause to be deposited in the mail of the United States, then and there, for mailing and delivery, a certain obscene, lewd, and lacivious book called "Cupid's Yokes, or the Binding Forces of Conjugal Life," which said book is so lewd, obscene, and lascivious that the same would be offensive to the court here and improper to be placed upon the records thereof; wherefore the jurors aforesaid do not set forth the same in this indictment; which said book was then and there inclosed in a paper wrapper which said wrapper was then and there addressed and directed as follows, that is to say:

G. BRACKETT, Box 202, Granville, N. Y.

Then and there against the peace of the United States and their dignity, and against the form of the statute of the said United States in such case made and provided.

SECOND COUNT.

And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that D. M. Bennett, late of the city and County of New York, in the District and Circuit aforesaid, yeoman, heretofore to wit, on the twelfth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, at the Southern District of New York, and within the jurisdiction of this Court, unlawfully and knowingly did deposit and cause to be deposited, in the mail of the United States, then and there for mailing and delivery, a certain publication of an indecent character, called "Cupid's Yokes, or the Binding Forces of Conjugal Life," which said publication is so indecent that the same would be offensive to the Court here and improper to be placed on the records thereof, wherefore the jurors aforesaid do not set forth the same in this indictment; which said publication was then and there inclosed in a wrapper, which said wrapper was then and there addressed and directed as follows, to wit: G. BRACKETT, Box 202, Granville, N. Y.

Then and there against the peace of the United States and their dignity, and against the form of the statute of the said United States in such case made and provided.

STEWART L. WOODFORD,
United States Attorney.

This is, indeed, a fearful charge to lay at the door of an old man whose intention has been to do no harm to his fellow-men nor to the Government under which he lives, and which all his life he has labored to support. But the conviction will strike the minds of thousands of people that it is over-drawn and that it transcends the truth. It is extremely defective in not pointing out, definitely, the language which the pamphlet contains that is offensive to the peace and dignity of the United States; that is injurious to the morals of the people, and that can truly be classed as obscene. These questions forcibly press themselves upon the attention of the reader: Is the language of this indictment true? How could twenty-three honest men place their signature to such a document, or empower their foreman to giv their sanction to it? How could Ex-Governor Stewart L. Woodford, who is a man of intelligence, respectability, and high moral character, ever write such a statement or place his signature to it after his assistant had written it?

Can it be possible that his connection with the Young Men's Christian Association, with the Society for the Suppression of Vice, or with an orthodox Christian church hav anything to do with it? Is it really true that Mr. Heywood's pamphlet called "Cupid's Yokes" is obscene in the strict sense of that term? Is it really so foul and indecent that it cannot be placed upon the records of the Court? Are its judges, its marshals, its clerks, and its attorneys, and not to leave out the arch-instigator of all this business of persecution, is Anthony Comstock—who some seem to think runs the Court to which we are alluding—are all these so pure and delectable that they would be seriously damaged if the offensive passages from "Cupid's Yokes" were named in the indictment and placed upon the records of the Court?

Not less than fifty thousand people hav read the little pamphlet, and not the smallest number of these hav been offended with its language or with its manner of treating the subject; and not one has ever been heard of who was ever injured by reading it, while thousands hav acknowledged that they hav been interested and enlightened by the perusal. It is believed that not one person has been corrupted by it—not one damaged to any serious extent. Is it true, then, that its language is so foul and obscene as to corrupt the Court before which we are cited to appear and surrender up our liberty and our rights? We again ask, How could Stewart L. Woodford ever place his name to such a statement?

We think we hav a right to demand through our attorneys, and from our chair while we sit here by our table, that the offense we hav committed against the laws of our country, the peace and dignity of our Government, and the welfare and the happiness of the people of this land, should be plainly and fairly set forth in the indictment under which we are to be tried and avowedly to deprive us of our liberty and our property. We insist that it is a species of dishonesty, of subterfuge, to set up a claim that the language of the tabooed little pamphlet is so gross and obscene, so foul and indecent as to preclude its being placed on the records of the Court. It is calculated to do us great injustice by prejudicing the Court and the jury of our peers and the people of our country against us. We insist that there is not a sentence or a word in that pamphlet that could not properly be read in the most refined circles, for its language is well selected and the subject treated is handled in a careful manner. We fear there must be a slight defect in the correct apprehension and moral perceptions of the person who solemnly declares that essay to be so foul and obscene as to preclude its being read in a court of justice.

What are the facts as to the decency of the language of "Cupid's Yokes," as compared with the standard literature of the last two centuries? Shakspere's writings which are upon almost every man's table, or ought to be, contain at least a hundred times more obscenity than "Cupid's Yokes." The writings of Boccaccio, Montaigne, Rabelais, Fielding, Byron, and many other authors, all of whose productions are in the libraries of the most cultured and moral people of the land, and which are sold by every respectable bookseller in the country, contain more than a thousand times more obscenity and indecency of language than can be found in the pages of "Cupid's Yokes." And yet those works are not tabooed. Governors, judges, attorneys, clergymen, and ladies in all grades of our best society own and read the productions of these writers, and nobody complains, no bookseller is indicted before the courts of the country, and his liberty, his property, and his reputation taken from him for selling those works. And the "Holy Bible," the Jewish Scripture, the volume which millions of people believe was either handed down from heaven, or transmitted in detail through the brains and hands of certain holy and inspired individuals, and which has been printed and circulated by millions and millions of copies on which millions and millions of dollars hav been expended in printing and binding, one or more of which is in every man's house, which are constantly kept before the youth and children of the land in schools and Sunday-schools, and which they are enjoined to read every day of their lives—this highly extolled volume, which is by many absolutely worshiped, with the highest veneration their nature, contains more than a thousand times as much obscenity, as much indecent and indelicate language as can be found in "Cupid's Yokes." If any one doubts this statement, let him read the two critically, and compare them. Let him read the private letter of Parker Pillsbury to E. H. Heywood, in which the Bible and "Cupid's Yokes" are critically contrasted, or let him procure a copy of the "Holy Bible Abridged," in which a portion of the broad and objectionable passages contained in the original volume are given.

Then why, we would ask, is all this severe attention paid to us while thousands of others more guilty are allowed to pass unnoticed? Why are we arraigned before the highest criminal court of our Government? Why does Anthony Comstock, the salaried agent of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, seek us out and single us out for prosecutions? Why are the marshals of our Government sent to tear us away from our business and from our family to incarcerate us in prison? Why is our reputation, which we value as highly as President Hayes or Judge Benedict does his, thus blackened and besmirched? Why do learned district attorneys, who are sustained by the people's money, exercise their talents and industry to humble us before our fellow-beings by trying to show us guilty of gross crimes and worthy of prisons and fines? Why do they thus seek to blacken and destroy the good character and name which we hav been struggling three score years to build up? Why is all this injustice done us? Is it because we are absolutely worse than our fellow-men, or hav committed greater offenses? No, by no means. It is simply because we are an unbeliever in the system of religion which prevails in our land; because we cannot accept the same dogmas and legends that they do, because we hav the independence to avow and defend unpopular opinions and because we publish a journal and books and pamphlets that militate against the current religious notions, and because we hav the temerity and honesty to avow our settled convictions on religious subjects, and giv reason for the faith that is in us. For this we hav been sought out by the minions of the law; for this it is that the mercenary, vindictive, and persecuting Comstock pursues us; for this the prison doors are opening to receive us; for this we are to be deprived of our liberty, our property, and our good name; for this our business is to be destroyed and our labors of years scattered to the winds. And all this in the United States of America, which proudly claims to be the freest and purest government in the world.

Who can doubt these facts? Who can believe that had we been allied with some orthodox church, and bowed in acquiescence to its dogmas and behests, we should ever hav been disturbed for selling or mailing a copy of "Cupid's Yoke's," or for anything else we hav done? Had we been a professing Christian, would Anthony Comstock hav appeared before the U. S. Grand Jury against us? Would the U. S. Marshal hav been sent for us? Would our case hav been pressed forward with evident prejudice and injustice? Would the learned Christian District Attorney hav pronounced the little pamphlet, which we sold for the accommodation of our patrons and friends, to be obscene and vile and worthy of casting us, in our old age, after passing an honorable life, into a detestable prison, with thieves, robbers, and murderers? No, no, no! Had we even professed to be a believer in the doctrines of Christianity, none of these indignities, none of these wrongs, would hav been visited upon us. We are a despised but honest Infidel, and for this very reason all this injustice is heaped upon our head. And all this government, which Washington and Paine and Jefferson toiled and struggled, at the peril of their lives, to establish, that the utmost and entire freedom of opinion should always be not only tolerated but upheld and defended in this land, is invoked to crush us. These men were unbelievers in the domas of Christianity as much as we are. They were unbelievers in the fudnamental doctrines, and in the divinity and truthfulness of the system. But they were men to whom we all owe much, and it should not be forgotten that they aimed to establish a free government which should never prosecute and imprison for opinion's sake.

Will the liberty-loving people of this country stand idly by and see the high objects for which this Government was established dishonored and trampled under foot? Will they not insist that full and entire liberty of thought, free speech, a free press, and free mails shall still be maintained? The people of this country are the jury before whom we wish to be tried, and to them we appeal for justice. The law under which we are arraigned was enacted under mistaken notions, and was procured by surreptitious means, and is really subversive of the highest liberties of the people. It is a commentary upon the intelligence, and liberality of many people, and on some, even, who claim to be teachers of Liberality, that these unjust laws are upheld and defended. By virtue of these laws we are now under arrest and under bonds, and by virtue of them (if it is not wrong to use the word virtue in this connection) we are to be sent to prison, if the wishes of the author of the law are carried out, We shall see what we shall see.

Liberty and Morality.

Particular attention is called to the article on another page by M. D. Conway entitled "Liberty and Morality," an address delivered recently in London. It bears directy upon the operation of the Vice Society in London, which appears to be much like our Comstock Vice Society in this city. The scathing remarks he makes touching the modes and aims of the Vice Society in London applies almost equally well to our New York Society. In speaking of the Vice Society over there he says: "It would appear that to these the circulation of many thousands of a book they call vicious is of little importance compared with making a sensation and parading their own spotlessness before the public; and beyond this it is to be feared that a still baser influence has been at work to degrade this association of (originally, no doubt) well meaning though weak-minded people. There is money in it. A good deal of patronage and wealth has gone into it in the past, and its agents are highly paid; and if this stream of money and patronage is to continue to flow and gladden the host of agents, they must keep up a show of activity. They must always be attitudinizing purifiers of society. If the nests of crime and vice are trampled out, and the funds begin to fall low, they must try and make their subscribers think there are nests where are none; and knowing well how unpopular Freethinkers are, how few friends they hav in high places, they found among them a book which repeated the details of ordinary physiolological and medical books—a book whose pages, with all their faults, are nowhere of biblical impurity. It must hav brought their scecretaries and their lawyers, and their secret-service agents a golden Pactolus from orthodox purses to thus prove that the society might do injury to Freethinkers under cover of attacking immorality. The old privilege of the orthodox to imprison their opponents—the privilege so loved but lost—must seem about to come back again when it has been decided that facts familiar in the libraries of medicine and science cannot be printed by Freethinkers in a form accessible to the people without imprisonment. They know that many of these Freethinkers value their freedom highly enough to go to jail for it; and they are, no doubt, hoping for more victims and a flourishing business, with plenty of vice to suppress."

This is emphatically true. It is MONEY and the glorification of their societies that prompts the Paul Pry agents to go to the lengths in decoying victims that they do. How long does anybody think Anthony Comstock would trouble himself about immoral matter passing through the mails were it not for the fat salary and the rich pickings he makes out of it, and the lionizing and praise which the Y. M. C. A. and the Vice Society giv him for the great amount of vice they suppose he suppresses. The most pitiable thing in the whole business is to see the Government and courts of the United States degraded by doing such miserable and contemptible kind of injustice. May the day come when it will not be so. Let every person carefully read Mr. Conway's discourse.

Just a Word.

We do not wish to beg from those who are unable to giv, nor do we wish to make an appeal to the Liberals of the country to help defend us in any real wrong we hav committed. But we now hav two indictments hanging over us and demanding immediate trials, for committing no offense in the world but simply exercising the just and legal rights of an American citizen. There are undoubtedly five hundred thousands of persons in this city, two millions in the State of New York, and from thirty to forty millions in the entire country who are quite as guilty of wrong-doing as we are and they are not arrested at all. But we hav been singled out and the hounds of the law set upon us because we are a rock of offense—an outspoken opposer of what we believe to be mythical fables and theological shams and it is wished by our enemies to crush us, to stop our mouth and to break up our business. To defend these repeated attacks and to meet the inevitable expenses money is needed. If we had the necessary means we would not call upon friends for aid, but unfortunately we hav not money, not even enough to comfortably run this paper, and consequently we will need more funds than we hav on hand. We know that many are suffering from hard times and it is with reluctance that we present the mildest form of appeal, but those who feel able and disposed to aid us in resisting the oppression that is brought to bear upon us will, we hope, contribute. The funds so contributed will be gratefully received and duly acknowledged. Contributions may be addressed to the Treasurer of the National Defense Association or directly to the editor of this paper.

We do not ask the Liberals of the United States for half the generosity in this question that has been exhibited in the case of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant in England.

Crowding the Mourners.

Too much even of a good thing is too much, and of a bad thing a little only is too much. Of arrests for obscenity we are decidedly of the opinion that we hav had too much. Three arrests in a year, or a little over, is three more than we want. And to hav two indictments hanging over us at the same time, and being required to put in an appearance at two different courts, hundreds of miles apart at the same time, or at one on one day and the other on the next seems like demanding too much of an old man. We are so constituted that we cannot be in two places at the same time, and with all the vileness which A. Comstock Esq., and the Hon. S. L. Woodford seem to think we are cursed with, we cannot attend two courts at once nor occupy two prisons at once. Come one at a time gentlemen, and we can attend to you the better, and the fun for you will last the longer.

The trial growing out of our Watkins arrest is set for the 17th inst., and it is thought by many that the United States authorities here might possibly hav possessed themselves in patience until they learned the result of the Watkins prosecution; but no, they thought they had the old man on the hip, and that the way was to "giv him the very devil" when they had him at a disadvantage.

The U. S. Grand Jury found a true bill against us on the 10th inst. As soon as practical the warrant was made out, the marshal sent for us, and we were taken peremptorily before the U. S. Commissioner. On the 14th, Mr. Fiero, Assistant District Attorney, served a notice upon us to appear in answer to the indictment against us in the U. S. Circuit Court, Judge Benedict presiding, on Monday the 16th, at 11 A.M., just one day before our trial at Watkins was set for, and if we were convicted here and sentenced, we would be placed in prison at once, and thus be prevented from putting in an appearance at Watkins, unavoidably forfeiting the bail we gave to attend our trial there. This indeed looked like crowding the mourners with undue pressure. It seemed that the trial here at least might be deferred until we could return home from Watkins if we were allowed to do so; but the feeling of the assistant prosecuting attorney seemed to be to railroad our case through on the shortest possible notice, and a very limited amount of mercy or forbearance.

Upon the presentation of the facts by our attorney, together with the statement that he could not possibly attend to the case on the 16th, as at the same hour he had an important case in the Supreme Court of the state which urgently required his attention, our case was put over for a few days.

Our persecutors certainly evince a disposition to treat us with the greatest severity, and to visit the direst punishment upon us for committing no crime at all; but in the name of decency, honor, and justice we ask them not to take "snap judgment" upon us, but giv us time to take a long breath or two before they hurry us off to prison, and not require us, though under two indictments at the same time, to attend trial at two places at the same time, or to occupy two prisons at the same time, on the same trumped-up charge. Gentlemen, the eyes of many are upon you. What is now being done in our case will be inscribed on the pages of history, and we conjure you, for the love of justice and righteousness, to giv us a fair and dispassionate trial, and not to "crowd the mourners" by unseemly haste.

THE donations to the Defense Fund are, for lack of room, omitted. They will be given in our next.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Seventeenth Letter.

ARRESTS AND UNBELIEF.

ZION HIL, N. J., Dec. 16, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: I prezume while I addres yu this letter yu ar not sitting in yure offis, preparing matter for yure paper but hav left to appeer at the bar ov justis—az it iz kalled—to anser for the krime ov selling a kopy of "Kupid's Yokes." I shall, however, rite yu just the same az tho yu were at home, and yu kan se it when yu return, or yure printers kan put it in tipe the same az tho yu ware with them.

I se by yure last paper that more trubel haz vizited yu and that yu hav ben arrested agen and stil for "Kupid's Yokes." Now ain't the authorities krowding the mourners a littel too fast? Kant tha wate til wun prosekushun iz dun before tha begin another? And ain't tha attaching a littel too much importanse to that small pamflet? Wood it not be wel to sho whare the small affare haz dun eny harm, before Heywood, yureself and hav a dozen more ar sent to prizon for selling it? I think thare iz reezon in all things, and enuf to sho sum ov it in our kondukt, publik az wel az private. Men hoo hav power plased in thare hands aut to be more kareful than eny other klas ov peepel to watch thare akshuns and se that tha kommit no offense aganst the laws ov justis and rite. Evry man haz rites, the poor az wel az the rich, the dispized az wel az the onerd, and in my opinyun it iz wun ov the gratest rongs thare kan be kommited to deprive eny person ov thare just rites whether ov property, ov reputashun or ov liberty. We are all very sensitiv about having our property taken from us unjustly, but that iz a smaller matter than to rongfully take from him karakter among men or hiz liberty. Theze ar more than welth.

I se this time yu ar arrested by United States authority, and for depoziting wun ov the pamflets in the post-offis. Indeed! Indeed! I shood like to ask if the United States ain't getting short ov biznes to arrest an old man and to deprive him ov hiz liberty, hiz karakter, and hiz munny on so trivial an offense? I thawt that the authoritys at Watkins belittled themselvs grately to arrest 4 persons for wun harmles littel pamflet, but it seems worse for the grate Government ov the United States to employ its marshals, its judges, and its kourts for the same exalted purpus. I wunder if enybody thinks yu did eny damaj to the males by depoziting in it a kopy ov "Kupid's Yokes?" Kan tha think that its few pajes defild or harmd the other books, papers, and letters passing threw the males at the same time? Unless it hurt the male-bags in sum wa or dirtyd the hands ov the klerks, or did sum harm to the other stuf being transported at the same time, I kannot possibly se how the littel book kood do the slightest harm.

Now, Mr. Editur, I think I understand how it iz. Nobody iz so foolish az to think that yu hav dun the slightest harm to the United States Government, to its males, or to its peeple by selling or maling "Kupid's Yokes." It iz nun ov that. Sumbody haz a spite aganst yu and tha hav taken this way to akt it out; and I wil sa that the man hoo iz engagd in this pityful biznes, whether he iz a Kristyan or a hethen, iz akting unfarely and unjustly by yu and aut not to sukseed in hiz undertakings. I hope he wil not. I am sorry to se that that man Kumstok iz again after yu. I shood think he had dun harm enuf to yu alredy without piling up more evil deeds ov the same kind. I only wish he possessd sum ov the Kristyan virtues that he klames to hav, in hiz grate zeel for good.

I must tel yu this arrest haz kauzd a littel exsitement in our family and in our naberhood. It made Suzan and I feel real bad when I red it out loud. I kood se the teers kum into Suzan's eyes, and she brawt her teeth together with extra firmness. She sed it waz the meenest thing she had herd ov for 6 munths. She turned to me before her eyes were dry and sed, "Father, ain't yu going to send that man sumthing to help fite the unekwal konflikt thus forsed upon him?" I replyd, "Yes, my dawter, I wil send him 5 dollars, not that I beleev as he duz on matters ov relijun and fathe, but in these repeted prosekushuns I think a grate wrong iz being dun him, and I don't no ov any better way for me to ade him than to send him a few dollars to help pay the hevy expenses that all these sutes and prosekushuns must kost him." "I'm glad ov it," sed Suzan, "and I wil send a dollar ov my own munny, too. I want to help him a littel in hiz trubel." Thus yu se, Mr. Editur, yu hav 2 frends in Deeken Skidmore's family; even my wife, hoo haz ben konsiderably prejudised against yu bekauz yu publish THE TRUTH SEEKER, feels more frendly than she did. When Suzan told her yu were arrested, the good wife sed it waz too bad; I think it iz meen. If he haz no fathe in our relijun it iz no reezon why tha shood trubel him in this way and kauze him so much anxiety. I think thare iz a better way to treet an enemy than to sue him and make him all the trubel possibel." That iz a good deel for wife to sa, I wil assure yu, and I waz glad to se her take so just a vew ov the matter. She don't reed yure paper, but she heers me reed it aloud, tho she don't like much ov it. I kan se that sumtimes she gets interested and listens with pretty good attenshun. She wil listen to what the paper sez about yure trials.

It iz kurius how kwik news wil spred in a naberhood like ours. Yure last paper had not ben in our house 24 ours before the news had got all around that yu had ben arrested agen. Sum ar glad ov it, and sa it serves yu rite, sum sa tha ar sorry a littel, but the larjest number don't kare enything about it. On last Saturday afternoon Suzan went over to Mrs. Burnham's on an errand, and Mrs. Jones waz thare, and going on about yure arrest at a grate rate. She said she waz glad yu wer arrested agen, and she hoped Kumstok wood keep on with yu til he got yu in prizen for about 5 yeers and make yu stop printing such a wiked paper, and she hoped yu wood looz every sent yu waz wurth in the world, and that yu wood hav to die in the poorhouse if yu did not die in prizen. Mrs. Burnham was milder, but she took sides with Mrs. Jones, and thawt yu deservd all yu got. Suzan told them that if it waz the Kristyan relijun that made them tawk that wa, she did not want much ov it. For her part, she waz sorry for enybody hoo got into trubel, whether tha thawt az she or not. She sed she hoped she never wood get so much relijun az to make her looz all sympathy and pity for the human rase bekauz tha did not belong to the same Church she did. Tha thawt that waz pretty tawk for a deeken's dawter, and that she never wood be an ornament to the Church az long az she felt that wa. Suzan replyd that she did not want to be an ornament to enything or anywhere if she had to giv up the feelings ov kommon humanity. For her part, she took no plezyure in seeing enybody hav trubel, and especially wun hoo waz trying to do about az wel az he new how, and whot he beleevd to be right.

Mrs. Jones sed she was over to the store, and Mr. Perkins, the storekeeper, had reseevd a New York daily which had a short akkount in it ov yure arrest, and tha were tawking about it in the store, several persons being present. Mr. Perkins iz our postmaster, and iz a vary fare sort ov man, altho he duz not belong to eny church; neither duz he kall himself an Infidel. He takes the New York Times, and, on reeding the notis ov yure arrest for sending indesent and obsene publikashuns threw the males, he sed it waz vary eezy to make a charj ov that kind—much eezier than to proov it. He sed it waz a vary rong thing to publish a man in the papers, to go all over the kuntry, charjing him with an offense he had he had not kommitted. It injured a man's reputashun to sirkulate a false charj aganst him more than az tho it waz tru, and a man hoo waz thus rongfully akkused had vary littel chanse to korrekt it. Mrs. Jones beleevd it waz all just so, and she did not kare how much Kumstok held yu up in an unfavorable lite before the wurld.

Thus, yu se, we hav to hav our sa out heer just az wel az yu do in the sity. After a while it wil get to be an old story, when thare wil be littel or nothing more sed on the subjekt.

Yu must expekt a grate meny peepel wil find fault with yu and kondem whot yu do. This will be the case whether yu ar rite or rong. No matter how rite yu ar, if peepel think yu ar rong tha wil kondem yu just az bitterly az tho tha new you to be rong. I prezume yu hav kalkulated upon this and wil guvern yureself akkordingly. Evry man hoo oppozes popular noshuns and opinyuns must expekt to meet a grate amount ov oppozishun and to be kalld a bad or mistaken man. He ma make up hiz mind that he wil be denounsed az a fraud, az immoral, and az wun dezerving ov punishment. I am glad yu ar able to stand up agenst a good deel ov this kind ov thing. It looks now az tho yu wood need all the strength ov this kind yu ar abel to kommand.

Among all the fault that iz found with yu, let me take yu in hand, in my jentel wa. I hav ben thinking for sum time that I aut to tawk to yu about yure unbeleef. Yu seem to hav a superabundanse ov it. In fakt, yu giv sum kolums ov it at a time, and number off the items az a kaptin wood number the men in hiz kumpany. In the last installment yu gav ov the things yu do not beleev, I se tha had reeched over 400, and I don't no but yu wil go on til yu get up to a thouzand. I hope when yu get threw telling us what yu don't beleev yu wil chanje off and tel us a while what yu do beleev. Let me sa to yu that it most makes me skwurm to see how meny things yu find in the old Bible that yu don't beleev, and that yu kan show up so meny kontradikshuns and indesenses. I hav ben reeding the Bible all my life and I never new thare waz so meny plases in it for piking flaws and showing up its inkonsistensys. I don't beleev thare iz wun Kristyan in 10 that realizes thare are so meny defekts in the old book. I wood not be afrade to ventyure 10 bushels ov otes that even our good Elder Goodly iz not aware that thare ar so meny week plases in that divine volume. I must aknowlej that it takes me by surprize to find how meny defekts yu kan sho up, and I wunder how yu find them all. Yu must be pretty good on the hunt. I feel the forse ov the points yu raze, and kannot deny tha ar vary telling. Tha ar well kalkulated to shake the konfidense ov any wun hoo haz not a good stok ov fathe on hand. I find that fathe, even the kind yu mite kall blind fathe, iz vary useful to me in the diffikultys I hav to meet with. I remember wel a happy illustrashun which Elder Goodly made sum time ago when preeching about the importanse ov having the rite kind ov fathe. He sed it wood not do to kunsult the reezon when fathe iz kalled upon, and shood step in and help the sole in its struggles, neether shood we mezure them with ordinary kommon sense, but that we must exersise a living and saving fathe. He sed: "When yu are attakt with a fever and send for yure family fyzishun to kure yu, and he deems it best to giv yu a nawseous dose ov kalomel and jalap, if yu are wize you wil not stop to reezon with him upon the subjekt nor go to work to raze a series ov objekshuns aganst the korse he preskribes, but yu will just shut yure eyes and open yure mouth wide and swallow it like a man without asking kwestyans or arguing the point with the dokter. So, my frends, yu will often hav okkashun to; when a diffikulty arizes in yure path, and yu inkline to stumble over it. When yu meet with matters that do not harmonize with reezon, or that do not kompare with yure kommon sense, don't stop to examine the diffikulty, don't stop to investigate it, dont spend yure time to look it over and over, but az with the kalomel and jalap just shut yure eyes, open yure mouth, and swallow the dose without squeeling or saying a word. A Kristyan haz to do this very often. Thare iz a grate deel in our fathe he iz kalled upon to aksept that will not bare the klose skrutiny ov reezon and investigashun, but if he wishes to be saved he must tel theze to stand aside, and shut hiz eyes and open hiz mouth and swallow them, like a good soldyer ov Kriste." My frend, I hav had to praktis this "swallowing" biznes for meny yeers, and if I had not I feer I wood be az much of an unbeleever to-day az yu ar. It haz ben my salvashun, and iz whot I think wil take me into heven. By a konstant praktis ov it I hav got so that I kan swallow the biggest and nastiest kind of doses, and I wish yu waz more that wa. Why kan't yu do az we do out heer—shut yure eyes, open yure mouth, and let it go down at wun gulp? If yu kood only do that, yu wood be az good a Kristyan az Elder Goodly, Sister Jones, or myself. In that kase yu wood not be so trubled about what yu "don't beleev," and Bruther Kumstok wood not trubble yu. Yu kood beleev enything and swallow enything. The worst ov it is with yure "What I Don't Beleev," I am afrade that will hurt the fathe ov thoze hoo hav not yet got the swallowing fakulty to perfekshun, and to hoom the jalap yet tastes nasty and bitter. I wish yu wood hold on for a while with yure hot shot until tha hav bekum a littel more perfekt in the art ov swallowing. I'm afrade so meny "What I Don't Beleev's" will choke them up so tha kan't swallow. Listen to me in this matter, and I wil kontinu to pra for yu that yu ma be abel to eskape from all yure enemys. Piusly yures, JOEL SKIDMORE,
1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Communications.

Letter from J. R. Monroe to E. H. Heywood.

SEYMOUR, IND., Dec. 6, 1878.

E. H. Heywood, Dear Sir: Yours of Nov. 30th is read. I shall print it, and the slip, too. I feel great sympathy for you. That you should be torn from your little children and wife, your friends, your home, your needed labor—from the bright sunshine and the pure air of liberty, on a pretext so flimsy is most infamous. While I hav said some things against the pamphlet for the publication of which you are deprived of your liberty, dissenting strongly, as I do, from the use of some of the words and phrases used, I still hold that your offense was only against what I consider good taste, and deserved no punishment save the condemnation of those whose standard of "taste" was offended. The idea of fining or imprisoning a man for the publication of such a pamphlet is the most diabolical one conceived since the downfall of the Spanish Inquisition. As to the social relations of the sexes, I see much that is grievous in the accepted marriage relation; much oppression of woman; much slavery and general misery. But still I hold the family is the unit of the nation, and that a happy government must be composed of happy families. The endearments and loved associations of home, of the fireside, must be cherished, must be protected, must be perpetuated. With the study I hav been able to giv the subject, and the lights before me, I cannot now conceive a better relation than the marriage of one man with one woman.

But there ought to be some means devised whereby that woman didn't hav to be murdered by annual child-bearing. The greatest benefactor of our race will be the man who devises some means, not injurious to mother or sentient child, that will enable partners in love's embraces to elect as to results. Two children are as much as any woman ought to be asked to bear. And there is a large class of people who ought not to be allowed to propagate their species, their diseases, their infirmities, and their murderous passions at all. But the trouble is where to draw the line, and to decide who is to draw it.

But my main object in disapproving your pamphlet is to protect Infidels from the semblance even of seeking to overthrow the marriage relation. As Infidels, I don't want them mixed up with any social or political questions, nor to commit them to any of the revolutionary issues. As individual Infidels they can think and act as seems to their judgment best; but, as a body, I hope they will keep clear of any non-essential, entangling alliances. We must show the world that Infidelity (to Jesus Christ) doesn't make men worse, doesn't make them immoral, doesn't make them reckless of their duties to family, humanity, and to country, but that, on the contrary, it makes men better, nobler, braver, more generous, and more manly. I regret much that the obscenity question was ever permitted to find a lodgment in the National Liberal League. I am doing what I can to keep out of the quarrel as it stands, but I hav suffered considerable abuse and misrepresentation. I am trying to pour oil on the troubled waters, and to do what I can to restore peace and good fellowship and unity of action.

I want to sign the petition for your pardon, but hav had no chance. Please cause my name to be attached to that document, if not too late. Yours for humanity, for liberty, and the right, J. R. MONROE.

We are glad that the editor of the Seymour Times is able to take so sensible a view of the situation. It is far better than denouncing with vile epithets those who honestly differ. We hav said before that it is only a matter of time when nearly all sensible people must arrive at about the same conclusion on this question of liberty and constitutional rights. Let it no longer be called "the question of obscenity," but "the question of liberty." Liberals have no need of being frightened at the word obscenity, or to hav it enter into their deliberations. Let all accord to others the same liberty of thought,and opinion that they demand for themselves. Then may harmony and good will reign through all our borders.

The Godly Women of the Bible.—Continued.

BY AN UNGODLY WOMAN OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

When Boaz purchased Ruth to be his wife (Ruth iv, 10, 11), "all the people and the elders said the Lord make the woman that has come into thy house like Rachel and like Leah (God forbid), which two did build the house of Israel." This was the blessing pronounced upon her, a large family, and these godly sisters were introduced as examples for Ruth to follow. The blessing of love, kindness, peace, long suffering, goodness, and truth, which Leah and Rachel did not manifest, was not besought for Ruth as the wife of Boaz, but to populate the earth, as in the case of Rebecca, whose friends shouted after her, as she departed with Isaac's servant, "Be thou the mother of thousands of millions!" (Gen. xxiv. 60.)

Who wonders, when our Christian friends take the Bible for their guide, that they consider child-bearing woman's divine prerogative, and the more children the better, irrespective of quality or virtue? No wonder they fight so desperately, and pass, enforce, and execute the law against the personal right of woman to a voice in this matter. These two women—Leah and Rachel—are held up as examples of procreation. You have had a proof of their conduct in this polygamous connection, and can judge whether it was justifiable even for the sake of a family. Not one expression of condemnation for the bad temper exhibited by the two, not one regret or account of the misunderstandings, do we find in the sacred record. Not a hint as to the bad results of polygamy, but commendations; and statement upon statement that the Lord was a party in every incidental event and was purposely ordering it in detail that he might raise up a holy people whose God should be the Lord. And raise it through such stock! Polygamous, incestuous, lying, deceiving, and cheating of every kind and description! Surely the Lord selects wonderful instruments through which to manifest himself, his power, and his glory, when such characters are chosen as we have scanned, instead of giving us an example of true manhood and true womanhood such as are sometimes visible to-day, in spite of all the perversions of the past, Bible examples included.

Will not our readers peruse Gen. xxx in order to possess exact knowledge of the process that the Lord found it necessary to pursue to transfer the cattle and possessions of Laban into the hands of Jacob, for Jacob affirms, when addressing his wives (chap. xxxi, 5–9), "The God of my father hath been with me. . . . God suffered him not to hurt me. . . . Thus God hath taken away the cattle of your father and given them to me;" and further asserts, in verses 10, 11, 12, that "the angel of God spake unto me in a dream, saying, Jacob. And I said, here am I, And he said ——." But what this angel said in a dream would be obscene in THE TRUTH SEEKER or "Cupid's Yokes," but is perfectly harmless and moral when read in God's plenarily-inspired and only revelation to fallen man to point him the way of salvation, viz., duplicity practiced by Jacob in a cattle-bargain, charged to God as being the author and prime mover, such as would condemn any stock-raiser or Western drover to eternal ignominy. But this stratagem is excused in Jacob by modern Christians under the plea that Jacob's uncle and father-in-law played tricks on his nephew and son-in-law, thus making valid the Old Testament, "an eye for an eye," etc., instead of the Christ-maxim, "I say unto you, love your enemies."

This rapid decrease of Laban's stock and increase of Jacob's soured the old man, and so "the Lord said unto Jacob, retire unto the land of thy fathers and to thy kindred, and I will be with thee." Now this "little unpleasantness" between the two did not estrange the sister-wives from their husband, but the daughters from the father, and the girls said very hard things of the old man to Jacob, ending with, "Whatever God had said unto thee do." So while the old gentleman was—not sheep-stealing but—sheep-shearing, Jacob stole off unawares, carrying away all his cattle and goods, his sons and wives upon the camels, and it was not told unto Laban till the third day. Laban took his brethren and went after him on a seven-days' journey. God in the meantime having an eye on Jacob, as he had promised, was faithful to him, so he "came to Laban by night in a dream and said, Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad." Of course, Laban did not dare to disobey a dream; what Christian to-day would? and yet what Christian would not ridicule a Spiritualist who paid attention to a dream and said it came from God, even though it be for peace, as in this case?

Laban met Jacob, therefore, very complacently, asking him why he stole away secretly and did not give him a chance to kiss his sons and daughters, and send them away with mirth and songs, with tabret and with harp. But this lovely daughter, this amiable Rachel had stolen her father's images, and he discovered the theft before he started after the fugitives, and accuses Jacob with, "Because thou longedst after thy father's house, yet, wherefore, hast thou stolen my gods?" Jacob protested his innocence, for this filial daughter and confiding wife had not trusted her doting husband with her pilfering, so he answered, "With whomsoever thou findest thy goods, let him not live," never suspecting his godly wife, Rachel. Laban knew they were gone, so at it he went with this permission, without any search-warrant, and rummaged "Jacob's tent, Leah's tent, the two maid-servant's tent, but he found them not." Of course he didn't, for they were not there. Finally he entered Rachel's tent. What was now to be done? Like her husband's mother, Rebekah, Rachel was fertile in expedients. She must have been a dull scholar not to have improved her opportunities after having lived with father Laban and cousin-husband Jacob, and was a chip of the old block. She, seeing what was going on, and not being ready to die just then, while the other tents were being searched, "had taken the images and put them in the camel's furniture and sat upon them; and Laban searched all the tent and found them not." Of course he did not, for they were not there. "And she said to her father, Let it not displease my lord that I cannot rise up before thee, for the ——." Please excuse me, dear reader, from further quoting her little lying speech to her old father, for it is only fit for Anthony Comstock, his clique, and the Bible, to which latter you are referred (Gen. xxxiii, 35) for the conclusion of this delectable sentence. This is related as a very smart thing in Mrs. Rachel. Who but she would have ever thought of it?

Now read on, and pray don't stop till you get through the whole chapter, and the next, and the next, and next, till you have finished the history of the family of this remarkable man, Jacob, at the ending of the Book of Genesis.

Read how Laban made a covenant with Jacob, offered sacrifice, ate bread, tarried all night, rose up in the morning, kissed his sons and daughters, blessed them, and departed, minus his gods, though, for this naughty, treacherous daughter did not repent and confess and deliver up the stolen property, even though her husband had entered into a covenant of peace with her father, and the two were reconciled.

Read how "Jacob went on his way and the angels of God met him," when he grew fearful that his supplanted "brother would smite him and the mother with the children" on his return to "his kindred;" how he appealed to the God of Abraham and Isaac, portioned out his family into bands, sent them over the river, remained behind himself and wrestled with God all night, obtained a blessing, though at the expense of a sinew-shrunk thigh, that being the only way God could beat in the match, for when he saw that he prevailed not against him he touched the hollow of his thigh, and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, making him a life-cripple. Poor Jacob.

Read how nobly and grandly injured Esau met him, embraced him, fell on his neck and kissed him, and forgave all his meanness of twenty years standing.

Read how deceitfully, barbarously, and treacherously Simeon and Levi, Jacob's sons, treated the Sheckmites in the case of their sister, Dinah (chapter xxxiv); how God Almighty again appeared to Jacob, or Israel (for in the wrestling match his bravery so won the favor of God that he changed his name from Jacob to Israel; "for as a prince hast thou power with God"); how Rachel died and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem; how Reuben, Jacob's first-born son, played a naughty trick with Rachel's maid, "Bilhoh, his father's concubine, and Israel heard it;" and it so affected the patriarch of two wives and two concubines that he twitted Reuben of the transgression upon his death-bed in no unmistakable language (Gen. xlix, 3, 4). What else could he expect?

Read how Jacob came unto Isaac, his father, at Mamre, for the poor old blind dupe was not yet dead—no mention being made of the wife, Rebekah—and how his days were a hundred and four-score years, and that finally he gave up the ghost and died, and his sons Esau and Jacob buried him.

If you have not Bibles at hand through which you can read this, you had better order one of Mr. Bennett, advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 7th, called "Holy Bible Abridged," in which is compiled, for the sake of Christians and Sunday-schools, all these beautiful stories and fine passages without notes or comments, which, according to the claim, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. iii, 16), should be studied and recited in Sunday-schools, preached from in the sacred desk, familiarly introduced in religious conversation, and become the subject of discussion, and explanation among all Christians everywhere instead of being passed over and rendered obsolete in the churches and ignored as useless. For all Scripture is declared by plenary inspiration, so to be given by inspiration and profitable for the exercise and obtaining of these valuable and necessary Christian qualifications.

Yet those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER ought not to lose the benefits of this valuable compilation, because it is dedicated to Anthony Comstock and the Christian public, but should avail themselves at once of its use, as it would prove a useful acquisition in assisting them in their future perusals of The Godly Women of the Bible.

Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues

TO WHICH CHARTERS HAV BEEN ISSUED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Lincoln, Nebraska.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Jacksonville, Illinois.—President, David Prince: Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Mishicott, Wisconsin.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Brasch.
Chelsea, Massachusetts.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohey.
Stockton, Cal.—[Officers not reported.]
Denver, Col.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Paine Hall, Boston.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. W. Wright.
Palmyra, N. Y.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Boston, Massachusetts.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
New Philadelphia, Ohio.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
Titusville, Pennsylvania.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Hudson, Mich.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Cattaraugus County, N. Y.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
New Haven, Conn.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunte.
St. Joseph, Mo.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
New York, N. Y.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Rochester, N. Y.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Tompkins County, New York.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, William R. Lazenby.
New York, New York.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Por-C. Bliss.
Cleveland, Ohio.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Milwaukee, Wis.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Jefferson Liberal League, Rochester, New York.—President, Anson C. Allen; Secretary, Fred P. Nutting.
Minneapolis, Minnesota.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Florence, Iowa.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
West Meriden, Conn.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Montgomery County, Ohio.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Manitowoc, Wisconsin.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Bay City, Michigan.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Campbell Hill, Illinois.—President, Horace Newell, M. D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzope.
Wausau, Wisconsin.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Cass County, Missouri (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
Carthage, Mo.—President, C. Conard; Secretary, E. Budlong.
Newark, New Jersey.—President, F. J. Keibe; Secretary, John F. Colburn.
Harrisville, Texas.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nanneley.
Cortland Village, New York.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
Moberly, Missouri.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
Malden, Massachusetts.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinckly.
Vincennes, Indiana.—President, Charles Graeter; Secretary, Orlan F. Baker.
East Dennis, Massachusetts.—President, Captain D. S. Chapman; Secretary, R. Chapman.
Syracuse, New York.—President, Lucy N. Colman; Secretary, J. M. Price.
Fayetteville, New York.—President, William Hanford; Secretary, B. L. Robinson.
North Hannibal, New York.—President, L. G. Ball, Secretary, B. L. Robinson.
West Newton, Massachusetts.—President, S. B. Urbino; Secretary, Sarah M. Davis.
New York City, Fourth League.—President, D. E. Ryan; Secretary, E. M. Macdonald.
Enterprise, Kansas.—President, C. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Senft.
Passaic City, New Jersey.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Lipasville, Pennsylvania.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. B. Brooks.
Xenia, Indiana.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
New York, New York.—President, Cortlandt Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
Olathe, Kansas.—President, S. B. Wilson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
Carbondale, Kansas.—[Officers not yet reported.]
St. Louis, Missouri.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thomas J. Stanton.
Lynn, Mass.—President, L. K. Washburn; Secretary, W. D. Corken, M. D.
Cato, N. Y.—(Cayuga County).—[Officers not yet reported.]
Brockton, Mass.—President, William Rankin; Secretary, H. B. Sherman.

Palmyra, Neb.—President, S. S. Seely; Secretary, G. E. Bennett.
Long Island City, N. Y.—President, R. W. Hume. Secretary: Miss M. A. Hume.
New York City, Fifth League, N. Y.—President, Hugh Corrigan: Secretary, J. H. Monckton.
Weedsport, N. Y., (Cayuga County).—President, George Wright, Secretary, G. B. Whitman.

Miscellaneous.

A Seller of "Cupid's Yokes" Pardoned.

By a card from Mr. Heywood, we learn that Charles H. Floyd, imprisoned under a Massachusetts state law for selling "Cupid's Yokes," has been pardoned by Gov. Rice. After his release he paid a visit to Mr. Heywood in jail. The fact of his pardon ought to hav great weight with the Watkins judge and also with Judge Benedict.

"ANTICHRIST'S" reply to W. E. Coleman will appear in our next. It was received rather too late for this issue.

A FRIEND in Washington writes that the ladies of that city hav organized THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION of which Mrs. Cora Bland, M. D., is President, with Vice-Presidents for each state in the Union.

The society was the outgrowth of a course of twenty lectures given by Mrs. Bland during the past autumn, and which she is invited to repeat under the auspices of the Association. She is, to our knowledge, a lady of ability, pleasing address, and the most sterling qualities. We bespeak for those who listen to her a treat of rare value.

THE sprightly little Secular Chronicle, of London, Eng., has changed hands editorially, Mr. George Standring assuming control, vice Harriet Law, resigned.

WE clip the following from The National Reformer—Charles Bradlaugh's paper:

"The Vice Society hav suffered another and this time a still more decided defeat. Mr. Vaughan, after a strenuous opposition and sharp fight, made an order for the delivery up to Mr. Bradlaugh of the whole of the copies seized at Mr. Truelove's shop in May, 1877. The Vice Society even then tried to prevent the delivery of the books, but a cab being brought to the door of the police station, two large packages containing the pamphlets were formally handed over by the authorities; and Mr. Bradlaugh drove off triumphantly, amidst loud cheers from a large number of friends present."

A few Questions to the Editor of The Index and the Ex-President of the N. L. L.

Please, sir, what would you hav done with the "76," and their coadjutors had they voted for you, and yourself been re-elected President of the N. L L?

Would you hav accepted the votes of such "infamous-literature defenders?"

Would you hav permitted those whose "remarks sometimes polluted the atmosphere of the Opera House" to hav remained members of the several local Leagues, which they represented as delegates?

Would you hav run the risk of not becoming polluted by affiliating and working with such an obscene set as you now represent them to be?

Would they hav been any cleaner if they had voted for you, and their votes had re-elected you President over them instead of voting for and electing Hon. Elizur Wright, and remaining in the old organization under his Presidency?

Were they any more "indecent" after voting for him than before?

Were you and your companions any less indecent after you bolted than before?

Are you rejoiced to be delivered from so much filth and obscenity as the "76" represented?

Did you relinquish all hope that you and the decent ones could reclaim them, till after the votes were counted "76" against your "51?"

Would you hav persisted in showing up the true (?) character of the "76," provided, instead of secession you had been re-elected and re-installed in your old place at the head of the N. L. L., or would you hav quietly put up with all their filth as you did previous to the 70,000 petitioner's declaration for human rights as American citizens?

Would you still hav kept mum, Mr. Abbot, and borne the disgrace of an ignominous re-election from such a vile, obscene constituency, if you had had the chance?

Take care, take care, friend Abbot, lest you disclose to your few remaining friends, as you hav already done to those whom you hav alienated from you, that the parable of the "fox and grapes" is not wholly inapplicable to the editor of the Boston Index, and the late President of the National Liberal League?

From one older than the Leagues, and who is not ashamed to sign herself, AN ANTI-FREELOVER.

[From The Index.]

Whose Turn Next?

Editor of The Index: The Chicago Times of the 20th of this month, in an editorial article, says: "The Postoffice Department has prohibited the circulation in the United States mails of a periodical issued in Chicago by a society calling itself The United States Government Church, on the ground of the blasphemous character of much of the matter which the periodical contains. At least, so says the department."

The Times further says: "The United States Government Church has some odd theories; believing, for instance, in four spiritual powers in place of three: God the Father, Lord the Mother, Christ the Son, and Soul the Daughter. But this is no ground for suppression. There are people to whom the scheme of a Godhead composed of a Trinity is just as odd and mysterious as a quadripartite construction."

You may not hav seen this article in the Times; but it is there, for the paper lies before me. I hav given you only excerpts from it.

I hav many times said, and more than once published in the papers, that it is "blasphemy," as the Church understands or defines it, which is to be suppressed, much more than obscenity. And Joseph Cook would burn the editor of The Index at the stake with just as good relish as a better man than he, and far less dangerous, instigated and accomplished the imprisonment of Ezra H. Heywood in Dedham Jail, under pretense of obscenity. That was but dieting the public palate and stomach for more dreadful doses yet.

PARKER PILLSBURY.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 28, 1878.

Action of the Linesville League.

LINESVILLE, PA., Dec. 3, 1878.

Mr. A. L. Rawson, Sec'y. Nat. Lib. League, Sir: The Liberal League of Linesville, Pa., at a regular meeting voted unanimously to stand by the old League and work with the National Liberal League.

Our League heartily coincides with the resolutions passed by the Paine Hall League of Boston.

Our membership is about equally divided among Spiritualists and Materialists, who work harmoniously in the good cause of state and national secularization.

Our League will celebrate the anniversary of Thomas Paine's birthday (the 29th of January next) with a three-days' meeting, and we expect to hav a large assembly and an interesting time. Due notice will be given of the most noted speakers with their subjects.

Yours for right and justice, J. B. BROOKS,
Sec. Linesville L. L.

Action of the Cato League.

A. L. Rawson, Sec. N. L. L., Dear Sir: At a meeting of the Cato Auxiliary Liberal League on Sunday, Dec. 8th, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Resolved, That we indorse the action of the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, held at Syracuse, October, 1878.

Resolved, That we favor the unconditional repeal of the so-called Comstock U. S. Postal Law of 1873, believing it to be unconstitutional and dangerous; and the attempt to modify an unconstitutional law to be trifling with the liberties of the press and of speech.

Resolved, That a duty devolves upon every one to do all within his or her power to do away with any law that makes a postmaster, custom-house official, or any individual, or society, or community of individuals, a judge or a censor over our thoughts or opinions; and we earnestly denounce all priestly or other intolerance, and pledge ourselves anew to the earnest support ot the National Liberal League.

W. S. ROOT, Pres. pro tem.

M. A. CLAYTON, Sec.

Action of the Hudson League.

HUDSON, MICH., Dec. 13, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: At a meeting of the Liberal League of Hudson, Michigan, held Dec. 13, 1878, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Liberal League of Hudson, Michigan, will adhere to the old National League under the leadership of Hon. Elizur Wright; that we disapprove the action of Francis E. Abbot at the last annual meeting of the National League; that we are in favor of total repeal of the so-called Comstock law; that we shall ever reject legislation that seeks to establish espionage over, or in any way invade the privacy of individuals in matter transported by United States mail unless the same be actually necessary for Government protection and the punishment of well-defined crime; that a copy of this resolution be sent to A. L. Rawson, Sec'y of N. L. L., and to D. M. Bennett, publisher of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

L. R. PEIRSON, Pres't.
THOS. B. MINCHEN, Sec'y.

The National Defense Association.

There seems now a pretty good prospect for this society to hav work upon its hands to attend to. Our enemies are coming down upon us with little mercy. Suits are being instituted which cost money to defend, and other expenses are incurred. The Defense Association has certificates of membership which they will issue to persons contributing one dollar for the needs of the Association. They are neatly printed and of about the size of a bank bill. On the face side is the following:

NATIONAL DEFENSE ASSOCIATION.
A. L. RAWSON, D.D., LL.D., President.
JOHN P. JEWETT, Vice-President.
CERTIFICATE OF MEMBERSHIP.
M———having contributed to THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ASSOCIATION the sum of $—— is enrolled as a———Member for the period of——year, dating from———
E. B. FOOTE, Jr., Sec. 120 Lexington Ave., N. Y.
G. L. HENDERSON, Treas. 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

On the reverse side, this:

EXTRACTS FROM CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ASSOCIATION.

ARTICLE II.—The objects of this Association are:

To investigate all questionable cases of prosecution under what are known as the Comstock laws, state and national, and to extend sympathy, moral support, and material aid to those who may be unjustly assailed by the enemies of free speech and free press.

To rescue those who may be convicted and imprisoned for no other crime than exercising the natural right of an American citizen, to think his thoughts and express them orally or in print.

To defend honest investigators in all departments of science, and to uphold the rights of the people to acquire a thorough knowledge of human physiology.

Finally, to employ all peaceful and honorable means to roll back the wave of intolerance, bigotry, and ignorance, which threatens to submerge our liberties.

ART. III.—Any friend of the cause may become an active member of this Association by the payment into its treasury of the sum of Ten Dollars ($10.00), and the payment of One Dollar ($1 00) shall entitle the donor to a certificate of honorary membership, for the period of one year, and to a report from the officers of this Association of its receipts, disbursements, and transactions.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
HUGH BYRON BROWN, CHAS. WINTERBURN, M.D.
WILSON MCDONALD, CHAS. CODMAN.
T. C. LELAND, Chairman,
201 East 71st st., New York.

Full memberships in the Association are $10, and honorary memberships $1, with certificate. Those who feel like aiding the good work in hand are requested to remit according to their means and inclinations.

From Mrs. Colman.

54 ELM ST., SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Dec. 10, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Will you ask the editor of The Index through your paper, or permit me to do so, to giv the sentence verbatim in which Mrs. Colman "advocated infamous and shameless immorality?" Unfortunately, my education is very limited, and I may not know the meaning of words, and as I wish to be always unnerstood, it would seemingly be only just to hav such language printed in full, so that its clear meaning may be studied. I wish to be held responsible for my words, and if, in my ignorance, I hav mistaken the meaning of every-day English, I ought to know it, so as to avoid in the future such a mortifying exposure. I wish, when the words so full of "shamelessness and immorality," shall be obtained, we may put under them, or over them, somewhere near them, at least, "renegade crew, of noxious body of fevered pulse and flaccid vertebræ," so that we may learn the true meaning of such English.

I really am almost ashamed to giv one thought to such misrepresentation, as I hav no fear that I shall lose one friend by it, and if I should, what matter? I am a very small person, and in this time of persecution, even to imprisonment for opinions expressed, and arrests for the simplest acts of common courtesy, what is even malignant falsehood published by a gentleman concerning a woman whose crime consists in not voting for such gentleman for President of the National Liberal League. None of the immoral seventy-six were too immoral to be workers together with the fifty-one, and, if I am not mistaken in the meaning of words, there seemed a good deal of rejoicing over us as workers together with them when the question of repeal was put over for a year; but when the ballot announced Elizur Wright President—even an ignorant woman had no difficulty in knowing the meaning of facial expression. In a moment we had become "immoral lovers of obscenity, corrupters of youth," and even guilty of possessing "flaccid vertebræ." Query: How long, physiologically speaking, does it take vertebræ to become flaccid? Will an opinion, honestly expressed by a ballot concerning two different persons' fitness for a certain place, produce the effect? I wish we might find some panacea powerful enough, thought not working instantaneously, to cure selfishness before it becomes a mania.

I am so anxious about Mr. Heywood, "sick and in prison," that night and day, waking or sleeping, he is always in my thought; and soon you, my friend, with Mr. Bell, and that noble, fearless girl (whose shoes I hardly feel worthy to unloose), Miss Tilton, must appear before a court of justice as prisoners guilty of crime. God pity man or woman who, in such an hour, can think of the misrepresentations of even the editor of The Index as of any consequence whatever. The most earnest aspirations of all lovers of freedom will ascend for you and for the triumph of the right in your acquital.

THE TRUTH SEEKER has become a necessity to me; like the old Liberator, it is food strong and stimulating. I wish I could increase its circulation, and I do not despair yet in my effort. Springfield's workers are mostly fed by the Banner of Light, and that, with the Springfield Republican, is all they can afford to take; but if ever there is a revival of business, we shall find plenty who will want the paper. I presume it may be because I am in a more receptive state, but really it seems to me THE TRUTH SEEKER is improving every week. I am very truly and proudly one of the 76,

LUCY N. COLMAN.

"THE BIBLE OF BIBLES."—"This work, as Dr. P. B. Jones, of Springfield, Ill., says of 'The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors,' is a $300 library in one book. It is marvelous what an extraordinary mass of facts and logic it contains. The chapters headed 'The Christian's Three Plans of Salvation,' 'What is True Religion,' and 'The Infidel's Bible' are alone worth the price of the book. In two respects I consider 'The Bible of Bibles' superior to 'The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors.' 1st. It treats the Bible and religion in a more scientific manner. 2d. It exposes a thousand more religious errors. In the great battle between Freethought and orthodoxy, now just commencing, Mr. Graves' three works will be in more demand than other Liberal books, and probably more than all other Liberal books put together, for they contain, in a concentrated form, the logic and facts of all the Liberal books ever published, and, I am tempted to say, a hundred times more. They thus constitute a complete library in themselves of Liberal literature, logic, history, and facts. As these three books contain the essence and the quintessence of all the Liberal works in circulation, and thousands of new and startling facts besides, no Liberalist should be without them a single day. They meet and settle in advance, with unanswerable facts and the thunder claps of logic, the great questions at issue between orthodoxy and Freethought, and no other works will be really needed in the contest. They are exactly the books for the times."—Clarkson T. Moore.

Letters from Friends.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1878.

MR. BENNETT: The appeal made by Mrs. Slenker in THE TRUTH SEEKER Dec. 7th, is worthy the thought of every Liberal philanthropist. Some three months since my attention was called to the same by an article in the Investigator by that whole-souled and earnest woman, Mrs. Margaret Flint, of Webster, Mass. I corresponded with her and Mr. Hacker, and from their letters discovered it was a most meritorious case indeed. Not an alms seeker is he, for he has endeavored to keep his poverty a secret; but how can we excuse ourselves if, after knowing his destitution, we refuse to impart of the little we possess to his less? He, who for so many years kept the "Pleasure Boat" afloat on the dark waters of superstition which we all ignore. Our younger Liberals may hav never heard of Jeremiah Hacker nor his efforts in the cause of truth, yet many of them, like ourselves, are indebted to his untiring zeal for the dissemination of those ultra views, nearly a half century ago, which caught up by later, yet not more efficient laborers, hav produced the present harvest of Freethought abundance. And shall we forget and desert this aged deaf octogenarian and his faithful partner because his life-boat, no longer freighted with a cargo of rich treasures, empties its treasures into our storehouses? No; justice forbid it! No; humanity forbid it! No; progression forbid it! No; all hope of charity for ourselve if in like circumstances, forbid it also! Coat, hat, and shoes hav I none, but such as I hav gave I unto him, donating through Mrs. Flint $5.00 worth of "Bibles Abridged," provided she could sell them and forward the same; also sending some to Mr. Hacker, with a promise of more if successful.

Now will not others giv of what they hav, and not permit this aged couple, in consequence of blighted crops on an acre of land, to starve for want of bread, and freeze for lack of fuel and clothes? Shall the Christians in this respect do better than we Liberals and Reformers? Let them not boast that their Christianity prompts them to be more humane and benevolent than our Liberalism does us? Let us look after our deserving poor, especially such as hav in the days past and gone fed with the bread of truth those who were starving upon the husks of old orthodoxy. Let us not begrudge them our mite, for but a mite would it be from one and all that would make that aged couple comfortable to the end of their days. Then listen, do not delay, lest it be forever too late, as our revivalist clergy urge, when pressing sinners forward to the anxious seat.

Yours for humanity's sake, not Jesus' sake,
ELLA E. GIBSON.

BROCTON, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir; I acknowledge my indebtedness to you for reception of THE TRUTH SEEKER from Sept. 1, 1878. At present I am busily engaged with my affairs, which hav been expensive, and as soon as I can procure means on my sales you will receive my attention.

I take pains to keep supplied with various kinds of literature and study the issues of the times. During the past five years I hav perused each number of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and must acknowledge that you hav sought to enlighten mankind on numerous subjects in a manner worthy of an honest man. I honor your integrity of character, and common sense. You are a candid, clear thinker and writer.

I cannot see how you are to blame in your independent course, for surely you hav only done what is just and right, so far as I am able to judge.

I hope you may not be imprisoned—should you be I will remit the sum of five dollars to you for the benefit of your family during 1879.

I indorse the Declaration of Rights, and hope the Comstock laws will be repealed.

I am willing to sustain THE TRUTH SEEKER hereafter by remitting annually the sum of five dollars and will commence July 1, 1879.

(Above proposition to be carried out free from my subscription fee.)

With many wishes for your happiness and prosperity, I am. Yours fraternally, SYLVESTER BARNHART.

VAN BUREN, ARK., Dec. 3, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: "Cupid's Yokes" and the Bible (abridged) came to hand in due time, and I read the former work through the first day, I was so anxious to find its "obscenity;" but when I got through I found out (although such passages were marked) that I could discover nothing that would pass for obscenity. The passages marked seemed to be more like what the orthodox would call blasphemy than obscenity. How any one can make anything obscene out of the words "Cupid" and "self" on the title-page is something that I am not able to understand. It seems from the passage marked at the foot of the tenth page that it is not moral and decent to talk about a saint in a derogatory manner even if what is said is literally true.

The Bible Abridged I hav not read through, nor do I intend to; but I hav glanced through it until I am fully satisfied that it is obscene. I like the way it is dedicated. St. Anthony, of all men now living, is the most suitable object for the dedication of such a work. You should send him a copy if you hav not already done so. Rather than that he should fail to get one I will agree to pay for a copy if you will send it to him. It would be so nice for him to sit at the fire this winter and scent out obscenity in it. He could find his whole winter's mental food in that one little volume. Then, it is hoped, he would not, while thus engaged, be bothering honest men in their business.

I am sorry to see that you have still to carry on that quarrel with Mr. Abbot. I was in hopes that it would be dropped after the meeting of the Congress, but he seems determined to keep it up, and you are compelled, in self-defense and in defense of the cause, to strike back. But go on. If the thing is to go the way he wants it to, we may as well elect Comstock captain and Abbot first mate, and put you and Leland and Wakeman upon deck rolling barrels, and let the old ship go wherever the captain may direct.

If friend Abbot's is "cultured" Freethought, you can just giv me mine straight—that is without the "culture."

You may put my name down on that Declaration of Rights. Hoping that you and the rest of the "repeal" crew will bring the old ship safely out, I remain

Yours truly, JAMES R. NEAL.

UNION VALLEY, Mo., Dec. 2, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: Tally another one! I act on Mrs. Slenker's suggestion and send my name as an Atheist. Find inclosed $2.75 for "Creed of Christendom," by W. R. Greg, and "Modern Symposium." I hav read "Cupid's Yokes," and do not consider it obscene or indecent.

Yours respectfully, W. JESSUP SKIDMORE.

SALINA, KAN., Nov. 29, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I should hav written you some time ago and acknowledged the safe delivery of the books, but I hav been waiting until I could send you a little more money.

"Cupid's Yokes" was quite a happy disappointment. I looked all the way through it to find the obscenity and justification for Mr. Heywood's imprisonment. I could find neither. How could a man, writing upon a subject of this nature, clothe his ideas in choicer language? For Heywood to remain in prison one hour for writing "Cupid's Yokes" is a disgrace to the American government. I do not coincide with the principles contained in the book. Far from that. But this is not the point at issue; and for any one to cast the epithet of "Freelover" upon me or any one else for holding that Comstock is wrong in taking away a man's liberty for writing such a book, and that the law is wrong and should be repealed, is neither Liberal nor sensible.

I took sides with the R.-P. Journal when this question divided the Spiritualists; but then it was a direct issue. Now it is far different, and it is only a scare crow set upon the fence by the Abbot faction; and I nail it to the mast-head of THE TRUTH SEEKER that those who placed it there and still support it are dishonest!

The way the "bolters" hav written upon this subject has led many to believe that because you advocate Mr. Heywood's pardon and sell his book you must of necessity be a Freelover. What folly!

If I understand you right, Mr. Bennett, you believe Mr. Heywood to be wrongfully imprisoned, that the publication of the book is legal, and that in selling the book yourself you are testing the liberty of "free America." Am I right, friend B.?

Well, for my part, I wish this contention would cease and that we all might become united again in one common cause—the destruction of superstition—though I am not for surrendering the right. I hav found but one man in my acquaintance through Kansas that thought Mr. Bennett was wrong.

We are talking of forming a League here, and I wish all the subscribers of THE TRUTH SEEKER in Salina would drop me a note upon the subject, as my time is so occupied that I cannot see them personally.

Fraternally, S. PARIS DAVIS.

[Our friend is right as to the position we occupy. We are not a "Freelover," but we believe in according to every man the right to express and circulate his honest convictions.—ED. T. S.]

ROYAL CENTER, IND., Dec. 8, 1878.

FRIEND D. M. BENNETT: I herewith send you $13 for the cause, to wit: $5 that I promised you on the Defense Fund, $3 to pay my own subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1879, $5 for one new convert to your paper. So please send THE TRUTH SEEKER and the "Champions of the Church" to Henry Bramen, Royal Center, Ind. Mr. Bramen is a middle aged man about forty, he was reared under the care of very good and strict parents, he also received the second birth; he now thinks a great deal more of the first time he was born than he does of the last, and my opinion is after he has read your paper, and the "Champions of the Church," that he will not wish to be born the third time.

Bro. Bundy of Chicago I see giv the Leagues some credit for minor steps for equal rights of conscience. Of course poor Heywood had none of the article mentioned so they sent him to prison for two years, to see if they could not raise him to a standard with common people. If the Seymour Times was not caught in the trap that was set by The Index what is the use of so much squealing.

And now I would say to the readers of your paper, one and all, see that the editor has his just dues before the first of January. As Deacon Skidmore would say, it seems to help more than all the other things combined.

You can put my name and Mr. Bramen's on the Bill of Rights if you wish. Yours as ever, GEO. HENDEE.

THAT "LETTER OF DISSATISFACTION."

OSCEOLA, IOWA, Dec. 6, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Stand up to your opponents fearlessly, and justice will be done you at last. Our liberties are being trampled under foot in many ways. The sly method of trying to mix liberty with obscenity on the one hand, and decency with degradation on the other, will not mislead discerning people. It is a question of liberty, and not of decency. A letter or inclosure by post should be sacred, and none should betray the trust reposed in the carrier.

A great storm of indignation was raised some years ago in England, because that government at the earnest solicitation of the late Napoleon, opened letters to defeat a plot for assassinating the emperor.

Imperial England would not hav its mails tampered with to save an emperor, but free America for decency's (?) sake employs an indecent agent arbitrarily to open letters.

To gag the press, to tamper with the mails, to legislate for capital against labor, etc., are sad symptoms of Cæsarism in America supplanting liberty.

Never mind, Bennett. Stand up like a man, and if corrupt and pious people sell themselves to the devil in this world to save their souls in the next, yet pursue the even tenor of your way, and preserve your integrity. Amen and amen. F. J. EMARY.

A QUESTION FOR SPIRITUALISTS.

CLEARFIELD, PA., Nov. 23, 1878.

DEAR BENNETT: I hav read with interest the desultory discussion going on in your columns on the subject of Spiritualism, sometimes with pain at the illiberal views expressed by professed Liberals, but oftener with pleasure at the truth-loving spirit evinced by others. Your own position particularly pleases me, and it seems to me that it is the only consistent one for a truth seeker to occupy. Let those who, like "the preacher," know that "the dead come up no more," assert it; and those who are absolutely certain that they hav held sweet converse with materialized disembodied spirits dogmatize to their hearts' content; but as for myself, I only stand and wait.

With Mrs. Aspinwall, I recognize the fact the existence of millions of Spiritualists means something, but with Miss Ella E. Gibson I also think that if Spiritualism is a science based on the facts of nature, it is susceptible of demonstration, and its friends and expounders ought not only to be able but willing to giv us the reasonable proof we demand; they ought not to resent (as they usually do) any signs of inquisitiveness or incredulity on our part; they should remember that most of us, and not a few of themselves, hav been badly humbugged by holy gospel-mongers and pedlers of divine revelations, and a burnt child dreads the fire.

Now, if our Spiritualistic friends hav a more sure word of prophecy in "nature's divine revelation," let that fact appear; and, in order that it may carry conviction with it, they ought not to insist on dictating all the conditions under which it is to appear.

Come, now, dear Spiritualistic friends, we are "almost persuaded," but in order that we not only be fully persuaded, but both almost and altogether such as you, let us fully understand each other.

If I am not mistaken, you teach that a spirit is composed of matter (however ethereal it may be) and subject to the laws of matter and force. Now, if I am correct, will some of you who are posted please answer one question for me, put in all candor and seriousness? When a materialized spirit steps out of a cabinet, and looks just like a man, claims to be a man, and, if a man, would weigh 175 pounds, how much would that spirit weigh?

Of course some one who reads THE TRUTH SEEKER must know something about this, and I ask that man or woman to step forward and answer my question, when I will hav something to say on the subject that may be of interest to all concerned. Yours for the truth at all hazards,

HARRY HOOVER.

SALEM, MASS., Nov. 25, 1878.

MR. BENNETT: On Saturday last a copy of the address of Superintendent Small was sent to the editor of the New York Sun, with a request for a copy of the paper containing the article referred to, and a request that he forward me his opinion of the case as it now stands: stating also that the letter was sent to me by the Truant Officer, who offered to take back a reply to Mr. Small.

The answer was, "None to send, sir." No reply has been received from the editor (don't know his name), so the inference is that the subject may not hav reached him, or that he does not choose to commit himself, or to follow up what he appeared to consider a needed reform. It is an up-hill work when everybody complains and everybody is dissatisfied and everybody scared, and only a few laborers can be found who dare to grapple with the huge monsters that call out loudly for a reform—so loudly that the people seem paralyzed with the hugeness of the subject. They would find but little trouble if their moral courage was commensurate with the demands for its exercise. But almost every one has some axe to grind, so they succumb to what they consider the greater necessity, upon the principle of telling every one to "shirk for himself."

An effort bearing so much rare fruit, however "Small" the tree on which produced, ought not to be lost sight of or "hidden under a bushel" for the want of due appreciation. The wonder is that the "Small" man did not take in the state in his attitude of defiance. The Normal School is a state institution.

A request was made recently to write a communication for a Salem paper, on account specially of a young girl who was required to draw in school, who had neither taste nor inclination, and whose best efforts subjected her to severe discipline and mortification, coming so short of the requirements; and to pecuniary disadvantages, costing her father half he could earn during the week, sometimes, for drawing materials and for books for her and her sister, so frequent are the changes. And the works that the child of twelve discards don't answer for the child of ten, each must have a new supply. They must pay certain prices to certain persons. Common paper does not answer for such children, so exquisite is the dicipline! The father of the girl wants her to prepare herself to go into a printing office, instead of more than wasting her time in other directions. So her mother went and stated the case to the teacher, who appealed to the superintendent, Small, bringing back the big plea that drawing was one of the rules of the schools, and could not be dispensed with!

Copy of letter.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS, SALEM, MASS., Nov. 22, 1878.

Mary Upton Ferrin, Madam: An article appeared in the N. Y. Sun over the signature "M. U. Ferrin," and bearing date Salem, Mass., Nov. 11, which contains a libel upon our school teachers and school management generally, and upon our good city.

I write to inform you that your signature has been so used, perhaps, without your knowledge.

If you did write the article mentioned, will you be good enough to inform me upon what evidence the statement was written?

Of course you know as well as I the proper course to take should you at any time wish to see any evil in school management corrected. At least you are at liberty to try what effect a complaint to me might produce.

Yours, etc., A. D. SMALL, Sup't Schools.

"In a civil action a libel must appear to be false as well as scandalous."—Webster's Unabridged. My remarks were a simple statement of the historical facts in the case as related to me. If a libel, it is an admission that the facts are "scandalous!" Being such, no more potent argument can be presented for their speedy eradication.

Respectfully, M. U. FERRIN.

WAVERLY, IOWA, Dec. 6, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am very anxious to receive THE TRUTH SEEKER regularly. I hav been borrowing of neighbor Billings for some time, but do not get them regular. I am a mason by trade and cannot pay before next season—can you send it that way.

I am one of the 70,000 and am proud of it. Am now for repeal alone. Put my name to the Declaration of Rights.

While you are reforming I wish you would use k for k, s for s, j for j, and z for z. Young America has been too long deviled about c, s and g.

I was a regular Baptist when young, then become a Universalist, and am now a truth seeker.

The Index company must be in a great strait when such a man as Judge Hurlbut has to descend to such loose sophistry as he does in the last half of his lecture. Their cause must be a poor one if it can only be sustained by misrepresentation and fraud—is not sophistry fraud?

How any sane man can arrive at the conclusion he does from the premises of the first half of his lecture is beyond my comprehension. Yours for truth and right,

L. L. GOODWIN

STOWE, VT., Nov. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I very much admire your practice in omitting final e after short vowel sounds. And allow me to suggest for immediate practical use, two more changes. First, pf for ph in such words as these: phrase, philosopher, alphabet, etc. Second, h for gh in such words as the following: sight, might, though, etc. These are but slight improvements; but being so they do not alter the form of the words as now used so that they would be understood for any other word than what they are designed to represent. Respectfully yours, R. C. PAUL.

On Creation.

BY J. A. STEWART.

"The agitation of thought is the beginning of wisdom."

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

Prior to the great beginning,
When there was no heaven nor earth,
When there was no starlight, sunlight—
When creation had no birth;
When a black and boundless nothing,
Breathless, lifeless, round Him fell.
What occurred to wake his slumbers?
What was there to break the spell?

Breathless, cheerless, all-pervading,
Starless, worldless, boundless night,
Was the nothing, the beginning,
Out of which sprang worlds of light;
Out of which were made the heavens,
Countless worlds, remote and near,
And all living, moving creatures
In the depths of sea or air.

Yet we know not what aroused him
To begin the mighty plan
Of creation in its vastness,
Forming lastly sinful man.
Why did he not leave great Nothing
In its harmless, silent space
Rather than make man so sinful
As to damn the human race?

But 'tis said that man was sinless
Until tempted, when he fell—
Tempted by a subtle serpent,
Crawling from the depths of hell?
Pure and spotless as the lily,
In its early opening bloom,
Until tempted by the Devil
To the shades of sin and gloom.

When that black and boundless nothing,
Harmless, lifeless, round him fell,
Why did God create the Devil,
Or conceive an endless hell?
If creation sent forth evil,
Or an evil comes of good,
Then where is the point dividing
Satan's works from works of God?

When there was no sunlight, moonlight;
When there was no heaven or hell;
When there was no place for sinning,
Or for sinful man to dwell,
Why was silence ever broken?
Why was man to weakness born?
Why were devils made to tempt him,
And then leave him here to mourn?

Vast and searching are these questions;
Piercing, probing to the core,
Peering back beyond creation
To great Nothing, nothing more,
Vast though simple is the question,
Piercing, probing to the core—
Is it true there once was nothing,
Nothing, nothing, nothing more?

Atlanta, Ga.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.—Always pick up a hot poker by the cold end. Never spend your money when you can get things for nothing. Do not despise a 20 cent cigar or a $2,00 dinner because another man pays for it. Remember it costs more to go to a high-priced theatre than it does to take a back pew in a free church. Nothing is troublesome to you that other people do for you willingly. Never pay to-day the man you can put off till to-morrow. Never trouble yourself to do for another what he can just as well do for himself. Never buy what you don't want, simply because the man says he is just out of it. Do not poultice your own elbow for the boil on another man's neck. When angry be sure you can handle your man before you call him a liar.—Burlington Hawkeye.

TWENTY-FIVE native students gave in their names at a meeting recently held in Calcutta as "willing to sign the pledge," not against liquor drinking, but against early marriage. The following is the wording of this curious document: "Deeply impressed with the pernicious character of the custom of child marriage, and with the evils that hav followed in its train, convinced of the solemn duty I owe to myself and to my countrymen to discourage, so far as may lie in my humble power, a custom so hurtful to students—so prejudicial to the best interests of my countrymen at large—I hereby solemnly declare that I will not marry, nor allow myself to be given in marrige, till I hav completed the age of 21 years, my present age being—."

The Religion of the Future.

A Discourse, by NETTIE PEASE FOX, Editor of The Spiritual Offering, delivered in Odd Fellows Temple, Rochester, N. Y., Sunday, Nov. 10, 1878. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containing the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the
Missionary and Bible Societies,
Sunday-schools,
The Young Men's Christian Association,
Societies for the Suppression of Vice,
American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally,
and especially to
ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

Proceedings and Addresses

AT THE

FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION

HELD AT

Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

It is a volume of rare value, containing the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

A Modern Symposium.

SUBJECTS:

THE SOUL AND FUTURE LIFE: By Frederic Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley Lord Blachford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, R. W. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward.

THE INFLUENCE UPON MORALITY OF A DECLINE IN RELIGIOUS BELIEF: By Sir James Stephen, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Frederic Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton.

1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, neat, $1.25.

Utterances never surpassed by writers on these grave and all-important subjects. Remarkable for their terse originality. The names of the writers are a guarantee of the thoroughness of the work.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

Ingersoll's Second Volume.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures,

CONTAINING

The Ghosts, Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child; The Declaration of Independence; About Farming in Illinois; Speech at Cincinnati; "The Past Rises before me like a Dream."

A 12mo volume of 232 pages. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

NOTICE.—I have hitherto published some of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lectures in cheap form, believing that by so doing I was aiding in the diffusion of valuable Liberal reading matter and doing a favor to the general public. At the request, however, of Col. Ingersoll, I shall publish no more of them, but will keep for sale all his lectures so far as published under his own auspices. D. M. BENNETT.

PARIS, 1878 PARIS, 1878

GOLD MEDAL at Paris Exposition, 1878
CO-LABORERS' do. do., 1878
GOLD MEDAL Sweden & Norway, 1878
GOLD MEDAL at Mechanics' Charitable Association, Boston, 1878
SILVER MEDAL (for cases) do., 1878

MASON & HAMLIN

Have the honor to announce the above awards for their

CABINET ORGANS

the present season. The award at Paris is the highest distinction in the power of the juries to confer, and is the ONLY GOLD MEDAL awarded to American musical instruments. THIRTY-ONE leading manufacturers of the world were in competition. At Every World's Exposition for twelve years the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS have been awarded Highest Honors, viz: Paris, 1878; Sweden, 1878; Philadelphia, 1876; Santiago, 1875; Vienna, 1873; Paris, 1867. NO OTHER AMERICAN ORGANS EVER ATTAINED HIGHEST AWARD AT ANY WORLD'S EXPOSITION. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES with newest styles, prices, etc., free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont Street, BOSTON; 25 Union Square, NEW YORK; 250 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

What Five Dollars Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a copy of either of the following great works: The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers, The Champions of the Church, Viscount Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief, Thomas Paine's Great Theological and Political Works in one large volume; or a copy of any two of the above works without THE TRUTH SEEKER. Postage paid on all.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 177

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. to1

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

Proceedings of the Indignation Meeting,

Held in Faneuil Hall,

Thursday evening, Aug. 1, 1878, to protest against the injury done to the Freedom of the Press by the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood.

A handsome octavo pamphlet of 68 pages, containing speeches of Hon. Elizur Wright Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Thaddeus B. Wakeman Rev. J. M. L. Babcock, Laura Kendrick, Prof. A. L. Rawson, and Moses Hull, and letters from Alfred E. Giles, Theron C. Leland, Parker Pillsbury, A. J. Grover, and D. M. Bennett.

Price, 25 cents. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price, by the publisher,

tf25 BENJ. R. TUCKER, Cambridge, Mass.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6.00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (4th street). 43|75

AURICULAR CONFESSION

AND

Popish Nunneries.

BY WM. HOGAN.

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

BEYOND THE VEIL

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do!

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words. Postage paidon all.

Books For The Thoughtful.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade. (Second edition.) Extra cloth, toned paper, 12 mo, 643 pp. Postpaid, $3.

It is really a remarkable book, in which universal history is "boiled down" with surprising skill.—Literary World.

The sketch of early Egyptian history, in the first chapter, is a masterpiece of historical writing. He has a style that reminds us of Macaulay.—Penn Monthly.

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN. A novel. By Frederika Macdonald, author of the "Iliad of the East," etc. 3 vols. in 1, extra cloth, black and gold side stamp, 12 mo, 404 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. . . . It is a really artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT THE DEVIL, and Other Biographical Sketches and Essays. By Charles Bradlaugh. Portrait, 2d edition, extra cloth, gold side stamp, 12 mo, 260 pp. Postpaid, $1.50.

In a handsome volume before us, Charles Bradlaugh has "A Few Words" to say "About the Devil." Mr. Bradlaugh has a right to his Few Words, and the Devil will, we presume, at no distant day, hav a "few words" to say to Mr. Bradlaugh, and will doubtless get the best of the argument.—Chicago Interior.

ISSUES OF THE AGE; Or, Consequences Involved in Modern Thought. By Henry C. Pedder. Extra cloth, beveled, gold back and side stamp, 12 mo. Postpaid, $1.50.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; Or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; the Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 400 pp. Postpaid, $2.

The purpose of this book is to convince the world that the greater part of the New Testament, as at present received by Christians, was fabricated by the dogmatists of the second century, to enforce doctrines which were not warranted by the original teachings of Christ and the Apostles.—N. Y. World.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1. A woman's modest and considerate statement of her dissent from current theological ideas—in which Immortality and Prayer are discussed with ability, from a standpoint of pure Rationalism.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y. Extra cloth, 12 mo, 98 pp. Postpaid, $1.

This little volume of less than a hundred pages contains what a conscientious and learned Jew of the nineteenth century has to say about Jesus Christ as an historical figure and character.—St. Louis Republican.

THE ULTIMATE GENERALIZATION. An Effort in the Philosophy of Science. Extra cloth, 12mo, 56pp. Postpaid, 75 cents. The statement, accompanied by strong evidence, of a new law named "Correlation," larger or more inclusive than that of Evolution; claimed to be the ultimate inductive basis of the Philosophy of Science, and by implication to have a bearing more or less direct upon all the great questions of the time.

THE CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH. A Summary of the Arguments against Christianity. "Not giving heed to Jewish fables."—Titus 1, 14. Extra cloth, 12mo, 72 pp. Postpaid, 75 cts. An attempt is here made to apply the principles of scientific materialism to the investigation of the myths and legends of Christianity.

ESSAYS ON MIND, MATTER, FORCES, THEOLOGY, ETC. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404pp. Postpaid, $2. The author advances some novel theories on theological and scientific questions, leading to somewhat original conclusions.

THE ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Tyndall's Belfast Inaugural Address, and the Famous Articles of Professor Tyndall and Sir Henry Thompson on PRAYER. With portrait and Biographical Sketch of Professor Tyndall, and opinions of his services by the eminent scientist Professor H. Helmholtz. Postpaid, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Inaugural and portrait, paper, 15 cents.

Professor Tyndall has inaugurated a new era in scientific development, and has drawn the sword in a battle whose clash of arms will presently resound through the civilized world.—N. Y. Tribune.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., New York.

THE WORLD'S

Sixteen Crucified Saviors;

OR,

CHRISTIANITY BEFORE CHRIST.

CONTAINING

New, Startling, and Extraordinary Revelations in Religious History, which disclose the Oriental origin of all the doctrines principles, precepts and miracles of the

Christian New Testament,

and furnishing a Key for unlocking many of its Sacred Mysteries, besides comprising the History of Sixteen Oriental Crucified Gods.

BY KERSEY GRAVES.

Author of "The Biography of Satan," and "The Bible of Bibles" (comprising a description of twenty bibles).

This wonderful and exhaustive volume by Mr. Graves will, we are certain, take high rank as a book of reference in the field which he has chosen for it. The amount of mental labor necessary to collate and compile the varied information contained in it must have been severe and arduous indeed, and now that it is in such convenient shape the student of freethought will not willingly allow it to go out of print. But the book is by no means a mere collation of views or statistics; throughout its entire course the author—as will be seen by his title-page and chapter-heads—follows a definite line of research and argument to the close, and his conclusions go, like sure arrows, to the mark.

Printed on fine white paper, large 12mo., 380 pages. $2.. Address,

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers. 25
" " Cloth " 50
" " and Ex. of Proph, Paper 50; cl. 75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright. 75
Apocryphal New Testament. 1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth, 75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jean Meslier. 25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and 4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon. 1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. R. Taylor. 2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World. 25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. 25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works. 27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. 15
Bible in India. Jacolliot. 2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion, 30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo. 4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and 80
Bible in the Balance. Fish. 1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum, 2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna. 1 75
Buechner's Man. Present and Future, 4 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus, 25
Christianity before Christ. Craven. 25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages. 1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity. 1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd. 1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd. 40 and 60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle. 1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood. 15
Conway's Sacred Anthology. 4 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of. 25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor, 2 00
Diegesis 2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records, 50
" Our Planet. Past. Present, and Future, 1 50
" Radical Rhymes. 1 25
" Who are Christians. Deluge.
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors. Sermon from Shakspere's Text. God Proposed. Spiritualism True. Orthodoxy False. 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science. 1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols., 3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species, 2 00
" Descent of Man. (Impr'd Ed.) 3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt. 1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell. 60 & 80
Errors of the Bible. Wright. 35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach. 40 and 60
Eight Scientific Tracts. 20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity. 1 50
" Child's Book of Religion, 1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs. 1 00
" Safest Creed. 1 25
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature. 2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers, 2 00
God Idea in History. Tuttle, 1 25
Good Sense. D'Holbach, 1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. 2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels. 2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors. 2 00
" Biography of Satan. 60
Greg's Enigmas of Life. 2 00
" Creed of Christendom. 1 50
Heroines of Freethought. Mrs. Underwood. 1 75
Heathens of the Heath. McDonnell. 1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises. 1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons, 1 75
" Man's Place in Nature, 1 25
" Critiques and Addresses. 1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans. 1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols, 5 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous. 1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion, 1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah, 50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures. 1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures. 1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization. 25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper. 1 00
Jehovah Unveiled. 25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger. 1 00
Josephus' Complete Works. 2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo. 5 00
John's Way, 25
Kneeland's Review. 1 00
" Hymns. 50
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet. 2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols. 4 00
" History of European Morals. 6 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy. 3 50
" Problems of Life and Mind. 3 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each 150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization, 2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated. 5 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 776 cuts. 3 40
" Principles " " 2 vols. and maps, 3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire, 2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade. 3 00
Peeble's All Around the World. 2 50
" Seers of the Ages. 2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works, 2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. 30 & 50
Physical Man. Tuttle. 1 50
Paine's Common Sense. 12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth 80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth 80
" Theological Works, with portrait 1 50
" " " paper, 1 00
" Political Works, cloth, 1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait. 3
" Political Works, steel portrait, 1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth 75
Parturition without Pain, 1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote, M.D., 1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy, 20
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen 60
Syntagma. Taylor 1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach, 2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible. 25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker, 75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work,
Strauss' Old Faith and New. 2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols., 12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol., 3 50
Sexual Physiology. Trall, 2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii. 25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul, 2 00
The Case against the Church, 75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey 2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow. 1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers. Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and 4
The Champions of the Church. Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and 4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 & 1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 & 75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. 75
The Outcast. Winwood Reade, 50
Talks with My Patients. Mrs. Gleason. M.D., 1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate. 35 & 60
Underwood's Twelve Tracts, 20
Vestiges of Creation. 75
Volney's Ruins, 1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History 1 50
Voltaire' Philosophical Dictionary. 5 00

Truth Seeker Tracts.

(REVISED LIST.)

No. Cts.
1. Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. 8
7. The Story of Creation. Bennett. 5
8. The Old Snake Story. " 2
9. The Story of the Flood. " 6
10. The Plagues of Egypt. " 2
11. Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. 2
12. Balaam and his Ass. " 2
13. Arraignment of Priestcraft. " 8
14. Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. 3
15. Come to Dinner. " 2
16. Fog Horn Documents. " 2
17. The Devil Still Ahead. " 2
18. Slipped Up Again. " 2
19. Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. 5
20. Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. 2
21. The Great Wrestling Match. " 2
22. Discussion with Elder Shelton. " 10
23. Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. 3
24. Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. 5
25. Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. 5
26. Underwood's Prayer. 1
27. Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. 5
28. Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. 10
29. Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. 2
30. Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. 2
31. Gods and God-houses. 2
32. The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. 3
33. What has Christianity Done? Preston. 3
34. Tribute to Thomas Paine. " 2
35. Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. 1
36. Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. 2
37. Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 1
38. Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. 3
39. The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. 3
40. Bible of Nature vs, The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. 3
41. Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. 1
42. Elijah the Tishbite. " 3
43. Christianity a Borrowed System. " 3
44. Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. 2
45. Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. 3
46. Did Jesus Really Exist? " 3
47. Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. 5
48. Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. 5
49. Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. 3
50. Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. 1
51. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. 5
52. Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. 5
53. Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. 2
54. An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. 5
55. The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. 3
56. Bible Contradictions. 1
57. Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. 2
58. Prophecies. 2
59. Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. 2
60. Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. 2
61. History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. 5
62. The Jews and their God. " 10
63. The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. 3
64. The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. 2
65. Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. 2
66. God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. 5
67. Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. 5
68. Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. 2
69. Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 2
70. Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. 3
71. Paine's Anniversary. O. A. Codman. 3
72. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. 2
73. Foundations. John Syphers. 3
74. Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. 2
75. An Hour with the Devil. " 10
76. Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. 3
77. The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. 5
78. Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. 5
79. The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. 2
80. Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. 5
81. Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. 1
82. Christian Courtesy. Bennett. 2
83. Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. 5
84. Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. 2
85. Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. 10
86. An Enquiry about God's Sons. " 2
87. Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. 1
88. David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. 3
89. Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. 3
90. Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. 2
91. Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. 1
92. The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. 5
93. Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. 1
94. The New Raven. Will Cooper. 5
95. Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. 10
96. Ichabod Orane Papers. 10
97. Special Providences. W. S. Bell. 2
98. Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. 2
99. Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota. 5
100. 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. 5
102. The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. 1
103. Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet. 2
104. Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. 10
105. Decadence of Christianity. Sapphro. 2
106. Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. 2
107. The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. 5
108. The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. 1
110. Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp. 1
111. Reply to Scientific American. Bennett, 1
112. Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp. 2
113. Come to Jesus. Bennett. 8 pp. 2
114. Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston. 1
115. The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett. 2
116. The Sunday Question. Bennett. 2
117. Constantine the Great. Preston. 3
118. The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell. 5
119. The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard. 3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. 5
2. Evolution: from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 3
3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 3
4. Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. 5
5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. 3
6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 5
8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.
9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 2
10. The Evolution Theory—Huxley's Three Lectures.
11. Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson.

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent offs on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollar worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige.

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Thomas Paine.
Paine's Bust.
Paine's Monument.
Voltaire.
Rousseau.
Humboldt.
Goethe.
Schiller.
Aug. Comte.
Heine.
Alex. Pope.
John Milton.
Goldsmith.
Shelley.
Byron.
Burns.
Washington.
Franklin.
Jefferson.
John Adams.
J. Q. Adams.
Madison.
Jackson.
Lincoln.
Lincoln's Monument.
Gerrit Smith.
Henry C. Wright.
J. S. Mill.
Sumner.
Edgar A. Poe.
Greeley.
Castellar.
Tennyson.
Darwin
Tyndall.
H. Spencer.
Huxley.
Proctor.
Draper.
Bradlaugh.
Holyoake.
Ingersoll.
Underwood.
Mendum.
Seaver.
L. Colby.
Dr. Hare.
Judge J. W. Edwards.
Lizzie Doten.
Mrs. J. Conant.
Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure).
Geo. Francis Train.

F. E. Abbot.
Frothingham.
Wendell Phillips.
Emerson.
Garrison.
Henry Bergh.
Peter Cooper.
D. R. Burt.
S. P. Andrews.
Walt Whitman.
Froude.
Max Muller.
Warren Chase.
Jas. Parton.
Wm. Denton.
Dr. Slade.
A. J. Davis.
Foster.
J. M. Peebles.
Frances Wright.
E. V. Wilson.
G. L. Henderson.
Prof. Fiske.
Fred Douglas.
N. P. Banks.
P. V. Nasby.
Beecher.
Tilton.
Moulton.
G. W. Curtis.
Th. Nast.
J. G. Bennett.
Chas. A. Dana.
Phoebe Carey.
Alice Carey.
Elizabeth C. Stanton.
Susan B. Anthony.
Lucy Stone.
Julia Ward Howe.
Chas. Cheney.
Paulina Davis.
Mary F. Davis.
Emma H. Britten.
Lizzie Fowler.
Mrs. Slenker.
Susan H. Wixon.
D. M. Bennett.
W. S. Bell.
J. C. Bundy.
S. S. Jones.
Asa K. Butts.
W. F. Jamieson.

and hundreds of others, including generals, statesmen, poets, actors, actresses, etc. at 10 cents each singly, or eleven for one dollar.

Neat Albums, by mail, to hold 30 photos., 60 cts., to hold 50, 80.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St. New York.

WHAT OUR GIRLS OUGHT TO KNOW.

A book that ought to be in the hands of every young woman and every young girl in the country.

BY MARY J. STUDLEY, M.D.,

Graduate, Resident Physician, and Teacher of Natural Sciences in the State Normal School, Farmingham, Mass.

CHAPTER HEADINGS:

Study God's Poem; Know Thyself; What shall we Eat, and How shall we Cook It? The Heart; How we Breathe; The Brain and Nerves; Nerves and Nervousness; How Plants and Animals are Perpetuated: How to Become Beautiful; The Uses and Abuses of Dress; The Mate and the Home; Perfect Woman.

No book of 260 pages contains more valuable information than is found in this volume.

Price, in cloth, $1.25. Sold by

KIDDER'S SECRETS OF BEE KEEPING.

This book should be in the hands of every bee-keeper in our land, whether he has one swarm of bees or a hundred.

It is a guide to the bee-master, in every branch of the business.

No more losing bees in winter; nor in their flight to the forests in swarming time; nor in their being destroyed by moth millers, or by being robbed by other bees. No more stinging by bees when we go to the hive for honey or for any other purpose.

In fact the book shows how all losses and trouble with our bees can be successfully overcome and remedied.

And on the other hand it will instruct any one how they can keep bees with great profit, and with but a small investment.

This book contains more matter than any other book that sells for one dollar and fifty cents.

But in order to have a rapid sale and place the book within the reach of all, the publisher proposes to sell the book at the very low price of 75 cents bound, paper covers 50 cents.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office, 141 Eighth street, New York.

Heathens of the Heath

A ROMANCE, BY WM. McDONNELL,

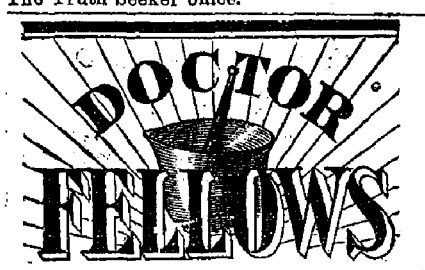
AUTHOR OF "EXETER HALL," ETC.

This work is rich in romantic and pathetic incidents, and exhibits with an overwhelming array of facts the atrocities committed by the Church. It shows that the purest morality exists without the Bible, and that many of the heathen philosophers were lovers of virtue. The folly of Christian ministers is fully portrayed, Hypocrisy and bigotry are clearly exposed, and the road to virtue and true happiness plainly marked out. A most pleasing romance is woven into the work, in which much opportunity is afforded the author for fine descriptions and beautiful sentiments which he so well knows how to give utterance to. The characters in the tale are invested with much interest; the hero and heroine gain the love of every reader. "On the whole, it is the work of a master hand—a work of unaffected beauty and the deepest interest." "One of the most valuable features of the work is its positions are all proven. . . Every thinking, enquiring mind should peruse it." 500 pp., 12mo. Price, in paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

THE VOICES.

"The Voices of Nature," "The Voice of a Pebble," "The Voice of Superstition," and "The Voice of Prayer." 8th Edition. A Poetical Eye-Opening volume of 226 pages.

BY WARREN SUMNER BARLOW.



Judge Baker in an elaborate review of "The Voices" says: "Considered in the light of a controversial or didactic poem, it is without an equal in contemporaneous literature, the birth of an audacious mind, and is destined to excite greater and more and wider encircling waves of sectarian agitation than any anti-credal work ever published."

Price reduced to one dollar. Sold wholesale and retail at The Truth Seeker office.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR:

IF, THEN, AND WHEN.

From the Doctrines of the Church. In Poetry. Particularly sharp and pointed. It is well worth reading. Price only 10 cents. Sold at The Truth Seeker office.

THE GREAT SPECIALIST,

Treats all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases with unprecedented success. The thousands of cures he is performing annually substantiate this fact. He has at this moment patients in every State of the Union and in the British Provinces. Every reader of this who has any affection of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the Skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or diseases of the Eye or Ear, are invited to write to Dr. Fellows, whose system of practice is entirely original, omitting all Drugs and Mineral Medicines of both the Old and New schools, hence reliable. The Doctor's crowning medical achievement has been in the discovery of an external or outside application for the permanent cure of Spermatorrhœa and Impotency as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy.

Dr. Fellows has prescribed his external remedy for 1,500 cases without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane Asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of Consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information address, with two 3-cent stamps, Vineland, New Jersey, where Doctor R. P. Fellows is permanently located, and obtain his private circular on "Spermatorrhœa and its Cure," or, if afflicted with other complaints, his large circular treating on the above-named chronic diseases, both containing sworn evidences, which is convincing and positive testimony to the Doctor's great skill. In order that all can avail themselves of his services he has placed his terms at a very reasonable figure.

[From the Denver (Col.) Rocky Mountain Herald.]

"Dr. Fellows is a successful specialist for all the diseases which he claims to cure, such as chronic and sexual complaints. His wonderful skill and success are bringing him hundreds of cases weekly by letter and otherwise from all over the United States."

[From The Boston Investigator.]

"Dr. Fellows is a physician of superior education and extensive practice in private, chronic, and sexual diseases. We don't see any need of priests for anything, but as a good doctor is, in our eyes, a benefactor of mankind, we would advise the reader if he has got any of the diseases mentioned, and doesn't want to keep them, let him write to Dr. Fellows, and obtain health, which is better than fortune, political office, or even religion."

The Day of Rest.

BY WILLIAM McDONNELL,

AUTHOR OF "HEATHENS OF THE HEATH," "EXETER HALL," ETC.

"If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake, if anywhere anyone sets up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to dance on it, to do anything that will reprove the encroachment on Christian spirit and liberty.—Martin Luther.

First published in the Canadian Monthly. Price 10 cents, by mail.

Six Lectures on Astronomy.

By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Five of them were delivered at Steinway Hall this city, in the winter of 1875-6, and were reported phonographically expressly for THE TRUTH SEEKER by Miss M. S. Gontcharoff. This is the most popular course of Lectures ever delivered by Professor Proctor, and ought to be in the possession of every person.

The titles of the Lectures are:

I. Growth of Worlds."
II. Life and Death of Worlds.
III. Other Worlds than Ours.
IV. Other Suns than Ours.
V. The Great Mysteries of the Universe.
VI. Religion and Astronomy.

ALL FOR TWENTY CENTS.

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted. 6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Gems of Thought.

WHEN reason is against a man, a man will be against reason.—Hobbes.

IF evil be said of thee, and it be true, correct it; if it be a lie, laugh at it.—Epictetus.

THE higher up the mountain you climb, the further you can see.—Theodore Parker.

IT is more profitable to reckon up our defects than to boast of our attainments.—Carlyle.

BEAUTY is truth, truth, beauty; that is all
I know on earth, and all ye need to know.
—Plato.

ALL virtue lies in a power of denying our own desires when season does not authorize them.—Locke.

THIS above all—To thy own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
—Shakspere.

AT present let us remove what is bad; which must always be done before good of any kind can spring up.—W. S. Landor.

OUR evidence that any particular writing is from God can never be stronger than the evidence of reason for or against the matter contained in it.—Dr. Hodge.

POETRY is certainly something more than good sense, but it must be good sense at all events; just as a palace is more than a house, but it must be a house at least.—Coleridge.

IF we cannot lay the foundation, it is something to clear away the rubbish; if we cannot set up truth, it is something to pull down error.—Macaulay.

HE who has a God says the least about him and he who worships in the most secret and the purest manner says the least about his worship and makes the least noise.—A. Bronson Olcott.

YOU may abuse a tragedy, though you cannot write one; you scold a carpenter who has made you a bad table, though you cannot make a table. It is not your trade to make tables.—Dr. Johnson.

WE cannot hav conclusive reason for believing that the human faculties were incompetent to find out moral doctrines of which the human faculties can perceive and recognize the excellence.—John Stuart Mill.

GOD is pleased often to appeal to men for the justice of all his ways; and, therefore, no such doctrine ought to be admitted that carries in it an idea of cruelty beyond what the blackest tyrants hav ever invented.—Burnell.

IS THERE anything which is more certain to sap the foundations of morality than the public maintenance of a creed which has long ceased to command the assent, and even the respect, of its recognized defenders?—F. W. Farrar.

I HAV sometimes thought of writing a Dialogue of the Dead, in which Lucian, Erasmus, and Voltaire should mutually acknowledge the danger of exposing an old superstition to the contempt of the blind and fanatic multitude.—Gibbon.

IN fact, there are few the world over who can be said to hav positive convictions in religion, if we understand by convictions the results of personal investigation or personal intuition. The religious tenets of most men are accidental.—F. H. Hedge.

NOT in the Bible, but in the Koran, do I find a sentence that best enunciates the great need of the hour. It reads, "A ruler who appoints a man to office when there is in his dominion another man better qualified for the position sins against God and against the state."—J. S. Mill.

WHOSO would be a man must be a non-conformist. He who would gather immortal palms must not be hindered by the name of goodness, but must explore if it be goodness. Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind. Absolve you to yourself and you shall hav the support of the world.—Emerson.

A TIMOUR or an Attila towers unapproachingly above his horde; but in the last great struggle which the world has seen the Cromwell was not a hero, but an intelligent and united nation. And to whatever age they may belong, the greatest, the most godlike of men, are men, not gods. They are the offspring of their age; they would be nothing without their fellow-men.—J. S. Mill.

"REPENT, my son," a friar said
To the sick patient on his bed.
"I saw the demon on the watch
At the stair's foot thy soul to catch!"
"What was he like?" the sick man cried;
"Why, like an ass," the monk replied.
"An ass!" the sick man muttered; "pshaw!
'Twas your own shadow that you saw."
—Book of Epigrams.

A CIRCLE in a straight line is the mathematical symbol of a miracle. The attempt to construct a circle with a straight line would not be more ridiculous than the attempt to deduce a miracle philosophically. To reason a miracle is absurd, inconceivable; as inconceivable as wooden iron, or a circle without a periphery. Before it is discussed whether a miracle can happen, let it be shown that miracle, i. e., the inconceivable, is conceivable.—Feuerbach.

BETWEEN vague, wavering capability and fixed, indubitable performance, what a difference! A certain inarticulate self-consciousness dwells dimly in us; which only our works can render articulate and decisively discernable. Our works are the mirror wherein the spirit first sees its natural lineaments. Hence, too, the folly of that impossible precept, Know thyself, till it be translated into this partially possible one, Know what thou canst work at.—Carlyle.

Odds and Ends.

"LET'S pool our issues," said he to she.

THE table of interest—The dinner table.

SOMETHING of a wag—The tip of a dog's tail.

HALF a loaf is better than a loaf all the time.

SONG of the cook—"Good-bye," sweet tart good-bye."

GENTLEMEN of the press—The managers of a cider-mill.

THOSE we shall miss—Our daughters till they are married.

A KIND of timber for which there is no further call—Summer board.

WHAT riles a country postmaster is to hav a postal card come to the office written in French.

IT is the season of fairs, and there is a young man in town who holds one every Sunday night.

"AT Rome do as the Romans do"—that is to say, get a hand-organ and a monkey, and sail for America.

"NOTHING but leaves," said Eve, pleasantly, when Adam praised the taste shown in her new polonaise.

THESE trapeze performers are desperate persons. They are bound to make a living if they hav to swing for it.

"HOW DID you learn that graceful attitude?" said a gentleman to a fellow leaning in a tipsy fashion against a post. "I hav been practicing at the glass."

THERE is a fortune awaiting the man who invents a boomerang bootjack which you can throw at a cat and hav it sail back to the window if it misses its mark.

"KEEP a stiff upper lip, don't spit tobacco on your white vest, and never bet high on two pair," was a Chicago man's advice to his son, who was going out in the world to carve a name and fame for himself.

TOM POTTER'S SHOOTING.—They had been talking about the remarkable performance of Dr. Carver, the marksman who shoots, with a rifle, glass balls which are sent into the air as fast as a man can throw them. Presently Abner Byng, who was sitting by, said:

"That's nothing!"

"What's nothing?"

"Why, that shooting. Did you know Tom Potter?"

"No."

"Well, Potter was the best hand with a rifle I ever saw. Beat this man Carter all hollow. I'll tell you what I've seen Potter do. You know, maybe, along there in the cherry season, Mrs. Potter would want to preserve some cherries; so Tom would pick them for her. And how do you think he'd stone them?"

"I don't know. How?"

"Why, he'd fill his gun with bird-shot and get a boy to drop half a bushel of cheries at one time from the roof of the house. As they came down he'd fire, and take the stone clean out of every cherry in the lot! It is a positive fact. He might occasionally miss one cherry, maybe, but not often. But he did bigger shooting than that when he tried."

"What did he do?"

"Why, Jim Miller—did you know him? No? Well, Tom made a bet once with Jim that he could shoot the buttons off his own coat-tail by aiming in the opposite direction, and Jim Miller took him up."

"Did he do it?"

"Do it! He fixed himself in position and aimed at a tree in front of him. The ball hit the tree, caromed, hit the corner of a house, caromed, struck a lamp-post, caromed, and flew behind Tom, and nipped the buttons off as sleek as a whistle. You bet he did it."

"That was fine shooting."

"Yes, but I hav seen him stand under a flock of wild pigeons, billions of them coming like the wind, and kill them so fast that the front of the flock never passed a given line, but turned over and fell down so that it looked like a kind of brown and feathery Niagara. Tom did it by having twenty-three breech-loading rifles, and a boy to load them. He always shot with that kind."

"You say you saw him do this sort of shooting?"

"Yes, sir, and better than that, too. Why, I will tell you what I hav seen Tom Potter do. I saw him once set up an India-rubber target at three hundred feet, and hit the bull's eye twenty-seven times a minute with the same ball. He would hit the target, the ball would bound back, right into the rifle barrel just as Tom had clapped in a fresh charge of powder, and so he kept her going backward and forward, backward and forward, until at last he happened to move his gun, and the bullet missed the muzzle. It was the biggest thing I ever saw; the very biggest—except one."

"What was that?"

"Why, one day I was out with him when he was practicing, and it began to rain. Tom did not want to get wet, and we had no umbrella, and what do you think he did?"

"What?"

"Now, what do you think that man did to keep dry?"

"I can not imagine."

"Well, sir, he got me to load his weapons for him, and I pledge you my word, although it began to rain hard, he hit every drop that came down, so that the ground for about eight feet around us was as dry as punk. It was beautiful, sir; beautiful!"

And then the company rose up slowly and passed out, one by one, each man eyeing Abner and looking solemn as he went by; and when they had gone Abner looked queerly at me for a moment, and then remarked:

"There is nothing I hate so much as a liar. Giv me a man who is the friend of the solid truth, and I will tie to him."

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Siricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella, Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author. Cash orders will be filled in rotation. Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracles. Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion? Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. The London edition, $5.00.

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts.; cloth, 75 c.

ANAYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for enquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher.
141 Eighth st., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth, $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine" "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by

D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth st., New York.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman OF NEW YORK, AND

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher
141 Eighth St., New York.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

The Priest in Absolution.

The first Number of the "HOLY CROSS SERIES," is from the abridged London edition of the same work, which created so much excitement in England. The original volume was issued by the "High Church" authorities, as a guide to the clergy in the confessional, and was designed to be introduced into the English Church. Price 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu;

THE BOOK OF THE GENERATION OF JESUS.

WITH PREFACE AND NOTES BY SCHOLASTICUS.

First English Translation

Of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. By the power of a charm stolen from the Holy of Holies he cured lepers, raised the dead, and wrought other miracles. Wherefore he was arrested by the elders of Jerusalem, scourged, crowned with thorns, and by order of the Sanhedrin stoned to death and hanged on the day before the Passover and the Sabbath, in the reign of Queen Alexandra, about the year 75 B. C.

Death of Simon Kepha on a tower in the city of the Nazarines about 59 B. C. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros."

Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha.

Price 10 cents. Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 5. No. 52. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, December 28, 1878. | SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. | $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE are in all the world 4,489,877 Methodist Church members.

GEN. O. O. HOWARD has taken to writing Sunday-school books.

A CANVASSER found 383 families in Newburgh destitute of a Bible, and 215 of these refused to accept one as a gift.

OF the 2,000,000,000 of cigars now annually consumed in this country, about ninety per cent are of home manufacture.

THE Indiana Supreme Court has decided, in the suit of a church against a member, that subscriptions made on Sunday cannot be collected by law.

CONGRESSIONAL WORSHIP.—The Chaplain of the House, although a Methodist, and governed by no formula of the Church, makes the same prayer each day. Evidently he is waiting for it to be answered before offering a new one.—Boston Post.

IT IS intimated that Anthony has submitted it to a select committee of his Vice Society whether the cause of morals is not damaged by allowing horses and dogs to pass through our streets without being covered. The Committee has not yet reported.

WHEN a Hartford woman patted her friend's seven-year-old youngster on the head and said, "I should like to hav such a little boy as you are," he looked up into her face and replied: "Well, I guess you can; I don't b'lieve God's lost the pattern of me."

"THE poor ought to be satisfied with potato soup," preached a Chicago clergyman, as he wiped the sweat from his jaw—that Samsonian weapon with which he had demolished so many Philistine dinners. His pulpit would be more fitly used in stabling a four-legged ass.

WM. GILLSTON, a prominent member of Dr. Talmage's church, Brooklyn, has entered a suit for the recovery of $1,300 which he was induced to subscribe towards freeing the church from debt under what he claims to hav been false representations on the part of the pastor.

IT is said that the pure-minded Anthony Comstock is so well-pleased with the dressed fowls that hav come into market this season that he has assured the dealers that he will not throw them into prison for obscenity. But if he finds one that is not dressed, look out!

A CLERGYMAN speaking at a funeral bewailed the loss of many great men, such, for instance, as the deceased in the coffin before him, and said that none like them were left to us. A strong-voiced old Methodist sister startled both speaker and audience by exclaiming, "Bless God, that's a lie!"

THE Rev. J. W. Buck, a pastor in the Methodist Church at New Albany, was found guilty of attempting to ruin Mrs. James Hixon, the wife of a local preacher and blacksmith, and was suspended from all the privileges of the ministry of the Methodist Church. He made two attempts, one in August and one in September.

FRANKIE CHAPMAN, daughter of a Methodist clergyman in Jackson, Ohio, went to a public ball in Cincinnati, where she had been living, and drank so much wine with a friend, Miss Agans, that she became intoxicated. They went home together, quarrelled, fought, and Miss Chapman killed her antagonist by striking her on the head with a pitcher.

THE spectacle of a Christian minister prosecuting another Christian minister for alleged libel is not an edifying one, either for the flock or for the unbelievers. Probably a good many members of the denomination to which both the plaintiff and defendant belong will rejoice that Judge Van Brunt has found a technical reason for dismissing the complaint of the Rev. Mr. McCarthy against the Rev. Mr. Sweetser.

THUS does Brother Duryea speak of Brother Talmage: "I know there is a morbid craving, so that he who plays the mountebank, and struts across the platform, and paints the most lurid pictures of vice as it is, will gain most readily popular attention and insure to himself the most constant presence of the multitude. I would rather hav only two or three gathered together in the name of God to hold up the glory of my Lord than to hav the hosannas of the multitude."

UP in Vermont they can't see the difference between lotteries in the church fairs of Christians and lotteries as a matter of business engineered outside of Christianity. As existing laws forbid ordinary sinners from running games of chance, it is thought to be no more than fair to stop the church people from doing so; hence a bill has been introduced in the Legislature prohibiting even the time-honored grab-bag at sanctuary entertainments.

BISHOP SIMPSON, who is not generally given to joking, said in his second Yale lecture, "Jonah fled, and would not go to Ninevah until after he had been well whaled." It is reported that the utterance of this statement was followed by laughter on the part of the audience. It was somewhat out of the course of things to see such an eminent and dignified scholar as the Bishop making weak jokes on Scripture when lecturing to theological students on "who should enter the ministry."

AN old maid who died a few days ago in Philadelphia left a substantial legacy to establish a "Home for indigent, respectable, unmarried women, members of the Episcopal Church, and not of African descent." This is probably the only instance in which indigence, respectability, spinstership, Episcopalianism, and a white skin hav been combined as the conditions of admission to the blessings of a "home." It is not supposed that the membership of the "home" will be large.

IT is known that divorce does not exist in France. The nearest thing to it is the seperation de corps, equivalent to the English judicial separation. From 1846 to 1850 the average of separations was 1,080. This gradually increased until 1876, when the number was 3,251, or exactly three times the number in thirty years. Strange to say, only fourteen in every hundred are asked for by the husband, the wife thus having eighty-six per cent to her credit. Seventeen out of the total number do not wait for the twelvemonth to expire before trying to rid themselves of their bonds. One third of the 3,000 live together from five to ten, and another third from ten to twenty years before they ask to be separated, and upward of 500 only do so when the silver marriage approaches.

THE Rev. E. M. Pinckney, of Williamsburgh, S. C., tearfully informs the Washington Republican that the wicked Democrats are about to arrest him for perjury. This was on November 19th, and our dear brother winds up his epistle thus: "Unless something be done for my protection, I do not think I can safely return to my congregation. I leave myself, though, in the hands of Him who is willing to guide me by his counsel, and afterward receive me into his glory." Later and official returns show that Bro. Pinckney had been "received into" the county jail. In all probability he cannot safely return to his congregation, as they propose to prefer charges against him at the next Conference. This worthy follower of the cross has defrauded many members of his congregation, and the charges which led to his arrest were made by a prominent member thereof.

THE building at 14 Bowery, which had been repaired by a wealthy benevolent gentleman, has been opened under charge of Mr. John Moir, as a coffee and reading-room on the plan of those in London, Liverpool, Bristol, and Birmingham, which hav proved very successful, and hav drawn from neighboring liquor saloons. Tea and coffee are furnished at three cents a cup, cocoa at four cents a cup, pies and sandwiches at four cents, and rolls at one cent. It is not proposed, at present, to furnish any other edibles. Coffee and tea are also supplied at six cents a quart and cocoa at eight cents, for the convenience of operatives in neighboring factories, who may desire to add hot drinks at the dinner hour to the food they may bring from home. In the reading-room above, the daily and weekly newspapers may be seen, together with pictorials and magazines. There is also an excellent library and a smoking-room, in which chess, checkers, and dominoes may be played. The establishment is handsomely furnished and intended for both men and women. It is not in any way connected with any religious or charitable society.

BAD NEWS FROM PUTNAM COUNTY.—We are sorry to hear that Deacon Ira Hopkins of the Baptist Church of Carmel, who has reached the ripe age of seventy-five and who for a generation has been rewarded a morning light in the Church, and a man of almost unblemished character has at last by his unbridled lusts brought himself into disgrace and been deprived of his office and turned out of the Church. The offense with which he was charged is holding unlawful intercourse with a neice of his wife and that in consequence she has unduly become a mother. It is indeed a sad thing that an aged Christian like the deacon who ought now to be getting his ascension robes in readiness should so far come under the influence of the evil one as to blacken a long life of good deeds by such a grievous offense, but such is life, and such is the power which the Prince of Darkness still wields, even over the faithful. The old deacon's sin is truly great, but let him and his friends congratulate themselves that, though his sins are as scarlet and enough to cause the angels to hang their heads in sorrow, he did not mail a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," to G. Brackett, Box 202, Granville, N. Y. Compared with this heinous offense the despoiling of innocent virgins pales into utter insignificance.

THE trial of the Rev. J. W. Stephenson, presiding elder of the Dayton (O.) Methodist Conference, has resulted in a conviction of drunkenness and suspension from the ministry. The court was in session only two days. Police officer Brunner testified that he saw the clergyman drunk in the street, and trying to hug women whom he met. The officer arrested him, but not without a hard struggle, in which both rolled over each other in the gutter. Stephenson had previously fallen, and his clothing was daubed with mud. He was taken to a police station, where he became insensibly drunk. Dr. Iddings, who attended him, swore that he had no symptons of being drugged or insane, but was simply and vulgarly drunk. A mild attack of delirium tremens ensued, showing that he had been drinking long and heavily. The landlord of the Greble House testified that Stephenson frequently lodged there under an assumed name, and got drunk so often that the bartender was ordered to let him hav no more liquor. He usually drank nearly a tumblerful of raw whiskey at a draught. The only defense was that Stephenson had been unnerved by family troubles, and was on the verge of insanity. The committee voted unanimously to suspend him. But then let it borne in mind to the credit of the unfortunate clergyman that it does not appear that he ever sold a copy of "Cupid's Yokes." Had he done so he would of course hav sunk beneath the respect of all good people, and would deserve at least ten years in prison.

A MOTION was made a few days ago by Judge Dittenhoffer in the case of the United States against W. K. Porter, indicted for sending lottery circulars through the mail in violation of section 389 of the Revised Statutes, to quash the indictment on the ground that it did not set forth the circular so that the court could determine on inspection that it was a circular concerning lotteries. Mr. Dittenhofer said that for aught that appeared on the face of the indictment it might hav been a circular warning people against the purchase of lottery tickets, or a circular in reference to a raffle at a church fair. He cited the case of Hallenbeck vs. the people, in 2 Abbotts, in which Judge Westbrook, in quashing the indictment, held, on an indictment for sending obscene matter, that though the rule did not require that the court should be polluted by spreading the obscene stuff on the records, yet it was necessary to state in general terms the nature of the matter, and also the decision of the House of Lords to the same effect in Bradlaugh against the queen, Bradlaugh having been indicted for publishing a book on the Malthusian theory, which was complained of as being obscene. Assistant District Attorney Butler cited in answer some Maine and Massachusetts cases and criticised Bradlaugh against the queen. Judge Benedict in giving his decision said that while he was not yet prepared to say that in sending obscene matter through the mails he would go as far as Judge Westbrook, yet in this case there was no reason for failing to set up the lottery circulars in the indictment, and therefore he granted the motion to quash the indictment. With this indictment fall many other indictments on the calendar.

Events of the Week.

MERRY Christmas and a happy New Year.

HEYWOOD has been pardoned by the President.

THIS city was visited by quite a snow storm on the 21st.

A SAN FRANCISCO bank president is on trial for forgery.

MADAME BLAVATSKY and Hierophant Olcott hav gone to India.

CONGRESSMAN WILLIAMS of Michigan died at Washington on the 21st.

CONGRESS has made an appropriation to continue the postal car service.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY has adopted a state constitution by a vote of two to one.

AN Ohio grave-robber has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000.

GEN. SHERIDAN has come off victorious in the suit for $480,000 damages in which he was defendant.

THE great St. Louis bridge has been sold under a mortgage foreclosure. The sum bid was $2,000,000.

A LARGE number of coasting vessels were wrecked along the Massachusett coast by the storm of last Saturday.

TWO WOMEN were found guilty of murder in the first degree on the same day recently, one in Maine and one in Washington.

THE Penobscot River is obstructed by an ice-gorge, and the inhabitants of the region round about are apprehensive of an overflow.

A GAMBLER cut his partner's throat and threw him from a train on the Grand Trunk Road near Ridgeway, Mich., a few days ago.

TWO OF the iron steamships which the Russian government has had fitted out at Philadelphia hav sailed, and two others will soon follow.

FIVE members of one family were burned to death in Cohoes, N. Y., on the night of the 18th, and one has since died of injuries received at the time.

THE third rail has been laid throughout on the New York, Lake Erie, and Western Railroad, making a narrow gauge road from Buffalo to Jersey City.

THE steamer Byzantin, from Marseilles for Constantinople, was run into and sunk in the Sea of Marmora a few days since. About one hundred lives were lost.

AN aged New Jersey farmer went crazy on religion, a few days ago, took poison, and went over to the other side to satisfy himself on a knotty theological point.

THE strikers on the Third Avenue Railroad hav been defeated and are thrown out of work. There were too many other poor men ready and eager to take their places.

NEARLY ten million dollars hav been expended on the Brooklyn suspension bridge thus far, and it is but little more than half finished. Work on it is suspended for the winter.

HUNTER, the New Jersey murderer, who is to be hanged on the 10th of next month, is religiously studying his Bible preparatory to going to meet his Jesus. The vicarious atonement is not powerful enough to save him from the hangman.

BAYARD TAYLOR, the well-known traveler, author, journalist, and poet, died on the 19th at Berlin, Prussia, at his post as American Minister. He died as he lived, a confirmed Rationalist. His funeral was attended by many German statesmen and authors.

THERE is a run on the exchequer of Bishop Purcell of Cincinnati which he finds it difficult to meet. He has been acting in the capacity of savings bank for his parishioners during the past few years, and now they make a simultaneous demand for their money.

FOR attempting to present a petition to the Russian Emperor, recently, 142 young students were arrested and imprisoned by the imperial police. There is trouble brewing in Russia; Nihilism is spreading and growing more dangerous under the repression policy.

Selections.

Modern Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency.—Continued.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Materialism regards matter and force as two aspects of the same thing. It is quite common for writers of the day to speak of them as though they were two entities quite different in their nature. They refer to force as though it were something that uses matter as a medium through which to move and act. Sometimes it is represented as stored away in objects, ready to leap out the first opportunity, as the pent-up fires of the earth burst forth in volcanic eruptions. Not content with detaching force from matter, some writers proceed to argue that as we can speak of matter only in terms of force, and do not know what force is, we can have no knowledge of matter. Others attempt to get rid of matter altogether by reducing it to mere "centers of force!" This kind of reasoning by some is thought to be very profound. It is not uncommon for those of theological tastes and tendencies to write force with the initial letter a capital, "just" (to quote a comparison from Huxley) "as you give a grenadier a bear-skin cap to make him look more formidable than he is by nature," and then assume that this great unknowable may be the Ancient of Days that appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

But what warrant is there in philosophy or science for abstracting force from matter, and making it a metaphysical entity, a spiritual or semi-spiritual substance? Clearly the distinction between them is a mere logical artifice, or an ideal separation of the subject and its predicate. Existence has two aspects, active and passive. Force is activity. It is the objective synthesis of all activities, as consciousness is the subjective synthesis of all feelings. As little as consciousness can exist apart from the conscious subject can force exist apart from the active object. We know matter by force, because we know it by its activities. In a state of rest it could make no impression upon us. We express matter in terms of force, or, strictly speaking, in terms of feeling, and we know one in knowing the other. "Directed pressure" in one sense is a strictly scientific definition of force, and hence, as Grove says, "force is that which produces or resists motion." Energy is the capacity of an agent to overcome resistance. This is a strictly Materialistic view of force, and it is both simple and scientific, quite in contrast to that metaphysical conception of force which is met with in the works of some of our modern writers.

No wonder theologians bestow upon matter so many bad names when they have divested it of its noblest powers and capacities in order to enhance the greatness of a being who is supposed to act through it. In their estimation it is inert, powerless, contemptible, unless stirred like the pool of Bethesda by the potent touch of Jehovah. Let them restore to it the powers of which it has been robbed in order to enrich a being whose glory has ever been at the cost of the world and humanity, and possibly they will see less reason for maligning it. They may then be able to see in it those elements which in their ever-varying forms become not only the air they breathe, the water they drink, and the food which hunger craves, not only the amethyst and diamond, the violet, lily, and rosebud, but the ruby lip, the love-lit eye, the wonderful brain, and in brief, the bodies and souls of the noblest beings that the earth has yet produced.

In the conception of the cosmos enters the idea of law. The word law is a generalized expression of the manner in which phenomena occur. In strictness of speech things are not subject to nor governed by law. We observe certain uniform processes, and these processes or modes of action we call laws. They do not govern nature in any sense of the word, and to speak of nature as subject to law is to use an expression that is not only loose, but which involves a palpable error.

By the law of gravitation every particle of matter attracts every other particle with a force which diminishes as the square of the distance increases. This is one of the most wonderful laws of matter. "Were the matter of the universe," says Tyndall, "cast into cold, detached fragments into space, and left to the mutual gravitation of its parts, the collision of the fragments would in the end produce the fires of the stars. The action of gravity upon matter, originally cold, may in fact be the proximate source of other such powers as are generated by light and heat." Now what is this paragraph from Tyndall but a statement of modes of action, or a description of material processes. There is then no analogy between the so-called laws of nature and legislative enactment for the government of society. The latter are made to influence actions; the former are the processes of the cosmos. Materialism regards life as a form and manifestation of material activity. As Virchow remarks, "a part of the sum total of matter emerges from time to time out of the usual course of its motions into special chemico-organic combinations, and after having for a while continued therein, it returns again to the general modes of motion." What are called vital phenomena are less fully understood, because more complex than ordinary physical phenomena; but the ultimate cause of any phenomenon, such as the falling of an apple, or the combining of the elements, is equally beyond our grasp. We know as little about the "essence" of gravitation as we do about the "essence of life." Geometrical forms appear in saline solutions under favorable conditions; but what do we know about the cause of crystallization? We have no more evidence of a something in the living plant or animal not derived from the seed or soil, than of something in the crystal that did not exist in the saline solution. There are species of crystals as there are of living things. The molecules in passing from the liquid to the solid state and assuming regular geometrical shapes, arrange and group themselves as though they acted in strict accordance with a pre-existing type.

Yet who would have recourse to other than material forces in accounting for the phenomena of crystallization? And I ask, with Huxley, "What justification is there for the existence in the living matter of a something which has no representative in the non-living matter that gave rise to it?" There are no ingredients in organic bodies that are not found in inorganic nature. Indeed the contrast between organic and inorganic, like the classification of objects into animal, vegetable, and mineral, although a convenient arrangement for study, is purely artificial and arbitrary. The old tests have been rendered worthless by modern researches. We may maintain with Herbert Spencer that "every kind of being is conceived as a product of modification wrought by insensible gradations on a pre-existing kind of being; and this holds as fully of the supposed commencement of organic life as of all subsequent development of organic life." Proceeding from the lower to the higher organic forms, from the structureless clots of albuminous carbon to the most complex organisms, we still find no force that may not, that probably does not, have its correlative in the physical world. It is but recently that any attempt has been made to apply the principle of the convertibility and persistence of force (itself but a recent discovery) to the intricate problems of sensation and thought; yet it seems to point unmistakably, as Huxley remarks of the progress of science in general, "to the extension of the province of what we call matter and causation, and the concomitant gradual banishment from all regions of human thought of what we call spirit and spontaneity.

"I hold," says this distinguished author, "with the Materialist that the human body, like all living bodies, is a machine, all the operations of which will sooner or later be explained on physical principles. I believe we shall sooner or later arrive at a mechanical equivalent of consciousness, just as we have arrived at a mechanical equivalent of heat."

The strongest arguments against Materialism in the past have been those based upon the adaptations of nature, which, superficially considered, seem to indicate a designing intelligence in the material world. Viewed in the light of modern science, and especially with the aid of the important discovery of Darwin, the principle of natural selection, these adaptations which at first appear to exhibit intention and contrivance prove to be the adjustment of objects to their environment in a manner which, if it does not exclude the possibility of design, at least fails to reveal any trace of it. As the earth has produced its inhabitants, they must be suited to it on the penalty of extinction. We know that changes are constantly going on in the inorganic world; that the forms whose peculiarities bring them most closely in adaptation to their environment will survive and transmit their favorable variations; that those which are not modified to suit the new conditions will perish; and consequently in the preserved organisms we must have the "survival of the fittest," or those best adapted to their medium. In a cold climate those animals with the thickest fur, other things being equal, stand the best chance to survive, while those most thinly clad will perish; by the law of heredity, the surviving animals transmit their advantage, and by a continued process of selection, so admirably illustrated and demonstrated by Darwin and Wallace, in the course of time we have, naturally and without any design, races of animals in the North, with thick, heavy fur, fitting them for a cold climate.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

MANY gifts of money and precious objects are now handed to Pope Leo XIII. in person, for his own use; but contributions to Peter's pence hav dwindled down to a mere driblet since the death of Pius IV.

MACHINERY for shoemaking produces marvelous results. One class of machines sewed last year 40,000,000 pairs of shoes, while another pegged 55,000,000 pairs in the same time. Ten men can make 600 pairs of shoes a day. In New England 460 bushels of shoe pegs are made in a day, and one cent's worth of pegs will peg four pairs of shoes. There are 576 patents on shoe pegs and peggers, and two thousand on shoe machinery. Machinery turned out over two million shoe lasts in the United States last year.

Pocket Theology.—Continued.

BY VOLTAIRE.

TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH FOR THE FIRST TIME BY MISS ELLEN CARROLL.

AUTHORITY (Ecclesiastical).

A faculty enjoyed by God's ministers to convince us of the wisdom of their decisions, of the authenticity of their rights, and the soundness of their opinions by the help of prisons, soldiers, stakes, fagots, and lettres-de-cachet.

AUTO-DA-FÉ.

An act of faith. A dainty feast offered to the Divinity from time to time, and which consisted of roasting, in great pomp, the bodies of Jews or heretics for the salvation of their souls and the edification of the lookers-on. From this we may infer that the Father of Mercies has ever shown a marked taste for roasts and broils.

AVARICE.

A deadly sin in the laity, who should invariably show themselves generous and open-handed towards Mother Church; as for the latter, she may not emulate them in this wise, inasmuch as her possessions all belong to her spouse, who might grumble and storm were she to show too much indulgence or generosity to such arrant rogues as they.

AVE MARIA.

An elegant and well-turned compliment paid by the angel Gabriel to the Virgin Mary, on the part of God the Father, on announcing to her that she was about to conceive of the Holy Ghost. Since her death, or her assumption, this virgin, it would seem, is always extremely gratified whenever any mention is made of this episode in her life, and which, for the rest, does her a great deal of credit.

AZYMOUS (unleavened) BREAD.

Once upon a time there arose in the Church an important dissension touching the preference given by God to leavened or unleavened bread as the agent of his transformation in the ceremony of the Mass. This great question, after having for a vast length of time divided the universe, is now happily settled, one portion of the Christians using leavened bread for the purpose, and the others azymous, or unleavened, bread.

BABEL (Tower of).

A parable of allegory, under which, to judge from all appearances, the Bible prophetically designated theology, thereby giving to understand that all who raise themselves up to the Godhead and discuss among themselves of his essence and attributes will no more understand each other than a Hottentot would a Frenchman, a curate his bishop, or a Molinist a Jansenist.

BALAAM.

A false prophet whose ass, it is said, possessed the gift of speech. Strong-minded people, of course, will not believe this, notwithstanding the fact that this miracle has been perpetuated in the Church, where nothing is more ordinary than to see asses, both male and female, speak and even reason on questions of theology.

BAPTISM.

A sacrament absolutely indispensable to salvation. God will receive none into his glory unless once in their lives they have received a douche of cold water on the occiput. This water has the virtue of cleansing an infant of an enormous sin expiated by the Son of God and which had been committed but a few thousand years before the parents of the child dreamed of making him.

BASTARDS.

Scapegraces whose parents have not feed the Church to purchase the right of lying together. In accordance with the wise jurisdiction introduced by original sin, all such are denied the advantages enjoyed by those whose parents have paid to lie together.

BEADLE.

A man in the service of the Church, and, like the priest, deriving a living from the altar. It is popularly believed that the beadle makes his soup with the consecrated bread.

BEATIFICATION.

A solemn act by which the Roman pontiff, who receives the most authentic news from the other world, declares to the universe that some monk he never before heard of, enjoys eternal felicity, and has to be complimented accordingly.

BELIEF.

An unlimited confidence and faith in priests. A good Christian should believe all that he is told to believe, otherwise he is only good for the stake. If he objects that he has not been gifted with the grace to believe, burn him all the same, for by denying him such grace the Divinity clearly demonstrates that he considers him as only fit to be made a bonfire of to warm the faith in the hearts of his elect.

BELLS.

Noisy theological instruments, destined, like the priests, to deafen and bewilder the living, while calling upon the dead to "pay up" their debts to the Church. Bells are very good Christians, seeing that they are always baptized. We may even go so far as to assume that they keep their baptismal innocence pure and unspotted, which the generality of other Christians do not.

BENCHES.

Wooden seats upon which theologians rest their pious posteriors, and often throw at each other's heads in their friendly discussions on religion.

BENEDICTIONS.

Charms, sorceries, and magical ceremonies, by the aid of which the ministers of the most high, while holding up two fingers in space and mumbling divers holy conjurations, evoke the Almighty and prevail on him to turn on the tap of his grace on men and things here below, which above all fills even to overflowing the pockets of the clergy. Once a thing has been blessed it is sacred, it ceases to be profane, and thenceforward cannot be touched without sacrilege and profanation—crimes that deserve the stake.

BENEFICES.

Revenues attached to an ecclesiastical office and collected in the name of God by a member of the clergy, who, as soon as he has got them, possesses them by right divine, and consequently is under no obligation to anybody. A priest cannot possess more than one benefice, a rule of the Church which is, as we all know, one of the most strictly observed.

BIBLE.

A most sacred book, of divine inspiration, and containing all that a Christian should know and practice. It is not seemly that laymen should read it, as the word of God could not fail to do them harm. It is much wiser that the priests read it for them, they alone having stomachs vigorous enough to digest it. Laymen should be content with the products of the sacerdotal digestion.

BLASPHEMIES.

Words or discourses which attach to unknown objects ideas that are not fitting to them, or which deprive them of the idea that the priests have judged fitting to them. Whence it results that to blaspheme is to differ in opinion to the clergy, clearly one of the most horrible of crimes.

BRAINS.

A good Christian should have no brains, or at least the less he has of them the better. With the help of preceptors, confessors, and convents, Christian parents can have the brains of their offspring reduced to the least volume.

BREVIARY.

A selection of prayers, in elegant Latin, that the priests, the bestowers of blessings, to gain their salary, are obliged to recite every day, under pain of being useless to society.

BROTHER.

All men are brothers, that is to say, constantly quarreling among themselves about the inheritance left them by their father whose will, of meaning passably obscure in the origin, has been rendered a great deal more so by the theologians.

BULLS.

Strips of parchment invested with a leaden seal which the servant of the servants of God despatches whenever there is question either of raising money or of exciting a religious fermentation in localities that may happen to be in need of exercise. Had it not been for the bull Unigenitus, France would have been plunged in the most frightful torpor.

BURDEN.

The burden of the Lord is light. The priests make us carry this burden for them, which prevents them from feeling the weight thereof, or rather, it is the priests themselves who, according to Jeremy, are in reality the burden of the Lord.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

MORE Socialist books, among them the works of Lasalle, hav been prohibited in Berlin, and numerous Socialist societies dissolved.

THE Danbury (Conn.) Sunday School Association is giving attention to a series of normal lectures from Prof. W. F. Sherwin.

IN Russia there is a religious sect called the "Helpers." Their peculiarity is that they avoid lying, stealing, and getting into debt. It is unnecessary to add that they are not Christians.

Science and the Arts.

The Doctrine of Filiation, or Descent-Theory.

BY PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

CHAPTER XIV.

PEDIGREE AND HISTORY OF THE VEGETABLE KINGDOM.

Every attempt that we make to gain a knowledge of the pedigree of any small or large group of organisms related by blood must, in the first instance, start with the evidence afforded by the existing "natural system" of this group. For although the natural system of animals and plants will never become finally settled, but will always represent a merely approximate knowledge of true blood relationship, still it will always possess great importance as a hypothetical pedigree. It is true, by a "natural system" most zoologists and botanists only endeavor to express in a concise way the subjective conceptions which each has formed of the objective "form-relationships" of organisms. These form-relationships, however, as the reader has seen, are in reality the necessary result of true blood relationship. Consequently, every morphologist in promoting our knowledge of the natural system, at the same time promotes our knowledge of the pedigree, whether he wishes it or not. The more the natural system deserves its name, and the more firmly it is established upon the concordance or results obtained from the study of comparative anatomy, ontogony, and palæontology, the more surely may we consider it as the approximate expression of the true pedigree of the organic world.

In entering upon the task contemplated in this chapter, the genealogy of the vegetable kingdom, we shall have, according to this principle, first to glance at the natural system of the vegetable kingdom as it is at present (with more or less important modifications) adopted by most botanists. According to the system generally in vogue, the whole series of vegetable forms is divided into two main groups. These main divisions, or sub-kingdoms, are the same as were distinguished more than a century ago by Charles Linnæus, the founder of systematic natural history, and which he called Cryptogamia, or secretly-blossoming plants, and Phanerogamia, or openly-flowering plants. The latter, Linnæus, in his artificial system of plants, divided, according to the different number, formation, and combination of the anthers, and also according to the distribution of the sexual organs, into twenty-three different classes, and then added the Cryptogamia to these as the twenty-fourth and last class.

The Cryptogamia, the secretly-blossoming or flowerless plants, which were formerly but little observed, have in consequence of the careful investigations of recent times been proved to present such a great variety of forms, and such a marked difference in their coarser and finer structure, that we must distinguish no less than fourteen different classes of them; whereas the number of classes of flowering plants, or Phanerogamia, may be limited to four. However, these eighteen classes of the vegetable kingdom can again be naturally grouped in such a manner that we are able to distinguish in all six main divisions or branches of the vegetable kingdom. Two of these six branches belong to the flowering, and four to the flowerless plants. The following table shows how the eighteen classes are distributed among the six branches, and how these again fall under the sub-kingdoms of the vegetable kingdom:

SYSTEMATIC VIEW

Of the Six Branches and Eighteen Classes of the Vegetable Kingdom.

Prim'ry Groups or Sub-Kingdoms of the Vegetable Kingdom.	Branches or Clades of the Vegetable Kingdom.	Classes of the Vegetable Kingdom.	Systematic Name of the Classes.
A. Thallus Plants Thallophyta	I. Algæ Tangles	1. Primeval algæ	1. Archephyceæ (Protophyta)
		2. Green algæ	2. Chlorophyceæ (Chloroalgæ)
		3. Brown algæ	3. Phæophyceæ (Fucoideæ)
		4. Red algæ	4. Rhodophyceæ (Florideæ)
	II. Thr'd-plants Inophyta	5. Lichens	5. Lichenes
		6. Fungi	6. Fungi
B. Prothallus Plants Prothallophyta	III. Mosses Muscinæ	7. Tangle-mosses	7. Charobrya (Characeæ)
		8. Liverworts	8. Thallobrya (Hepaticæ)
		9. Frondose-mosses	9. Phyllobrya (Frondosæ)
		10. Turf-mosses	10. Sphagnobrya (Sphagnaceæ)
	IV. Ferns Felicinæ	11. Shaft-ferns	11. Calamariæ (Calamophyta)
		12. Frondose-ferns	12. Filices (Prerideæ)
		13. Aquatic ferns	13. Rhizocarpeæ (Hydropteridee)
		14. Scale-ferns	14. Selagineæ (Lepidophyta)
C. Flowering Plants Phanerogami	V. Plants with Naked Seeds Gymnosperma	15. Palm-ferns	15. Cycadeæ
		16. Pines	16. Coniferæ
	VI. Plants with Enclo'd Seeds Angiosperma	17. Plants with 1 seed lobe	17. Monocotylæ
		18. Plants with 2 seed lobes	18. Dicotylæ

The one sub-kingdom of the Cryptogamia may now be naturally divided into two divisions, or sub-kingdoms, differing very essentially in their internal structure and in their external form, namely, the Thallus plants and the Prothallus plants. The group of Thallus plants comprises the two large branches of Tangles, or Algæ, which live in water, and the Thread-plants, or Inophytes (Lichens and Fungi), which grow on land, upon stones, bark of trees, upon decaying bodies, etc. The group of Prothallus plants, on the other hand, comprises the two branches of Mosses and Ferns, containing a great variety of forms

All Thallus plants or Thallophytes, can be directly recognized from the fact that the two morphological fundamental organs of all other plants, stem, and leaves, cannot be distinguished in their structure. The complete body of all Algæ and of all Thread-plants is a mass composed of simple cells, which is called a lobe, or thallus. This thallus is as yet not differentiated into axial-organs (stem and root) and leaf-organs. On this account, as well as through many other peculiarities, the Thallophytes contrast strongly with all remaining plants—those comprised under the two sub-kingdoms of Prothallus plants and Flowering plants—and for this reason the two latter sub kingdoms are frequently classed together under the name of Stemmed plants or Cormophytes. The following table will explain the relation of these three sub-kingdoms to one another according to the two different views:

I. Flowerless Plants (Cryptogamia)	A. Thallus Plants (Thallophyta)	I. Thallus Plants (Thallophyta)
	B. Prothallus Plants (Prothallophyta)	II. Stemmed Plants (Cormophyta)
II. Flowering Plants (Phanerogamia)	C. Flowering Plants (Phanerogamia)

The stemmed plants, or Cormophytes, in the organization of which the difference of axial-organs (stem and root) and leaf-organs is already developed, form at present, and have, indeed, for a very long period formed, the principal portion of the vegetable world. However, this was not always the case. In fact, stemmed plants, not only of the flowering group, but even of the prothallus group, did not exist at all during that immeasurably long space of time which forms the beginning of the first great division of the organic history of the earth, under the name of the archilithic, or primordial period. The reader will recollect that during this period the Laurentian, Cambrian, and Silurian systems of strata were deposited, the thickness of which, taken as a whole, amounts to about 70,000 feet. Now, as the thickness of all the more recent superincumbent strata, from the Devonian to the deposits of the present time, taken together, amounts to only about 60,000 feet, we are enabled from this fact alone to draw the conclusion—which is probable also for other reasons—that the archilithic, or primordial, period was of longer duration than the whole succeeding period down to the present time. During the whole of this immeasurable space of time, which probably comprises many millions of centuries, vegetable life on earth seems to have been represented exclusively by the sub-kingdom of Thallus plants, and, moreover, only by the class of marine Thallus plants, that is to say, the Algæ. At least all the petrified remains which are positively known to be of the primordial period belong exclusively to this class. As all the animal remains of this immense period also belong exclusively to animals that lived in water, we come to the conclusion that at that time organisms adapted to a life on land did not exist at all.

For these reasons the first and most imperfect of the great provinces or branches of the vegetable kingdom, the division of the Algæ, or Tangles, must be of special interest to us. But, in addition, there is the interest which this group offers when viewed by itself. In spite of the exceedingly simple composition of their constituent cells, which are but little differentiated, the Algæ show an extraordinary variety of different forms. To them belong the simplest and most imperfect of all forms, as well as very highly developed and peculiar forms. The different groups of Algæ are distinguished as much by size of body as by the perfection and variety of thei outer form. At the lowest stage we find such species as the minute Protococcus, several hundred thousand of which occupy a space no larger than a pin's head. At the highest stage we marvel at the gigantic Macrocysts, which attain a length of from 300 to 400 feet, the longest of all forms in the vegetable kingdom. It is possible that a large portion of the coal has been formed out of Algæ. If not for these reasons, yet the Algæ must excite our special attention from the fact that they form the beginning of vegetable life, and contain the original forms of all other groups of plants, supposing that our monophyletic hypothesis of a common origin for all groups of plants is correct. [TO BE CONTINUED.]

[Selected by Elmina Drake Slenker.]

THE prices of some articles are eighteen per cent lower than before the war. Corn has not been so low since 1845, excepting in 1851, cotton not so low in twenty-three years, and mess pork not since 1844.

THE greatest cave in the world is the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, where any one can make a voyage on the waters of a subterranean river, and catch fish without eyes.

WHEN America was discovered, there were no horses here at all; in the very place where the ancestors of our horses had lived, no living horse had remained.

HUMBOLDT estimated that a given space of ground planted with the banana would yield 133 times as much nutritive substance as a similar extent of wheat.

THE nearest star is 250,000 times as far off as our sun.

Communications.

The Liberal Cause and Liberal League

WORDS OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: From the many letters of encouragement I am receiving from Liberals in various parts of the country, I select for THE TRUTH SEEKER the following quotations. I first name the writer and his or her postoffice address and then give a short selection from the letter. And first from

MR. W. D. HUNT, SCOTT, N. Y.

"I called a few Liberals to my room last winter, in Cortland, and from that little gathering we hav made a good working League; and I now hav a number of names subscribed for another League at Scott, and I shall, I think, without doubt, form another at Spofford and another at Truxton, and perhaps one at Borodino and another at Homer."

If brother Hunt accomplishes one half what he proposes to do he will make Cortland county the banner county of the state. I feel a personal interest in that county as it is my native county, the one in which I did my first work as a Freethinker. I next quote from the distinguished lecturer

W. F. JAMIESON, KANSAS CITY, MO.

"It seems to me that our cause needs your efforts in the field constantly. Hope you are in a situation so that instead of retiring from the active public work you can devote more time to it. In Carthage (Mo.) I hav just organized a Liberal League. I intend hereafter that the organizing of Leagues will be a regular part of my work."

This is good news for the Liberal League cause, as Bro. Jamieson is one of our most efficient workers. This is the good word sent by

MR. H. C. PAINTER, FRANKFORD, OHIO:

"We hav in this town and vicinity seventy-five Liberals, probably they exceed that number; but as for organizing a League, it is rather a hard thing to do, but I will keep on trying until I get a League established." That is the right spirit, Bro. Painter. "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

MRS. A. B. TUPPER, LAKE PORT, N. Y.

"I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and a Liberal, and naturally feel much interest in the Liberal League movement; and I am sorry to hear of the disagreement at Syracuse. We hav no League or other Liberal organization in this neighborhood, although there are quite a number of Freethinkers here. I hope some good missionary may be sent here to call together the scattered sheep and organize them into a League."

I am sure our sister Tupper, with her zeal for the cause, is just the missionary for the work. No man can do as well at organizing as an earnest woman.

The fact that so many young men are enlisting in our cause is very encouraging. One of these,

MR. WM. R. DAVIS, GALION, OHIO,

writes: "I am heartily in favor of the Liberal League movement. Nothing will advance the cause more than organization. I sincerely hope a League may be established in every town and hamlet of this country, and am sure a live thinker can be found in nearly every community who, by a little effort, might form a nucleus around which in time might be gathered a strong organization."

Another earnest young man,

MR. EVERARD E. MARTIN, BOISE CITY, IDAHO,

writes: "I would like to see less quarreling in our ranks. I was sorry to see the League was divided at Syracuse, and I should hav loved to see everything go on harmoniously; but it may be for the best; let us all hope so, at least. Personally I hav had a hard time since I left the church; about a year ago, so many of my friends hav deserted me, and my relations hav almost disowned me. It has been a blow I can ill bear, still I love Liberalism, and am resolved to do my utmost to spread it. I wish a good lecturer would come here and organize a League. I am tempted myself to organize a League, but I am so young, only twenty years old. If you will send me full instructions I will do my best to organize one in Boise City. There are plenty of Liberals here, if they will come out and show no white feather." I feel confident our young and zealous brother will succeed. He deserves to.

MR. PAUL GARIEPY, GOLD HILL, NEVADA,

the Liberal literature missionary appointed for that state, and who has been doing such grand service for the Liberal cause, writes: "Since my last I have received a package of Investigators for distribution. I am now a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER and Freethought Journal, besides the Investigator, all of which I pass around to the boys after reading them. I also received forty pamphlets—for gratuitous distribution—from their author, Dr. B. Hamlin of California. Twenty-six of them, entitled, "Bible Explained," contain an able argument showing the absurdity of the Bible and the Bible God." Every Liberal who reads this will help our cause by mailing at once some Liberal publications to our Western missionary. The word "missionary" has been used for such vile purposes that I dislike to apply it to our noble friend.

H. A. DEAL, NASHUA, N. H.

says: "I am twenty-eight years of age, and am thoroughly interested in the cause of Liberalism, and hav made it the study of my life. There is every opportunity in this city to organize a Liberal League. I hav many acquaintances who are willing to take hold and do something if some one will put the ball in motion. Please giv me advice upon the subject and any information you hav." My advice to my earnest young friend is to circulate a call for a meeting to oganize a League at once, then organize and go to work. The example will set half a dozen other Liberal communities in motion.

MR. G. H. KRUSCHKE, DAVENPORT, IOWA,

says: "Allow me, dear sir, to write a few lines to you through which I may acknowledge the interest I take (though passing) in the noble work you are trying to accomplish. You are right in the way you wish to carry out our reform and to hav our platform modeled. We should not devote what little time is left us to bark at small ghosts; we should not strike at the tail of the monster, but aim directly at his head. The church, her clergy, her doctrines, and her Bible should be her target."

Our friend is a thinker and worker, and we expect him to giv us a working League in Davenport soon.

LOUIS KNORR, M. D., SAVANNAH, GA.

The Dr. gives us this sensible advice: "Although I cannot share your labors for the cause, living as I do in the most hopelessly old fogy city of the Union, where it would be impossible to find a corporal's guard for forming a Liberal League, still I hav the cause at heart as an individual. Now I think the great number of German radicals and Freethinkers would form a very formidable auxiliary corps that ought to be secured. For this purpose I should suggest that you communicate at once with Mr. E. Herman Bobbe, the Corresponding Secretary of the National League of German Radicals, 56 Oneida st., Milwaukee."

The Doctor's suggestion is worthy the attention of all Liberals. There should be a general fraternization of German and American-born Liberals everywhere. Then we would present such a front to orthodoxy that we should command respect.

The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will pardon my inserting the too eulogistic words of my stranger friend,

MR. A. D. CHORNWELL, SALEM STATION, WIS.,

"I am a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav been since it first saw the light. I hav noticed with what ardor and enthusiasm you hav labored for the success of organized Freethought. My sympathy is strongly and entirely with you, though I never saw you and you never heard of me. I feel like extending a brother's hand to you for what you are doing for poor humanity. What a work is on hand for you and for all Freethinkers to perform! What a cloud of superstition hangs over the intellects of the human family! How this cloud is to be dispersed and the glorious light of reason take its place is what every true Liberal desires to know. I think I see a way that it can be brought about much more speedily than it is being done. Had the philanthropists of the past, like Girard and Lick, established a free Liberal paper, how much more good would they hav done than their money is now doing. Had I means I would spend it in this direction."

That is most valuable advice to give rich Liberals. Let some of them bequeath to our Liberal journals money enough to establish them permanently on a basis that will permit them to be issued at cheap rates and able to engage the best contributors. When we get a Liberal League in every town such noble things will be done.

B. F. BABBITT, RUSHFORD, N. Y.,

writes: "In regard to organizing a League in this place I would say it is difficult undertaking it at present. There is quite a large number of Liberals here for a small village. I think that some grand results might hav been accomplished in this locality before now if a judicious and energetic effort had been made to circulate Freethought publications."

Our friend informs me that he is only twenty years of age and came to Liberalism while attending an orthodox Sunday-school at fifteen years of age. He is now getting subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, circulating T. B. Wakeman's speech, and other Liberal literature, putting it into the hands of the Congressman from that district, and doing other good work, and proposes organizing a Liberal League as soon as he can. Mr. Babbitt is evidently one of the young Freethinkers who will be heard from in the future. I wish your space would permit me to give his whole letter.

MR. H. WINGERT, CINCINNATI, OHIO, says: "We hav talked long enough; if with this talk we can mix a good portion of action there is no reason why our cause should not be benefited. Forward march! Keep up the present agitation, and don't by any means let the L. L. Society take one step backwards."

I would like to giv you encouraging words from many other letters, but must stop here as this communication is already too long.

H. L. GREEN,
Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

Our Journals.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav long felt that no one thing could do so much to further our cause of Freethought and break the bars of bigotry and superstition as the more general scattering among the masses of tracts, books, and papers devoted to Liberal and scientific thought. Our speakers lack time and opportunity to do this cause justice, for they hav all they can do to get sufficient means to carry on their work. Hence I hav suggested to many who are adapted for the work that they act as agents for the Spiritual and Liberal papers in their own portions of the state, and as soon as possible purchase books and tracts, and devote their time to the sale of the same.

Again, at our coming Convention, which convenes at Lansing, Mich., from March 20th to 24th, none of our officers or speakers hav the time to giv this matter the attention it needs. So, that this most important of all subjects might hav due attention, I hav appointed five persons, in different portions of the state, to act in the capacities thus named, knowing them all to be competent, honorable, and just the persons for the place. They will do all that is possible before the state Convention, and thoroughly canvass the matter at that time. Please send those agents sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that your noble paper may be found in every Liberal home in the state. Agents: Mrs. M. E. French, Greenville, Mich.; Miss J. R. Lane, 148 Woodward ave., Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. A. H. Huntress, 83 Blackstone st., Jackson, Mich.; Mrs. S. Weyburn, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Mrs. Clark Sheffer, South Haven, Mich. I will send you the names of others as fast as competent persons can be found to thus act.

A. B. SPINNEY,
Pres. State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists.

[The above is an excellent suggestion. It is certainly desirable that an interest should be taken in the circulation and prosperity of Liberal journals. We are glad Brother Spinney takes this view of the matter, and hope he will interest himself more and more in the good work. We will gladly send sample copies to all who wish to canvass for new subscribers, and allow a liberal commission. It is a good time now for all friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER to make an effort in this direction. Every person who sends in the pay for a new subscriber is helping to keep the paper alive. Without due patronage every journal must die a natural death.—ED. T. S.]

Letter from Judge Brewer.

FRIEND BENNETT: The inclosed letter I received some days since from Judge Brewer. Some twenty years ago Stephen Brewer was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and was expelled for going to hear Emerson, Theodore Parker, Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Thomas Starr King, George William Curtis, and others. He was the most exemplary man in the church, and they charged that his example was very bad for that reason, for the young people would say, If Mr. Brewer can go to the stone church to hear these men it will not hurt us to go.

Shortly after his trial and expulsion from the church there was a vacancy in the judgeship of the county, and the Governor appointed Mr. Brewer to fill the vacancy, notwithstanding he was no lawyer.

H. L. GREEN.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1878.

Friend Green: Your favor of recent date containing the appointment was duly received. I will not decline the position you assign me, although I cannot help thinking you might hav selected some one who would prove a more efficient servant of the association.

I wish I could share your hopeful mind in regard to an early reunion of our unfortunately dissevered League; but, alas, I cannot. More ill feeling, I fear, has been engendered on both sides by the heated discussion in print than can be hastily put to rest. That the excitement of the hour runs very high is painfully evident in the fact that Mr. Abbot—usually considerate and fair—could giv such a report of our meeting at Syracuse as is contained in The Index of the 7th inst. You hav perceived that he transfers to his columns that libelous report of the doings of our Congress given by the Syracuse Standard, and presents it in such a manner as to carry the impression to those not posted that it is a fair representation of the expressed views and conduct of the majority of the League; and Mr. Abbot still persists in endeavoring to convey to the public the impression that the majority, from whom his faction seceded, are, as the Syracuse Standard, in the article referred to, puts it, "composed of Freelovers and dirty literature defenders, who, from first to last, were determined upon making a point in favor of its free circulation."

Now, can it be possible that Mr. Abbot, or any person attendant upon the sessions of our recent Congress, does not at once recognize this as sheer misrepresentation? If there were amongst the majority or minority persons of Freelove proclivities, they wisely kept their views out of the deliberations of the Congress. And as for any defense of the free circulation of obscene and dirty literature, the unanimous action of the Congress was decidedly and unequivocally in the other direction, as its published utterances prove to all who choose to look over its proceedings. That there was a difference of opinion among its members as to congressional jurisdiction over the mails, is true, and that was the extent of the difference—at least that was all that came to the surface.

I am not surprised that the Standard, having no reputation for fairness and honesty to lose, in order to injure the League movement, should be willing to thus try to deceive its readers; but that Mr. Abbot, so honored and trusted, should be tempted to retail, in an approving manner, these slanders through the columns of The Index, is a matter of inexpressible astonishment.

Wanting a substantial reason for their conduct, we often see persons resorting to some pretext for justification, a course to which the seceding party seem to hav added a conspicuous illustration. It would hardly do to go before the public upon the real grievance—failure to retain the offices—hence this unkind, unfair, and, I may add, for those who make it, unfortunate effort to tarnish the reputation of the entire majority, who feel the importance of union in order to succeed, and amongst whom are many of the purest and best men and women that hav ever been connected with the League movement.

To be misrepresented is, of course, not pleasant. Still let us be patient, just, and true. The harm to us can be but temporary, while in the end, when full information shall hav reached the people, these misrepresentations must return to trouble their inventors.

The old adage says, "Better to suffer evil than to do evil." I trust, therefore, the old League occupies better vantage ground than its defamers.

Possibly time and moderation on both sides may heal the breach and the League be once more a unit. At all events, I hope we hav learned the lesson of the hour, and shall hereafter, as a League, giv outside subjects a wide length and attend strictly to the legitimate business of our organization.

Fortunately we hav, in the Hon. Elizur Wright, a wise and true standard-bearer. His letter of acceptance is wisdom condensed. I think I must hav read it not less than half a dozen times, and each time with increased admiration of its rare beauty, wisdom, and tenderness. I differ from him, however, in regard to the question of Congressional jurisdiction over the mails; yet, on that account, none the less do I revere and respect him.

I wonder if Mr. Wright or Mr. Wakeman ever l' oked at the matter in this light, e. g. : Supposing some state—and it is supposable—should decide to hav no laws against the circulation of obscene articles, prints, and literature, leaving its suppression entirely to moral and educational means, would the General Government, in that case, hav no power to prevent the mails from being loaded with obscene matter from the inhabitants of such state? It seems to me there can be but one reasonable answer, which is, that Congress could properly interfere with laws to put a stop to it and punish the offenders.

I set out, friend Green, to merely write you a note of acceptance, and here my pen has run on to such an extent as will, I fear, weary your patience in getting to the end.

I like the advice in your published communications, that both Leagues go earnestly to work for the common cause.

Having fairly and squarely set their differences before the public, let them drop the subject and turn their weapons against the common enemy, and was'e no time and ammunition in fighting each other. Very truly yours,

S Brewer.

[Note.—Allow me to state in answer to Judge Brewer's well-put suggestion to Mr. Wright and Mr. Wakeman that no act or omission to act by a state can confer constitutional powers on the General Government. That if a state should fail to provide a punishment for petit larceny or arson, it would giv the General Government no right to interfere unless the omission was construed as a failure to provide a republican form of government. Yours truly, H. L G.]

What was the Real Cause of the Split in the National Liberal League?

Mr. Editor: With your permission I would like to state what seems to me to hav been the real cause of the division in the National Liberal League at Syracuse. The Reformers say it was because the majority were determined to repeal the Comstock laws. But the Comstock laws were not the cause of the division; they were simply the occasion, which the reformers took advantage of to manifest their narrowness and illiberality.

Mr. Abbot and his friends only asked for the amendment of the Comstock laws, so as not to punish persons for the expression of their honest and conscientious opinions, while the majority of the members asked for the repeal of the laws, believing them to be unconstitutional. The majority, with a very few exceptions, are in favor of state laws for the suppression of obscene literature. I do not believe it is possible that we can hav free speech and still punish people for exercising the right of free speech; and so I am opposed to all laws against obscene literature. And for this reason Mr. Abbot says that I am in favor of obscenity. Let us see if that is so.

Mr. Abbot is opposed to all prohibitory laws in regard to drinking and rumselling. Shall I, therefore, say that he favors intemperance? One inference is just as unreasonable as the other. But I do say, however, that if the giant evil, intemperance, can be wisely left to public opinion, education, and moral suasion, much more so may the small and infinitely less prevalent evil, obscenity, be left to the same influences.

The real cause of the split was the different views entertained by the members of the Convention as to the policy and the attitude which Liberals ought to take towards Freelovers and their doctrines. Mr. Abbot and his friends practically—no matter what they may say they believe, we must judge them by their actions, for actions speak louder than words—look upon and treat the Freelovers as criminals, and their doctrines as obscenity and crime just as much so as the orthodox do, and therefore refuse to tolerate either them or those who believe in tolerating them; while on the other hand the majority of the Convention look upon Freelovers not as criminals but simply as heretics and their doctrines, as heresy, to be tolerated just as we tolerate orthodoxy, Mormonism, and as the orthodox tolerate Infidelity and Atheism. In proof of the truth of this position, allow me to recall the language and actions of some of the leaders of the Abbot party.

We who were present at the Convention, and unfortunate enough to believe with the majority, were forcibly reminded of the self-righteousness of the Christian Pharisees—Stand back, we are holier than you. You belong to the impure and immoral party, and we belong to the pure and the moral party. It was a common remark that we belonged to the Freelove and the obscene party, while they were the intelligent and respectable party.

Judge Hurlbut said that the old League would hav to support such men as Heywood; that all the obscene and indecent persons belonged to our party. I reminded him that, forty years ago, when Abner Kneeland was in prison all the respectable and intelligent people called him and his friends blasphemous, indecent, and immoral, as they now call the Freelovers.

Judge Hurlbut, I am credibly informed, has declared that if he had been in Judge Clarke's position he would hav given Mr. Heywood a longer sentence than he is now serving in prison. And at the Freethinkers' Convention at Watkins he declared that he would not sit on the same platform with a certain lady because she was a Freelover. And Mr. Abbot, through The Index, warned us several weeks before the meeting of the Convention, that if we voted for repeal at Syracuse the most intelligent and respectable members would leave and that we should commit suicide. And now that his suggestion has been adopted, he can tell us that he warne! us what would happen Isn't it dreadful to think that a majority of Liberals dared to vote as they believed it to be their duty when the President had given them warning not to do so? Does anybody deny our right to elect our own President? Yes; the minority does. George W. Julian writes: "I am glad that decency has the substantial victory." Another refined lady speaks of the majority as the renegade crew, whose noxious body of fevered pulse she despises, etc. The Rev. Mr. Gordon declared that he was in favor of the Comstock laws as they are without any amendment. And this Rev. gentleman made the only coarse and indecent remarks that were made in the Convention.

I think I hav shown that the minority look upon Freelovers as criminals, and upon their doctrines as obscenity and crime. But these illiberalLiberals go even further than that, for they refuse to associate with men for no other reason than that they tolerate Freelovers and denounce them as Freelovers themselves because they desire that the Freelovers shall hav justice and fair play as guaranteed to them by the Constitution of our common country.

In conclusion, I am compelled to say again that the cause of the division at Syracuse was the illiberality of the minority. Yours respectfully, J. S. Verity.

The Moralists.

To The Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Was it the scarecrows of obscenity and Freelove that frightened Abbot & Co., at Syracuse, and drove them to seek shelter for safety? What terrible bugaboos those terms must suggest to their fearful souls. But when they undertake to legislate morality into the people by United States laws with such executive officers as the bigoted fool, Comstock, they will find a very annoying buzzing of hornets about their ears. Morality laws are liable to hav bigoted fools to enforce them; for none but such would undertake to legislate morality into the people.

Comstock considers the nude human figure, or a picture of it, obscene. What a scandal and libel upon the maker of the human frame!

Dr. Trall, Dr. Foote, Prof. Fowler, and other scientific gentlemen, hav published scientific works on sexual physiology and the laws of generation to enlighten the people on this all-important subject, the very fountain of humanity, which evidently needs purifying above all things else, judging from the foul stream it is constantly sending forth; and Comstock calls these works obscene. Mr. Heywood wrote a book ("Cupid's Yokes") giving his views on the proper conditions for procreating the human race to improve it physically, mentally, and morally; which Comstock and the bigoted courts call obscene. The obscenity they think they see in the nude human figure, and in the books above referred to, exists in their own minds only; and "that's what's the matter" with them.

But which is worse, to write obscenity or to speak it? It is spoken every day by nine-tenths of the men and boys; and if you put all the obscenity speakers in jail, there would not be enough left out to support those incarcerated. Disrespectful and shameful reference to the sexual organs is almost universal among men and boys. What should be held as sacred is blasphemed most constantly. Do they expect to legislate this out of the people! They might as well undertake to legislate inferiority in general out of them. It cannot be done.

As mankind become enlightened on the proper conditions for propagating the human race, the future generations may be improved, and obscenity and other vices be bred out of the race. We already see the effects f attempted legislation in that direction; such pure men as Heywood, Foote, and Trall (if the latter had not been in heaven, forever beyond their reach) are thrust into prison or heavily fined. And, to be consistent, they must soon be after Prof. Fowler and others of his stamp; and, if successful, finally blot out and suppress all scientific treatises on sexual physiology and the laws of generation and reduce the people to blank ignorance on the subject, and to a par with the brutes, where many now stand.

Freedom, as applied to love, is no more nor less than as applied to any other virtue or right. Free love is as natural and sacred a right as free thought, free speech, or any other right of freedom. Free love, consummated, amounts to this: the conjugal union of one man and one woman by the bond of mutual love and affection, each with their highest available preference. Love has its preference, to which it is attracted, and cannot be satisfied with anything below its highest attainable object, to which it is held constant by due reciprocation; and the union is holy so long as these conditions continue, and no longer; and whenever these conditions cease the union should cease. Is there anything immoral, unjust, unnatural, or unreasonable in that?

But says one, "Freelove leads to promiscuity." If it does (which I deny), then promiscuity is right; for freedom is right, lead where it may, and its opposite is wrong, lead where it will. The fact is, it is a certain type of humanity that leads to the practice of promiscuity. This type and this practice hav existed from time immemorial, and will continue so long as the type continues, and all the legislation against it has resulted in evil to the race. The Mormons hav the highest authority in Christendom for the practice of it, in which practice they are comparatively decent as compared with the clandestine practices of their opposers. That lecherous, cruel, murderous barbarian, the man after God's own heart, and that wise fool, Solomon, his son, practiced it.

Most of the lower animals are promiscuous—why? Because the affectional nature is not developod in them as it is in the higher type of man; consequently they are indifferent as to the object of their desire, if only it is one of the opposite sex. Lust alone is the bas's of their conjugal relations, and promiscuity with them is right. And so it is right with that type of humanity in which the affectional nature is not developed above the level of the brute; and all the legislation against it has only had a pernicious effect, as it has driven them to pernicious practices far more detrimental to the race than if they had been left to freedom under the general law that holds all parents responsible for the support of their own children. The higher affectional nature of man will be much sooner developed in those on the lower plane in freedom than in slavery. There can be no such thing as bond, bound, or forced love. It is as contradictory as bound or forced freedom. There is no love but free love; anything else called love is simply lust on the lower animal plane.

It sometimes happens that a woman of the higher type finds herself in conjugal relations with an animal and brute of a man, instead of what she had taken for a man and a gentleman. Should she not be free to dissolve that relation as soon as it is repugnant to her? Let the naturally promiscuous gravitate together and find their willingly-consenting partners; but do not compel the unwilling of the higher type, who may become entrapped by such, to continue the unholy relation, but leave all free; for freedom will work out and adjust everything in natural and proper order, and move forward the car of progress which has been held back for so many centuries by despotism, tyranny, and unjust interference with the natural rights of men and women.

Ukiah, Cal., Nov. 27, 1878. F. H. Marsh.

Contributions to the Defense Fund.

Amounts Received.—Z T French, $1 00; Mrs Henrietta Buckner, $2 00; L H H Ide, $2 00; Geo Cretien, $1 00; Dr D Bodifield, $4 00; Wm W Scholes, 50 cts; John Cosgrove, $3 60; Geo Eschelberger, $1 00; Mrs Emma D Slenker, 25 cts; Geo W Shock, $1 00; Dr J S Lyon, $1 00; Leonard Gurney, $10 00; Linesville, Pa., Liberal League, $30 00; George $5 00; A B Bradford, $5 00; W E Woodell, $1 00; F Geer, Tompkins, $5 00; Joseph F Dunn, $1 00; Chris Brown, $1 00; George Wood, $1 00; Joseph Goldsmith, $1 00; Almond Owen, $2 00; Wm Rowe, $5 00; Geo Veloudois, $5 00; E Budlong, $2 00; L Vanderburg, $5 00; Joseph Kirk, 25 cents; John W Fitzpatrick, $1 00; Wesley Milliken, $5 00; W H Burr, $10 00; John Hollenwoods, $1 00; Wm Hart, $5 00; A L Thompson, $1 00; E B Foote, MD., Sr, $60 00; E B Foote, MD. Jr., $10; Henry Damon, $1 00; Mrs Lucy Colman, $2 00; Mrs M A Clayton, $1 00; J T Knapp, $1 00; Hon S Brewer, $2 00; Prof J Elliner, $1 00; N F Griswold, $1 00; Mrs S Root, $1 00; Wm Wethelm, $2 00; Mrs Maggie E Clark, $3 00; W H Wise, $2 00; E Wilcox, $10; Mrs R W S Briggs, $2; D Cummins, $2; Elisha Hyatt, $1; Mas M Hyatt $1; Mrs C Fannie Allyn, 55 cents; H C Slee, $4; Wm Tyler, $2; F Hellenk mp, $5; Francis Hendricks, $1; Paul Garepy, $1 15; E E Curtis, $2; H S Borratti, $1; Isaac Palmer, $2; social contributions, $2; B W Graves, $3; William Holgate, $2; S P Putnam, $1; C M A Twitchell, $1; Thomas Davis, $1; Oray Taft, Jr, $1; Francis Davis, $1; Henry Appleton, $1; Wm Lester, Jr, $1; John M Arnold, $1; Wm Channing, $1; L R Joslyn, $1; H Paplee, $1; J Y Mayer, $1; Mary Thilotson, $1; Thos Goddard, $2; B Davis, $1; H S J, $1; T C Sherhorst, $1; E Myers, $2; J as S Field, $1; Prof J E Oliver, $1; Geo. Hendee, $5; Courtlandt Palmer, $10; J M Cosad, $1 00; A Boughton, $2 00; Nelson Porter, $2 00; Henry A Stone, $2 00; "Justicia," $20 00; J Schub, 5 00; Mrs. Phebe Patch, $1 00; B Doscher, $5 00; W H Burr (second time), $10 00; D R Sparks, $10 00; John Cosgrove (second), $3 80; Elizur Wright, $10 00; Geo. H Warren, $1 00; Daniel E Ryan, $10 00; W F Porter, $1 00; Henry E Hunter, $10 00; Benjamin F Smith, $1 00; Dr J H Swain, $1 00; Angelinia Heywood, $1 00; Franklin Smith, $1 00; E P Miller, $1 00; Viney Osgood, $1 00; Lucy M Tilton, $1 00; Isabella Smith, $1 00; Annie C Cheney, $1 00; J S M Babcock, $1 00; May Dean Chapman, $1 00; William Root, $1 00; W T Griswold, $1 00.

Many thanks are returned to these kind friends for their liberal aid. Com. Nat. Defense Association.

Another Exciting Book—"The Bible of Bibles." Here all the Bibles in the world are shown up in their true light—all compared and shown to be essentially alike. Their errors are thoroughly exposed. The orthodox doctrines of Original Sin, the Fall of Man, Moral Depravity, Free Agency, Repentance, Forgiveness, Atonement, a Personal God, An Angry God, Special Providences, Faith, Belief, Salvation, Sin, etc., are all thoroughly analyzed and pulverized, and totally demolished by its thunderbolts of logic and facts of history. Not one stone is left upon another of the old orthodox fabric."

Its long array of 2,000 Bible errors, evils and contradictions are absolutely startling. Many of them are shown up in the most ludicrous and laughable light imaginable. Many moral defects in the character of the Prophets, Patriarchs, Apostles, Jehovah, and Jesus Christ are pointed out.

The old bastile of orthodoxy is totally demolished. What "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors" left undone is completed by "The Bible of Bibles." They hav given it two death blows that must kill it stone dead. Never before was such a mass of facts and logic arrayed against our false popular theology. It cannot long survive such deadly assaults. It shows by the most conclusive facts and figures that orthodoxy has but sixty years more to liv and rule.

It is a perfect mirror, reflecting and analyzing all the various religious doctrines of the world in the light of history, and thoroughly pulverizing their errors in the crucible of modern science.—Dr. J. L. Braffett.

The Rev. Levi Little handed to a conductor on the Old Colony Railroad, instead of fare, a religious tract, at the same time explaining that, in his opinion, a distributor of tracts ought to be allowed to ride free. The conductor demanded money, but the clergyman refused to either pay or get off the train. A fight ensued, and Brother Little was forcibly ejected.

The Radical Pulpit.

Conscience.—Concluded.

LECTURE BY PROF. FELIX ADLER BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

But we pass from nature-worshiping peoples to the Hebrews—a people not considered among the nations—who first rose in rebellion against this form of religion. In their vicinity were two heathen temples, and the one demanded the cruel sacrifice of children, and the other demanded the shameful sacrifice of woman's honor. Now we know this of the Hebrews, that though they were not philosophers, were not given to abstract speculations, they loved their children tenderly and they were jealous of their women's fame; and against both these demands of the religion which surrounded them the Hebrews rebelled. Their religion was not the result of philosophical speculations; their religion was a sentiment of the heart. They said, A religion which demands my children is not a religiou; it is false; it is an outrage; it is a shame. And as the gods of nature had so outraged their moral feelings, they sought a God outside of nature—the spirit; as the gods of nature were cruel and licentious, they sought a God who should be, above all things, merciful, and holy, that is, pure, so that our idea of the deity rises among the Hebrews—of a God that is holy, that is pure. The idea of the deity, as now current in the world, was first propounded by the Hebrew prophets, and that idea was the result of a moral process. It was the flower on the stem of morality, not the root. It was the roof, if you please, of the temple of life, not the foundation. But with the foundation of life alone are we here concerned. Historically, therefore, the better morality preceded the better religion because the Hebrews, by virtue of their traditions, their history, and their native genius, were possessed of a more strong and vigorous conscience; and because of that they struck forward for a better and nobler form of religion, and arrived at their more spiritual conception of the deity.

Historically, then, the priority of conscience is proven. And the same thing can be shown logically. Why, indeed, should we believe in a deity in order to be virtuous? Is it true, as they tell us, that if this key-stone of the theological arch be removed the whole bridge of life will sink into the abyss? Is it true that if we cease to believe in a personal creator we ourselves shall only be more cunning animals, distinguished above others by superior misery? Well, then our wisest policy will be to eat, drink, and make merry and shake off our humanity in bestial orgies. Let them who will try the experiment. They will find that they cannot do it. They will find that our humanity is a law upon us that we cannot shake off. They will find that conscience holds them as in a vise. They will discover that, believe or disbelieve as they list, they must act out the law within them or take the penalty, and that no one will be excused. It is absurd to believe that the morality of the world rests upon the foundation of any belief. The morality of the world rests upon its own evidence. If to-morrow every dogma which the masses of mankind hold sacred could be blotted from their memories, the voice of conscience would still sound as before from the depths of human nature; wrong would still be wrong, and good be good.

The father stands to a child as the incorporate moral law. The father sees, and the father will reward and punish. But there are times when the father does not see; so they say to the child, There is another father; he sees you. And the child looks around furtively when it is tempted, and shrinks with fear when it has transgressed, as though about to receive a blow from the invisible world. And so they say to the older children, There is a father; he sees your secret sins. When no arm of justice can reach you; when no public opinion can condemn you, in the utmost recesses of your soul you are exposed, your deeds are recorded, and you will receive your due in the day of great account. That is a crutch to a lame conscience, and a feeble crutch at that; for what can be the reward of virtue save its possession! and what can be the punishment of sin save the deep and damning stain of the sin itself!

Yet, lastly, they say—and this is the main argument—Where there is a law there must be a lawgiver; and, therefore, if you take away the belief in the lawgiver, you weaken the authority of the law. But those who advance this argument seem to have a confused notion of what that means—law. They seem to bear in mind—whether they acknowledge it to themselves or not—the image of some absolute monarch who enforces his will upon his subjects; whose good pleasure is their law; whose arbitrary decision is not to be questioned; whom the people obey because obedience can be compelled. But we are republicans in religion as well as in politics. We know that this is the essence of freedom in the state: that the people should allow no foreign law to be forced upon them; that the people should obey the law, indeed, but that law only which they themselves have imposed upon themselves. In our own hearts, in our own inmost nature sounds an authoritative mandate before which we all bow. And, granted that there must be a lawgiver, how, indeed, should we know the will of this lawgiver? Into the presence of an earthly sovereign we can make our way; we can demand an audience to know from his own lips what his will really is; or if some autograph letter would satisfy us, we know the handwriting of our king, and we can find some decree to which his own signature has been affixed; but as regards the divine lawgiver, the heavenly king, can we penetrate to his presence? Can we demand an audience of him? Can we speak to him, as Moses is said to have done, face to face? Or is there any document in our possession that he has written with his own hands or that bears his signature? Why, yes, the Bible, say our orthodox friends. And here you perceive the immense importance to orthodoxy of the theory of the Bible's divine authorship or inspiration, and how that is the underpinning of the whole fabric of the old theology. That one fact of the divine authorship of the Bible, if it were a fact, would at once and forever settle all questions—set all doubts at rest. But we who know that it is not a fact; we who know how thoroughly human were the authors of the Bible, and how frail in their humanity; we who have seen the pretensions of what was claimed to be the only authoritative message from the other world vanish into air, to what are we reduced? To what honest people in all religions are now reduced, viz., to this: that we look to our own conscience in the first place and observe its dictates, and then to our religion, and say: What accords with conscience, that is religion; and what clashes with the dictates of conscience, that is not religion. A God who demands blood is not God; for it is immoral to shed blood. A God who delights in ignorant superstition is a false God; for ignorance and superstition are, by their very nature, immoral. A God who inflicts eternal torments is cruel, and because he is cruel he is also false. And so it appears—which was to be proven—that even to the true believer God himself is God because he is good; not conversely, that good is good because it is of God. The independence of conscience, therefore, is practically conceded.

But more is necessary; it must become evident that that which causes virtue to be virtuous is this very quality of independence. We scan the actions of men and we call some laudable and others blameworthy. It is not the good that results from the action, but only the laudable intent according to which we form our judgment. A few examples will suffice to make this plain. There is a man who gives largely to the poor; his name appears at the head of every charitable subscription; he also goes to great personal inconvenience to dispense that charity, yet he is not trusted. Once there came to him an almoner of the poor who told him of some desolate family that was in dire distress. Then the man was hard because it was a secret; but somehow the news went abroad, and no one confides in that man any more. They say he is a plausible hypocrite who gives for effect, and men take his gifts, but he takes not their respect in return. There is another, a hail fellow well met at every season; he has a soft heart, a palpitating heart, a constitutional weakness which makes him unable to endure the sight of a tear; he gives when he has, what he has; he is the prey of knaves, a man of whom the wicked and the vicious make sport, and the world says of him, with a sneer, a good man. I know of a daughter, a fair young girl she was in her youth, who devoted herself to nursing a bed-ridden parent. She made herself a prisoner within four narrow walls; rarely did she catch the fresh breezes, the sweet flowers she saw only from afar through her window. When the companions of her age were gathered in gay circles in festive halls, she sat alone in the dimness and twilight of the sick chamber. The groans of pain from the near couch were the only music she heard, and the querulous complaints of decrepit and suffering old age were the sole conversation she enjoyed. So she performed the dull round of her duties, always gentle, always patient, and hiding in her heart whatever longings she may have had for freedom and for joy. So the years passed on, and when at last release came and the doors were opened and death took the tribute which he had spurned so long, and laid the sufferer away under the sods, the fair young girl had lost her bloom. She is old and feeble and solitary now, but we speak of her action with respect, and we bow low to this lonely woman when we meet her on the road, and we say that was virtue. Yet not of the highest type, for had not this mother whom she attended nourished her at her own breast, endured suffering and anxiety for her sake and conferred a thousand benefits upon her? It was brave and good to be so dutiful, but we should have rebuked and scorned her had she done less. There is another comes to my mind in this connection, one whose name is known and whose memory is cherished wherever the illustrious women of America are remembered—Margaret Fuller. She lifted up her voice for the alleviation of her sex in this land; and she uttered some of the wisest and truest thoughts, which shall guide her sisters in their efforts to be free. She followed her Italian husband to Rome when, in 1848, the banner of the republic was hoisted over the ramparts of the Eternal City. She was the friend of Mazzini; she was an angel of mercy to the wounded soldiers in the hospitals, to whose sufferings she ministered. When at last the struggle was over and the hope of liberty was quenched in blood then her heart yearned to go back to her native land, and she set sail for this city. The American coast was in sight, the ship was off Fire Island, and preparations for disembarking were being made, when suddenly a terrible storm broke over them. The sea rose high, the vessel was dashed against the coast and was rapidly filling. They were now close in to the shore and a plank was laid to some rocks, over which some of the passengers had already passed in safety. Margaret Fuller stood upon the plank, holding her boy and drawing him after her, but the plank was too feeble to support both. The seamen urged her to proceed and save herself. She said, "I will live or die only with my child." The next moment the waves rose high, the plank was swept away, and mother and son were whelmed in the abyss. That, too, was brave, yet not the highest type of bravery. The maternal instinct was strong; no mother could bear to see her child perish before her eyes. And, again, we have read and learned by heart, yea, with the heart, the example of those brave men in history who yielded up their lives in some great cause, to protect some oppressed class, to redress their country's wrongs, to break some tyrant's yoke. The children in our schools flush with a generous pleasure when they read of the brave Swiss who took the spears of the foeman to his breast as if they were a boquet of flowers, and reddened them with the roses of his blood and cried, "I will make a pathway unto freedom." And the tales of Marathon and Thermopylæ are as fresh to-day as they were two thousand years ago, kept fresh with the dew of tears and green in the memory, generation after generation. Yet lofty as these virtues were, they too, are not of the highest. Perhaps ambition was the motive, the desire for glory prompted them, the applause of witnessing armies, the deathless lustre of posthumous fame. All these motives are dross mingled with the gold of virtue, marring its beauty and destroying its value. Seven times refined must the gold of virtue be ere we will call it by the sacred name of virtue, purified of all motives save that of respect for the high moral law itself. We reject the standard of benefits conferred and hold strictly to the motive; we reject the seeming good deed that is done with a side-long glance at gain, even if that gain be only the gratification of vanity, the hearing one's self called "kind man," "charitable man," by one's flatterers. We reject the seeming good deed if it be the offspring of weakly sentimentalism, of the mere irresponsible impulses of pity, for that works harm as well as good, and more often harm than good. We accord only our measured approval to those actions which the natural ties of kindred have influenced, for these are the workings of instinct, and morality is always the working of reason. We hold back our judgment with caution, even in the case of those actions that seem to carry us away by their grandeur, in the fear that some refined motive of selfishness may have prompted them.

So from this what appears? This only: the right for the right's sake; that is virtue; that is alone the supreme standard. In accordance as actions approximate to that standard, we place them high in the scale of virtue; in proportion as they depart from it, the universal judgment of mankind calls them low and mean. The right for the right's sake, that is the motto of life; that is the measure with which we can descend into our own hearts and gauge ourselves and try to determine in how far we are moral beings, in how far not yet. The right for the right's sake; that means the independence of conscience, independence of all other considerations save respect for itself, for the high moral law. And independence of conscience is the very vital nerve of conscience. Who cuts that, kills conscience; who makes morality depend upon aught beyond its sphere, destroys morality. Now it is plain why we cannot say be good because God wills it, for either by God's will we mean goodness itself, and then we really say be good, not for the sake of God, but for the sake of goodness; or we understand by God's will something outside of morality, something beyond and superior to the moral law, and that is an outrageous doctrine that we can never tolerate, that there is a power higher than the moral law, superior to our conscience, which has the right to claim our obedience, even though conscience protests; that leads to Jesuitism and nothing else, for that was the principle of the Jesuits, that they could do actions that conscience disapproved, because there was a higher law than conscience—the will of God.

And so the outcome of these first meditations on conscience has been a statement, the importance of which will grow upon us as we proceed, To do right for the right's sake, that is what makes right right. Upon the fact of morality philosophers have founded the belief in God; but morality itself takes precedence of all beliefs. It is primal, it is sovereign, it is the central reality of the universe, the independent sovereignty of conscience. That is the fundamental point that it was my purpose to bring before you to-day in prominent relief. And now, in conclusion, you will permit me to point to one more fact which illustrates and confirms that statement.

I have lately traveled over the great plains, and have seen here and there bleached bones marking the place where some pioneer on the long road to the golden land was stricken down. So on the great plains of history the pioneers of progress have, on the way to the golden land of their hopes, been stricken down, and we stand before their remains and think of their bravery and their heroism and honor them. Why is it that the book of martyrs is still the golden book of mankind? Why do we still delight to read their illustrious lives? Why do we still give them the tear of sympathy? Are they witnesses to the truth of that for which they died? No, no! they are witnesses not to any one truth, but witnesses to the love of truth. We love these men because they display to us the sublimity of conscience; they show to us how great that law of conscience is which can induce men to forego all the pleasures and comforts of life, even to lay down life itself in the interest of truth. We revere martyrs because in their case we are well nigh certain that no selfish motives could have actuated them, since they met death not amid the din and excitement of the battle-field, but saw him slowly approach, grim and gaunt, with all his terrors around him, quailing not, when a single word, one word only, would have freed them from their persecutors. But that word meant unfaithfulness to the truth, it meant betrayal of principle, and it was not uttered. Principle, then, must mean a holy presence in the soul of man. I think now of all who were martyrs in the true sense; I exclude none. I think of the martyrs of science to whom our souls go out with deepest gratitude. I remember Socrates drinking the hemlock in the Athenian prison. I remember also the Christian martyrs who held a faith which we do not share, yet whom we venerate none the less sincerely on that account, the mighty Huss, and the august Jerome, his companion in inspiration and in fate, who laid down their lives by the shores of Lake Constance. I remember also one of the despised race of the Jews, one not known as these are known, but who should be known, who deserves to be ranked with the great and good, and whose story I long to tell in closing. He was very young; twenty-five summers had passed over him. He was highly connected, highly gifted, learned, and what was better, loved. He heard that his people were persecuted in a far land, and he set sail to aid in freeing them. In a certain Portugese port the vessel was boarded by the officers of the Inquisition. He was dragged to Lisbon and thrown into a dungeon of that dark tribunal. The authorities of the Inquisition were anxious to save him and win him over to their faith. They promised, they besought, they threatened, they tortured him in vain; they could not shake his resolution. At last they condemned him to die by fire. It was a morning late in December in the year 1647. An eager crowd pressed through the streets of Lisbon to the great plaza. It was near the time of the birth of Christ. There was to be a great festival that day—an auto-da-fé—in honor of the God of love, in which martyrs should be burned unto the Lord. A dense multitude were now gathered, the procession moved on, the priests in their long robes, the soldiery, and in their midst the young De Castro; such was his name. He stood still and calm on the place of execution. The fagots were heaped about him. The priest stepped up, showed him the crucifix, and called on him to "repent, recant," even now before it was too late. He answered not a word. Again the cross was shown him, and again he remained silent. Then the burning brand was thrown upon the fagots, they caught fire, the flames rose high, the smoke wreathed and curled about its victim. For the third time the priest presented the crucifix and cried, "Repent, repent, and save thy soul!" A great hush fell upon the throng. Then from out the flames and smoke rang out into the silence, loud and clear, these words: "Hear, Israel! God, our God, is one!" And not an eye remained tearless in that great assembly. The flames sank down and the multitude dispersed and silently went to their homes and whispered one to another those terrible words which sounded like an accusing conscience in their ears, "Hear, Israel," and so profound was the impression that the officers of the Inquisition issued an edict forbidding, under heavy penalty, that the words "Hear, Israel," should be uttered in the streets of Lisbon.

It is not, friends, what men believe that here concerns us, but that they should be so faithful to that which they believe, Jew and Christian, believer and unbeliever alike. Times change, beliefs alter, the religious formulas of yesterday no longer satisfy the impatient demands of the children of to-day, the old beliefs grow cold and are forgotten, but that devotion to principle which those illustrious witnesses have exhibited is the very pith and marrow of all religion. May that devotion to principle be ours also in the new age, that we may be willing at all times to die for our principles if again should come that supreme test—nay, better than to die for our principles, that we may be willing at all times to live for our principles; that is greater and nobler still.

Mr. Frothingham on Champions of Liberalism.

In a discourse at Masonic temple on Sunday, December 15, Mr. O. B. Frothingham treated of the qualities that go to make a good soldier. His sermon was directed to illustrate, from a military standpoint, the moral attributes that ought to be possessed by the champions of social progress. The speaker believed that a good Liberal soldier must be a combatant and a hard fighter in the moral work. The qualities of the good soldier are numerous and sometimes inconsistent with each other. He must know when to fight and when to stop; he must hav courage and patience, be bold and gentle, pitiless and pitiful; must know how to inflict mortal blows and how to cure mortal wounds. A great deal has of late been said about the battle of life. It is always on the lips of sentimentalists and dreamers who imagine themselves fighting when they are in reality doing nothing; for life is no battle at all to those who do not see a foe. The difficulty with many in the moral struggle is to find a foe; to see the enemy when he is concealed; to hav the robustness of will to go out and find him. The fact, too, must not be lost sight of that courage is not only required by those who fight in arms, but also by those who fight in silks and satins. The speaker made reference to the war between ecclesiasticism and Liberalism, saying that nearly all ecclesiastical shot had been ineffectually directed against opponents in opinion. It was not too late, he contended, to speak of persecutions for opinion's sake when it is remembered that in Massachusetts, the cradle of American liberty, a man (Ezra H. Heywood) may be convicted and imprisoned for holding his opinion, and that in New York another (D. M. Bennett) can be indicted on this account. Mr. Frothingham argued that so far as final results were concerned it made no difference whether a man's opinions were true or the reverse. If the opinion questioned be a true one all assaults upon it will be absolutely vain, and the attack will recoil upon him who made it; and if, on the other hand, the opinion be not founded in truth no amount of advocacy, come from whence it may, can suffice to prop it up. The champion of erroneous ideas is ruined by the click of his own gun. In Germany, France, Spain, and England traces of odium against the Jews as a people may be perceived to-day. That race was deemed bad because some fanatics belonging to it persecuted Jesus; but now the world, recovering its better sense of justice, does not believe that persecution of the Jews is right in any way.

The Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus—the head of the civilized world in his day—was a man whose elegant writings are among the Greek classics; a man of the kindest heart and sweetest sympathies, but also one of indomitable will. Educated a stoic, he was a woman in nature, and had in essence anticipated some of the best precepts of Christianity, yet he was an opponent of the faith of Christ. He had no respect for its superstitions, and he lifted the mighty hand of a Roman emperor against it, whereby he has earned for himself the stigma of persecutor. Yet he was as fully justified in his course as those are justified who to-day persecute Atheism, Materialism, and the like. Ah, what a different sort of Christianity we might have had if Marcus Aurelius had adopted the Christian religion and infused into it the nobleness, tenderness, goodness of his own nature! Here Mr. Frothingham endeavored to show that as no man knows he is wholly right in abstract ideas, so no one can be justified for persecuting his brother on account of a mere difference of opinion. He asked if Atheism, Materialism, Nihilism were false, and if the answer was in the affirmative, how could the asserter of their falseness prove he was right?

He claimed that an idea was not a serpent to be put down and trodden upon; it was a tangible something which ought to be put down by reason and thought only. Those who assail doctrines in our days do so on the ground that they are unsafe and dangerous to society and that only bad men could entertain them. How do you know this? asked the speaker. An infallible judge is needed to pronounce between fallible men, and where is this infallible umpire to come from? Who can tell if Materialism, Atheism, Nihilism are injurious to society? The persecutor believes that the Atheist must be rotten, the Materialist licentious. Let us suppose gambling and prostitution to be what all the world say they are—bad—how shall they be attacked? The one efficient way to combat an evil is to fight it on its own ground. Mr. Frothingham adverted to a Congressional enactment passed at the instance of a certain society for the suppression of crime, and he claimed that this enactment was wholly inoperative and useless, excepting for the purposes of persecution by some fanatics and monomoniacs. He believed that the social evil was under the eyes of the policemen, whose business it was to deal with; but although the policeman could put his hand on the evil and suppress it, he would not lift his finger against it unless public opinion favored his action. Therefore, such evils will cease only when we are indignant at their existence. The people who suffer, who are struck and crushed down by the evil, are those who must do the fighting. Those whose children are exposed to it must rally together and beat it off. This rally against evil, like every other step gained in the world of progress, must be accomplished by a resolute battle waged, not by those who sit in easy-chairs and theorize about the issue, but by the ones who take their stand in the front rank, using the weapons of reason and common sense to gain the victory over social error and vice of all kinds.

Communications.

Jamieson to Hull.

YATES CITY, ILL., Dec. 9, 1878.

Moses Hull, My Dear Friend: It is as I suspected. You will not affirm what Spiritualists affirm, with all due respect for your opinion to the contrary. For thirty years Spiritualists have taught, and, I think, sincerely believed, that if the entire race, cultured, uncultured, refined or depraved, civilized or savage, would investigate, they would know spirit existence and communion to be facts. Yet you hav the hardihood to say, "There is not a Spiritualist in the whole country who believes it." You thus make the Spiritualists as skeptical about their phenomena convincing investigators as Infidels are.

No, Moses; I never attempted to "bulldoze" you. (Boston "cultyoored" phrase.) Were Spiritualism admitted to be a faith, then my proposition would be unfair. Spiritualists constantly assert that it is a knowledge; not to a select few, but to all who will come and drink from the spiritual fountain. But you say, "Many will claim to hav investigated who will say they are not convinced." That is it exactly. Hav they no right to testify? Are they who are convinced the only ones who are competent to testify? There is not a superstition on earth which could not be proved true (?) by such method. Christians attach value only to testimony in favor of Christianity; ignore testimony against it.

I take it for granted that you do not impugn the honesty of those who "claim to have investigated," who were "not convinced," just as you expect people to believe the "convinced" are honest. I concede that any one who says he is convinced is honest, unless I have positive proof to the contrary. The Spiritualist, doubtless, will admit that skeptics who have investigated are as honest as himself.

But I think Spiritualists are convinced on insufficient evidence. In other words, they are honestly mistaken, just as Christians are "convinced" that Jesus has visited them; they are honestly mistaken, believe without sufficient proof.

The crowning glory of Spiritualism (it is asserted) is that instead of a mere faith, it gives a demonstration, a positive knowledge, living, actual facts. Spiritualists say, "Examine, investigate, and proof positive that there is a future life will be obtained." They say the proofs come to high and low alike, and that if the whole world would investigate spiritual phenomena, the whole world would be converted as easily as all mankind could be convinced of any truth or fact in science by investigation.

But you abandon this position. You are coming over, Moses. You say the question, "modern spiritual phenomena" is "too small—too limited." Ha! ha! ha! You are about as heretical as your "god-daddy" now. I care nothing about "ancient" spiritual phenomena, from the fact that the alleged witnesses were, in general, ignorant of science and the laws of evidence. Is there not enough evidence in modern Spiritualism? Seems not, by your confession. So you will not discuss the first proposition because you "never found God." Pretty near an Atheist, Moses. You confess frankly that you do not know spiritual existence as you know your own. Neither do I. Giv me your hand. You are almost a skeptical Materialist. It is my opinion that no one has a right to call himself a Spiritualist unless he claims to hav a demonstration of spiritual existence. Unless he has that, how much better off is he, on that point, than Christians who hav faith in it—a hope that they will liv after this life? There are Spiritualists who say they know there is a spirit world. They say they are sure they hav seen the faces of spirit friends who "died" years before. They hav no doubt that they themselves shall liv after the body dies. They know all these things as positively, they say, as they know their own present existence. Well, that is about as certain as we can be about anything in this world. Such people hav a right to call themselves Spiritualists, because Spiritualism claims to be, not a belief, not a faith, but certain knowledge of life beyond this life. I would like to get their evidence. Yours is no better than what I hav. My dear god-son, you are galloping straight into open scientific Materialism. You are a "chip of the old block." There is not difference enough between us on the main fact of Spiritualism for us to debate. I do not say I know that a future life is not true. Any Materialist who says that is neither logical nor scientific. I do not even say I believe that an unending existence for every individual of the race is not true. But belief in all such matters is of no consequence to me. Belief always implies doubt—uncertainty. I would hail with delight the positive assurances—the scientific proofs—that there is a future life on the spiritual theory. I would not giv a "rush" for the Christian's dull heaven; annihilation would be better. An unending existence, where people could progress forever, ought to be true. It seems a necessary complement to this life. But I am afraid it is not true. I would travel the American continent over to get hold of a materialized spirit—just one—only one. The trickery and trappery of dark cabinets will not do. I want to hav plenty of daylight on the subject.

You say I hav not, you think, been "hunting for the real evidence," but more intent, you say, in "picking flaws." That is precisely the objection which Christians urge against all Spiritualists and Infidels. I hav been hunting for real evidence, if I know my own thoughts. That was what caused my skepticism. I am still open, as ever, to conviction, still as free to accept truth from any source. Yours for the truth,

W. F. JAMIESON.

The Truth Seeker.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of Reading Matter than any other Journal of its class.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DEC. 28, 1878.

TO TAKE a needed step in the spelling reform, we have acted upon the advice of the American Philological Association to the extent of dropping the useless final e in the words have, give, and live, except in such matter as is used in making books and pamphlets. It is hoped other periodicals will see the propriety of this step and act accordingly.

End of the Volume.

This number completes Vol. V. of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Through five and one-third years it has struggled for an existence, during the most disastrous period of financial depression and hardship that our country has ever known. It has been a hazardous experiment, the ultimate success of which has been an unsettled problem, and we are truly glad to hav passed through the trying ordeal so well, and that our paper has become so thoroughly established in the affections of the Liberals of the country.

We hav doubtless committed some errors, and our judgment has sometimes been at fault, but our intention has been to do the best we knew how. If we hav fallen short of our full duty, we sincerely regret it and hope to run more wisely in future. We work for the Liberal public, and we wish to perform our work to their satisfaction. It has been our one purpose to vindicate the cause of righteousness and truth and to expose the fables of mythology, the errors of theology, and the shams of falsehood and superstition. Whether we hav acquitted ourselves well or ill our readers must decide.

We hav endeavored to uphold the principles of free thought, free speech, a free press, and free mails. We hav opposed, to the extent of our ability, the encroachments that hav been made upon these glorious principles by insidious, unconstitutional laws, enacted surreptitiously at the instance of our orthodox opponents and defended by some who call themselves Liberals. We trust that we hav discharged our duty in this direction, and believe that time and reflection will convince all rational minds that the freedom of speech, the freedom of the mails, and the freedom of the press were better guaranteed by the Constitution as framed by our honored fathers than as tinkered and remodeled by Comstock and the employees of the Y. M. C. A. We believe they will become convinced that all efforts of the defenders of sectarianism and bigotry, whether of the orthodox pattern or otherwise, to supplant the liberties of the people with a system of moral censorship and espionage will be replete with evil to our dearest rights, and are only intended as auxiliary aids to priestcraft and mental tryanny —a means of punishing Freethought by attacking it under another name. We trust that we hav exposed the duplicity that has been employed in trying to crush Radicalism under the name of "obscenity;" and we shall labor still more in this same direction if duty demands it. We think, however, that the question has been so well discussed that most persons will be able to come to correct conclusions upon the subject. Of this fact we may rest assured: that we cannot be too jealous of the priceless rights given us in the Constitution, nor can we view with too much apprehension all efforts, direct or indirect, to set them aside.

We trust the coming year may be one of increasing vitality for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Notwithstanding the stringency of the times, it is hoped that its readers may grow in number, and that its influence may be more widely extended. It is desired that every friend of the Liberal cause who thinks this paper ought to be sustained to further oppose error and superstition will not only subscribe himself but induce as many others to do the same as possible. Let those who think that it is not yet time for its sun to set and for its light to pale into absolute darkness feel public spirit enough to help it along financially in the rough road it has to travel. Our expenses are necessarily heavy, and without Liberal patronage they cannot be met.

Let us request every one whose time has expired to renew as early as possible. We are in arrears ourselves and need funds to get us out of debt. If all will renew promptly, it will not be a heavy tax on any individual, and will relieve our embarrassment very much.

We are sorry that there are any who on account of the hard times decide that they cannot accompany us any longer, and bid us pursue our wearisome journey without their company. It makes us sad to part thus with old friends, and it is our hope that they will soon see their mistake and correct it by again sending for the paper. We well know that all the churches, all the clergy, and all the minions of superstition and bigotry are against us, and if the Liberals do not sustain us we must go down. Let every one feel a personal pride that THE TRUTH SEEKER livs and flourishes.

Let us again request the hundreds who are in arrears to pay what they owe us without further delay. We are needing every dollar that is due us, and we hope the believers in honor and justice will not ask us to wait longer.

While we hope that our present readers will continue with us and pay promptly as they go, we earnestly request those who do not want to longer take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and do not intend to pay for it, to notify us of the fact at once. We cannot afford to send it unless it is paid for. We would be glad to be able to send it broadcast over the land, without money and without price, but unfortunately we are not. We hav only the income from the paper to keep it up, and as our expenses run to about $250 per week it will be seen at a glance that all should pay us promptly.

We hav made it a rule to continue sending our paper unless ordered stopped or we hav some good reason to discontinue it, so we hope every person who wishes it no longer will notify us of the fact at once or get their postmaster to do so.

The time of many trial subscribers expires with this number, and it is possible that some of them may not continue to take the paper; will they please notify us of the fact? Several persons hav written us to discontinue their paper after a certain date, but as we make no record of such reques's, all such are included among those who are asked to send us notice to discontinue. We hope, at all events, that all who are in arrears will be honorable enough to pay the amount of their indebtedness when they ask to be discontinued.

Let us hope, again, that the number who wish their names removed from our lists will not be large. If they cannot remit for the whole year, a half or even one-fourth at a time will be acceptable. Twenty-five cents a month for so large a paper as this is by no means an excessive tax to those who wish to see the cause of Freethought flourish.

Our Attendance at Watkins.

On the evening of Monday the 16th—our trial in the U. S. Circuit Court of this city being laid over for a few days—in company with Miss Josephine S. Tilton, we took cars for Watkins, Schuyler county, to attend on the behests of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, held there the present month, as prescribed by our bond given in the Court of Sessions, before Judge Hurd, in August last. We arrived in time for breakfast, and found in waiting upon the same court, W. S Bell and George Mosher, who were indicted at the same time and for the same offense with ourselves.

Our cases had been set by the Prosecuting Attorney for the 17th, but no disposition was shown to call them up on that day. The Court was busy in trying civil cases, such as who should pay for a coffin in which a woman was buried more than six and a half years ago; who was to blame for removing certain line-posts from a certain lot of ground; how much a Mr. Ellison was indebted to Dr. Robert Bell for defaming him and asserting that the latter had sworn to a falsehood, etc., etc. These tedious cases we were compelled to listen to while waiting for the great criminal offense of selling a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" to be called up.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer is presided over by Judge Martin of Elmira, assisted by two side justices, and Judge Hurd of the Court of Sessions was acting as attorney in the slander case and others. It seems Judge Martin did not think our indictments belonged to be tried in his Court, and that they ought to go back to the Court of Sessions, which is to sit in February next. So after waiting nearly three days we were required to giv new bail that we would appear to answer at the Court of Sessions in February, and we were then allowed to depart in peace. The next morning found us at home at our editorial duties. Mr. Bell proceeded to his home in New Bedford, and Miss Tilton remained in the vicinity of Watkins to visit a friend and sell some of Mr. Heywood's pamphlets.

The gentleman who offered himself as bail for us is Mr. Samuel G. Crawford of Havana, three or four miles south of Watkins. He is a patron of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and is really one of the finest specimens of nature's noblemen with whom we hav had the good fortune to become acquainted. He has reached the ripe age of eighty-three years, but is still as active in mind and body as many men are at forty and fifty. He is among the earliest settlers of Schuyler county, having moved to his present residence some sixty years ago and before there was a house where the town of Watkins stands. He informed us that he has lived fifty-three years in the house he now occupies. He is well and favorably known in that section of the country, and few men are more respected than he by those whe know him. For several years he was Justice of the Peace, and his decisions in the cases brought before him were regarded as eminently just. He is a man of high moral principles, and his aim through life has been to do his duty and to wrong no man. He raised a family of children, three sons of which survive, and he has the satisfaction of knowing that they are intelligent, honored members of society, filling responsible positions of trust and usefulness, and highly respected by all who know them.

Mr. Crawford was raised in the orthodox church, but his honest sentiments revolted at the idea of God having created untold millions of helpless human beings to suffer cruel torture for ever and ever; and more than half a century ago, during the ministration of Hosea Ballou, he embraced the Universalist doctrine, and has since remained a firm disbeliever in the doctrine of hell and a devil. He now holds THE TRUTH SEEKER in high esteem and is a regular reader of it.

We felt honored that such a worthy man should make three trips to Watkins for the purpose of seeing us, and we highly enjoyed the visits we had with him. He said, as a resident for sixty years of Schuyler county, he felt ashamed and mortified that its Court should indict four persons as criminals for so trivial an affair as selling "Cupid's Yokes." He said he had read the pamphlet, and, while he did not approve of its doctrines entirely, he saw nothing in it for which a person should be sent to prison for writing, publishing, or selling.

At the first interview we had with him he offered to go on our bail bond if we were required to giv new bail, and we were glad to accept his kind offer. He performed the same kindness for Mr. Bell and Miss Tilton, and we will all long hold his kindness in remembrance. He said he had got to be too old to attend to any regular business, but that he was very willing to put in his time when he could do any good. He seemed glad of the opportunity of doing us a friendly act in time of need. Now our next duty is to put in an appearance at the Court of Sessions in February, 1879.

In this connection we wish to do a simple act of justice to Judge O. P. Hurd In September last we animadverted in words of censure upon his course in urging the Grand Jury to find a bill against us and for allowing the Rev. Waldo to go before them and urge them in the same direction. The information that such had been the case came to us direct from citizens of Watkins, and we supposed it was true; but we hav recently learned that it was not true, and we feel that it is but just to the Judge that we make the statement in these columns. In his instructions to the Grand Jury he informed them that "Cupid's Yokes" had been pronounced obscene by the U. S. District Court in Boston, and that he had read it and considered it obscene; but he did not the second time urge them to find a bill against us, nor did he allow Mr. Waldo to go before them to urge them in the same direction. This charge was based upon incorrect information. We certainly do not wish to wrong the Judge, who stands fair among those who know him, and we cheerfully make this correction.

Our Case in the U. S. Circuit Court.

When our case was laid over last week on account of our going to Watkins, etc., no day was set on which it should be called. It is in the open calendar, and may be taken up at any time when the District Attorney or Judge Benedict may see fit. It may be called up during the present month, or it may lay over till next month. Of course, we are by no means anxious to hurry the matter. A reasonable delay will not displease us, nor will our chances be lessened by it. We only hope that injustice may not be done us, and that the officers of the Court may not be unduly influenced against us. We simply ask for justice.

Assistant District Attorney Fiero seems to hav our case in his control, and we fear he is not too friendly towards us. In speaking with a party a few days after our arrest, he said, "We hav Bennett again, and we intend to put him through this time." Now, we hope he does not intend to "put us through" only as right and justice dictate. We also learn that Comstock is fully determined that we shall be convicted this time. He was very indignant last year that we escaped from his grasp, and now he is particularly anxious that the prison doors should close upon us. He has said that he commences no cases without the approval of the legal committee of his Vice Society, and it is fair to conclude that our case has been duly canvassed by his committee and that he has been told to "go ahead." What will be the result of this prosecution remains to be seen; but with the pardon of Heywood and Floyd before the Court, and the disinclination at Watkins to prosecute us, it would seem that the ardor of the District Attorney, and even of Comstock himself, would be slightly checked. If they can find no greater offenses against law and morality to punish than we hav committed, it would seem that their Court might take a vacation till after the holidays at least.

Pardon of Ezra H. Heywood.

We are sure every reader of these columns will be rejoiced to hear that Mr. Heywood has received the pardon of President Hayes and that his imprisonment in Dedham Jail has terminated, after a cruel duration of seven long months. He was liberated on the evening of the 19th, took breakfast with his friends in Boston on the morning of the 20th, and proceeded to join his family at Princeton, where, we can easily imagine, there was a happy meeting.

Every person who signed the petition for Mr. Heywood's release has reason to congratulate himself for having contributed to the influence brought to bear upon the President's mind in regard to the matter, as well as the contributors to the Defense Fund, a portion of which was used in securing Mr. Heywood's release. But a very large share of credit is due to Mrs. Laura Kendrick, of Boston, who made a journey to Washington for the express purpose of laying the petition before the President and other parties concerned, and used her earnest personal efforts to procure the pardon. We well know the anxiety she felt upon the subject, and can rejoice with her in the success that has crowned her efforts.

How different must be the feelings of Anthony Comstock, by whose machinations Mr. Heywood was sent to prison. When he learned that the petition had been forwarded to Washington, and that measures were being taken to obtain a pardon, with the fiendish instincts which hav always actuated him, he sent on inimical affidavits and documents concerning Mr. Heywood, and did all in his power to prevent the pardon being obtained. He must feel particularly snubbed by the result, and that his wishes hav been disregarded. What can the man think he has gained by his persecution of Mr. Heywood? By a falsehood he procured a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" to be sent him at Squan Village. He has made several journeys to Boston to prosecute his victim; the time and attention of the United States Court, was occupied at the trial of the case, and again in hearing the arguments for appeal after conviction; an honest man was unjustly condemned; a husband and father was torn from his wife and little ones, confined with felons and lawbreakers, and for seven months has been compelled to neglect his own business, which has suffered in consequence, and to do menial tasks with thieves and robbers—and what has been gained by it all? What has Comstock gained? What has the Church gained? The pardon of the President has virtually condemned it all, declared the prosecutor a mere persecutor, and pronounced Heywood an innocent man. The President evidently thought that sending a copy of "Cupid's Yokes" through the mail was really no crime or he would not hav pardoned him. And doubtless this day he regards E H. Heywood as a far better man than his villainous persecutor, Anthony Comstock.

The conviction and imprisonment of Mr. Heywood, by the highest authority of the United States for publishing his earnest convictions is one of the greatest outrages of modern times, and must stand as a lasting disgrace on the escutcheon of our proud country—a disgrace that such a man as Anthony Comstock should by falsehood decoy his victim, and then be able to manipulate the highest authorities of the government to procure an unjust imprisonment—a sad, sad commentary on the quality of liberty enjoyed in the United States and the unjust control wielded by the Church power. May the repetition of this dismal farce be unknown in our land!

The pardon of Floyd by Gov. Rice of Massachusetts, and now of Heywood by President Hayes, indicates that the panic on "Cupid's Yokes," and the scarecrow of obscenity is subsiding, and that a rule of common sense is being inaugurated. It is to be hoped that the rule of Comstockism and sectarian persecution in our country is at an end.

We learn that a thanksgiving or jollification meeting, or a Heywood reception, will be held on the evening of Jan. 3, 1879, and we trust it will be largely attended.

In this connection we will lay before our readers a copy of Mr. Heywood's letter to the President with the preliminary remarks as given in the Boston Globe. It will be seen that Mr. Heywood does not cringingly beg for pardon for any wrong he has committed, but like a deeply injured citizen of this republic he asks to be released, because he has been wronged, because of his declining health, and because of the urgent needs of his family.

A Novel Petition.—In view of the fact that the text of President Hayes' pardon of E. H. Heywood, as published yesterday, makes it appear that he applied for pardon in the ordinary sense of that phrase, we publish below Mr. Heywoods' application, that the grounds of it may be known to the public.

"To the President: I hav the honor to represent that I was indicted, tried, convicted, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment at hard labor for having sent through the mails a certain essay entitled "Cupid's Yokes," of which I am the author. That I am informed that about six thousand of my fellow-citizens hav petitioned the President for my pardon. That these petitions were referred by the President to his Attorney-General for examination and report, and that the Attorney General has made his report and has recommended a pardon. That the President has been pleased to observe to one of my friends that I hav made no application for Executive clemency. Assuming that this omission may in some way embarrass the President, I now present this my application for the intervention of the President in my behalf in the exercise of his pardoning power. I do this—First, because I hav never believed that what I had done was any infraction of the law. Second, because, in writing and sending this essay it is not claimed by any one, so far as I am advised, that I had any criminal intent. Third, because, as the author of this essay, I only gave expression to views conscientiously entertained by me, in the hope and belief that I might thereby benefit my fellow-men. Fourth, because my health is being daily impaired by reason of my imprisonment. Fifth, because I do not believe that the public welfare to any extent demands my incarceration. On the contrary, I sincerely believe that my imprisonment is an outrage upon the rights of free speech and a free press. Sixth, because my helpless family, to whom I am bound by the tenderest ties of love and affection, are suffering bitterly by reason of my imprisonment.

"If these considerations, together with others which hav been brought to the attention of the President, shall, in his opinion, justify and call for my release, I shall be profoundly grateful. If, on the other hand, the President shall be of the opinion that his duty forbids his interference in my case, I hav no other appeal to make, but will endure as patiently as in me lies the keen sufferings which are my daily lot and the great wrong which has been done me, until my term expires or death shall come to my rescue.

"With sentiments of highest regard, I hav the honor to be your friend and fellow-citizen, Ezra H. Heywood."

Unconstitutionality of the Comstock Postal Law.

An editorial in the New York Sun of the 23d inst. contains the following sensible remarks:

We do not believe in the constitutionality of the law under which this conviction [Heywood's] took place. The Government has nothing to do with the moral or intellectual quality of the matter transmitted through the mails. It has no right of discrimination. If it may discriminate for a good purpose, it may discriminate for a bad purpose. The power is fraught with too much danger of abuse to be safely intrusted to the Government.

In early anti-slavery times a determined effort was made to exclude from the mails in the slaveholding states every denunciation of the sum of all iniquities, human slavery. The people protested against the espionage put upon the mails, against the interference with the freedom of the press. We condemn the attempt to interfere with the mails now, though it be with a very different intent, because it violates the same great, essential principles of liberty.

It seems singular how any sensible person can come to any other conclusion. When once matter is deposited in the mails, and the requisite amount of stamps is attached, it is sacred, and the Government has no kind of business to inspect it to ascertain its moral character, whether it is good or bad, black or white, moral or immoral, decent or indecent. Its only duty is to transport the matter duly mailed to its place of destination with the least possible delay, and without censorship or espionage. To yield this important point is to surrender one of the grandest principles of American liberty. It is the last step a Liberal or one calling himself a Liberal or a lover of liberty ever ought to take.

A Few Questions.

If the Vice Society of this city, or its very officious agent, or the Judges, or the prosecuting attorneys of the United States Courts really wish to suppress vice and crime, would it not be well for them to direct their attention to where they undoubtedly exist?

Can they not find in this city and everywhere large numbers of robbers, some called capitalists, bankers, stock brokers, insurance officers, trustees, guardians, dealers in various commodities, etc., etc., who are constantly despoiling honest people, including widows and orphans, of their property, turning them out almost naked in the world like shorn lambs in a tempest?

Can they not find some ten thousand places in this city where intoxicating drinks are sold, and where drunkards and criminals by the thousand are made, and where mothers and children are robbed of money which should feed and clothe them?

Can they not find scores of concert and dance-houses where dissolute men and women nightly congregate and indulge in indecencies, vices, and crimes of an indescribable and horrible character?

Can they not find in this city alone one thousand houses of prostitution and assignation, where virtue is sold for money, and where adultery, promiscuity, and the grossest sexual immoralities are constantly being committed?

Can they not find numerous gambling hells, of high and low degree, where men are nightly robbed of thousands of dollars and where the worst crimes are committed?

Can they not find in the cellars and attics of our lowest streets hundreds, yes, thousands, of sneak-thieves, robbers, and even murderers, who subsist in the vilest and most criminal manner?

Can they not discover, in any desired number, mock-auctions, Peter Funk shops, professed gift concerns, and swindling establishments of all kinds, where unsuspecting visitors from the rural districts and other localities are almost constantly being robbed of their scanty means?

If pernicious literature—that which is a positive damage to the young—is what they are after, can they not find dime novels, "blood-and-thunder" stories, boys' and girls' magazines, and publications of a similarly bad character in almost countless profusion on nearly every news stand in the city and being sent in all directions by hundreds of thousands of copies?

Can they not find in every book-store and at every book-stand in the city and in the county, as well as in nearly all the private libraries in the country, the writings of Shakspere, Boccaccio, Rabelais, Montaigne, Sterne, Smollet, Fielding, Byron, Burns, and other writers, in which, in the aggregate, can be found more than ten thousand times the obscenity contained in "Cupid's Yokes"?

Can they not find in the Bible House, in every book-store in the city and county, in every Sunday-school, in a large number of the common schools and in nearly every house and cabin in the land one or more copies of the Jewish Scriptures—and in the aggregate probably twenty-five millions of copies—in a single copy of which there is fully a thousand times as much indecency and obscenity as exists in "Cupid's Yokes?"

If they are really looking for wrongs to punish is it necessary that they should hunt up and hunt down an old man whose only alleged offense is depositing a single copy of "Cupid's Yokes" in the public mails?

Is it not some other reason that sends them after this old man than the crimes that he has committed? Is it not because he is a heretic and avows an unbelief in the popular theology of the time?

Is it really a crime to deny popular doctrines and to advocate unpopular ones for which the United States Courts should deprive a man of his property and his liberty?

When the Government of our country—by the strong arm of its power, by its attorneys, marshals, judges, and courts—deprives a man of his dearest rights for opinion's sake, has it not absolutely descended to a despotism that would disgrace any Government in the Old World and wholly out of character for the Government of the United States late in the nineteenth century?

Should not every attempt at usurpation of the rights and liberties of the people on the part of the agents and representatives of the Government be frowned down by the entire people, and should not the utmost freedom of thought and expression be allowed? Should not freedom of thought, freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of the mails be preserved with the utmost jealousy and persistency of purpose?

Tampering with the Mails.

We hav excellent reasons for believing that pamphlets and books which we duly stamp and deposit in the mail in this city are intercepted and not sent to their destination as they should be. We hav received nearly a hundred letters from persons to whom we know we hav mailed pamphlets, informing us that the matter so mailed never came to hand. This kind of business is doubtless performed by Anthony Comstock or by his orders, for we hope there is not another man in anywise connected with the postal department mean enough to be guilty of such an act. It is an outrage upon the rights of freemen worthy of the most severe condemnation. It is doubtless done under the sanction of the postal law of 1873, which is the only authority that can be adduced that in the slightest degree justifies such acts of censorship and inspection of the moral quality of the mails.

It seems most singular how any liberal-minded man can advocate anything of the kind. If post-office clerks hav the right to inspect and throw out mail matter and confiscate it because they pronounce it indecent, they hav fully as much right to throw out other matter because they deem it immoral or heretical. We can never more hav free mails in this country if any kind of censorship or espionage is to be tolerated. No Government inspection or inquisition into the moral matter of the mails is wanted or should be tolerated. So long as we pretend to hav a free Government, let us insist upon free mails.

Great Encouragement.

Mr. C. D. B. Mills, Chairman of the N. L. League OF AMERICA— the shining apostle of respectability and morality, who all along has been opposed to the League movement, but who joined it especially in the Abbot interest but a few days before the assembling of the Syracuse Congress and just in time to help lead in the revolt and divide the organization because Wright, Green, Palmer, Wakeman & Co. were not moral enough to suit his refined taste, and who made himself busy in traducing those who did not just agree with him, and gave information to the Syracuse papers that the opponents of Mr. Abbot were vile Free-lovers, defenders of obscenity, dealers in nastiness, etc.—this same Mr. Mills is out in a letter in The Index which is calculated to giv great comfort to the cultured faithful. He says, "A lady of high culture and eminent worth" in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, sympathizes with Mr. Mills and Mr. Abbot.

Another cultured "lady in Battle Creek, Mich., of not less exalted worth and royal character," writes that she is also in sympathy with Mills and Abbot.

A gentleman in Lake City, Minn.—undoubtedly cultured also—has sympathy in the same direction.

And still another gentleman in Maple Rapids, Mich.—whether cultured or not is not stated, but evidently respectable—who likewise has sympathy in the same direction with the other three, approving of Mr. Abbot's dividing the League because seventy-six voted for Mr. Elizur Wright instead of himself.

The League OF AMERICA ought to be very happy over this outburst of sympathy, and more particularly in view of the fact that the efficient Mr. Mills is soon to start out on a Western tour, during which he will organize all the Leagues of America that are awaiting his service if they will only pay all expenses. All this encouragement is intensified by the first League of Boston, which after nearly two months of deliberation, has at length concluded to follow Mr. Abbot to America in taking serious umbrage because he was not voted for by enough of the "vile obscenists" and dealers in nastiness to elect him. Had they only voted for Mr. A. instead of Mr. W., their characters would hav been spotless. But let the Americans take courage and be very hopeful, the first League of Boston is all right, two cultured women and two respectable gentlemen sympathize with them, and Mr. Mills is soon to start West.

A Terrible Responsibility.

If the Christian religion is true, and if it is a fact that of the uncounted millions of human beings that are brought into the world but the smallest fraction of them inherit eternal life and enter into the joys of Paradise, while the great bulk of the race are cast down in the region of eternal torment, what a great wrong Christian parents commit by bringing children into existence. Cannot they understand that in ninety-nine chances in a hundred they are peopling the regions of the damned? Can they placidly view the situation when they reflect that not more than one per cent of the human family form the elect that are admitted into happiness, while ninety per cent are cast into the fire that never is quenched and where the worm dieth not? What a fearful wrong they are guilty of, to be sure! What a crime to bring helpless creatures into existence to be damned forever and ever. How can any man or woman who believes the claims of Christianity ever be guilty of so monstrous a crime as to aid in bringing a human being into existence? If the chances of salvation are so small and the yawning gulf of hell so large, they never, never ought to be the means of placing a single soul in the remotest danger of being cast into that terrible gulf. Assuredly believers in Christianity ought never to marry nor hav children.

Bound Volumes

Of The Truth Seeker for 1878 will soon be ready for sending out to those who wish a copy, well bound in cloth, for $4 00, containing 832 pages. We hav but a limited number of copies and can fill but a limited number of orders. Of course all will not speak at once.

Owing to a damaged lot of paper we are short of number 50 of The Truth Seeker for Dec. 14th. Those who hav copies on hand and do not care to retain them will confer a favor on us by mailing them to us. They may draw upon us for the value in tracts or anything we hav to offer.

Let those who are renewing for 1879 remember that by sending $5 00 they will pay for The Truth Seeker one year and will be entitled to a copy of either "The World's Sages," Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," "The Champions of the Church," or Thomas Paine's great works in one volume. For $3.50 they pay for The Truth Seeker one year and obtain a copy of the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion," "Proceedings and Addresses at Watkins," or "Interrogatories to Jehovah," bound in cloth.

By the by, The Index has never found it convenient to copy into its columns Mr. Frothingham's letter declaring his opinion in favor of the repeal of the Comstock laws, as he was requested to do. Possibly the editor deems it of sufficient consequence to lumber up its columns with the space requiring the announcement of new Leagues joining the Americans, or old Leaguers declaring allegiance to the same, may hav crowded it out. Mr. Frothingham's opinion might possibly offset that of H. Clay Neville of Ozark.

Communications.

Jesus and his Apostles.

BY ANTICHRIST.

A column and a quarter will suffice to answer the four columns of W. E. Coleman's strictures on "Antichrist."

He says he has carfully read our articles in the Investigator during the past three (four) years.

If so what excuse has he for falsifying our fundamental position? He says that "Antichrist has labored vigorously to make the world believe that Christianity originated from astronomical allegory," and he adds that Mrs. Chappellsmith has completely refuted that theory in the Investigator and "routed Antichrist, horse, foot, and dragoons."

Either we or our critic hav been dreaming. When did we ever even allude to such a theory, much less advocate it? On that question we stand about 8 to , and Mrs. Chappellsmith will be as much surprised as ourself to learn that she has routed us. Our critic ought to know that she and we are in entire accord on the question of the historical existence of Jesus and his twelve apostles. She differed with us on a side issue some time ago, not on the main question.

Here endeth the first lesson.

Mr. Coleman attempts to refute our allegation that Kipha is the only proper name, so far as we know, that has ever been translated instead of being transferred. He points to ha Mashiach, translated ho Christos. Does he mean to aver that "the anointed" is a proper name? We hav a Baptist translation of the New Testament in which ho Christos is generally and very properly rendered "the anointed," for it is an epithet, not a surname, even when the definite article is improperly omitted.

Nor are the titles of crowned heads, such as William the Silent (le taciturne) Philip the Fair (le bel), etc., proper names, but epithets. But even if you insist on calling them proper names, they all hav the definite article prefixed, which neither Kipha nor Petros ever had. Whether Kipha was Simon's surname before Jesus met him, as Matthew and Luke tell us, or a surname given to him by Jesus, as Mark and John say, he was never called "the Rock."

The change of the name Saul to Paul was not a translation, and James is only one of the English equivalents of Iakob or Iakobos.

Here endeth the second lesson.

The third and last main point of our critic is one which we met in this way four years ago.

"The Christ of Christendom is the Pauline Christ, the historic existence of whom depends upon what Paul believed and taught. Now Paul was a mystic. He preached "Christ crucified"—as if others preached Christ not crucified. He (or rather some other writer assuming his name) says in 2 Tim., ii, 8, "Christ was raised from the dead according to my Gospel"—as if according to some other Gospel he was not raised from the dead. Paul never saw Jesus except in imagination (1 Cor. xv, 8), and never met but two or three of the so-called apostles, namely, Peter (or rather Cephas), James, and John (Gal. i, 18, 19, and ii, 9). Query: Who was this Cephas mentioned by Paul many years before the Evangelists wrote their Gospels? And who was this James the brother of the Lord, and what kind of a brother was he to the Son of God? And who was the Lord Jesus Christ that appeared to Paul in an abnormal state, or as to one born out of due time, that is, prematurely born? Rejecting as pure fiction his miraculous conversion, with all its accompaniments as recorded in Acts, but not at all corroborated by Paul himself in his Epistles, and making due allowance for interpolations and mystifications in his writings, may not all he wrote concerning Christ apply as well to the ancient Hindoo Christna as to the Jesus whose fabulous biography was afterwards composed as a fiction, but after the lapse of a century or two came to be credited by the multitude as fact."

It was our intention to discuss the question of Paul's Jesus further before concluding our work. We admitted at the outset that this was a formidable point, indeed it was the only difficulty of any magnitude in our way. But there is considerable to be said on the mythical side of the question, in spite of the dogmatic assumptions of our critic. 1. Paul knows nothing of Judas, nor indeed of any of the Galilean Apostles, and he names other persons as apostles. His James, Kipha, and John are evidently not Galilean fishermen, but priests of Jerusalem. 2. The sight which he had of the risen Jesus was undoubtedly like that of the other brethren; 500 of them together saw him at a materializing seance. 3. The earliest appearance of Paul's Epistles that we know of was in the hands of the so-called heretic Marcion, a Gnostic who denied that Jesus was ever born, or that he was anything but a phantom. Those Epistles were no doubt tampered with afterwards to suit the Catholic creed. 4. In a recent article (Nov. 13), we proved that the Gnostics who believed in an ideal Jesus flourished before the Christian era, and it is admitted that in the 2nd century Gnosticism had spread over the whole civilized world, while orthodox Christianity had scarce yet obtained a foothold.

But, happily, we are now relieved of all difficulty in regard to Paul by the discovery, made by our brother "Scholasticus," that he lived before the Christian era, contemporary with a Simon Kipha who died on a tower about 39 B. C., both being disciples of Jesus, the son of Mary and Joseph Pandera. Our esteemed brother has blown up the snag with a charge of nitro-glycerine, and "Antichrist" now finds plain sailing. The Toldoth Jeshu story, revised from the Hebrew text, and with full notes by "Scholasticus," will be appended to our forthcoming work, half of which is already set up.

A few minor points by our critic we will barely glance at. He says the fact of the objective existence of Jesus and his twelve apostles, and of the crucifixion about the time specified in the gospels, has been established by scientific proof. This we emphatically deny.

He says that no proof exists that Cephas, James, and John were Essenians. We hav in former articles adduced considerable evidence that they were.

He says the Talmud and the Apocalypse afford evidence of the objective existence of Jesus and his apostles. Yes, the Talmud says that they lived a hundred years before the time of Pontius Pilate, which agrees with the Toldoth Jeschu story. But we find nothing in the Apocalypse to confirm the gospel legend. On the contrary, what the Revelator says about "the twelve apostles of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" reads very much like an astronomical allegory.

Our critic avers that "not a vestige of a mythical Messiah can be found in early Christian literature." With all the early Christian literature at hand we affirm that it is full of evidence of a mythical Jesus.

If Mr. Coleman shall be able to find in our forthcoming book an argument half as weak as his about Petros, or a blunder a tenth part as bad as his about our maintaining the solar mythical theory, we will forgive him for finding our "speculations invariably strained, far-fetched, fanciful, and baseless," and for characterizing our arguments as "absurd and puerile."

The Question of the Hour.

ABSTRACT OF A SPEECH DELIVERED IN BOSTON BY DR. T. A. BLAND.

John Stuart Mill said: "The fatal defect of the monetary system of England is found in the doctrine that paper money must be redeemed in gold or silver coin;" and adds: "The adoption of this heresy by the United States of America has been the source of infinite harm, resulting as it has, in a constant succession of inflations and panics." One hundred years ago we had a revolution; but in view of the fact that we still hav class legislation, and cling to the system of political economy inherited by us from our monarchal ancestors, the question, "Do revolutions revolutionize?" is pertinent. Our revolution was only partial. We got rid of monarchy and entered upon the experiment of republicanism. The Declaration of Independence declares all men free and equal, but for eighty years our Constitution and statutes recognized slavery. Equal rights to all, exclusive privileges to none, is a cardinal doctrine in theory, but in the face of this grand and fundamental idea of freedom, we hav gone beyond the old monarchies in fostering monopolies by special legislation. To such lengths hav we gone in this direction that railroad, bank, and other gigantic corporations rule this country, controlling legislatures and influencing the action of Congresses, Cabinets, and Presidents. Through special legislation the railroad rings hav robbed the people of a large portion of the public lands, and through the same means the bankers hav absorbed the profits of labor to such an extent as to bankrupt a large portion of the men of enterprise and reduce the wage classes to a condition little less tolerable than that of the serfs and paupers of Europe. The bankers hav had a monopoly of the currency of the country, and hav thus been able to tax labor and enterprise at will in the form of usury, and to change prices at will by manipulating the money market.

The cumulative power of usury is little understood, save by financial experts. Could the masses of the people who pay interest, and this includes all save those who receive it, comprehend the subject as fully as the banker, the broker, and the insurance actuary understand it, they would see themselves practically standing on the brink of an abyss of ruin, from which nothing can save them but a right about face, a radical change in the financial policy of the country, and the adoption of some plan by which the power of usury can be broken. The indebtedness of the United States, public and private, is estimated at not less than $10,000,000,000. The following figures are furnished officially by the Bureau of Statistics. We use round numbers only; National debt, two billion two hundred thousand dollars; State debt, $359,000,000; county debt, $200,000 000; municipal debt, $100,000,000; railroad debt, $2,300,000,000; private debt, (including that of individuals and firms,) $4,850,000,000. Grand total, ten billions of dollars. ($10,000,000,000). This enormous sum of $10,000,000,000 is perhaps an under statement of the aggregate indebtedness of the United States. The average rate of interest on all classes of debts is about seven per cent, making an aggregate interest of $700,000,000, and this sum if not paid, is annually added to the principal, increasing the interest the second year to near $750,000,000.

Are we paying the interest on our debt? We answer, no; nor is it possible for us to pay it, for the following named reasons: According to the census of 1870 the assessed value of the entire property, both real and personal, in the United States was $16,000,000,000. The estimated value is placed at $30,000,000,000. We accept the larger amount as correct. At least one third of this sum represents idle and of course unproductive capital, as farm lands not under tillage. We hav $20,000,000,000 as a working capital with which to carry on farming, manufacturing, merchandising, etc., etc. In the matter of profits, exact figures cannot be obtained; but we hav them supplied with sufficient practical accuracy from the Bureau of Statistics to enable us to approximate the truth very closely. The average net profit on all business, farming, manufacturing, merchandising, etc., etc., is under three per cent. on the estimated capital of twenty billions of dollars. With a view to reliability, we put it at three per cent, or six hundred millions of dollars. This is our aggregated total productive income annually, on the basis of a total capital valuation of twenty billions of dollars. With this six hundred millions we must meet $700,000,000 of interest; or, failing to do so, we must add the amount of the deficiency to the interest-bearing debt, thus increasing the aggregate indebtedness and correspondingly adding to the interest. To pay a debt of $700,000,000 with an income of $600,000,000 would be a feat of financial skill not yet developed. It were absurd to assert that we can possibly escape bankruptcy if the present rate of interest is to be maintained.

The inevitable conclusion from the foregoing premises is that the creditor class, the money lenders, are destined under the present system to absorb the entire wealth of the continent in a very short time, and reduce the debtor class to practical serfdom.

We hav said that the average of usury is seven per cent. There is one class of public creditors who receive very nearly, if not quite fifteen per cent annually on their money, the national bankers, who hold four hundred millions of dollars in five and six per cent Government bonds, many of which cost their owners less than one-half their face value, and all were bought at far less than their face value; and this same class of capitalists hold, in addition, $350,000,000 in national bank notes which cost them nothing, but which are loaned to the people at interest varying at from seven to twelve per cent, owing to locality, and thus they realize in dividends about fifteen per cent on their invested capital. If one dollar loaned at fifteen per cent compound interest for one hundred years will amount to one million seventy thousand dollars, how long will it take the national bankers alone to absorb the entire wealth of this continent? One hundred years ago, Anselm Rothschild, a German Jew, laid the foundation of the fabulous wealth now controlled by his descendants. He began his career as a pawnbroker, but after getting a few thousand dollars he started a bank. During the past century the house of Rothschild has confined its business to banking and dealing in public securities. The rate of interest received by them has not averaged over four per cent per annum; yet their total accumulations are estimated at six hundred millions. Had the rate been fifteen per cent per annum, instead of four the Rothschilds would by this time hav owned this planet and all its accumulated wealth. In 1864, five money-lenders in a Western city bought five hundred thousand dollars of United States six per cent gold-bearing bonds for two hundred thousand dollars, gold coin. Depositing these bonds with the Sub-Treasurer, they secured four hundred and fifty thousand dollars in national bank notes. These they loaned to business men at ten per cent per annum. That was fourteen years ago. They hav received in gold interest on the five hundred thousand dollar bonds four hundred and twenty thousand dollars; interest on the four hundred and fifty thousand dollars currency which cost them nothing, six hundred thousand dollars. The present cash value of their bonds, which cost them two hundred thousand dollars, is about six hundred thousand dollars. Thus their investment of two hundred thousand dollars in 1864 has grown to the enormous sum of one million, six hundred thousand dollars, a net profit of one million four hundred thousand dollars! This estimate deals only with the profits arising from a computation of simple interest and the appreciation in value of the bonds. Compound interest would doubtless swell the aggregate to largely over two millions in net profit. The Congress of the United States enacted the law by which these bonds were issued under the pressure of the advice and influence of the bank lobby. It is charitable to suppose that our patriotic Congressmen were ignorant of financial laws, and acted upon the advice of the only class of men who offered to instruct them. This class, the money monopolists, controlled Congress in their own interest. The result is, the rapid enrichment of themselves and the almost utter ruin of the laboring and producing classes. The men who hav controlled the financial legislation of the country from the beginning to this date, and notably during the last fifteen years, constitute an insignificant minority. Their victims outnumber them more than five hundred to one. In view of this fact, it seems a waste of words to point out a remedy for our ills in a country in which the vote of the debtor counts as much as that of the creditor. In a country in which the hod-carrier, the ploughman and the banker meet as peers at the polls, the law-makers are but the servants of the people, and the statutes enacted one day may be repealed the next. The bankers hav dictated our financial policy in their own interest. It behooves the people now to dictate a new policy which shall be in their interest. This involves not merely a reform but a revolution, and this revolution is actually begun. It begun when the Government, failing to borrow money from the banks to meet the expenses of the late war, issued legal-tender greenbacks with which to feed and clothe and pay the army. It was checked for a while by the interest-bearing bond scheme of the bankers, and the wheels of progress went backward on the dial of time. But the stupendous fraud of this selfish scheme has been detected at last, and the revolution goes forward again with accelerated speed. Intelligence is grappling with ignorance, philanthropy with selfishness, honesty with fraud, democracy with aristocracy, civilization with barbarism, liberty with despotism. Our monetary system has been and is, in large measure, a barbarous one. It still ties commerce down to money that is coined from substances, gold and silver, which are limited in quantity and fluctuating in values, hence disturbers of trade, articles that are alternately money and merchandise. This brings us to the question. What is money?

Aristotle says: "Money is a measure of values, a medium of exchange, an invention of man, not a product of nature." It is a creature of law, he adds, and "may be composed of any substance most convenient for the purpose." Gold is not money; silver is not money; paper is not money; but money can be made of gold, silver, or paper, and when coined (stamped) by a government, and made legal-tender by law, it possesses uniform value, whatever the material of which it is made. Cathay coined money from the bark of the mulberry tree. Lycurgus demonetized gold and silver, and issued iron coins as the legal money of Sparta. Carthagena coined money of leather; so did France as late as 1360. In 1635 grains of corn and beans, as well as musket balls, were current money in Massachusetts. Thomas Baring says that in 1847, silver not being a legal tender in England, it was impossible to raise any sum of money in London on sixty thousand pounds of silver, and that in 1864 not one rupee could be got on twenty thousand pounds of gold in the city of Calcutta, gold not being legal money there at that time. This great London banker is strong authority, and his testimony clearly establishes the proposition that gold and silver are no more money than paper is until made so by law. We hav at present in this country eight kinds of money. The gold dollar supposed to be worth, intrinsically, one hundred cents; the Bland silver dollars, worth ninety-seven cents; the trade dollar, ninety-eight cents; two half-dollars, eighty-eight cents; twenty five-cent nickles, seventeen cents; thirty-three and one-third three cent nickels, sixteen cents; one hundred copper coins, 7 cents; the dollar greenback, 0 cents. These in spite of the difference in the value of the substance of which they are made, rank alike as money in the payment of a debt or in purchasing any article that is for sale, and you hard-money men all know it.

Money is the life-blood of commerce. It is to the body politic what the blood is to the living body. A healthy man has fifteen pounds of good blood, that is blood at par, in his system. This starts from a common center, the heart, circulates throughout the entire system, returning through regular channels to the point of issue. Suppose some contraction quack should decide that the man had too much blood and should tap some of the veins and contract the circulation to seven and one-half pounds, would not the man faint and fall prostrate? Just as our nation has fainted, and now lies prostrate in its commercial and productive enterprises, as the result of the recent enormous contraction of our circulating medium. In the supposed case the quack would call a council of his kind, and they, finding the blood centered in the heart and other centers, giv it as their opinion that there is still too much, and that still further contraction of the circulation is all that is indicated. Would they not prove themselves as wise as our hard-money political doctors do, when after having by their quackery in Congress paralyzed the country still prescribe further contraction of the currency, because they find the money congested in the banks and won't circulate? Neither of them take a very comprehensive view of the subject, or they would see that the reason it don't circulate is that the volume is not sufficient to force into the small channels of the extremities (the capillaries), where industrious little broplasts (workingmen) are starving for want of it, and must continue to starve until the normal volume is restored and equilibrium established. This is the great mission of the new party of which General B. F. Butler is the chosen leader. He is no political quack, but a statesman of broad, scientific views; and he should not only be made Governor of Massachusetts, but President of the United States. The old commonwealth has not been called upon to contribute one of her sons to the nation as Chief Magistrate for fifty years. She is soon to hav that honor. She is to be asked to giv to the country as its President her greatest son; and when this gift has been made, she will hav contributed the largest brain, the best balanced head, and the stiffest spinal column that ever crossed the threshold of the national mansion.

The Liberal League Movement.

The Chairman of the Executive Committee of the N. L. L. has issued and sent to each member of that committee the following circular:

SALAMANCA, N. Y, Dec. 5, 1878.

Dear Sir: At the National Liberal League Congress, recently held in the city of Syracuse, you were elected a member of the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, to represent your state on that committee.

I send you this circular to notify you of your election, or re-election, and request your acceptance of the same; and allow me to say that I hope you will accept and do all in your power to assist the Liberal League movement.

And in the first place, if you hav not already done it, please appoint from your state four active friends of our party, to constitute, with yourself as chairman, the Liberal League State Committee of your state. As you will notice by a resolution of the late L. L. Congress, it is suggested that a majority of your committee be located so near to each other that they can conveniently get together for consultation.

And I would suggest that it would be a good work with which to commence the labors of the State Committee for it to issue an address to the Liberals of the state, urging upon them the importance of our movement, and of a thorough organization everywhere to assist its advancement. Other important work will readily suggest itself to the Committee. The Board of Directors of the N. L. L. are preparing a small tract in which will be published with our platform, a form of Constitution for Local Leagues, and instructions for organizing them. Each Executive Committeeman of the various states and territories will be provided with as many copies as he may desire for distribution.

What the cause demands at this time is a great increase of the number of Local Liberal Leagues. The Board of Directors are of the opinion that if all our State Committees and friends of the cause in various states will at once go vigorously to work, before the meeting of the next Liberal League Congress a thousand Leagues will be entitled to representation.

This is a circular letter, but I hope it will receive the same attention as if it were written. Very truly yours,

H. L. GREEN, Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L.

Pious Correspondence.

Deacon Skidmore's Eighteenth Letter.

HOME AFFLICTIONS.

ZION HIL, N. J., Dec. 23, 1878.

MR. EDITUR: I hope that our Kristyan frends at Watkins did not sukseed in sending yu to prizon and that yu hav got back to yure old plase agen. I think I kan realize how hard and kruel it wood be to send a man ov yure aje to prizon—taking him away from hiz family and hiz bizness for such a triveal offense. I think it wood be a disgrase to the state ov New York and to our fre institushuns, so kalld. For wun, I no I wood feel like hanging my hed in shame that our relijun and our sense ov justis waz no better than to persekute and punish an old man like yu bekauz yu don't think just az uther peepel do or az the Church kommands. But, az I sed, I hope yu are back home agen and that the Watkins peepel will be kontent to let yu remane thare.

I beleev yu hav a terribel enemy in that man Komstok, hoo seems to follow yu up with the vindiktivnes ov a demon. I kannot understand how such men az ex-Governor Woodford and Juj Benedikt kan lend themselvs to sekond the vile efforts ov such a man. And what hurts me more than all the rest iz to hav the konvikshun forsed upon me that the grate and grand Government ov the United States iz employing its power and majesty to prosekute and imprizon men like yu for opinyun's sake. It seems to me the saddest thing that haz taken plase in the kourse ov my memory, and I wood be glad kood the humiliating sight hav ben spared me. I hav alwayze ben proud ov our kountry and our sistem ov government; but if it haz desended to spy out the morals ov the peepel and send old men, and yung men, and wimmin to prizon for opinyun's sake, my pride, to that extent, wil hav kauz to be humbled, and I hav good groundz to be ashamed ov the land ov my birth.

But, my frend, you must not think yu alone ar visited with afflikshuns. We here, on Zion Hil, feel just now that our harts ar ful ov trubbel. We feel that the hand ov God iz upon us; if not in jujment, yet in severity; but we hope it may not be in such severity az to brake our harts. Our good Elder Goodly haz ben taken suddenly and seveerly ill. Hiz komplaint iz numonia, and he haz ben brawt extremely low with it, and it iz enuf to make us feel our dependense on our Heavenly Father, hooz kind, protecting hand iz alwaze over us. A week ago yesterday the elder did not seem at all wel. He told us from the pulpit that he waz feeling ill and that he wood not detane us with a lengthy sermon. He koffd a good deel, and he often plased hiz hand on hiz left side, showing that the good old man waz in pane. He hurried on home az soon az the servis waz over. Mrs. Goodly soakd the good man's feet in warm water and put mustard plasters to the soles ov hiz feet and on the back ov hiz nek, az wel az on hiz left side, and put him to bed. Dr. Wright, the family fyzishun, was kalld, and he sed the old jentleman waz going to be a very sik man. He left sum powders of ipekak, kamfor, and dover's powder, and told the wife that wun must be given evry 3 ours. The good man's pane in the side seemd to inkrees notwithstanding the efforts that had been made for hiz releef. Warm tee of pennyroyal and hart's-eeze waz given him, and toast water and appel water were plased neer the hed ov his bed. Mrs. Goodly and thare lame dawter, the only child that iz living at home, wer up and down with him the hull nite, and he waz worse in the morning than the nite before. On the second day much alarm waz felt at the Elder's kondishun. It waz deemd best for Dr. Gates to be kalld az kounseling fyzishun when it waz desided to put a big blister on the good man's side and inkrease the dover's powder, with frekwent doses ov spirits ov niter. It waz thawt the blister did giv sum temporary releef, but he relapsed into a worse state than before. The pane in hiz side and brest inkreased, and he sed it seemd like a duzen nives kutting in every direkshun, and hiz koff waz almost insessant.

Everybody bekame much alarmed at the Elder's kondishun, and tha sent 14 miles for Doktor Harper, an old fyzishun ov grate experiense, to kum and see him. Doktor Harper pronounsed it a very seveer kase, and wun in which thare waz a good deel ov doubt az to the final rezult. He rekommended leeches to be applyd to the Elder's side and brest. Thare wer not enuf leeches in town for the purpose, and tha had to send to Trenton for 2 duzen. I tel yu, Mr. Editur, this kase ov sikness kauzd grate exsitement in our littel kommunity. The sisters ov our church wer more disturbd than tha hav ben before in 10 yeers, and the brethren hav also not ben devoid ov apprehension. The older sisters felt that the good elder waz about to leev us, and that in loozing him tha wood looze thare best frend. The yung sisters felt much the same way, and 6 ov them at leest felt that tha wood mis the opportunity ov giving him a pare ov slippers for a Kristmas present, which tha hav already got worked. This makes them feel very bad, and tha want him to get wel ever so much. Tha say if the Elder shood die, and another elder take hiz plase, that it wood be too soon to begin to make holiday prezents, and it wil be too long to wate til another yeer. The poor things! What wil tha do? It iz too bad to work so many pares ov slippers and then to hav no elder to giv them to. Perhaps it mite do to giv out a few pares to the deekens. I kood manej to take one or two pares, if tha fit wel, to sit around the house in and reed THE TRUTH SEEKER and rite letters to the same, but then I wood not want enything so fansy az the yung sisters get up for the klerjymen.

It iz held to be very doutful whether our good Elder gets wel agen or not. He iz very low, but the doktors say thare iz alwayze hope whare thare iz life. It wil, indeed, make a sad hole in our church to hav Elder Goodly taken from us, and we no not how we kood find eny wun to fil the plase he haz so akseptably filld; but if it pleezes our Heavenly Father to take the good man from hiz labors, we shal pra that he wil send us another fatheful servant to fil hiz plase. We hav alredy dun a larj amount ov praing on the Elder's akkount. Every devout member ov the church haz prade in public and in private that the good man may be restord to helth and that hiz usefulness may be prolongd theze meny yeers.

We mist the Elder most sadly at our meeting on last Sunday. We had not ben abel to prokure the servises ov another Baptist elder to fil hiz pulpit, and we deekens and older members had to fil the vakansy the best way we kood. Yu awt to hav seen me get out the 315th him. I red it in az ministerial and solem a voise az I kood kommand, and I ges I lookd neerly az grave az the Elder duz himself. After the singing I offerd up a fervent prare, mostly in the Elder's behaf, and that the littel lams mite not be left without a sheperd, to wander astra in the krooked and devious wayz of the Evil Wun. I pored out my sole with so much unkshun that I brawt teers to the eyes ov meny in the church. I notisd that even Sister Jones had a teer glistening in eech eye when she razed her hed after the amen had ben pronounsed; and I must konfes that when I saw that, all the remnants ov hardness ov hart towards her that I had unkonshusly retaned melted away and a feeling ov tender kompashun went out from my hart to Sister Jones. I followed the prare with about 15 minutes ov solem speeking, tuching the lonely and helples kondishun ov a flok ov littel lams without a sheperd to protekt and gard them from the wolvs and wild beests ov pashun, dout, and unbeleef which tha wer alwaze liabel to. I bore, with not a littel ernestnes, upon the nesessity which we all felt for the need ov the lite from on hi to direkt us in the rite pathway in which we shood wauk and to indikate to us the huje roks and presipises, the slues and pitfalls, the mires and kwiksands which we must avoid. I pointed out the grate diffikulty we wood experiense in trying to find the rite rode without a leeder or good sheperd. I prazed up our good Elder Goodly for hiz fatheful labors for meny yeers in this sheepfold ov ours, and how I hoped and prayd that hiz life wood be spared stil meny yeers to gide us on to the eternal sity—the New Jerusalem abov the klouds. I felt what I sed, and I am satisfide that it waz appreshiated by neerly all in the church, for I saw meny wiping thare eyes while I waz speeking; nor wer my own eyes dry, and my voise trembled just enuf to giv an impressiv, solem sound. I hav never tride to speek in publik when I hav ben better satisfide with myself; and several told me, after the meeting waz out, that tha did not no that I had such an impressiv manner. Tha thawt if I wood praktis more that I wood soon get so I kood preech az well az Elder Goodly. I replyd that if I even got so I kood speek az wel that I never kood bekum such a man ov goodness and exselense az our worthy pastor.

After I had spoken Deeken Kragehed spoke a few words, but the deeken haz praktised publik speeking so littel that it iz a grate effort for him to say much. My old frend Mr. Burnham spoke about 10 minits in exsellent spirit and with much solemnity. Then sister Jones spoke and she waz not at all trubeled to find words to express herself. She prazed our good elder and hoped hiz life wood be spared yet theze meny years. She spoke in hi terms of hiz good kwalitys and manly virchews and exhorted all to pra unseesingly for hiz rekovery. Sister Burclay, an amiabel woman in advansed life, made a few remarks in the same line ov thoze who had preseded her. She askd that all neel while she prayd ernestly for our beloved pastor. We did so and she prayd with grate feeling that God wood spare Elder Goodly. Sister Jones followed in much the same line and all evidently joind in the same fervent dezire. Then, after another him, "Neerer my God to thee," waz sung with unuzual fervor, our meeting waz dismissd.

Sally and I sat up with the Elder on Saturday nite and Suzan haz been over 2 nites. She iz an exsellent nurse. We are all hoping most prarefully for the Elder's rekovery, but we are hoping almost against hope. Sorrofuly yours, JOEL SKIDMORE,

1st Deeken ov Zion Hil Baptist Church.

Letters from Friends.

LUNENBURG, MASS., Dec. 11, 1878.

MR. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Was it an afterthought that brought out that somewhat suave and conciliatory letter in your last issue from Mr. Underwood? What a pity Mr. Frothingham, Mr. Parton, Mr. Denton, and many others had not spoken a year ago. From my lookout, perhaps I am mistaken, had all these men said last January what they hav said within two months, Mr. Heywood would not to-day hav languished one hundred and seventy-six days in Dedham jail, you and other good men of both sex been obliged to leave home and business to answer to legal charges at Watkins.

I should think it was about time to review the past and cast an eye to the future, and ask in sober earnestness, "Where are we drifting?" I beseech you by the mover of all goodness, the spirit of all truth, and the love of all justice bate not a tittle or a jot from your position. You hav been traduced beyond culture, insulted beyond refinement, and berated beyond all the set rules of scholarly erudition, and let your assailants trample your body in the dust, and decorate The Index office with your stranded limbs, and the Liberal platform with your eyeless skull; yet I abjure you bate not a tittle nor a jot for ignoble peace. I had far rather you and I and a hundred more die in honorable war than drag on to death in dishonorable peace. The victory belongs to the right, and between right and wrong, between truth and falsehood, there is no truce, and never should be.

I know dissensions are distasteful. A thunderstorm is sometimes awful. But be it so. All we are, all we expect to become, is attainable through the war and frictions of words. Men and states are lifted to higher planes of purpose and thought, ideas, and actions through the strife of words.

And so it is impolite to call a minister who has gone into dry dock for repairs, an "ex-Rev." is it? but such terms as "forger," "liar," and "perverter of the truth," are jewels in the foreground of Free Religious culture.

I hope it will prove satisfactory to him and all the needy sons of men who seem to think that every man should carry a sign on his forehead and hind head also, and at every drinking place on life's highway repeat the lettered signs, "opposed to all obscenity," and "deathly opposed to all nastiness."

In my broadest observations I hav observed this one thing, and in all my investigations I hav found only the same one thing, viz., that mock modesty and hypocrisy cry the loudest, and screech the longest at sin and obscenity.

If the zeal of the Church and the perfectionist in behalf of the young of this nation is not exhausted, I would suggest an apportionment to people in middle life who as much need looking after as the boys and girls, the living counterparts of parents and teachers.

I hav often made my declaration of rights, and now I beg you to giv me a place on your public Declaration of Rights, first for the courageous Elizur, second for the invincible Heywood, third for the fearless Wakeman, and fourth for the party under arrest and awaiting trial for exercising the rights of free citizens. Yours fraternally, A. H. WOOD.

NAUVOO, ILL., Dec. 2, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir; I must apologize for the delay of payment of my back subscription due you from the 1st July, '77, to July, '79, so I inclose $6.00, and 10 cents for "Cupid's Yokes." The only cause of this failing has been the lack of means. Being a farmer in my occupation, the products as you know are so low that the most of farmers hav great difficulties in realizing money for necessary expenses. But I feel grateful for the confidence you had in trusting me, friend Bennett, for, as I have said already, I could not spare THE TRUTH SEEKER, the champion enlightener of the world, I may say the Savior of mental liberty.

Were it in my power and means to help you in your noble cause, I would freely participate in the Defense Fund. I feel also that Heywood has been unjustly put in prison when I see and read all the cruelties and tyrannies that Anthony Comstock and those like him hav inflicted upon those brave heroes. Men who deserve more blessings for their courage and wisdom, it is enough to shock the mind of every human being that has a heart, and then to think that all this is done in the name of religion, of Christianity. O! when will the whole world know that religion and Christianity are slavery and oppression! Please send me that little pamphlet, "Cupid's Yokes." Yours truly in the noble cause of freedom, A. LINGE.

BOSTON, MASS., Dec. 12, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND BENNETT: In the midst of intense anxiety for Mr. Heywood comes the news of your third arrest. How can we express to you our appreciation of your self-sacrifice and heroism in resolving to test, in your own person, the extent of the despotism and injustice that can exist under what is popularly supposed to be a free government, and either triumph or suffer in vindicating the freedom of speech and press. You are setting a noble example to younger men, and while the apathy of the majority of reformers makes every true heart sick, it is good to know that you, dear friend, are not alone; that the members of the National Defense Association are on the alert, and that glorious, genial Dr. Foote "sticketh closer than a brother," and waits, pen in hand, ready to sign the bail bonds at shortest notice.

Please command me if I can in any way serve you. Yours till the victory is won, LAURA KENDRICK.

VICTORIA, B. C., Nov. 20, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I notice by THE TRUTH SEEKER of Oct. 19th that your are in need of money, and as the revolving year is again drawing near a close, it reminds me of what I O U. The books came to hand all right. They are well worthy of a place in every Liberal library in the land. Inclosed you will please find a post-office order for $6 00 to pay for the books and a renewal of subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1879, and as you make so liberal an offer to your subscribers who remit during the month of November, I thought I might avail myself of your generous terms. Please send the Holy Bible abridged.

I see you hav had some unlooked-for trouble at the Watkins Convention. All pioneers in the van of progress and reform in every age had to encounter trials and difficulties by being faithful to themselves in expressing their opinions frankly and fearlessly from their own standpoint, differing widely, it may be, from the general opinions of their day. I am sorry to see so much disunion and want of harmony in the Liberal ranks on subjects where we would expect every free mind, untrammeled by superstition, to act more harmoniously and with full consent in the same groove of thought. The true liberty of mankind, viewing it from my standpoint, consists in being free as the mountain air to utter thoughts, and in unrestricted inquiry, increasing intellectual progress, knowledge being the only pledge for the world's amelioration from vice, misery, and degradation, and he is the true peace-maker who strikes at the root of social evil, and who destroys the fruit of the contaminating tree in the various countries and kingdoms of the earth. Monarchial governments, exclusive and arbitrary laws, are instituted as a protective policy and safeguard to aristocracy and despotism. The most stately lord is nothing more than a drone, supported by those compelled to till the soil and bring forth its wealth, and while the land is burdened with lords and inactive men, the poor must be degraded and deprived of their just dues. Where such conditions exist vice, poverty, and wretchedness will also dwell. The cause of all this evil in society is the result of a false theology. Clergymen hav manufactured a theology whose author is a God of inconceivable attributes, yet which are beneath the natural characteristics of man. They hav created a God after their own image, a devil after their own likeness, a theology after their own interest, and a system of practice after their prejudices. That the enslaved masses could but see that they are compelled to love their God because they are frightened by their devil, and that their love is born of hate and fear; that they are bound within a narrow circle with the chains of sectarianism to a mountain of imagination which is locked with the key of fear! But it is with everyone and their convictions to decide whether a sectarian bondage shall oppress the free human mind, or whether knowledge and universal happiness shall bless the earth.

Yours respectfully, A. TURNER.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 1, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: The TRUTH SEEKERS came to hand, and I can say that I am pleased with the contents. The world is greatly indebted to you for presenting in such an attractive form the amount of useful information it contains within its columns. I regret that I did not sooner become acquainted with THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Liberal sentiments it advocates; but fate had decreed it otherwise, as I was born and raised a strict Catholic, being educated in a convent in Austria, my native country I had no opportunity for reading other books or papers than those that were dictated to me by the priest, which I consider mental slavery; and I bless the day that I first set foot on American soil, where I found my freedom. In regard to the charity of the Catholic Church, I must say that it it is to me a disgusting hypocrisy, as their object is only to gain money and power, and not to help suffering humanity. For instance, a Catholic orphan asylum is a mere receptacle for the fruits of celibacy. Perhaps Mr. Anthony Comstock could make some startling revelations by investigating into the mysteries of a female convent; that's the place to find obscenity, especially when those worthy fathers take confession of the nuns. I hope to see this letter published. I am not afraid to hav my opinions and actual experience made public, as I defy the Catholic Church and that Protestant Jesuit, Anthony Comstock.

I inclose one dollar, from which you will deduct my three months' subscription, and for the balance please send me "Cupid's Yokes," and some of your most radical tracts. Please add my name in bold letters to the Declaration of Rights. Yours fraternally, BENOIT WILMER.

CURRENCY YET AGAIN.

OSCEOLA, IOWA, Nov. 30, 1878.

Nothing but its importance would justify so much said and written on currency. Mr. Truesdell, our difference on this currency (and all coming from official sources to back up the differences) reminds me of a similar question a year or two ago. I happened to make the statement that our Government cost more per annum to run it than did the English. Then reverting to proofs; the Inter-Ocean said our Government cost $230,000,000 per year; the N. Y. Evening Post said $680,000,000, and reiterates the latter statement, but both papers from official sources, and, as I believe, both wrong. So now on this circulating medium, no two statements alike, but all officially contained. In some items Mr. Truesdell is right; in consuming, as I think, he is wrong. For instance, his criticism on Mr. Graves' amount of fractional currency (344,000,000) is correct; 34,000,000 would be nearer truth.

But the main issue in this much vexed question is this: With an increased population, increased business, increased debts, public, corporate, and private, we yet hav a greatly decreased circulating medium to carry business with, thereby kindling and shrinking all values throughout the country except gold. Deduct from Mr. Graves' statement 300,000,000, error in fractional currency; deduct, if you please, 450,000,000 of Confederate notes, still the difference between the circulating medium a few years ago and the amount circulating now is much too great for trade and commerce to be successful. It matters not what you call a treasury issue; if it does duty as money, is afterwards converted into bonds and withdrawn from circulation in large amounts, the business of the country feels the change keenly. The 7-30's were not bonds, but in the act were called "Treasury Notes" to distinguish them from bonds; and, as Mr. Spinner's letter said, "were intended, prepared, issued, and used as currency." I received them as money and paid them away as money, and know many that did the same.

The item of Confederate notes in Mr. Graves' list is worth some notice. During the war they did duty, after a fashion, as money among six or eight millions of people. After the war this six or eight millions of people needed a currency of some kind, and came to use a part of Northern currency, so that when more money became requisite to replace the abolished Confederate notes, then McCullough and others continued contracting the circulation up to this time, and with what results becomes more and more apparent.

Sherman, as Senator, said; "Those who aim to contract the circulation of this country would do a more serious thing than they contemplated. . . . An act of madness without parallel in ancient or modern times." Soon afterward Sherman, as Secretary, does what Sherman, as Senator, said would be unparalleled madness in others to do. None described more eloquently the coming hard times than did Senator Sherman, and none labored more effectually to fulfil the description than did Secretary Sherman.

After the war Grant said our currency was the best we ever had, and no more, he said, was in use than the country needed for ordinary business times. Soon after Grant denounced it as "rag baby," etc. Grant it was who made use of the terse Spartan language, "Let no guilty man escape;" but with more than Spartan laxity he let every guilty man escape. The Spartans would not punish for robbery, but for being found out at robbery. Grant beat the Spartans and would do neither.

Mr. Truesdell, I would direct your attention a moment to a device to meet the evil of a too limited currency. Many years ago I saw a check drawn by my brother-in-law on Rome, N. Y., that although payable on demand had circulated in New York, Boston, etc., for nine months before presentation at Rome, and arrived there with about thirty indorsements of names on the back of it. It was not called currency, but did duty as such; but a Government note would hav been better currency than a tanner's check was.

F. J. EMARY.

WEST AMBOY, N. J., Dec. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT Dear Sir: Hav been spending a few happy days with that dear friend and earnest, efficient worker, Miss E E. Gibson. She is suffering very much at present with asthma.

While there I saw one of those premium dictionaries you are sending out. They are about four times as valuable as one would expect from the price.

One finds all through Syracuse notices to poor people seeking employment or wishing instruction or companionship, that if they will call at such and such a place assistance will be cheerfully rendered by some member or committee of the Y. M C. A., and they actually do as they agree (in that)! Again, a temperance union, composed of lady members of the several churches, has established a 'Friendly Inn,' where excellent meals are furnished for a small pittance. This committee, composed alike of the aristocracy and the middle classes, searches the streets for the intoxicated, and warmth, food, home comforts, and kindness are offered gratis until they are able to care for themselves again. The best of advice is given, but all is advocated as purely Christian, until the poor sufferer feels assured that nearly all tenderness originates in Christianity, the more so as no Infidel organization offers him any aid.

Those women are wise. Like the mother that hires her child with candy, they offer a large stick of relief streaked with reason, wrapped in a gorgeous tinsel paper church creed.

What are our women doing? Must we that are not fitted for public life sit idly by disconsolate, because we are not aiding our more favored brothers and sisters in opening the eyes of the class that get books and lectures, or shall we commence teaching the erring and outcast, the hungry and hopeless, that in the religion of humanity also lies friendly aid?

We could teach them to bury the desire of saloon company in rational literature as easily as these women do it with Sunday-school stories and songs. Teach them to be men and women for true nobility's sake, and not for Christ's sake.

This is particularly woman's work. The astute politician is careful to gather in this class; their members are in the ascendancy, and every vote counts one.

I was surprised and pained that I found neither THE TRUTH SEEKER nor any of those tracts that speak so eloquently for our dear editor's earnestness. With that city well seasoned with Liberals, many of them wealthy, it seems a shame the T. S. leaflets are not on every reading table. It seems like being ungrateful to you for your endeavors and truant to the cause.

Our anxiety is growing intense to know that all of you are to come back triumphant from that woeful Watkins ordeal.

Yours in sympathy, JENNIE LEETE.

COLDWATER, MICH., NOV. 23, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav watched for all the news in your paper in relation to Comstock and Abbot, and think you are right every time. You may use my name on the Bill of Rights and everywhere you can to benefit our cause. I am a repealer, and think Abbot & Co. hav turned the wheel of progress backward at least fifty years. Friend Bennett, I can hardly wait from one week's end to another, so anxious am I to receive your paper. It is, in my judgment, the best paper printed on the American continent to-day. Go ahead. I feel sorry that you should be so pestered with lawsuits, and I think it is all done to put you out of your business and to stop your paper. I wish I had money to giv you to help push your way through, but I certainly at present hav not. I hope you will be successful, and come off victorious over all your enemies and especially victorious in the suits now pending against you. Your cause is my cause, and every Liberal in America ought to feel so. I sympathize with you most earnestly, and know our cause is just. I only wonder that our champion man, B. F. Underwood, has so far forgotten himself and our cause as to lend his influence to help on the cause of Abbot, Comstock, & Co. I believe that within one year's time they will regret the course they hav taken. Because they could not pack and run the convention at Syracuse they left, and are now properly enough termed seceders and secessionists. That name ought to make the face of every one of them tingle for very shame.

Brother Bennett, you hav stood nobly for the right. Your plea is just, your defense is right. You stand alone, in advance of all Liberals in America, and are continually waving your banner and throwing it to the breeze (THE TRUTH SEEKER), marshaling our hosts, which are legion, and leading them on to certain and sure victory. I glory in your manhood, and respect you to-day above every one in all the circle of my acquaintance, and while you liv you shall never want a true friend in me. I renew my pledge to help you to the extent of my ability. Be courageous and fearless, and the result will be, sooner or later, sure victory for our cause.

Yours respectfully, JAMES S. BEDEL.

FLORENCE, IOWA, Nov. 28, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir; As this is the day which our most Christian President has commanded us to observe in thanksgiving to the powers of the air, I will tell you a few of the things for which I am thankful to man and woman, and some others for which I am not so thankful.

I am thankful to those brave men and women of the past whose services and sacrifices hav rendered possible the more or less amount of freedom which we to-day possess.

I am thankful to those of the present day who are laboring with tongue and pen to extend the rule of liberty and light.

I am thankful to each artisan and inventor who has helped to lay the foundations of our present industrial civilization, but I am not thankful for that system of production which has rendered it possible for a few to reap all the benefits resulting from these inventions, while the inventor and the millions who construct and use machinery receive but the poor pittance of the wage slave.

I am thankful for the great crops which our farmers hav raised, but berate that system of exchange which compels the agriculturist to sell his products for almost nothing, while millions in our own fair land are upon the verge of starvation, while a few roll in luxury, a luxury representing the unpaid toil of the producer and consumer. I am thankful for the many good men who are the servants of the people in official stations, but am sorry that we hav a President and a set of Governors who do not know enough of the genius of our Constitution, and of the objects and duties of government to prevent them from usurping the functions of ecclesiastics in the performance of their civil duties, which lack of knowledge is evidenced by their appointment of days of fasting, prayer, and thanksgiving.

I am thankful for the increasing light which is being let in upon the dark corners where are stowed away questions not fit to be discussed in the presence of Madame Grundy, but am sorry that there should be any who call themselves Liberals who are afraid of free discussion and who are willing that their brothers and sisters should suffer for the candid express of opinion upon topics which they do not happen to fancy.

I am thankful for the importance which the sex question is now assuming, and that friend Leland saw fit to write that superb article, "The Poets on Freelove," and that you were Liberal enough to give it a place in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I am thankful that you published "The Speeches at the Watkins Convention" It is a very interesting and instructive book. May you sell thousands of them, and may each reader thoroughly study the speech of T. C. Leland on the "Organization of the Liberal Forces."

Fraternally yours, E. C. WALKER.

LUDLOW, ILL., Dec. 1, 1878.

DEAR BROTHER BENNETT: As my husband is busy, I concluded to wait no longer, but write you myself for more books. We are very much pleased with the books we received from you. The "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion" is splendid You always "stuck to the point," and I am pleased to acknowledge you our leader. We are new beginners, and our library is small, but we intend to increase it from your storehouse of instructive books. I inclose a post-office order for five dollars, and now my wants are many: "The Age of Reason and Examination of Prophecies," "Common Sense," "Interrogatories to Jehovah," the "Holy Bible" (abridged), etc., etc.

If prayers would amount to anything, how I would pray for your speedy deliverance from the hands of your enemies. Hav you pictures of yourself the size for framing? If you hav, I would send for one. I should be proud to hav it hanging in our room.

Accept the best wishes of your friend,

NELLIE NEWKIRK.

NOVELTY, Mo., Dec. 3, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I hav read "Cupid's Yokes." In my judgment, it would be impossible for any author to handle the same subject and use less obscenity than is found in this book. It contains no more obscenity than the law under which its author was condemned. In other words, I do not find any obscenity in it, and I regard the imprisonment of Mr. Heywood as an infamous blow at Freethought. I am not a Freelover, but I can see some good as well as evil in that system. If adopted, in less than one year it would accomplish more in the way of improving the health of humanity than all the combined medical skill of the world could accomplish in a century. But in other respects it would be a great evil. When governments reach that socialistic stage, which they all will one day reach, then the plan of the Freelovers may as a matter of necessity be adopted.

This persecution of Mr. Heywood is of the same spirit which burnt the martyrs of the Dark Ages. That spirit of persecution and intolerance is as strong in Christians to-day as it ever was. A man cannot be a true lover of human liberty and be a Christian. Christianity worships a monarch in heaven, and they intend for the Church to be the monarch of earth. Understand me now, I am with you for the unconditional repeal of the infamous, detestable, Comstock postal laws. C. E. KINMAN.

ANIMAS CITY, COL., Nov. 30, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Find inclosed one dollar which place to my credit, and send me THE TRUTH SEEKER for whatever time that amount will pay for. I will remit balance whatever it may be for a year's subscription, before the time expires for which the dollar pays. I hav intended to send for THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, but hav been so unsettled, rambling over the frontier, that I hav delayed until I found some spot where I was willing to locate permanently. Eureka. Here in a lovely valley on the banks of the beautiful Florida will cluster all my future hopes; here beneath my own pine trees with my favorite books and newspapers, and in the cultivation of my own potato vine, I think I'll pass the noon and evening of my life. I take the Investigator, but do not see in it your advertisement, and hence do not know your present subscription rates. I sometimes correspond with the Investigator and other papers. May contribute something to your paper occasionally, if anything I might contribute should be thought worthy of space. Yours for progress and reform, J. ALLEN EVANS.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEB., Nov. 21, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: On the 27th of last month Mr. O. A. Phelps delivered a lecture on Materialism, in this place, which was reviewed in the church of the Latter-day-Saints upon the following eve. The result was a debate between Messrs. Phelps and J. M. Short upon the Bible and Immortality, lasting five nights. Mr. Phelps showed himself a master in debate and in the estimation of all Liberals and a great many Christians, completely demolished his opponent. Yours truly, HENRY SCHMITZ

PIPESTONE CITY, MINN., Dec. 10, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Being an occasional reader of your most excellent paper, and not being privileged the opportunity without having the proceedings of that most obnoxious Comstock brought before my eyes, I cannot refrain from expressing my contempt for him. A few more such men scattered through our liberty-loving land would cause us to bid farewell to peace and quietude, for the same love of liberty and free speech prevails to-day among our people that did in the days of our forefathers, and I hardly think the people of these United States will sit idly down and allow some low-minded, deceiving hypocrite to say what our freedom is or how far it extends. My sympathies are with his victims, especially those that are striving to elevate the human race.

E. H. Heywood, although doomed to a felon's cell at present, may yet see the day when his name will be carved on the uppermost part of the temple of fame, not only as a martyr to Freethought, but also as a benefactor to coming posterity. At least that is my prayer, for I think there are untold pages yet to be written on human progress. Dr. Sara B. Chase is another of the many to be admired for her unselfish exertions to free humanity from its bondage. And thus we might speak in praise of numerous others striving to do the same. You, Brother Bennett, can be counted among that number. Go on in your noble work, and may you yet see your persecutors following in your footsteps.

Now, as I hav spoken of some of Comstock's victims, I must express my admiration of some of your correspondents and contributors, who are bold, brave, and true to their opinions. All honor to those that speak in truth and sincerity their noblest thoughts, which, I think, is especially true of Elmina D. Slenker. Would there were many more such nobly-gifted women, but still there are others that may do as much to advance freedom of thought. I am a young convert.

Yours in sympathy,

MRS. H. O. WHITEHEAD.

LAUREL HILL, CAL., Nov. 20, 1878.

MR. D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: A short time ago I happened to see your incomparable paper in a friend's house, and was so struck with its true and admirable method of teaching the young idea how to shoot that I was nearly wild with joy to see that there was one man so far emancipated from old-time customs and bigotry as to fearlessly rush, like the mountain torrent, on the fabulous amount of cant, hypocrisy, legerdemain, and Saint Ozafry as to hurl the weight of truth, honor, and the enlightened brain of a thorough and fearless man against the tottering, although still vindictive, Church. Long may you wave, Nature's masterpiece and true gentleman. Inclosed find $4, for which please forward your paper for one year, also "Cupid's Yokes," "Sepher Toldoth Jeschu," Pocket Dictionary, the "Holy Bible Abridged," and any other tracts that you may see fit. In a short time I will send you some money for the Defense Fund, as I glory in that woman's bravery in trying to support her brother's family. If Comstock was out here with us in Mono County, Cal., he would find some real ladies that would go for his hair. Yours forever,

JOHN D. CASEY.

CROYDON, UTAH, Dec. 6, 1878

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Having read your paper now some time, I hav an idea of asking you to let me like you a little bit, and am really put out at the persecutions you are receiving at the hands of the slick and slippery Anthony with the whole race of bigots at his heels.

There is something about your paper, so like a communication from one's father that I really would like to do something for you, so thinking it all over hav come to the conclusion to ask you to shut up shop in New York, and come to Zion. Why, bless your soul, here you can enjoy a free speech and marry your mother or your grandmother, all the mothers-in-law you like, and none to molest or make you afraid in God's holy mountain.

As far as the law is concerned it is dead. Your "Cupid's Yokes" you can yoke as you like. A widow and two daughters can be added to you each month; if you only hav one room, no matter. And the fun is the poor government officers here can only look on and weep.

Utah being no part of America those at Washington are afraid of us, so come on, and hav a good time and worship God according to the Constitution of the U. S. A.

Very respectfully, MARY BUNTING.

HILLSBORO, ILL., Dec. 12, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find sixty cents, for which you will please send to Mr. Richard Wedekind, Raymond, Ill., THE TRUTH SEEKER and the "Age of Reason." This is a trial subscriber. Mr. Wedekind says he thinks he will be able to send in some subscribers, and when such subscribers present themselves, I will remit the amount of subscription.

I hav got rid of nearly all of those tracts you sent me, and will soon send for more.

We hav Infidels amongst us, but they are cowardly, and I think if we could hav a good speaker to visit us and giv them a stirring up, we might be able to organize quite a band, but I expect that we shall hav to forego that pleasure this winter.

I believe I told you in my previous letter that I was the cause of THE TRUTH SEEKER being sold at the news stand in this place, but now I am able to state to you that I am keeping the news stand, and make it a point to obtain papers and books of a Liberal and scientific nature. May send to you for books etc., but if I do I will send the cash with the order, for I know you need all you can possibly obtain to defend yourself, Bros. Bell and Mosher, and Miss Tilton at Watkins.

Hoping that you may come out of that contest without a scratch, and thereby, with that experience, be the better enabled to wield the sledge of truth to batter the brains out of the head of old Mr. Theology, I remain yours for life and truth, A. W. NELSON.

OSWEGO, KAN., Dec. 4, 1878

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I herewith send you three dollars, for THE TRUTH SEEKER commencing from the expiration of my three month's subscription, the 15th of last June. Your paper covers ground that ought and must be plowed over, and the deadly weeds destroyed, or they will destroy us. If there is a God, may he, she, or it bless and sustain you, and finally deliver you from the Philistines of our national progress.

Our little town has but two or three Bennettites, yet we mean that more than one number of your paper shall come to this office. Yours truly, S. P. HURLBUT.

MEAD'S MILLS, Dec. 8, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed find stamps for THE TRUTH SEEKER 3 months and the abridged Bible.

What has become of the Devil that we do not get any more letters from him? has old Tony got him in jail? I think the "Holy Bible Abridged," the boss joke on the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and hits old Tony square in the face. My Christian friends think I ought to be ashamed to peddle and keep such a book around for folks to read. I tell them when they will throw the nasty thing away; I will.

I think that there was never anything published that givs them the stomach-ache like that. Send them broadcast for it is a knock-down argument. I wish I could decoy old Tony out this way, I should let my dog shake the nastiness out of him; at all events we would fix him so he would not molest you any more. Go ahead and may nature allow you to liv a hundred years to publish THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I as long to read it. Yours to beat,

WM. A. RAMSDELL.

YATES CITY, ILL., Dec. 6, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: We hav started a school and public library, with provision that all donations of books shall be received in said library. I am ordering most of the above for that purpose.

Wm. F. Jamieson is with us again making a "rattling amongst the dry bones." We are also arranging for a debate to come off in a short time between Jamieson and Rev. John Hughs, of which I shall probably send you further notice.

Jamieson is all right upon the question of repeal of the Comstock laws. All Liberals in this section as far as I know are in favor of unconditional repeal, taking the view that the Post-office Department is not constitutionally the conservator of the morals of the people.

We are astonished that so intelligent men as B. F. Underwood and Judge Hurlbut cannot see danger to the liberty of the press lurking in such laws as establish a censorship in regard to the literary matter that passes through the United States mails. I am very truly yours,

C. L. ROBERTS.

MONTICELLO, KAN., Dec. 3, 1878.

DEAR BENNETT: Inclosed please find one dollar, for which send me the "Law of Population," also "Cupid's Yokes." Really I cannot recollect the price of the latter. If this is not enough, send them and I will make up the balance. I am curious to know what obscene literature is, and as these publications hav been decided to be such by a Court, I suppose they will determine the question.

Of course as to what is obscene depends entirely upon the education of the one passing judgment, and the meaning would vary, probably with each individual. I am not prepared to argue with Mr. Ryan in his definition that obscenity applies to the male and female sexual organs. There are, no doubt, a few things upon which all people of any degree of refinement or cultivated taste would agree were obscene or debasing to the mind; but it seems to me to be impossible to so particularize as to form a standard or draw a line as to what is obscene. I believe that Anthony Comstock has no right, either by nature or education, to dictate to me what I shall not look at or read, if I pay my own money for so doing. If I was called upon for an opinion as to what is obscene, I'd point with exultation to Anthony himself as a personification of the full meaning of the word, in all its most damnable aspects.

Excuse a suggestion, and I'll close. I am not only sorry, but find my feelings bordering on disgust, that THE TRUTH SEEKER and The Index feel called upon to expend so much force in correcting misrepresentations made by each other. The Liberal element cannot afford to quarrel. Such belongs to religious bigots over creeds, etc.

Pray let us hav peace, and harmonious work in our noble cause, and let us marshal our forces to crush out the foes of liberty. Yours, J. R. HINKLE.

SAN JOSE, CAL., Dec. 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I sent you a ten dollar draft a short time ago which you will place to my credit on subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER and alter the tab to correspond. I found I had got behind but this will pay for a few years ahead.

I see by a late TRUTH SEEKER that Moses Hull has taken the management of the Paine Hall business, and the plan set forth looks feasible. I hav sent in my name to Mr. Hull for one hundred dollars worth of stock. If our Liberal friends will take hold now in earnest the property can be saved from the hands of the enemy. With brighter hopes for the future, I remain, Yours, etc.

ZAMOS PARSONS.

BOONVILLE, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1878.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed two dollars for which send THE TRUTH SEEKER, and a copy of "Cupid's Yokes," to Manual Wooley, Boonville, and one copy of "Anthony Comstock" to myself, and credit me with the balance on THE TRUTH SEEKER. Please add my name to the Declaration of Rights. I believe the so-called Comstock laws ought to be repealed. With what motive were those laws obtained. Was it for the public good or was it to assist the (un)Christian Church to suppress Liberal publications? It does not require much sagacity to perceive that under cases of pretended public benefit there is cloaked designs of a despotism which places man's destiny in the hands of his fellow-man. Here is opened wide the grand entrance door of tyranny. What may not our legislatures see fit to declare to be right. Our laws hav created a little officer, who would honor himself and bless the public by commiting suicide.

A just government will confer no special privileges. Its powers should be exerted only in the vindication and defense of human rights. Privilege conferred upon one implies a derogation from the rights of others.

Yours, etc., C. F. JILLSON.

VICTORY, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1878.

FRIEND BENNETT: I see by my TRUTH SEEKER that you go to-day to Watkins for trial. You hav my name on the Defense Fund for two dollars which I inclose; I ought to hav sent before, but money with me is scarce and hard to get, but believing it is never too late to do good, I will send now. I consider you are fighting the battle for the legal and constitutional rights of myself and children. I feel as though I must giv something even from my poverty. It seems strange that in this enlightened country one class of people can be so bigoted as to attempt to dictate to others what kind of books or papers they should buy, sell, or read. For myself I propose to keep or read any book I wish if I am only able to buy, though all the prisons on earth are yawning for me, and I am also willing others should read what they please. I hope your persecutions may not prove serious; but if people will learn to value their rights no other way, then the brave must always suffer for the weak and cowardly. Supposing you hav left some one to attend faithfully to your affairs I send this to New York so it can be forwarded if you need.

Truly yours, NELSON PORTER.

CALHOUN CO., ARK., Dec. 10, 1878.

BROTHER D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been looking over Mrs. Slenker's letter to you in your paper of Nov. 23d, and it seems as I am compelled to write to say to you that I indorse her proposition in regard to what she says of us Atheists. I, too, am proud to say I am an Atheist; after reading and reflecting, that is the conclusion I arrive at. No supernatural power outside or beyond the universe. No heaven or hell. One eternal rest.

"The seeds of truth sow far and wide.
And in the labor take due pride;
Build on foundations firm and sure,
And live a life that's good and pure.

Bend every circumstance you can
To make a heaven on earth for man;
And equal rights to woman give,
Then you a happy life will live."

—Mrs. E. D. Slenker.

Please find inclosed P. O. order for $5 00—three dollars for the paper for 1879, and two dollars to help defray the expenses of the Watkins Convention, or for the Defense Fund, or wherever you think best to put it.

Yours in the cause, JOHN H. HASLAM.

The Ruined Husband.

It was a man of Burlington,
Full learned and wise was he;
Full oft he read in the magazines
And the encyclopedia.
And oftentimes when the day was done,
He'd hasten him home from the store.
And over his volumes, one by one,
He'd ponder, and study, and snore.
When the nights grew long, as the years wore on,
He'd study and ponder the more.

One night in sere October
He hastened to his den,
And ye book he read; to annotate
He seized his ready pen.
But his good wife cried, as ye book she spied,
"Now hearken to me, good liege,
An' thou open that book, if I'm not mistook,
Thou'lt be in a state of siege."

Then quickly spoke the master,
"Woman, thy wits are daft;
This is no book of idle tales
Whereat ye hav wept and laughed:
Never this tome ye hav looked into,
Thou of the flighted head,
The 'Extinct Mammalian Fauna of Dakota' thou ne'er hast read."
And his lip curled scornfully as this
Undeniable thing he said,
Which he ne'er had spoken if he had been
Less bookish and better bred.

"Now listen to me, then, man of brains."
And in mocking tones spake she;
"It's little I reck of the books that load
The shelves of your librarie:
But this I trow, that within that book
Of which I hav heard you speak
I hav more red leaves in an hour this morn
Than ye hav read leaves in a week."
And she folded her hands and looked at her man
In a manner exceedingly meek;
And she had her own way, in her womanly sway,
Though she knew neither Latin nor Greek.

Back on the shelf he laid it,
The book he had taken down,
And a wry grimace that wrinkled his face
Chased off the gathering frown.
"This book," he said, "I calculate,
Is safe among my legions;"
And he laid his hand on "Man and Nature in the Arctic regions."
But his good wife shrieked as though she were Chased by the hostile Fijians.

He sighed, and took down "Life and Death
In the Tropics," by Commodore Staples;
But she stayed his hand; "It's full," quoth she.
"Of gold and crimson maples."
"This I will read," he said, and took Down "Emery's Compendium,"
But she spoke, "I filled that little book
With rhus toxicodendron."
And she blushed, for her Latin accent was
A subject she was tender on.

"Then I will con," he muttered,
"'The Institutes of Coke;'"
But from its pages fluttered
Bright leaves of the poison oak.
Then he said, "I will cram on the Zodiac."
And he opened the book at "Libra,"
And the floor was strewn with the yellow leaves
Of the common juglans nigra.

He frowned and scowled, that bookworm,
As he opened the "Mill on the Floss,"
And over his lap and into his sleeves
Fell three or four kinds of moss.
Three or four volumes of Dickens,
And every page of Burns,
Were peopled with tinted boxbury leaves.
And graceful fingers of ferns;
Into whatever book he may chance to look
New botany he discerns.

"Now heaven hav mercy," he cried at last.
When he could find voice to speak,
"Is there aught on my shelves that I yet may read
In my volumes of classic Greek?"
But his sister said, as she shook her head,
And answered, in accents meek,
The leaves must hav rest until they be pressed.
Which will be about Christmas week."

The up arose the good man,
And stifled his rising groans;
He strove to smile, and once in a while
He laughed in mocking tones.
And he buried himself in the newspaper.
And he read of murders dire;
Of factories stopped, of stocks that dropped,
Of losses by storm and fire;
How banks were robbed, how people were drowned.
How men from trouble were mad;
How some men lied, how women cried.
And much more that was awful and sad;
Till it turned his head, and the man, it is said.
Became irreclaimably bad.

MORAL.

The moral is obvious.

—Burlington Hawkeye.

THE PROCEEDINGS AND ADDRESSES at the Freethinkers' Convention held at Watkins, New York, Aug. 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. Pp. 393. 12mo. New York; D. M. Bennett. Chicago: For sale at the office of this paper. Price $1.50.

All Liberalists hav heard of the Watkin's Convention; if they did not attend they felt they were deprived of a rare opportunity, the equal of which would not soon be presented. The next best thing to being present at a great meeting is to read an accurate account of its proceedings. In many respects the report is better than the meeting. One can set down by the quiet fireside, and at no expense or trouble, acquaint himself with all the thoughts uttered, while actual attendance is accompanied with considerable fatigue and expense.

Mr. Bennett anticipated the wants of the thousands who did not attend the Watkins Convention, and has furnished a sprightly description of Watkins, the proceedings of each day's session, and almost a verbatim report of all the remarks and speeches of the distinguished men and women present. The speeches of Taylor, Bell, Lomas, Copeland, Colman, Seaver, Peebles, Lawrence, Tillotson, Gibson, Rawson, Kendrick, Bristol, Henderson, Scott, Evans, Truesdell, Julian, Mills, Parton, Wright, Leland, Wakeman, and Neyman are fully reported. They are valuable and interesting reading, and Mr. Bennett deserves to be liberally rewarded for his enterprise.—Religio-Philosophical Journal.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE

BIBLE OF BIBLES:

OR

TWENTY-SEVEN

"DIVINE REVELATIONS:"

CONTAINING

A Description of Twenty-Seven Bibles, and an Exposition of Two Thousand Biblical Errors in Science, History, Morals, Religion, and General Events;

ALSO A DELINEATION OF THE CHARACTER OF THE

Principal Personages of the CHRISTIAN BIBLE,

AND AN

Examination of Their Doctrines.

BY KERSEY GRAVES,

Author of "The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Biography of Satan."

The ground gone over by Mr. Graves in the course of this new work is simply astounding, and the literary labor performed is worthy of receiving the approximate reward of an extensive reading at the hands of the public. In the sixty-six chapters into which the book is divided, almost every question of interest which arises in the mind at the mention of the word BIBLE is considered in that straightforward style which has made the volumes of Mr. Graves so extensively sought after.

Cloth, large 12mo., 440 pp. Price, $2.00, postage free.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 8th St., New York.

AMBERLEY'S LIFE OF JESUS,

HIS

Character and Doctrine.

A Chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief."

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

This portion of Lord Amberley's great work has given such great satisfaction that numerous requests have been made that it be issued separate for more general distribution. These requests have been cheerfully complied with. 165 pages, large 12mo. Price, by mail, paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents. For sale at this office.

Proceedings and Addresses

AT THE

FREETHINKERS' CONVENTION

HELD AT

Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878.

A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neyman, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, W. S. Bell, and several other persons.

It is a volume of rare value, containing the best thought of the age. It is gotten up in good style, and will be a valuable addition to the library of every Liberal in the country.

Sent by mail at $1.25. Hundreds of orders should come in at once. Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St.

GOLD MEDAL at Paris Exposition, 1878
CO-LABORERS' do. do., 1878
GOLD MEDAL Sweden & Norway, 1878
GOLD MEDAL at Mechanics' Charitable Association, Boston, 1878
SILVER MEDAL (for cases) do., 1878

MASON & HAMLIN

Have the honor to announce the above awards for their

CABINET ORGANS

the present season. The award at Paris is the highest distinction in the power of the juries to confer, and is the ONLY GOLD MEDAL awarded to American musical instruments. THIRTY-ONE leading manufacturers of the world were in competition. At Every World's Exposition for twelve years the MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS have been awarded Highest Honors, viz: Paris, 1878; Sweden, 1878; Philadelphia, 1876; Santiago, 1875; Vienna, 1873; Paris, 1867. NO OTHER AMERICAN ORGANS EVER ATTAINED HIGHEST AWARD AT ANY WORLD'S EXPOSITION. Sold for cash, or payments by installments. Latest CATALOGUES with newest styles, prices, etc., free. MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN CO., 154 Tremont Street, BOSTON; 25 Union Square, NEW YORK; 250 Wabash Avenue, CHICAGO.

THE MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

Send 25 cents to DR. ANDREW STONE, Troy, N. Y., and obtain a large, highly-illustrated book on the system of Vitalizing Treatment. Also The New Gospel of Health for $1.25, a masterly work on progressive medicine and healing by magnetism, 519 pages, illustrated with 120 cuts for personal manipulations, explanatory of the sublime science of healing without medicine. 1y5

BEYOND THE VEIL

A very neat and entertaining volume, giving beautiful descriptions of life, occupations, etc., in the Spirit World. Dictated by the spirit of Percy B. Randolph, through the mediumship of Mrs. Francis H. McDougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson of California. With a steel-plate engraving of Dr. Randolph.

Price $1.50, post-paid by mail.

D. M. BENNETT

CUT THIS OUT.

A GRAND OFFER!

SILVERWARE FREE FOR ALL

The Old Reliable ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., whose Metropolitan Headquarters are located at 258 and 260 Broadway, New York City, and Factory at Providence, R. I., have determined to introduce goods of their manufacture in every city and hamlet in the United States and Canadas. To do this, we will present to each lady reader of this paper a set [6] of our COIN PLATED SILVER SPOONS, with your last name or initials elegantly engraved on each Spoon, the only charge will be 75 cents to defray expense of engraving name, packing and express charges. To avail yourself of this grand holiday offer, it will be necessary to cut out the attached Certificate No. 188, and forward it with 75 cents on or before March 1st, 1879, to the Royal Manufacturing Co., New York.

CUT THIS CERTIFICATE OUT,

Certificate — No. 188.

It will not appear in this paper again.

On receipt of this Certificate, together with seventy-five cents in Currency, Silver or Postage Stamps we agree to hand engrave any last name or initials as desired on a set [6] of our best quality Coin Plated Silver Spoons, and prepay all shipping charges to any part of the United States or Canadas, provided this certificate is forwarded to us on or before Mch. 1st, 1879.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., 258 Broadway, N. Y.

We claim for our Silver Plated Ware that for durability and elegance of design we can not be excelled. We first heavily plate with nickle—the hardest white metal known—and then follow with a plating of pure Coin Silver, thus making the most durable plate yet discovered, and you will find by enquiry at any dealer, this quality and design of Tea Spoons will cost you about $4.00 per set, without your name engraved thereon. On each and every article of our Table Cutlery our name is stamped and we have our design copyrighted, thus preventing irresponsible and unscrupulous dealers and advertisers from palming off an article of our manufacture at high prices. On the handle of each Spoon is a crown with the word ROYAL in the band, and on the reverse side R. M. Co. is stamped. In addition to the above offer should you wish to order Knives, Forks or Table Spoons at the same time you order Tea Spoons we will furnish any article or all of them at the following reduced prices, and prepay all shipping charges, viz.: 6 Solid Steel Knives, blade and handle one solid piece, best steel covered with a heavy plating of Nickle and Silver, $1.75; 6 Forks, 95 cents; 6 Table Spoons, $1.20; or total for Knives, Forks, Tea and Table Spoons, $4.05. The Table Spoons and Forks are of the same design and of the same quality as the Tea Spoons, and will be engraved without extra cost, the Knives being of steel will not be engraved.

Remember we do not stamp your name, but have experienced workmen engrave your last name in full or initials as desired. We will not furnish any of the above goods at prices named unless accompanied by the above Certificate, as we only wish to send out a limited quantity as an advertisement, well knowing in any family we place our Table Ware it will be a standing advertisement for the sale of our other goods, a catalogue of which is mailed with each shipment.

As to our reliability we quote the following from our New York papers, and refer you to any responsible house in this city.

"The Royal Manufacturing Co., 258 and 260 Broadway, is one of the most reliable, enterprising and responsible houses of this city."—Editorial American Farmer, N. Y., April 1878.

"The Royal Manufacturing Co. of this city have sustained a well earned reputation for reliability by sending out goods guaranteed to be exactly as represented, and by this means purchasers get only the best goods at more reasonable figures than large dealers pay by wholesale."—Editorial Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, April 13, 1878.

"A representative of our paper was shown through the establishment of the Royal Manufacturing Co., 258 and 260 Broadway, and was surprised at the handsome character of the goods sent at such extraordinary low prices."—The Independent, N. Y., June 20, 1878.

☞ In ordering give us full instructions how you wish your name engraved, and write your name plain and in full. If an express office is not in our town, we will send by mail. Postage stamps will be received at their face value. All letters ordering Silverware must be addressed to the ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., 258 Broadway, New York.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

No.	(REVISED LIST.)	Cts.
1.	Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen.
7.	The Story of Creation. Bennett.
8.	The Old Snake Story. "	8
9.	The Story of the Flood. "
10.	The Plagues of Egypt. "
11.	Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett.
12.	Balaam and his Ass. "
13.	Arraignment of Priestcraft. "
14.	Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers.
15.	Come to Dinner. "
16.	Fog Horn Documents. "
17.	The Devil Still Ahead. "
18.	Slipped Up Again. "
19.	Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett.	5
20.	Samson and his Exploits. Bennett.	2
21.	The Great Wrestling Match. "	2
22.	Discussion with Elder Shelton. "	10
23.	Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett.	3
24.	Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell.	5
25.	Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett.	5
26.	Underwood's Prayer.	1
27.	Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett.	5
28.	Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran.	10
29.	Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood.	2
30.	Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers.	2
31.	Gods and God-houses. "	2
32.	The God's of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett.	3
33.	What has Christianity Done? Preston.	3
34.	Tribute to Thomas Paine. "	2
35.	Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett.	1
36.	Bennett's Prayer to the Devil.	2
37.	Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	1
38.	Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z.	3
39.	The True Saint. S. P. Putnam.	3
40.	Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers.	3
41.	Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett.	1
42.	Elijah the Tishbite. "	3
43.	Christianity a Borrowed System. "	3
44.	Design Argument Refuted. Underwood.	2
45.	Elisha the Prophet. Bennett.	3
46.	Did Jesus Really Exist? "	3
47.	Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter.	5
48.	Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson.	5
49.	Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild.	3
50.	Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett.	1
51.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1.	5
52.	Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood.	3
53.	Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood.	2
54.	An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett.	5
55.	The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman.	3
56.	Bible Contradictions.	1
57.	Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood.	2
58.	Prophecies.	2
59.	Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood.	2
60.	Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood.	2
61.	History of the Devil. Isaac Paden.	5
62.	The Jews and their God. "	10
63.	The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers.	3
64.	The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett.	2
65.	Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D.	2
66.	God Idea in History. H. B. Brown.	5
67.	Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2.	5
68.	Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon.	2
69.	Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	2
70.	Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon.	3
71.	Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman.	3
72.	Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett.	2
73.	Foundations. John Syphers.	3
74.	Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett.	2
75.	An Hour with the Devil. "	10
76.	Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett.	3
77.	The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett.	5
78.	Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett.	5
79.	The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman.	2
80.	Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett.	5
81.	Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers.	1
82.	Christian Courtesy. Bennett.	2
83.	Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey.	5
84.	Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London.	2
85.	Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett.	10
86.	An Enquiry about God's Sons. "	2
87.	Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood.	1
88.	David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker.	3
89.	Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson.	3
90.	Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates.	2
91.	Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood.	1
92.	The Bible: is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter.	5
93.	Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle.	1
94.	The New Raven. Will Cooper.	5
95.	Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett.	10
96.	Ichabod Crane Papers.	10
97.	Special Providences. W. S. Bell.	2
98.	Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.	2
99.	Do the Works of Nature prove Creator? Sciota.	5
100.	10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als.	5
102.	The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell.	1
103.	Does the Bible Teach us all we Know. Bennet.	2
104.	Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson.	10
105.	Decadence of Christianity. Capphro.	2
106.	Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett.	2
107.	The Safe Side. H. B. Brown.	5
108.	The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston.	1
110.	Materialistic Prayer. Bennett, 4 pp.	1
111.	Reply to Scientific American. Bennett.	1
112.	Sensible Sermon. Savage, 8 pp.	2
113.	Come to Jesus. Bennett, 8 pp.	2
114.	Where was Jesus Born? S. H. Preston.	1
115.	The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett.	2
116.	The Sunday Question. Bennett.	2
117.	Constantine the Great. Preston.	3
118.	The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell.	5
119.	The New Faith. J. L. Stoddard.	3
120.	The New Age. W. S. Bell.	10
121.	Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers.	3
122.	The Great Religions of the World. Bennett.	10
123.	Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll.	10
124.	Sinful Saints. Bennett.	10
125.	German Liberalism. Mrs. Clara Neyman.	2
126.	Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. B. F. Underwood.	10
127.	Tyndall on Man's Soul.	5
128.	Paine Glorified. Ingersoll.	5
129.	Who was Jesus Christ? W. E. Coleman.	2
130.	The Ethics of Religion. W. K. Clifford.	5
131.	Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr.	5
132.	My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson.	1
133.	The Authority of the Bible. Underwood.	4
134.	Talks with the Evangelists.	7
135.	Is there a Future Life?	4
136.	Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett.	4
	Christian Love. C. L. James.	3
38.	Science of the Bible. John Jasper.	2

139. Massacre of St. Bartholomew. S. H. Preston, 3
140. Astro-Theology, 5
141. Infidelity. H. W. Beecher, 2
142. Synopsis of all Religions. E. L. Saxon, 10
143. Chang Wan Ho, 2
144. The Comstock Laws. 10
145. If You Take Away my Religion, What Will You Giv me Instead? Dr. H. B. Martin, 10
146. Seymour Times' Prayer. Monroe, 2
147. Reply to The Index on the Comstock Laws, 10
148. When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus, 2
149. Age of Shame. Joe Barnegat, 3
150. The Liberty of Printing. Hurlbut, Bennett, and Wakeman, 10
151. What is the Bible? M. W. Hitchcock, 8
152. A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas, 3

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

1. Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg. M.D. 5
2. Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. 3
3. Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. 3
4. Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin. 5
5. Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase. MD. 3
6. Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. 2
7. Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. 5
8. How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford.
9. The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. 2
10. The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. 10
11. Is America the New World? L.L.Dawson. 8
12. Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., 5
13. Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. 7

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent offe on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollar worth, 4 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

BOOKS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

THE ANONYMOUS HYPOTHESIS OF CREATION. Extra flexible cloth, 12mo, about 60 pp. Postpaid, 50 cents.

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, And its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, postpaid, fancy paper, 50 cents; flexible cloth, 75 cents.

It is not religion, but religion's parody, theology, which arrays itself in opposition to that sincere and manifold expression of human impulse and power to which we giv the name of art.—Extract.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION. God the Image of Man. Man's Dependence upon Nature the Last and Only Source of Religion. By L. FEUERBACH, author of "Essence of Christianity." Cloth, 12mo; postpaid, 75 cents.

The purpose of my writing is to make men anthropologians instead of theologians; man-lovers instead of God-lovers; students of this world instead of candidates for the next; self-reliant citizens of the earth instead of subservient and wily ministers of a celestial and terrestrial monarchy.—Feuerbach.

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. A Simple Account of Man in Early Times. By EDWARD CLODD, F. R. A. S. 12mo. Postpaid, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Information not popularly accessible elsewhere as to the life of primitive Man and its relations to our own.—E. B. Tyler, F. R. A. S.

SOUL FROBLEMS. With papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea. By JOSEPH E. PECK. 12mo; postpaid, paper, 50 cents.

The author is a Materialist. He holds that matter is the only entity, that conscious personal immortality is impossible, that that which is born must die—that which is formed must be dissolved. He is mild in his plea, has no epithets for the believers, and presses his cause only by argument.

POSITIVIST PRIMER. Conversations on the Religion of Humanity. Dedicated to the only Supreme Being man can ever know—the Great, but imperfect, God, HUMANITY, in whose image all other Gods were made, for whose service all other Gods exist, and to whom all the Children of Men owe Labor, Love, and Worship. Cloth, 12mo, postpaid, 75 cents.

RELIGIOUS POSITIVISM. A Brief Exposition of the System of Worship, of Faith, and of Life, propounded by Auguste Comte. "Love our Principle, Order our Basis, Progress our End." By H. EDGER. 12mo. Postpaid, paper, 50 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS. With an introduction on the Creation, Stars, Earth, primitive Man, Judaism, etc. By HALSEY R. STEVENS. Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp.; postpaid, $1.00.

He approaches his subject with all reverence, with a mind well stored with the facts of modern speculation and discovery, and in a modest and independent spirit. He writes with great candor and freedom, and makes it his honest endeavor to remove all stumbling blocks out of the beaten path.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY as a Philosopher and Reformer. By CHARLES SOTHERAN, Including an Original Sonnet by C. W. FREDERICKSON, Portrait of Shelley, and View of his Tomb. 60 pp. Postpaid, octavo, paper, $1; cloth, $1.25.

This is a paper read by its author before the New York Liberal Club. It is designed to take a philosophical view of Shelley's works, and present in regularly scientific form the philosophy which the poet taught. It may be almost unconsciously to himself.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION TO SOCIAL SCIENCE. [Sociological Series, No. 1.] PART I. Introduction to Fourier's Theory of Social Organization. By ALBERT BRISBANE. PART II. Social Destinies. By CHARLES FOURIER. 8vo, cloth, 272 pp. Postpaid, $1 00.

The first of a series of Sociological works in which Fourier is taken up as the great Pioneer in the science. It contains both Mr. Brisbane's Introduction and Fourier's own Prospectus or outline sketch of his whole doctrine.

PHILOSOPHY OF SPIRITUALISM, and the Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania. By F. R. MARVIN, M. D., Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women. Cloth, postpaid, 75 cents.

There is no way of getting rid of Infidelity till some way is devised of abolishing the doctors. And here is another point: he says the special indulgence in religious exercises undermine the fabric of morality.

D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N.Y.

PLANET READING.

Consultations reliable. Business, marriages, losses, speculations, etc., foretold with striking accuracy. Answers by letter for $1 or $2 according to amount. Give precise date of birth, and state questions to be answered. Address Madam E. H. BENNETT, 73 Washington Square (between 4th and 5th sts.). 43t75

RADICAL BOOKS.

SENT POST PAID AT THE PRICES ANNEXED

By D. M. BENNETT.

Age of Reason. Paine. Paper covers,	25
" " " Cloth "	50
" " and Ex. of Proph. Paper 50; cl.	75
A Few Days in Athens. Frances Wright,	75
Apocryphal New Testament.	1 25
An Eye Opener. Paper, 50; cloth,	75
Abstract of Last Will and Testament. Jea Meslier.	25
Analysis of Religious Belief. Viscount Amberly. $3.00, 4.00, and	4 50
Apples of Gold. Susan H. Wixon.	1 50
Anti-Theological Lectures. Rev. B. Taylor.	2 00
Antiquity and Duration of the World.	25
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients.	25
A. J. Davis' Entire Works,	27.00
Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub.	15
Bible in India. Jacolliot,	2 00
Bennett-Teed Discussion,	30 & 50
Buckle's History of Civilization. 2 Vols., 8vo.	4 00
Burgess-Underwood Debate. 50 and	80
Bible in the Balance. Fish.	1 00
Bacon's Novum Organum.	2 00
Bhagvad-Gita, or Dialogues of Christna and Arjuna.	1 75
Buechner's Man, Present and Future.	1 00
Chronicles of Simon Christianus,	25
Christianity before Christ. Craven.	25
Chapters from the Bibles of the Ages.	1 50
Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity.	1 00
Childhood of Religion. Clodd.	1 25
Childhood of the World. Clodd, 40 and	60
Career of Religious Ideas. Tuttle.	1 00
Christianity and Materialism. Underwood.	15
Conway's Sacred Anthology.	1 00
Colenso on the Pentateuch. Abstract of.	25
Devil's Pulpit. Rev. Robt. Taylor,	2 00
Diegesis " "	2 00
Denton's Irreconcilable Records.	50
" Our Planet, Past, Present, and Future,	1 50
" Radical Rhymes.	1 25
" Who are Christians, Deluge,
Denton's Common Sense Thoughts, Be Thyself, What is Right? Man's True Saviors, Sermon from Shakspere's Text, God Proposed. Spiritualism True. Orthodoxy False, 10 cents each.
Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science,	1 75
" Intellectual Development of Europe, 2 vols.,	3 00
Darwin's Origin of Species,	2 00
" Descent of Man, (Impr'd Ed.)	3 00
Descent and Darwinism, Schmidt.	1 50
Exeter Hall. Wm. McDonnell,	60 & 90
Errors of the Bible, Wright,	35 & 60
Essence of Religion. Feuerbach.	40 and 80
Eight Scientific Tracts.	20
Frothingham's Religion of Humanity,	1 50
" Child's Book of Religion,	1 00
" Stories of the Patriarchs,	1 00
" Safest Creed,	1 50
Faraday's Various Forces of Nature.	2 00
Fiske's Myths and Myth-Makers.	2 00
God Idea in History, Tuttle,	1 25
Good Sense, D'Holbach,	1 00
Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages.	2 50
" Lost and Hostile Gospels.	2 25
Graves' Sixteen Crucified Saviors.	2 00
" Biography of Satan.	60
Greg's Enigmas of Life.	2 00
" Creed of Christendom.	1 50
Heroines of Freethought, Mrs. Underwood,	1 75
Heathens of the Heath, McDonnell.	1 00 & 150
Hume's Essays and Treatises.	1 50
Huxley's Lay Sermons.	1 75
" Man's Place in Nature,	1 25
" Critiques and Addresses.	1 50
History of all Religions Sects. Evans,	1 00
Haeckel's History of Creation. 2 Vols,	3 00
Hollick's Nerves and the Nervous.	1 00
Humboldt's Works.
Humphrey-Bennett Discussion,	1 00
Interrogatories to Jehovah,	50 & 75
Ingersoll's Gods and other Lectures.	1 25
Ingersoll's Ghosts, and other Lectures.	1 25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization.	25
Infidels' Text Book. Cooper.	1 00
Jehovah Unveiled.	25
Jamieson's Clergy a Source of Danger.	1 00
Josephus' Complete Works.	2 50
Johnson's Oriental Religions. 8vo.	5 00
John's Way.	15
Kneeland's Review,	1 00
" Hymns.	25
Koran, with Notes and Life of Mahomet.	2 75
Lecky's Rationalism in Europe. 2 Vols.	4 00
" History of European Morals.	4 00
Lewes' Biographical History of Philosophy,	5 50
" Problems of Life and Mind.	5 00
Lizzie Doten's Poems of Progress, and Inner Life, each	150
Lubbock's Origin of Civilization.	2 00
" Pre-Historic Times Illustrated.	6 00
Lyell's Elements of Geology, 770 cuts.	3 40
" Principles " 2 vols. and maps.	3 00
Morley's Life of Voltaire.	2 00
Martyrdom of Man. Winwood Reade.	3 00
Peeble's All Around the World,	2 50
" Seers of the Ages.	2 50
Plato's Divine and Moral Works,	2 20
Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion.	30 & 50
Physical Man, Tuttle,	1 50
Paine's Common Sense.	12
" Crisis. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Rights of Man. Paper, 50; cloth	80
" Theological Works, with portrait	1 50
" " " paper,	1 00
" Political Works, cloth,	1 50
" Great Works Complete. Crown octavo, with life and portrait.	3
" Political Works, steel portrait.	1
" Life, by Calvin Blanchard with portrait Paper, 50; cloth	75
Parturition without Pain.	1 00
Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense. E. B. Foote. M.D.,	1 50
Proctor's Six Lectures on Astronomy.	25
Reason, the only Oracle of Man. Ethan Allen	60
Syntagma, Taylor,	1 00
System of Nature. D'Holbach.	2 00
Self-Contradictions of the Bible.	25
Studying the Bible. Mrs. Slenker.	75
Spencer's (Herbert) Entire Work.
Strauss' Old Faith and New,	2 00
" New Life of Jesus, 2 vols.,	12 00
Supernatural Religion, complete in 1 vol.	3 50
Sexual Physiology, Trall,	2 00
Talleyrand's Letter to Pope Pius vii.	25
Tyndall' (Prof. John) Entire Works.
The Christ of Paul,	2 00
The Case against the Church,	75
The Relations of the Sexes. Mrs. Duffey	2 00
The Voices. Warren Sumner Barlow.	1 25
The World's Sages, Infidels, and Thinkers, Bennett. $3 00, $4 00, and	4
The Champions of the Church, Bennett, $3 00, $4 00, and	4 0
Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, etc., 75 &	1 00
Truth Seeker Tracts, Vols. I, II, III, and IV., by the lot, 50 &	75
The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations.	75
The Outcast, Winwood Reade,	80
Talks with My Patients, Mrs. Gleason, M.D.,	1 50
Underwood-Marples Debate.	35 & 50
Underwood's Twelve Tracts.	25
Vestiges of Creation.	75
Volney's Ruins,	1 00
Volney's New Researches in Ancient History	1 50
Voltaire' Philosophical Dictionary.	5 00

A GREAT OFFER

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

I will deliver, boxed, at any Freight or Express Office in New York, one of the Genuine Grover & Baker Sewing Machines, with Latest Improvements, for $15.00 EACH.

This is a double thread Machine, is guaranteed perfect, and will not rip; completely finished, of which the cut is a perfect representation, except that the machine I will send has a box cover fitting over on the works on the table. The following attachments are supplied free with the Machine:

Three Hemmers, Braider, Friller, Quilting-Guage, Embroidery Plate, dozen assorted Needles, Screw-Driver, Oil-Can, and Book of Instructions. All inquiries cheerfully answered and samples of work sent on application.

This Machine will be sent on receipt of price, or will be sent C. O. D. on receipt of $5 in advance. This offer is limited as to time, and it is a chance to secure a guaranteed, first-class Machine at a saving of $55. The regular price is $70. Refer, by permission, to the editor of this paper. Address W. V. R. POWIS, 2t52 765 Broadway, N. Y. City.

I CURE FITS

To the Editor: DEAR SIR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the cure of the above disease, and that by its use in my practice I have cured thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing, and will give

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

for a case it will not cure or greatly benefit. Indeed, so strong is my faith, I will send

ONE BOTTLE FREE,

together with a valuable treatise, to any sufferers addressing me, giving their name, express and P. O. address. Please show this letter to any one you may know who is suffering with this terrible disease, and oblige,

Respectfully yours, DR. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl Street, New York.

The Religion of the Future.

A Discourse, by NETTIE PEASE FOX, Editor of The Spiritual Offering, delivered in Odd Fellows Temple, Rochester, N. Y., Sunday, Nov. 10, 1878. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

THE HOLY BIBLE, ABRIDGED,

Containing the passages not usually read in churches and Sunday-schools, but well calculated to show the real value of

The Holy Volume.

To the
Missionary and Bible Societies,
Sunday-schools,
The Young Men's Christian Association,
Societies for the Suppression of Vice,
American Reform Association, the Clergy and Church Generally,
and especially to
ANTHONY COMSTOCK,
this volume is consistently, conscientiously, and piously dedicated.

164 pages. 12mo. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

National Greenback Labor Songster,

CONTAINING

Original, Practical, Patriotic, Progressive, Stirring Songs

upon the GREENBACK and LABOR questions adapted to popular airs, with several pieces of original music. Including also

CHOICE AND HUMOROUS READINGS.

By B. M. LAWRENCE, M. D.

Price 10 cents, or $6.00 per hundred, sent by mail. Address this office.

AURICULAR CONFESSION AND Popish Nunneries.

BY WM. HOGAN.

Twenty-five years Confessing Priest. A very interesting work. 220 pages. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 75 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

THE

Resurrection of Jesus.

BY W. S. BELL.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

CHRONIC DISEASES,

Embracing those of the Blood and Nerves, the Diseases of Men, the Diseases of Women, and the various causes, physical and social, leading to them, are plainly treated by that plainest of books, PLAIN HOME TALK, EMBRACING MEDICAL COMMON SENSE—nearly 1,000 pages, 200 Illustrations—by DR. E. B. FOOTE, of 120 LEXINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, to whom all letters from the sick should be addressed. In its issue for January 19, 1878, Mr. Bennett's TRUTH SEEKER thus speaks of DR. FOOTE and his medical publications: "We know him (Dr. Foote) personally and intimately, and we say, with all the assurance that knowledge imparts, that he is a man of the highest incentives and motives, whose life has been spent in instructing and improving his fellow-beings by giving such information as is well calculated to enable them to be more healthy, more happy, and to be better and more useful men and women. His medical works possess the highest value, and have been introduced and thoroughly read in hundreds of thousands of families, who, to-day, stand ready to bear willing testimony to the great benefit they have derived from the physiological, hygienic, and moral lessons which he has so ably imparted."

Purchasers of PLAIN HOME TALK ARE AT LIBERTY TO CONSULT ITS AUTHOR IN PERSON OR BY MAIL, FREE. Price of the new Popular Edition, by mail, postage prepaid, only $1.50. Contents table free. AGENTS WANTED. MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING COMPANY, 129 East 28th Street, New York. 1o1

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 1y7

THE GREAT SPECIALIST,

Treats all Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases with unprecedented success. The thousands of cures he is performing annually substantiate this fact. He has at this moment patients in every State of the Union and in the British Provinces. Every reader of this who has any affection of the Head, Throat, Lungs, Heart, Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bladder, Bowels, Womb, Genital Organs, Rheumatic or Neuralgic Difficulties, or Eruptions of the Skin, Blood Impurities, Tumors, Cancers, or any Nervous Affections, or diseases of the Eye or Ear, are invited to write to Dr. Fellows, whose system of practice is entirely original, omitting all Drugs and Mineral Medicines of both the Old and New schools, hence reliable. The Doctor's crowning medical achievement has been in the discovery of an external or outside application for the permanent cure of Spermatorrhœa and Impotency as the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy.

Dr. Fellows has prescribed his external remedy for 1,500 cases without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane Asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of Consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves. For further information address, with two 3-cent stamps, Vineland, New Jersey, where Doctor R. P. Fellows is permanently located, and obtain his private circular on "Spermatorrhœa and its Cure," or, if afflicted with other complaints, his large circular treating on the above-named chronic diseases, both containing sworn evidences, which is convincing and positive testimony to the Doctor's great skill. In order that all can avail themselves of his services he has placed his terms at a very reasonable figure.

[From the Denver (Col.) Rocky Mountain Herald.]

"Dr. Fellows is a successful specialist for all the diseases which he claims to cure, such as chronic and sexual complaints. His wonderful skill and success are bringing him hundreds of cases weekly by letter and otherwise from all over the United States."

[From The Boston Investigator.]

"Dr. Fellows is a physician of superior education and extensive practice in private, chronic, and sexual diseases. We don't see any need of priests for anything, but as a good Doctor is, in our eyes, a benefactor of mankind, we would advise the reader if he has got any of the diseases mentioned, and doesn't want to keep them, let him write to Dr. Fellows, and obtain health, which is better than fortune, political office, or even religion."

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine. 1y7

$2 WATCHES—Cheapest in the known world. Over 200 latest novelties. Agents wanted. 6m44 A. COULTER & CO., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER CURED WITHOUT THE KNIFE OR PAIN, and positively guaranteed, by Prof. J. M. COMINS, 345 Lex'n Av., N. Y. Book sent free.

WHAT OUR GIRLS OUGHT TO KNOW.

A book that ought to be in the hands of every young woman and every young girl in the country.

BY MARY J. STUDLEY, M.D.,

Graduate, Resident Physician, and Teacher of Natural Sciences in the State Normal School, Farmingham, Mass.

CHAPTER HEADINGS:

Study God's Poem; Know Thyself; What shall we Eat, and How shall we Cook It? The Heart; How we Breathe; The Brain and Nerves; Nerves and Nervousness; How Plants and Animals are Perpetuated; How to Become Beautiful; The Uses and Abuses of Dress; The Mate and the Home; Perfect Woman.

No book of 260 pages contains more valuable information than is found in this volume.

Price, in cloth, $1.25. Sold by

Gems of Thought.

CELERITY is never more admired than by the negligent.—Shakspere.

ACT well at the moment and you hav performed a good action to all eternity.—Lavater.

ACTION is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant are more learned than their ears.—Shakspere.

ACTIVE natures are rarely melancholy. Activity and melancholy are incompatible.—Bovee.

THE least movement is of importance to all nature. The entire ocean is effected by a pebble.—Pascal.

To do
That which before us lies in daily life
Is the prime wisdom. —Milton.

How slow the time to the warm soul that, in the very instant it forms, would execute a great design.—Thomson.

DELIBERATE with caution, but act with decision; and yield with gracefulness, or oppose with firmness.—Colton.

IT is vain to expect any advantage from our profession of the truth if we be not sincerely just and honest in our actions.—Archbishop Sharpe.

HAST thou not Greek enough to understand thus much: the end of man is in an action and not a thought, though it were of the noblest.—Carlyle.

THOUGHT and theory must precede all action that moves to all salutary purposes. Yet action is nobler in itself than either thought or theory.—Wordsworth.

THE keen spirit seizes the prompt occasion, makes the thought start into instant action, and at once places and performs, resolves and executes.—Hannah More.

LET's take the instant by the forward top, for we are old, and on our quickest decrees the inaudible and noiseless foot of time steals ere we can offset them.—Shakspere.

GREAT Jove! this one petition grant:
(Thou knowest best what mortals want);
Ask'd or unask'd, what's good supply,
What's evil, to my prayer deny.
—Prayer of a heathen.

"THE judgment of Heaven was upon them, sir," sa'd a Tory bishop, speaking of the Regicides to (the actor) Quin; "the judgment of Heaven was upon them; almost all of them came to violent ends." "So, my lord," replied Quin, "did almost all the apostles."—Goodwin Smith.

THE law of perseverance is among the deepest in man; by nature he hates change; seldom will he quit his old home till it has actually fallen about his ears. Thus hav I seen solemnities linger as ceremonies, sacred symbols as idle pageants to the extent of three hundred years and more after all life and sacredness had evaporated out of them.—Carlyle.

AS I take my shoes from my shoemaker, and my coat from my tailor, so I take my religion from my priest.—Goldsmith (as reported by Boswell).

[One does not like to say a word against "Poor Poll," but if Goldsmith had left this in any of his own works, we would not hesitate to say that "he had written himself down an ass." Anything more childish, silly, and contemptible was never spoken.]

IN the labors of self-culture one laments the infirmity of his animal temperament; another feels the ill influence of the society he frequents; another mourns the agitations of public life; another the particular disadvantages or temptations to which he is exposed in the line of his profession. All are conscious of these disadvantages; but none who adhere to common sense would abandon their hopes of excellence in the insane profession "That a man's character is made for him, not by him."—Isaac Taylor.

IF the "gods" of theology hav been cruel, Nature outstrips them all. The serpent's poisoned fang, the tiger's claws, the shark's jaw, the assassin's hand, the fierce passions of animal life on every side are hers; and their evils are not reserved for a future life, but are felt now, and are only to be feared now. But the evils that make mankind miserable are all to be known in their source and origin and may be removed. And, therefore, though there is no certainty of any further bliss to die for, there is a heaven that may be realized here in the life that we hav now.—Charles Ellis.

THERE are many beautiful stories in the Bible, this we all acknowledge; but beauty does not create fact. We love the old stories, and admire the truisms contained in the parables, maxims, and proverbs, but it is not because there is anything peculiarly divine, holy, or uncommon in them. It is simply because they are old and hav become linked with so much that is sweet, dear, and precious in our memories. We love Æsop's fables better than any other because they are old, simple, and natural. Had his fables been called God-born, then that would be held up as a proof why we prize them more than others. Homer has long been called the greatest of poets. He did build up a beautiful collection of poems—grand, noble, and sublime. But he had all the past contained of legends, songs, floating poems, etc., to build out of; and had his book been God given, or thought to be, then it would be claimed that his wide fame rests upon that ground. If a book hav any intrinsic merit of its own it will liv anyhow; but if to this is added divine honors, then it becomes sacred and all things are bent to make it credible and popular.—Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

WHAT made the ant-elope?

WOMAN'S writes—Postscripts.

MISSING men—Bad marksmen.

DAMP sheets—Sheets of water.

TRUE to the core—The apple worm.

NOBODY ever bathed in a Russian serf.

You can tell a good cigar by its puffume.

A KISS—A legal tender always taken at the face.

YOU cannot set the river on fire with a rowing match.

THE New England Fair—Our wives and daughters.

AN honest man is the most lonesome work of the Creator.

WHAT insect does the blacksmith manufacture? He makes the fire fly?

THE fly that smuggles itself into a spoonful of huckleberries dies happy.

INDIANS never kiss each other, and no one who has ever seen an Indian can blame them much.

"DOES our constant chatter disturb you?" asked one of the three talkative ladies of a sober-looking fellow passenger. "No, ma'am; I've been married nigh on to thirty years," was the reply.

"DER aint no nigger on de top side of creation," said a colored man the other day, putting his hand to his bandaged head, "what can sing a hymn and put de gears on a kickin' mule at the same time."

"I FEAR," said a country minister to his flock, "that when I explained to you, in my last charity sermon, that philanthropy is the love of our species, you must hav understood me to say 'specie,' which may account for the smallness of the collection."

AN Irishman accosted a gentleman on the street, late at night, with a request for the time. The gentleman suspecting that Pat wished to snatch his watch, gave him a stinging rap on the nose, with the remark, 'It has just struck one." "Be jabbers," retorted Pat, "I'm glad I din't ax yez an hour ago."

BREAKING THE NEWS GENTLY.—Visitor from the country at the door of a Southside residence, to a German next door:

"Jane not at home, did you say?"

German—"Nein, Chane's not at home."

Visitor—"Where is she?"

German—"She's gone cemetry down."

Visitor—"When will she come back?"

German—"Oh, she vont come back already any more; she's gone to stay; she's det."

JOB, the good man of the Bible, who, as everybody knows, kept a second-hand clothing store in Jerusalem, was generally supposed to be a patient man. One day a stranger called in and asked to look at some ulsters. Job showed him one of the nicest kind, with pockets in the sleeves and a silver buckle. The man hinted that the coat was not all wool, but Job simply smiled. And even when he said something about a bad fit and pockets being out of style, Job didn't get mad. But when the stranger insinuated that the buckle was plated, and that the whole thing would fetch about a dollar and a half, then Job didn't smile for a cent, but rose up and made a place on that man for a first-class boil.

A CONSCIENTIOUS MAN.—A dilapidated individual stood gazing at a huge pile of watermelons in front of a Woodward-avenue grocery until his mouth watered, and he made bold to remark to a man who was selecting one for dinner:

"I wish I had five cents to get a small melon; I havn't tasted of melon for over two years.

The gentleman promptly handed over a nickel and went on with his selection. About the time he had his melon picked out he saw the vagrant coming out of a saloon near by, and he called out:

"I thought you wanted that money to buy a melon?"

"So I did," was the very courteous answer. "I told you I hadn't tasted melon for over two years, and after reflecting a little I found I hadn't tasted whisky for over three. Therefore, I gave whisky a show to catch up with melon, and start off square. Nothing mean about me, sir.—good-bye.

ONE WAY TO GET MARRIED.—Judge Richardson dossn't pretend to be a parson, and therefore isn't as well up in the marriage ceremony as the slimy supporters of a decaying hierarchy are. The young couple stood up before him the other evening, and the Judge inquired in a cross-questioning tone of the groom:

"Are you a citizen of the United States?"

The groom took hold of the waistband of his trousers, and tugged, saying:

"I vo ed for Tilden, Judge."

"Why, James!" faintly exclaimed the blushing creature by his side.

"It's a fact, Emmer," protested James, rather indignantly, and glaring at the Judge.

His Honor coughed, and demanded severely: "Do you, sir, as a citizen of Nevada and a lawful voter of Reno, solemnly declare that you will forsake all other evils and cleave to this one?"

"I've money to bet on it," responded the groom, growing pale, but placing his arm around the waist of the shrinking bride.

"Then," cried the Judge, bringing his fist down upon his desk, "God has joined you together, and damn the man that puts you asunder. The fee is just what you like, young fellow."

It was pretty liberal, and the Court set them up and kissed the new wife several times besides.

THE BOOK OF THE CENTURY,

THE

CHAMPIONS OF THE CHURCH,

Their Crimes and Persecutions,

BY D. M. BENNETT,
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Giving the most vivid, full, and complete Descriptions of the Persecutions of the Christian Church ever embodied in one volume.

CHARACTERS AND SUBJECTS TREATED:

Jesus, Peter, Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Papias of Hierapolis, Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, St. Victor, St. Anthony, Paul the Hermit, Stephen I., Constantine the Great, Eusebius, Athanasius, Callistus, Theodosius, St. Cyril, Stricus, Dioscorus, St. Augustine, Simeon Stylites, Clovis, Sixtus, Virgilius, Gregory the Great, Boniface III., Irene, Pepin, Charlemagne, Paschal I., Popess Joan, Nicholas I., Marozia, John XI., John XII., John XIII., Boniface IX., Gregory VII., Adrian IV., St. Dominic and the Inquisition, Innocent III., Simon de Montfort, Innocent IV., Peter the Hermit and the Crusades, Boniface VIII., John XXII., Clement VI., Innocent VI., Urban VI., Anti Popes Counter Popes, &c., Ursula, Virgin, &c., John XXIII., Martin V., Paul II., Torquemada, Ferdinand and Isabella Alexander VI., Martin Luther, John Calvin, Henry VIII., Loyola and the Jesuits, Cortez, Pizarro, Charles V., Philip II., Duke of Alva, John Knox, Thomas Munzer, Mary of England, Catherine de Medici, Queen Elizabeth, Julius III., Pius IV., Pius V., Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., James I., Paul V., Persecutions of Witches, Matthew Hopkins, Cotton Mather, Samuel Parris, Protestant Persecutions, James II., Judge Jeffreys, Claverhouse, Liguori, Urban VII., Innocent X., Alexander VII., Louis XIV., Paul VI., Louis XVI., Christianity and Slavery, Three Hundred Sinful Shepherds, Anthony Comstock, Recapitulation, Concluding Remarks.

THE MOST DAMAGING BOOK AGAINST THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION EVER PUBLISHED.

A fine large volume of nearly 1,200 pp, octavo, with steel plate engraving of the author.
Cash orders will be filled in rotation.
Price, Cloth, $3.00; Leather, Red Edges, $4.00; Morocco, Gilt Edges, $4.50. Postage free.
Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y. City.

THE

Creed of Christendom.

Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure.

BY W. R. GREG,

Author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," &c.

One vol. Crown, 8vo., with Complete Index. Cloth, $1.50.

"Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science said: 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable" (F. W. Newman, on "The New Christology," in Fortnightly Review).

CONTENTS.

Introduction to third edition. Preface to the first edition. The Creed of Christendom. Chapter I.—Inspiration of the Scriptures. Chapter II.—Modern Modifications of the Doctrine of Inspiration. Chapter III.—Authorship and Authority of the Pentateuch, and the Old Testament Canon Generally. Chapter IV.—The Prophecies. Chapter V.—Theism of the Jews Impure and Progressive. Chapter VI.—Origin of the Gospels. Chapter VII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History—Nature and Limits. Chapter VIII.—Fidelity of the Gospel History continued—Matthew. Chapter IX.—Same subject continued—Mark and Luke. Chapter X.—Same subject continued—Gospel of John. Chapter XI.—Results of the Foregoing Criticism.—Chapter XII.—The Limits of Apostolic Wisdom and Authority. Chapter XIII.—Miracle—Chapter XIV.—Resurrection of Jesus. Chapter XV.—Is Christianity a Revealed Religion—Chapter XVI.—Christian Eclecticism. Chapter XVII.—The Great Enigma.

Price of this complete edition, $1.50. Price of the London edition, $5.00.

INTERROGATORIES TO JEHOVAH

A long series of questions, upon a great variety of subjects, to which answers are urgently desired. Offered up at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office by its devout editor.

260 pages, 12 mo. Paper, 50 cts., cloth, 75 cts.

ANAYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

BY VISCOUNT AMBERLEY.

Son of Lord John Russell, late Premier of England. A work of profound research, and just the thing for inquiring, thinking people. The lengthy and able article on

"JESUS CHRIST"

is worth four times the price of the work.

Republished, complete in one volume, from the London edition (2 vols., 8vo.), and at one-fifth the price. Cloth, $3 00; Leather, $4 00; Morocco, gilt edges, $4 50. Sent by mail at these prices.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Works of Thomas Paine.

COMMON SENSE. His first and most important political work. Clear type. Paper, 15 cts.

THE CRISIS. Containing Nos. I. to XVI., inclusive. Written in the "times that tried men's souls" during the American Revolution. 12mo. Full, clear type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth 80 cts.

THE RIGHTS OF MAN. Written in defense of his fellow man. A work almost without a peer in the world. On full, bold type. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON. On large, clear type. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

THE AGE OF REASON AND AN EXAMINATION OF THE PROPHECIES. Full, bold type 12mo. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

PAINE'S POLITICAL WORKS. Complete in one volume, on full, bold type. Containing "Common Sense," "The Crisis" (sixteen numbers), and "The Rights of Man," with a fine steel portrait. Cloth. $1.50.

PAINE'S THEOLOGICAL WORKS. Complete. 12mo. Composed of the "Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "An Essay on Dreams," "Of the Religion of Deism," etc., etc., with a life and fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth. $1.50.

THOMAS PAINE'S GREAT WORKS. Complete. New edition. The cheapest and best ever sold. Containing a Life of Paine, his POLITICAL WRITINGS—"Common Sense," "The Crisis," "Rights of Man"—his THEOLOGICAL WRITINGS—"Age of Reason," "Examination of the Prophecies," "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," "Letter to Mr. Erskine," "An Essay on Dreams," "Letter to Camille Jordan," "Of the Religion of Deism"—all in one large volume, crown-octavo, of THE TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Cloth, $3.00; colored leather, red burnished edges, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

LIFE OF THOMAS PAINE. By Calvin Blanchard. 12mo. Large, clear type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents. Published by
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth st., New York.

Christianity and Infidelity

A JOINT DISCUSSION BETWEEN

REV. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presb't'n Clergyman,
OF NEW YORK, AND
D. M. BENNETT, Editor of The Truth Seeker.

It was conducted in the columns of The Truth Seeker, a letter alternately from each contestant appearing each week, beginning April 1, 1877, and closing Sept. 29, 1877, thus continuing just six months, giving thirteen letters from Humphrey and thirteen replies by Bennett.

The subjects discussed were as follows:

PART I.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Liberty.

PART II.—The relative services of Christianity and Infidelity to Learning and Science.

PART III.—Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

The discussion has excited a large share of interest, both among believers and unbelievers: and as both sides are fairly presented, it is suited to readers of all shades of opinion.

The New York Advocate, a paper having a very extensive circulation, in speaking of the volume, says, "Perhaps a more able and exhaustive presentation of both sides of the great questions which have agitated the civilized world for centuries has never been made. At any rate, in this volume will be found a perfect magazine or storehouse of arguments, pro and con, which every intelligent man and woman should peruse with candor and with an earnest desire to arrive at sound conclusions on themes of the highest importance to all mankind. . . Light is what we need. Let the controversies proceed. Let the blows descend upon the error-dispelling anvil. Let the sparks fly in all directions from the heated steel. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, is what the people demand on all the great questions of the day, whether of Finance, Science, Politics, or Religion, and discussion will elicit it." Let every person who feels the slightest interest in theological questions, whether on one side or the other, read the Humphrey-Bennett Discussion."

A thick 12mo volume of 550 pages, well bound sent, post-paid, to any address, for the low price of one dollar.

Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

WORLD'S SAGES, THINKERS, AND REFORMERS,

BEING

Biographical Sketches

OF

278 DIFFERENT CHARACTERS

BEGINNING WITH MENU,

3000 before Christ, and coming down to the present time. Containing 1050 pages.

BY D. M. BENNETT.
Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sent by Mail at the following low prices:

CLOTH, good binding,	$3.00
ARABESQUE, colored leather, red burnished edges,	4.00
MOROCCO, gilt edges, worked head-band,	4.50

Address
D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, N. Y.

What SIXTY CENTS Will Do:

It will pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER three months and a copy of Thomas Paine's AGE OF REASON or a copy of the NEW AMERICAN POCKET DICTIONARY (Illustrated), with 30,000 words. Postage paid on all.